Some correspondent last year advocated keeping apples in damp cellars, claiming that they preserve better than in dry cellars. Vick, in his last Magazine, says of this matter: "The evidence is accumulating that apples keep better in moist or damp cellars than in dry ones. It is probable that this may be established as a fact. It would no doubt be a blessing to most country houses, in a sanitary point of view, if their cellars were used only for small supplies of vegetables, and that they should at all times be ventilated as well as possible. Special cellars for fruit and vegetables and in use in some parts of the country. The walls rise only a foot above the surface of the ground; they are covered with a double floor, filled in between with sawdust, and over all is a roof. If room is desirable, low walls, one story above ground, can support this roof.

General Farm Notes.

—The lovers of Swiss cheese may be interested in learning that the latest adulteration of that product is made of potato starch.

—Hens, as a rule, lay about an equal number of eggs in their first and second seasons, after which the product rapidly decreases.

—Common plaster of Paris figures may be made to look like alabaster by simply dipping them into a strong solution of alum w'. v.

—In selecting your seed wheat or seed for a rye crop weigh a pint from the bin or sack, and purchase that which weighs the heavier.

—The cheapest food for fattening sheep is corn. It may be fed in the ear. It is waste of time and money to grind feed for sheep, as they masticate and digest their grain very thoroughly.

—Of all poultry breeding the rearing of the goose in favorable situations is said to be the least troublesome and most profitable. It is not surprising, therefore, that the trade of late years has been enormously developed.

—The melon has been cultivated from time immemorial, and yet there is no other plant known that is so wonderfully variable in character. In the same hill and from the same seed there will be produced some of the finest, as well as some of the poorest, specimens.

"Accept Our Gratitude."

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N.Y.: Dear Sir—You of Golden Medical Discovery has cured my boy of a fever sore of two years standing. Please accept our gratitude. Yours truly, HENRY WHITING, Boston, Mass.

WHAT SHE SHOULD DO.

A Few Suggestions of Importance on a Subject of Interest to the Ladies.

And Certain Facts which Should be Known by all Women.

[Home Journal, New York.]

A short time since an article appeared in the columns of this paper, being a synopsis of a lecture delivered by a prominent women before a well known New Englandsociety. This article dealt so directly with the needs of women, and contained so many hints which were calculate, that it naturally attracted no little attention, and has, we learn, been a subject of comment in social circles in nearly every part of the land. Realizing that no subject can be of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this same subject.

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Bernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that even her fastand French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excell, American women in quickness of perception and brilliancy of intellect. The ease and manners of American women are all that can be desired, but it is lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their social and mental characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitutions, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess no one of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in a slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary habits, devotion to fashion, but above all and more than all, carelessness and indifference to all duty habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results and is both directly and indirectly of unkind injury to the race. The cause, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as though they lived in Europe or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The performance of the natural functions of womanhood and motherhood is not a sine, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the organs which make and purify the blood must be preserved, or restored to their normal condition. These organs are the kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poison accumulates, all the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and give way and finally the kidneys and contiguous organs become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all forms of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing inconvenience follows. This is especially true in the case of women. And all the bowels are thus which are particularly dependent for their right action upon the state of the liver, bowels and kidneys, become displaced, and the consequences which these are too well known to require a statement in a suggestive article of this kind. The secret, however, of preventing these manifold disorders, is to keep the kidneys and liver in perfect working condition. This is reached by a science, and it appeals with force to the suffering women of America.

When the body is in a healthy condition, then come beauty of complexion, elasticity of step, buoyantness of disposition, and comfort and happiness in the duties and responsibilities of a family. There is, therefore, every incentive, if women would preserve bodily health.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy described in the lecture to which reference has already been made, is receiving, as it certainly merits, the most careful attention and the trial of the women of the land. It is a pure and simple vegetable remedy which is now doing more to bring health and strength to the American women than any one thing which has ever been discovered. It acts directly upon the liver, kidneys and aljacent organs, soothes any inflammation, allays all pain, and places these organs in condition to bring health to the body and happiness to life. The manufacturers of this great remedy, as we learn from the lecture, have the written thanks of thousands of women—many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. No true woman is pleased to have her physical troubles flaunted in the eyes of the world.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore no adequate remedy for the ills of women has ever been discovered, nor have the medical profession ever been able to assist women in her hours of sore distress. This is, perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much bigotry and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates to the fullest the blighting effect of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was oppressed and scoffed at. Thompson, the founder of the Thompsonian theory, was the victim of a hateful conspiracy. Morton, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet the discoveries of these men are to-day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach, not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death-bed scenes, and felt that it still were equal to disease death might have been postponed many years—that as long of life as we made of all the governments that ever said, was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated! A child is contracted, it requires to yield to a fixed form of treatment, the physician may not be candid enough to call in the aid of other schools, or of independent agencies, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not exhaust every expedient known to the world for relief. It has been the courage of his convictions and employs outside agencies, he is visited with expulsion from the society of his fellows, and, forsooth, becomes what they choose to call a "quack." When they have exhausted all the agencies approved by their schools, they "shirk the responsibility" of the death of their patient by advising a trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe. Such treatment may be in accordance with the "code of ethics," but in the view of the unprejudiced public it is deserving of, and may not be, but it is more than deserving of, the epithet of murder.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of the country, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording for recovering lost health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health, by a watchful eye over daily habits and duties, and by a regulation of the life with the remedy above named, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be secured in the highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention which it deserves and the care which they are able to bestow, considering that these efforts are vital to bring them perfect health and long and happy lives.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.

CURES DYSPEPSIA, LIVER DISEASES, FEVER AND AGUE, RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, HEART DISEASE, DISEASES OF THE BLOOD, FEMALE COMPLAINTS, NERVOUSNESS, LOSS OF APPETITE, CONSTIPATION, BOWEL COMPLAINTS, GENERAL DEBILITY, ETC., ETC.

TRADE MARK

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Diseases, Fever & Ague, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!

12,000,000 Bottles

SOLD SINCE 1868.

This Syrup possesses Varied Properties.

It Stimulates the Digestive Organs, which restores the Stomach and Bowels of the food into chyme. A delicacy to Dyspeptics cause Wind and Scouring of the Bowels to cease. It Purifies the Blood, which will effect a radical cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Dyspepsia, Kidney Diseases, Fever and Ague, Female Complaints, Nervousness, Sleeplessness and Languor, Loss of Appetite, Constipation, Costiveness, Piles, Dizziness, Nervous Headaches, Nervous Debility and Female Complaints.

SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:

Eugene B. Brook, of Junction City, Kansas, says, kidney Wort cured him after regular DRUGGISTS had failed to do any good.

Mrs. John Arnott of Washington, Ohio, says she was completely cured of a long case of Female Weakness and was so afflicted she could not walk across the room.

M. V. Richards, ex-editor Chronicle, Ohio, says he was cured of a great bad case of Piles, using Hundreds of Dollars with no benefit, Kidney-Wort cured him in a few weeks.

Aaron L. Jarrett of South Salem, N. Y., says his father was so bad with Kidney Disease he could not put on his stockings or shoes for months, Kidney-Wort cured him.

John F. Lawrence of Jackson, Tenn., suffered for years from liver and kidney troubles and Piles, Hundreds of Dollars for other medicine, Kidney-Wort made him well.

Richard Cole of Montgomery Center, Vt., suffered eight years with kidney difficulty and was unable to work. Kidney-Wort made him feel like a new man.

KIDNEY-WORT

DOES WONDERFUL WHY? CURES!

Because it attacks the system of the disease, which is the cause of 10 out of 12 diseases, such as Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or its kindred, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.

KIDNEY-WORT

PERMANENTLY CURES KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, Constipation and Piles.

1 Pkg. is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, one package will make a quart of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare the Dry.

It acts with equal efficacy in either form. GET IT AT THE DRUGGISTS. PRICE, $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Prop's., BURLINGTON, VT. Send 4c. for Comic Almanac.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MICHAEL SHEA,

—DEALER IN—

BOOKS, STATIONERY, NEWSPAPERS, &c.

805 MARKET STREET,

Bet. Mason and Taylor. SAN FRANCISCO

ALTAR WINES.

Having purchased all the Altar Wines made under the immediate supervision of the Rev. P. J. Kaiser in the vineyards of His Grace Archbishop Alemany at the Old Mission San Jose, also the Wines made for ALTAR PURPOSES out of Col. Hooper's cellars at Sonoma, we herewith respectfully offer them to the clergy and others desiring an absolute pure wine, made with the utmost care, and guaranteed of the vintages represented.

ARPAD HARASTHY & CO.,

530 Washington St., S. F.

GRAY & CO'S GALVANIC GIRDLE

CURES ASTHMA, INSOMNIA, PARALYSIS, FITS, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney complaints, Insomnia, Nervous Prostration, Impotence, Want of Energy, Want of Nerve Force, Want of Vigor, Want of Vitality, Want of Nerve Force, Want of Nerve Power, Want of Nerve Force, Want of Nerve Power, Want of Nerve Force, Want of Nerve Power thanks to Lord O'Hagan for his address in a speech, in which Field connected recognition of Lord O'Hagan's ability with warm expression of gratitude for English and Irish sympathy for the death of President Garfield.

Latest Telegrams.

(Continued from first page).

Glorious Scene in Cork.

CORK, October 4.—The great success of yesterday's proceedings here on the occasion of the public reception of Parnell was the splendid display made by the ladies. A phalanx of horsemen and the Parnell guards brought up the rear of the procession, which was nearly two miles long. In some of the streets triumphal arches were erected. Father Sheehy spoke in favor of Irish independence, concluding by saying that he spoke to the people in the presence of the great Republic of the West.

Redpath said: "America is watching with interest the heroic struggle for freedom in the fatherland."

O'Connor Coming to America.

Parnell, speaking at the banquet, said that T. P. O'Connor was leaving for America next week, and he was glad of the day's demonstrations, as O'Connor could report to the people of America that there was no lack of spirit in Ireland.

Boycotted Farmers Organizing.

At a meeting near Ballinglass, county Wicklow, for the purpose of establishing an organization for the protection of farmers and others who had incurred the displeasure of the League, Walter Hume Long, M. P., and other farmers being present, it was resolved to establish an association to protect "Boycotted" persons, and especially all farmers desiring to resist the despotism of the League.

A Proposed Land Bill for England.

LONDON, October 4.—The Pall Mall Gazette thinks the new English Land Bill suggestive, and says if the draft is supported by a majority of the farmers throughout the country, and is vigorously used as a means of agitating for reform, the day when Parliament must vote urgency for the English Land Bill is not very far off.

The Star Route Frauds.

WASHINGTON, October 1.—The Star route ring is demoralized. They feel the lightning is about to strike them, but don't know just how or where it will hit. Postmaster General James and MacVeagh have evidence enough, they are satisfied, to convict the ring, and there is to be no delay in the prosecution. Yesterday morning a conference at Arlington Hotel between James, MacVeagh, George Bliss, B. H. Brewster and others, who represented the prosecution. Bliss submitted the indictments which he had carefully drawn against Dorsey, Brady, McGrew, Saulsbury, Gilmer, ex-Chief Clerk Brady and other Star route contractors and beneficiaries of the ring. Bliss said he would pledge his professional reputation upon conviction. James and MacVeagh approved the action of Bliss, and these indictments will be placed immediately in District-Attorney Corkhill's hands for presentment to the Grand Jury.

Died of His Injuries.

RENO (Nev.), October 3.—S. C. Scoville, one of the men shot at the Nevada and Oregon Railroad meeting, died to-day at 11 o'clock. D. W. Balch is still in about the same condition, and shows little improvement. The accused men were re-arrested to-day, and their bail was increased. An inquest will be held to-morrow on Scoville.

The Case of Guiteau.

WASHINGTON, October 3.—The witnesses in the Guiteau case were called before the Grand Jury today. The Grand Jury will doubtless find a true bill against Guiteau to-morrow. There is an absolute reticence in regard to the arrangement of the assassin in open Court. As much as possible the public will be deceived as to the time, so that a disorderly crowd may be prevented from assembling on the route from the jail and in the court-room. Guiteau becomes more and more demoralized each day. He is now recondiled to the fact that Mr. Scoville will be his only counsel. At first he scornfully rejected him as of too little reputation, but he appears now anxious now that he should come. He says he is willing to submit to any line of defence selected, though he scouts the idea that he is really insane.

SOCIETY ENTERTAINMENT AT SANTA CLARA COLLEGE.

Wednesday evening, September 28th, was the occasion of a pleasing entertainment given at this College under the auspices of the Philalethic Debating Society, an association composed of the senior students of the Institution. This was the first of the series of monthly exercises to be given by this Society during the forthcoming session of the College, and was inaugurated under auspicious and encouraging circumstances. About half past seven the invited guests, assisted by the Fathers, assembled at the Philalethic Hall and took their seats on the raised platform, together with the speakers and presiding officer of the evening. The large hall was filled to repletion, and the audience showed by their rapt attention the interest they felt in the success of the efforts of fellow students. The main feature of the evening was a debate upon the following resolution: Resolved; That the Greeks were Benefactors to Mankind." On the affirmative side of the question were Messrs. E. J. Ryan and J. Tormey; the negative side was taken by Messrs. J. McKenna and H. Wedl, Jr. The President of the evening was Mr. J. Rylad. The nature of the question itself was such as to invite considerable research in ancient history as well as developing the logic and reasoning powers of the respective sides in order to counteract the effect of the arguments of their opponents. Each was allowed ten minutes to speak upon the subject preceding the closing arguments of the affirmative, who occupied a longer period in summing up and refuting the arguments of the negative. The opposing sides were so evenly matched in ability and had given the subject their fullest attention, that the decision of the debate the Chairman reserved his decision, and he also claimed a victory, being supported in their claims by their adherents among the audience, who, as the debate had been in operation, had testified their approval by often and longcontinued applause.

Following the debate was an eloquent address by J. H. Yseth, Sr., of San Jose. The remarks were very acceptable by reason of their graceful terseness and practical application to the nature of the audience of students. A respectful attention on their part marked their appreciation of the words of advice from the lips of a speaker who was only interrupted by bursts of hearty applause when the sentiments he clothed in language met with their undisguised approval. Following this a few and pleasing address came the adjournment of the Society, and many seemed both to leave the scene of their past enjoyment. We understand that these pleasant scenes will occur again and these happy associations renewed at the close of each month by the Society during the coming academic year. Among the invited guests were Mr. Wilcox, Sr., C. A. Wilcox and Mr. J. H. Yseth, all of San Jose; Mr. Morrison of San Francisco, and others. The entertainment passed away without a single occurrence to mar the harmony, and the memory of the past happy occasion will make the coming entertainments expected with pleasing anticipation.

SACRED HEART COLLEGE.

Roll of Honor for September.

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Second Class—Joseph Harrington, 96; George Paterson, 96; Joseph Flaherty, 95; Joseph Mortimer, 96; Francis Wilkins, 94; Frank Marshall, 93.

Third Class—Herbert Lange, 96; John J. Flynn, 96; Charles J. Byrne, 95; Charles P. McFarland, 95; Albert J. Wilson, 94; Francis T. Monaghan, 96.

Fourth Class—Walter J. Bartlett, 96; Charles Lamb[illegible], 96; William J. Kearney, 95; Wm. A. Durham, 86; Charles Verdugo, 95; Joseph Downey, 85.

Fifth Class—John E. Behan, 95; Robert P. Kavanagh, 95; Michael J. Sullivan, 96; Wm. Fogarty, 95; Joseph P. White, 88; Charles H. Cavanagh, 95.

PARKING DEPARTMENT.

James Cooney, 95; Daniel Whelan, 96; John Higgins, 88; Richard Morgan, 89; Harry White, 88; William Curtin, 87.

COMMERCIAL DEPARTMENT.

First Class—John O'Connor, 87; William Curtin, 88; James O'Donnell, 87; Thomas Mullany, 86; Joseph Byrne, 85; James D. Byrne, 85.

Second Class—Odon Turre, 89; Thomas Clancy, 88; Henry Dillon, 86; John Mellon, 90.

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

First Class—Edward Morgan, 78; Patrick McCormick, 97; Thomas Hinkey, 96; Joseph McDonald, 95; Joseph Stapleton, 95; Harry Mallon, 95.

Second Class—Frank Brady, 99; George McAuliff, 96; James Goodfellow, 95; Joseph O'Brien, 99; John O'Brien, 96; James Flynn, 91.

Third Class—James Condon, 98; Thomas Smith, 95; John Barrett, 94; Alonzo McKinnon, 94; Henry McGill, 92; Leo Wilke, 92.

Fourth Class—Frank Boeling, 97; John Goeran, 91; Eugene Lacoj, 90; Alexander McCarthy, 92; Daniel McCarthy, 88; James Humphrey, 84.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

First Class—Augustus Batchelor, 99; Thomas Conlon, 98; Robert Carberry, 97; Thomas Sherlon, 95; Charles Maguire, 94; Joseph Malone, 91.

Second Class—Robert McAuliff, 97; George Roche 96; Herbert Eccles, 95; James Sullivan, 89; Walter Koon, 86; Alfred Decker, 84.

Third Class—David Brady, 99; Alfred Spence, 96; William Monaghan, 89; Francis Sullivan, 86; Joseph Myrick, 87; Joseph Richards, 85.

Fourth Class—John Glennan, 91; Patrick Lainey, 89; John Dwyer, 87; Joseph Catalano, 86; Mark Valicevich, 84; Nicholas Murphy, 80.

LANGUAGES.

Latin, First Class—William McKinnon, 95; Patrick Mulligan, 94; Richard Morgan, 92.

Second Class—Joseph White, 98; Herbert Hogan, 96; Joseph Flaherty, 92; Michael Sweeny, 96; George Hansen, 95; Frank Moriarty, 95; Joseph Morrissy, 94; Thomas O'Donnell, 93; Edward Maloney, 92; Wm. Netterville, 90.

Fourth Class—Edward Warren, 96; Leo Wilke, 97; Joseph McQuade, 95; Joseph Cooney, 96; James Conlon, 95; Thomas Conlon, 95.

Fifth Class—Patrick Mulligan, 96; Wm. McKinnon, 95; Frank Murasky, 96; Richard Morgan, 95.

French, First Class—Frank Monaghan, 95; William Durham, 94; Edward Fay, 93.

Second Class—James Lyons, 96; Frank Donovan, 95; Gregory Mazzini, 97; Edward Warren, 92; Frank Cronin, 90.

Third Class—John Capples, 98; Peter Geraghty, 97; Bruno K. Funks, 97; George Hughes, 96; James Turney, 95; James Goodfellow, 94.

German, First Class—Peter Kreitz, 96; Bruno K. Funks, 94; Joseph Quinn, 95.

Second Class—Thomas Brady, 96; Emmett Feehan, 93; Thomas Conlin, 95; Matthew Glennan, 94; John Gibbon, 96; Henry Schwartz, 92.

Spanish, First Class—Thomas Kilfoyl, 96; Thomas Carroll, 94; Joseph Downey, 92; Angus Macdonald, 90.

Second Class—Joseph Morrisey, 96; James Twigg, 95; James Flynn, 92; John Connolly, 90; Daniel Sweeney, 90; Alfred Wilcox, 89.

"How a Life Was Saved."

Those suffering from kidney disease or other affections of urinary organs, should send one postage stamp for a little book, with above title, giving a history of many wonderful cures of kidney and bladder affections. Address DAY KIDNEY PAD Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

NOTICE TO CLERGYMEN.

All Clergymen whose churches are in the Archdiocese of San Francisco who have church organs to be tuned or who contemplate the purchase of a church organ, either large or small, and would prefer to patronize a Catholic gentleman who is thoroughly qualified, and who will do it cheap or supply organs at a reasonable price, should write stating their wishes to the undersigned. I contemplate a trip through the Archdiocese of San Francisco in the months of November and December of this year, and will call upon each clergyman who will write me that he desires my services. Address,

J. J. KERNOT, Wilmington, Cora.

Reference: Rev. I. DeBruyker, of this place.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A Most Useful and Timely Book.

THE BEAUTIES OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH; OR, HER FESTIVALS AND HER RITES AND CEREMONIES EXPLAINED. By Rev. F. J. Shadler. With an introduction by Rt. Rev. P. N. Lynch, Bishop of Charleston, S. C.

It is a book of over 500 pages, full of valuable information for everybody, and should be found in every Catholic family. Price $1.25.

PR. PUSTET & Co., Publishers,
52 Barclay street, New York and 204 Vine street, Cincinnati, O.

The Pacific Bank

This sterling institution, situated on the corner of Pine and Sansome Streets, has just finished the eighteenth year of its existence. Under the able management of Dr. R. H. McDonald, to whose direction it has all along been indebted for much of its success. Its progress has continued, the past year being the most prosperous of its brilliant career. It now enters upon its nineteenth year with over $500,000 capital, an ample surplus and a share of the well earned public confidence, which, with its perfect public facilities for doing business, its absolute security, and its large clientage among the farmers, manufacturers, merchants, and the cream of our business classes, insure a continuance in large degree of the prosperity which has uniformly marked its past career.

—— —— ——

Wm. E. Marshall, the engraver on steel, who so distinguished himself by his admirable line engravings of Lincoln and Grant, has just published through Oscar Marshall of New York, two admirable likenesses of President Garfield which have exhibited the skill of the artist in a not a hasty catch at the market. The two portraits are best a profile which brings out admirably the projection of the countenance, and a nearly full face view, which gives the fullest and expressive likeness. We call special attention to the advertisement that appears in another column.

The Reason Why.

The basic effect of Kidney Wort is produced by its admirable adaptation to the wants of the blood. When there is a gravelly deposit in the urine, or milky, ropy urine from disordered kidneys, it is curse without fail. Constipation and piles readily yield to its mild action and perfect power. Put up in dry vegetable form or liquid very concentrated, either act prompt or sure. —Troy Budget.

Have Winter's Sensation of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption, and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle.

Go to McMillan Bros. Nos. 8 Sixth street near Market, if you want the best thirty-five cents, 36 gems for 25 c., 3 large tin types for 25c.

Market Report.

MONTHLY OFFICE, Oct. 5, 1881.

FLOUR—City Extras are selling at $4 25@$5 75; City Superfine, $4 75@$5 25; interior brands, $5 37½@$5 50 for extra, and $1 50@$3 for superfine.

WHEAT. The market is fully 2½c higher than on Saturday, and is bouyant. There is a decided demand and shippers are put across to paying fair prices. Since Saturday eight deep water vessels have arrived, making fourteen since Friday. These welcome accessions to the fleet will have a beneficial effect on Wheat, especially as freights show signs of weakening. The only sales reported to-day were 1,000 and 100 tons No. 1, shipping, at 1 75; 600 bushels, Port Costa, season's storage paid, $1 75; 3,000 sks do, $1 73½; 200 and 100 tons and 1,000 sks do, $1 72½; 1,000 sks No. 2, $1 70; 900 sacks Port Costa, and 900 sks do, $1 65, and 900 sks off grade, $1 62½. No. 1 is quotable at $1 72½@$1 75 and No. 2 at $1 65@$1 70 ℔ ctl.

BARLEY—Opens quietly, but with a fair trade. Sales of 1,000 sks very choice new brewing, $1 60; 872 sks good, $1 45; 1,000 sks and 500 sks coarse feed, $1 40. Feed, $1 40@$1 42½. Brewing is quotable at $1 45@$1 52½ for light and $1 50@$1 60 for bright heavy; standard Chevalier, $1 50@$1 55; coast, $1 37½@$1 40.

OATS—Receipts since Saturday are 10,600 sks, and the market is weak. No sales to-day. Good and choice, $1 50@$1 60; common, $1 45@$1 47½; Surprise, $1 75 ℔ ctl.

CORN—Sale of 1,000 sks good sks small round Yellow at $1 32½.

RYE—Is quotable at $1 30@$1 35 ℔ ctl.

HAY—According to the figures of Thomas J. Lee, Secretary of the San Francisco Hay Exchange, receipts at this port in September were 19,583 tons, as follows: By water, 2,583; over the Pacific Railroad, 3,000; Central Pacific, 14,000. Wheat, old, $11@$13; will sell, $9@$12; volunteer and stable, $7@$10; wild oats, $6@$9 ℔ ton.

RYE—Quotable at $1 00@$1 05 ℔ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 25@$1 50 ℔ ctl.

STRAW—Per bale, 42½@45c.

POTATOES—The market was irregular today. Salinas Burbanks, 1 25; Oulley's Cows, $1 25@1 37½; Peerlessons, $1 50; Rivers, $1 50; Tomatoes, $1@1 20; Sweets $1 50@$1 ℔ ctl.

ONIONS—Are quotable at 75@80 ℔ ctl.

CORNMEAL, ETC—Table Meal, 2c@2½c ℔ lb; Feed Corn, $19 ℔ ton; Hominy, 3½c ℔ lb.

BUTTER—Opens firm at previous prices. Steaks are light. Fancy at 42½; Good and Choice California roll, 30@35c; fair and good do, 30@37½c; mixed lots from country stores 25@30c; Sticks, 30@32½; Pickled roll, 22½c; Eastern, 30@32½ ℔ lb.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 18c; California, 15@16c ℔ lb.

POULTRY—No change to day. Live Turkeys, 18@19c for Hens, and 16@18c for Toms; Geese, ℔ pair $1 50@$2; Ducks, ℔ doz, $4 00@$6 00; Hens, $3@$4 50; Roosters, young, $4 50@$6; do, old, $4 00@$5; Broilers, $3@$4.

EGGS—Arrivals were light to-day and the market is stronger. Oregon, 30@32½; California, 30@32½; Eastern, 25@27½ ℔ doz.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Wisconsin Cranberries, $12 50@15 ℔ bbl; Watermelons, $20@30 ℔ 100; Cantaloupes, 50c@$1 25 ℔ crate; Grapes 40c@$1 ℔ box; Peaches, 50c@$1 ℔ box; Plums, 50c@75c ℔ box and basket; German Prunes, 75c@$1 ℔ box; Pears, 50c@$1 ℔ box, and $60@$80 ℔ ton; Strawberries, $16@$18 ℔ chest.

DESERT FRUIT—Garlic arrived very heavily last week and is lower. Marmoral Squash, $60@$70 ℔ ton; Egg Plant, 50c ℔ box; Okra, 25c ℔ lb; Green Corn, 12½c ℔ dozen; String Beans, 25@30c ℔ box; Wax Beans, 25@30c ℔ box; Tomatoes, 25c ℔ box; Green Peppers, 25c ℔ box; Cabbage, 75 ℔ ctl; Cauliflower, 60@75c ℔ dozen; Carrots, 20@25c; Turnips, 20@25c; Beets, 25c; Parsnips, 25c ℔ ctl; Garlic, 10@12c; Onions, 1 60@1 75 ℔ ctl; Sweet Potatoes, 4c ℔ lb; Red Bucket for common, and Sugar Loaf for Chile.

—Unlike other cathartics, Dr. Pierce's "Pellets" do not produce griping nor leave costive after operation, but, on the contrary, establish a permanently healthy action. Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using them. By druggists.

Don't get the Chills.

If you are subject to Ague you must be sure to keep your liver, bowels and kidneys in good free condition. When so, you will be safe from all attacks. The remedy to use is Kidney-Wort. It is the best preventative of all malarial diseases that you can take. See advertisement in another column.

Slavin's California Fruit Salt

Is prepared from sound, ripe California Fruit, by an experienced analytical chemist, who has spent years in experimenting on the properties of the fruits. It is manufactured by a special process known only to the proprietor. This preparation is safe, simple and effectual under all circumstances, for all ills of the stomach, liver and kidneys. It is particularly recommended for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Headache, Heartburn, Acidity of the Stomach, Habitual Constipation, Nausea, Sick Headache, Kidney and Liver Troubles, Over-indulgence either in eating or drinking, etc. As a purifier of the blood in all Scrofulous affections, it has no equal. Represents the properties of the fruits, and is a cooling and invigorating effect upon the system. The Salt is a combination from any of the effervescent Salts or Seltzer preparations in the market, being manufactured from Fruit. For sale by all druggists.

Shiver's Cherry Tooth Paste.

An aromatic combination for the preservation of the Teeth and Gums. It is superior to any preparation of its kind in the market. In large handsome Opal pots, price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

New Advertisements.

J. O'KANE,

MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF

Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.

767 MARKET ST

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Also refer to all the principal racing horses throughout the Pacific Coast, as to the superiority in this branch of business. Also, special attention given to the manufacture of the celebrated Kip Boot, which has no superior in the United States. The benefit of which refer to the publishers of the magazine of a service, each, Prize given the only Agent for Dr. A. H. Dixon's Condition Powders and Dr. Robinson's patent "Fleece" and "Velvet" Horse Washes. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the best assortment of English Ladies and Gentlemen's saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and gilt-edge saddlery. JOHN O'KANE.

KNABE PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALLED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CHURCH MUSIC.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ: No. 1, Masses, $5 cts.; 1 Kyrie, 35 cts.; 3 Gloria, 20 cts.; 1 Credo, 25 cts.; 1 Sanctus, 20 cts.; 4 Benedictus, 20 cts.; 1 Agnus Dei, 20 cts.; 2 Antiphons and Benedictions, 40 cts.; 8, 9, 10 Masses, $1 each. Complete Catechism of Music, 50 cts. Sent on receipt of price. Address, Prof. Mass in E flat, 50 c.; W. Paul, of Mass, 40 c.; Sound in Church, 40 c.; Mass in D, $1 50.—Pastors supply by F. W. Rauth, 40 cts.; Tantum Ergo, 10 c.; Mass of Angels, 40 c.; Mass of Angels, 40 c.; Mass of Angels, 40

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

EVENING REST

Hist to the chimes of the vesper bells,
As they float through the balmy air,
Filling the woods and dales and dells
With their melody sweet and rare.

The sun has sank in the glowing west:
The silvery moon creepeth upward
The warbler of the day seeks its rest,
And the gray screech owl sits its place.

The twinkling stars, shine out from afar
In their home of heavenly blue,
And overhead the bright northern star,
Glistens through the soft, evening dew.

After the toil and care of the day,
Oh! how sweet is the evening rest,
That drives from care, and sorrow away,
With hope and sunshine, in the West.

San Francisco, Oct. 3rd. 1881. CECIL.

Literary Miscellany.

The Farm-House in the Glen.

BY JOHN LOCKE.

Amid one of those dark glens that lie between the Galtee Hills in the Irish county of Tipperary the dwelling of Tim Hogan stood. In the parlance of the peasantry its owner was "pretty well to do," and the cottage in which he dwelt, its neat and comfortable appearance, gave additional evidence of that fact. He was always able to meet the landlord's, or, rather, the agent's, demands on gale-day; for the landlord was a titled Englishman who never troubled to visit his Irish estates—leaving their entire management in the hands of an agent named Gregory Pratt.

Tim Hogan had one son named Carroll, and one daughter, Kitty. Dark as the sombre mountains that encircled her father's home, with eyes that flashed a vivid brilliancy from beneath their raven lashes, and a figure faultless in its symmetry, Kitty Hogan was a girl to command attention if not admiration.

Carroll was rather "wild" in his youth, and when he proposed to his father emigrating to America, the latter offered no very decided opposition to the project, thinking that perhaps being thrown upon his own resources and far away from home and friends, would solve down the lad and cool his wild ardor.

When Carroll arrived in New York the Civil War was at its height. With youthhood's love of perilous adventure, and an Irishman's innate love of fighting, he entered the Union service and fought till the close of the war. He returned to New York, not however in the heat of health, and the doctors ordered him back to his native land.

Spent from the desire to recuperate his shattered health, young Hogan was anxious to feast his eyes upon the green valleys and brown hills over which he had so often roamed in "boyhood's bright but fleeting years." Non-free lighted up the heathery slopes of the dark hills the night Carroll reentered the hidden house to express their joy at his return.

But great as was the people's joy at seeing Carroll once again in their midst, there was one individual who looked upon his return with anything but favoring eyes. This was no less a personage than Gregory Pratt, Esq., the pompous and omnipotent land agent.

For a considerable time previous to young Hogan's return the agent had been accustomed to paying sundry visits to the farmhouse in the glen. He was affable with Tim Hogan, but particularly gracious with and attentive to Kitty. One evening, with a gun slung over one shoulder and an empty game-bag on the other, he entered the Hogan's residence. Meeting Kitty he said in tones of easy familiarity:

"The Tipperary birds are becoming mighty shrewd, Kitty, not a solitary shot to-day. I want you to come into the parlor and make me a strong glass of punch."

The girl cautiously complied, and when she presented Mr. Platt with the steaming bowl he said in his most affable way:

"Leave one kiss within the cup, Kitty, and 'twill be sweeter to me than ambrosia."

The girl blushed, and said she never touched any liquor.

"Then let me kiss the fair hand that mixed it," said the agent, as he caught hold of Kitty's fingers and raised them to his lips.

A shadow of decided displeasure overspread the flushed face of the girl as she said:

"Mr. Pratt, this is wrong and unbecoming. I'd much rather not be the recipient of such attentions."

"Oh," he rejoined promptly with a wave of his hand, "we'll forget all about it, if you six me one more tumbler;" and, accompanied to have his slightest order obeyed, added mockfamiliarly: "Go ahead, and be quick."

As he was uttering the last words, the door opened and Carroll entered. Pratt bit his lips at this awkward and unexpected interruption, and the color rose to his cheeks as he heard the young man, addressing his sister, say in a voice not overracious: "My father wishes to see you at once;" and then turning toward the agent added: "I presume Mr. Pratt will have no objection to my mixing him a glass as I have I'm a little more experienced in that business than my sister."

"Oh! none whatever," stammered out in apent, as his eyes followed the retreating form of his late fair servitor. Carroll did the mors complacently enough; but Mr. Pratt owed nevertheless ill at ease. He emptied a second tumbler much more rapidly than he did the first, and after the interchange of a few commonplace remarks he arose and fitted the house, according Carroll a forbidding look as he shut the door behind his hurried exit.

"The insolent roluptuary!" muttered Carroll as he stood by the window looking over the retreating form of the land agent he hastened down the pathway that ran the high road.

About a week after the incident narrated ove a messenger called at the farm-house the glen to say that Mr. Pratt desired Tim Hogan at once on very urgent business. Tim lost no time in complying in the agent's call. He found Mr. Pratt laid in his superbly-appointed parlor. The agent looked serious and demure, but voice, as he invited Tim to a seat beside is, was not without a touch of something like kindliness. Opening the conversation, he said:

"Tim, the news I have to convey to you is not one of the very pleasantest kind, but I can escape the tie-ible that is threatened by complying—or rather getting your sons to comply—with one condition I will name."

"What is it, Mister Pratt?" asked Tim Hogan anxiously. "The Fenian rebels have learned," and the land agent with an air of sympathetic solemnity, "that your son Carroll has returned to this country with none of the best intentions toward the peace and good-will of her Majesty's subjects. He is not only in sympathy with the Fenians abroad, but is trying to sow the seeds of disaffection among the peasantry hereabouts."

"I don't know a word about that, sir," returned Tim, "but I do know that my son came home to recover his health that was very poor from all the hardships he suffered in the war in America."

"I don't mean to say yet know anything about your son's treasonable designs; but if you want to save him from the dungeon and keep your present holding, Carroll must go back to America."

"But won't ye let him stay till he's a little stronger, at any rate?"

"If he remains here over next Sunday, the police will look after him. Now, you have orders to evict you from the farm, returned Pratt coldly.

"But haven't I paid yo every farthin' o the rent, Mister Pratt?"

"I know you have; but Lord Clapham cannot permit any portion of his estates to be turned into a burrow where foreign rebels may hide and conspire against the law."

"Tis very hard, very hard; an' callin' me brave boy a foreigner in his very bosom he was born in," murmured Tim as he rose from his seat.

The agent rose too, and in tones of deeper sympathy than he had as yet shown, remarked: "I know it's hard, Tim; but after all you can do, there is nothing to do'. and the certage in which he dwelt, its its neat and comfortable appearance, gave additional evidence of that fact. He was always able to meet the landlord's, or, rather, the agent's, demands on gale-day; for the landlord was a titled Englishman who never troubled to visit his Irish estates—leaving their entire management in the hands of an agent named Gregory Pratt.

Tim Hogan had one son named Carroll, and one daughter, Kitty. Dark as the sombre mountains that encircled her father's home, with eyes that flashed a vivid brilliancy from beneath their raven lashes, and a figure faultless in its symmetry, Kitty Hogan was a girl to command attention if not admiration.

Carroll was rather "wild" in his youth, and when he proposed to his father emigrating to America, the latter offered no very decided opposition to the project, thinking that perhaps being thrown upon his own resources and far away from home and friends, would solve down the lad and cool his wild ardor.

When Carroll arrived in New York the Civil War was at its height. With youthhood's love of perilous adventure, and an Irishman's innate love of fighting, he entered the Union service and fought till the close of the war. He returned to New York, not however in the heat of health, and the doctors ordered him back to his native land.

Spent from the desire to recuperate his shattered health, young Hogan was anxious to feast his eyes upon the green valleys and brown hills over which he had so often roamed in "boyhood's bright but fleeting years." Non-free lighted up the heathery slopes of the dark hills the night Carroll reentered the hidden house to express their joy at his return.

But great as was the people's joy at seeing Carroll once again in their midst, there was one individual who looked upon his return with anything but favoring eyes. This was no less a personage than Gregory Pratt, Esq., the pompous and omnipotent land agent.

For a considerable time previous to young Hogan's return the agent had been accustomed to paying sundry visits to the farmhouse in the glen. He was affable with Tim Hogan, but particularly gracious with and attentive to Kitty. One evening, with a gun slung over one shoulder and an empty game-bag on the other, he entered the Hogan's residence. Meeting Kitty he said in tones of easy familiarity:

"The Tipperary birds are becoming mighty shrewd, Kitty, not a solitary shot to-day. I want you to come into the parlor and make me a strong glass of punch."

The girl cautiously complied, and when she presented Mr. Platt with the steaming bowl he said in his most affable way:

"Leave one kiss within the cup, Kitty, and 'twill be sweeter to me than ambrosia."

The girl blushed, and said she never touched any liquor.

"Then let me kiss the fair hand that mixed it," said the agent, as he caught hold of Kitty's fingers and raised them to his lips.

A shadow of decided displeasure overspread the flushed face of the girl as she said:

"Mr. Pratt, this is wrong and unbecoming. I'd much rather not be the recipient of such attentions."

"Oh," he rejoined promptly with a wave of his hand, "we'll forget all about it, if you six me one more tumbler;" and, accompanied to have his slightest order obeyed, added mockfamiliarly: "Go ahead, and be quick."

As he was uttering the last words, the door opened and Carroll entered. Pratt bit his lips at this awkward and unexpected interruption, and the color rose to his cheeks as he heard the young man, addressing his sister, say in a voice not overracious: "My father wishes to see you at once;" and then turning toward the agent added: "I presume Mr. Pratt will have no objection to my mixing him a glass as I have I'm a little more experienced in that business than my sister."

"Oh! none whatever," stammered out in apent, as his eyes followed the retreating form of his late fair servitor. Carroll did the mors complacently enough; but Mr. Pratt owed nevertheless ill at ease. He emptied a second tumbler much more rapidly than he did the first, and after the interchange of a few commonplace remarks he arose and fitted the house, according Carroll a forbidding look as he shut the door behind his hurried exit.

"The insolent roluptuary!" muttered Carroll as he stood by the window looking over the retreating form of the land agent he hastened down the pathway that ran the high road.

About a week after the incident narrated ove a messenger called at the farm-house the glen to say that Mr. Pratt desired Tim Hogan at once on very urgent business. Tim lost no time in complying in the agent's call. He found Mr. Pratt laid in his superbly-appointed parlor. The agent looked serious and demure, but voice, as he invited Tim to a seat beside is, was not without a touch of something the children were to accompany him. The young girl hastened to her father on hearing of her departure and strove to comfort him by the assurance of how she should return in the early spring time, when the snow had ceased to greening, and the flowers would be sparkling hillside and river bank once again.

The long, dark, lonely winter passed away, and spring, with its fresh verdure and bright blossoms, benedicted dell and plain. Kitty, according to her promise, returned home to the glen. Intelligence of the untimely and sudden death of her father had preceded her. Tim Hogan's letters to his children were sadly missing, and what racked her heart and the more was the fact that the purity of her soul was tarnished. Under a solemn promise of marriage she had listened to the vile whispers of Gregory Pratt; and when she demanded a performance of that promise the ruffian laughed at what he called her impudence, and actually turned her out of doors.

Burning with shame and remorse, only two courses remained for the unfortunate Kitty—either to bury herself and her shame beneath the waves of the silent river, or return to the old homestead and cast herself upon her father's mercy. The teachings of early youth reminded her of the enormity of the sin of self slaughter, and after a severe mental struggle within herself, she resolved to turn once more to the old paternal roof.

To the already stricken heart of Tim Hogan his daughter's harrowing story was too much to withstand. The old man's reason gave way, and he moped around for weeks, now raving about his lost boy, and again threatening vengeance on the head of the unpreputable land agent, whom he rightly held responsible for all the calamities that had fallen upon him.

One evening, just as the twilight shadows were deepening, Tim was walking towards the house, when, as he neared a turn in the road way, who should suddenly appear before him on horseback but Gregory Pratt. The agent turned pale as he beheld his henchmen at the moment he caught sight of him, but recovering from the shock of the sight of Tim, and again threatening vengeance on the head of the unpreputable land agent, whom he rightly held responsible for all the calamities that had fallen upon him.

One evening, just as the twilight shadows were deepening, Tim was walking towards the house, when, as he neared a turn in the road way, who should suddenly appear before him on horseback but Gregory Pratt. The agent turned pale as he beheld his henchmen at the moment he caught sight of him, but recovering from the shock of the sight of Tim, and again threatening vengeance on the head of the unpreputable land agent, whom he rightly held responsible for all the calamities that had fallen upon him.

The Lieutenant determined he would see with his own eyes, and set out for the mission, in company with the agent of the Portuguese brand Castro e Lestad, expecting to find something like he had seen at Ivando—a cluster of huts somewhat better than those of the average native, and a few squalid evangelists.

"At a turn of the road," continues the lieutenant, "we came upon a boy carrying a small package on his head, and imagine our astonishment when the little nigger came to my side and addressed us with a 'Bonjour Messieurs in the most correct style. As Gaetano I thus turned to be correct, the chances of an agreement between Germany and the Holy See are certainly better than they have been for some time. For if this truth, which has been long in abeyance, has been so dispensed with, in the case of a people, it is not to extend in the way of other appointments. For the Catholics will not allow themselves to be betrayed into any exaggerations of our confidence. Facts, not words, must be the basis of any understanding between the Holy See and Germany. Once more there are rumors of diplomatic intercourse between Germany and the Vatican being resumed, and Herr von Schlozer, the present representative of the Empire at Washington, is considered as the future Chargé d'Affaires at Rome.

Fertility of Ireland.

Before the famine, and with nine millions of people, Ireland produced more food per head of her population than it does now with only five millions. This decrease in her fertility has gone some time, decrease in population. And yet Ireland, after all, has more than twice as much wheat per acre as Canada, and twice as much oats, and nearly twice as much corn and barley per acre as America and Canada.

What would Ireland not do, if, as in Jersey and Guernsey, the land belonged to the land that tills it? Recently, Guernsey supports three people to the acre of land; Ireland, blessed with a richer soil, but cursed with landlordism, only supports one soul to the three acres—and what superstition is, let the unorthodoxy of Mayo, Galway, Donegal and Kerry tells.

FAILED POPES.

The Four Occupations of the Apostolic Palaces.

At this time when the possibility of the flight of the Pope from Rome is being discussed, some account of previous occupations of the Vatican and the Quirinal Palaces will be interesting. Pius VI. died at Valence, Feb. 29, 1796. The French Directory had ordered Pius VI. to assist the Italian Republics, whose leader, Gregory Corsica, on Feb. 15, 1798, went to the Vatican to announce to Pius VI. the advent of the revolution, and to advise him to recognize the sovereignty of the people. The Pope refused, and his secretary came from God and not from man, and that it was not in his power to renounce it, that at his age (he was then eighty) he had nothing to fear, those who had the power might inflict on him. The day after they resorted to force.

THE VATICAN WAS BENEFIRED, the guards were disarmed, and the Pontiff was taken away prisoner, the officials of the court were all driven out, seals were placed on the doors of the greater number of the apartments. The Commissary of the Republic passed himself of the vast edifice, even to the priceless library, valuable antiquities, and objects of art. The second occupation occurred in the year 1809 on the night of the 6th of July at the Palace of the Quirinal, then occupied by Pius VII. The Pope had been unduly a prisoner since Feb. 2nd, when the French had placed eight pieces of cannon before the great gates of the Quirinal, and on the 7th of April had committed terrible outrages in Rome, when, as he entered St. Peter's, the disaffected Noble Guard were arrested, and it was intended to the captain of the Swiss Guard that he should have his head chopped off in sport to the new Government. Pius VII. was, but rare and revenge gave supplemental celerity to the old lady's limbs, and with a bound and wild shriek he caught the balcony of the palace, and gave it such a tug that the animal almost rolled over. Pratt fell down, rolling ship and aimed a blow at his adversary's head, but it fell upon his shoulder. Tim, letting go the rein, clutched the rider, and half dragged him from the saddle, his foot remaining somehow entangled in the stirrups. The horse got started, and galloping furiously away, wrenched its rider from Tim Hogan's terrible clutch, but only to inflict upon Pratt the awful death of having his brains battered out along the rocky roadway, and the whole countenance so lacerated and disfigured that by the time the animal reached the lodge gate leading to Gregory Pratt's residence not one of the servants could identify a feature of their dead master.

Tim Hogan lived for years afterwards, but never wholly recovered the light of his reason. The authorities inferred that he had come to his death by accident; and so the old farmer was left unmolested. It was on his death-bed he told Kitty, who clung to him ever after her return from England, how he had avenged her upon the land agent. Having laid her father's bones to rest in the old graveyard where all his ancestors for generations before were sleeping, Kitty disposed of the little property remaining on her hands, and quitting the old farmhouse in the glen disappeared from What Catholic Missionaries are Doing for Civilization in Africa.

Lieutenant Nunzio Freitas Quercid, of the Portuguese navy, recently visited the Catholic Missions in Congo, under the direction of the French Congregation of the Holy Ghost. The above named officer, we have observed, does not write from a Catholic as much as from a political point of view, but there seems to be a slight tinge of jealousy at the influence which the French missionaries on territory to which apparently Portugal has some claim. He says:

"Established on a territory exclusively ours, a few miles to the south of the Congo river, the French Congregation of the Holy Ghost, has established a vast territory over which Portugal in her day reigned supreme, this mission has succeeded in gradually winning over the minds of the people, and I do not hesitate to say that erecting it will be the mission that will draw the law in this country.

"The first time we landed at Landana, in 1876, we heard some of the traders from the factories along the coast complain bitterly of this civilized station. We say naguely, for had we not made our present trip, we should have concluded from what Europeans told us that the establishment was an unimportant one. For there, as here, people ignore, or still worse, pretend to ignore what may be done by missioners towards the great work of civilization.

"The Lieutenant determined he would see with his own eyes, and set out for the mission, in company with the agent of the Portuguese brand Castro e Lestad, expecting to find something like he had seen at Ivando—a cluster of huts somewhat better than those of the average native, and a few squalid evangelists.

"At a turn of the road," continues the lieutenant, "we came upon a boy carrying a small package on his head, and imagine our astonishment when the little nigger came to my side and addressed us with a 'Bonjour Messieurs in the most correct style. As Gaetano I thus turned to be correct, the chances of an agreement between Germany and the Holy See are certainly better than they have been for some time. For if this truth, which has been long in abeyance, has been so dispensed with, in the case of a people, it is not to extend in the way of other appointments. For the Catholics will not allow themselves to be betrayed into any exaggerations of our confidence. Facts, not words, must be the basis of any understanding between the Holy See and Germany. Once more there are rumors of diplomatic intercourse between Germany and the Vatican being resumed, and Herr von Schlozer, the present representative of the Empire at Washington, is considered as the future Chargé d'Affaires at Rome.

IRISHMEN IN THE REVOLUTION.

Compiled from Historical Records by Con. Kroesman Robinson.

John Gibson, a native of Ireland, a resident of Philadelphia, and Major-General in our army. His brother Gilbert commanded the forts from Pittsburg to New Orleans to supply Washington with powder from the Lexington to Yorktown. His mess were rifle-shooters, and were known as "Gibson's Lambs." This George's son George was Commissary-General of the United States Army for forty years, and his son, John B. Gibson, was Chief Justice of Pennsylvania for twenty-five years, whom Jerseyman S. Black another son of Ireland, describes as "the most illustrious judge of his time."

James Graham, who commanded in fifteen battles in our war with England, before he was twenty-three years of age. He the youngest of his twelve children, whose mother was the daughter of John Davidson, another Irishman, who signed the Mecklenburg declaration of Independence, was William A. Graham, a member of President Taylor's Cabinet, and a candidate for Vice President on the ticket with Winfield Scott.

Jacob Hurd, Washington's favorite Adjutant-General, a native of Ireland.

John Hazlett, a native of Ireland, who fell with Mercer at Princeton, and whose son was governor of Delaware.

William Irvine, a native of Ireland, who fought with Wayne under General Thomson (both Irish), in Canada, commanded the American troops at Monmouth, stormed Stony Point with "Mad Anthony," and was trusted and praised by Washington and Lafayette.

Henry Knox, Major-General, and Washington's Chief of Artillery, and also Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy in Washington's Cabinet.

Andrew Lewis, who was born in Ireland, but had to fly with his father, John, who shot an Irish landlord for evicting himself and his family from their home. This John was also an Irish landlord but five miles, and of whom distinguished themselves in our war with England. When Washington assumed command of our army he found that Andrew Lewis should be made one of his Major-Generals.

Andrew McClary, the giant patriot, a native of Londonderry, and Bunker Hill, where he fell.

David Porter, a naval officer of merit in the war of 1812, and father of David Porter, whose career

Stephen Moylan, brother of the Catholic Bishop of Cork, one of Washington's favorite aides, and one of the brothers who fought in our Revolutionary army.

Daniel Morgan, a native of Ireland, who was the conqueror of Burgoyne, Cornwallis, Tarleton, helped to defeat Burgoyne, and fought with Montgomery at Quebec.

Andrew Pickens, who fought at the Cowpens and elsewhere, and whose son and grandson were governors of South Carolina.

Jerry O'Brien who fought and won our brief sea fight with Great Britain.

John Rodgers, whose father came from Ireland and served in the Revolutionary war, and was the father of Commodore John Rodgers, who fought and won the battle of Bentubigo.

Thomas Sullivan, one of Washington's favorite generals.

Here are also some of the most illustrious Irishmen who fought in our war with England, who were born in Ireland—or, if born in America, whose descendants are relatives, if living, of our American Irish Revolutionists.

Andrew Jackson and Alexander Macomb, the victors of New Orleans; David Porter, John Rodgers, Johnston Blakeley, Thomas Macdonough, Oliver H. Perry, and Charles Stewart, all of our navy; and there are many of the families of these heroic Revolutionists, who served this country so well, who are still living, and a warm welcome is tendered them, and particularly to the descendants of Captain Commodore, Gold Irenaeus, Charles Stewart Parnell.

CONNAUGHT.

A Nation's History Written in the Fields.

The London Tablet has sent a Commissioner to investigate the opinion of the people of Connaught on the Land Act. He has found that all classes are in favor of the bill, which is like saying that all Ireland is now in favor of even a small slice of bread. The Tablet thus describes Connaught:

Connaught has in its five counties, according to the census of 1881, 549,127 inhabitants, or 16,561 per cent, being less than half the population of Ireland. But, contrary to general opinion, the population of Connaught has declined less than that of the other provinces. Connaught, while in the decade 1871-81 the decline has been least of any in the four provinces. Mayo, Galway and Sligo are amongst the counties that exhibit least decrease in the last decade. The relative poverty of a large portion of the soil of Connaught and the absence of towns is seen in the fact that, while its population is somewhat under one seventh of that of Ireland, the agricultural area (Connaught is one of the provinces in little over one-third, along clearly the density of population compared with provision for its support. The whole mass of the people are Catholics, the most Catholic of the four provinces, the census of 1881 showing that 95.42 per cent, are of the national faith. Almost every inane of a native Sept is to be found in Connaught, owing to the barbarous Cromwellian transplantation, which banished them from the other provinces, while nearly all the great landed proprietors are alien in blood and in faith. Passing between Ballinasloe and Westport, on the Great Midland Railway, en route to Galway, the visitor will see a vast tract of land, the property of Lord Clanricarde, carrying any one hundred of Kilconnel, erected in 1460, which contains a single bedroom of the big historical interest, bearing the inscription, "Here lies Lord Taaffe, one of the transplanted." This is only a sample, and an exceptional case. Historians of the French school, and agricultural economists of the Argyll school must take up the cure here of Irish tradition to comprehend the land question. Backward in education, but keen in intelligence and in memory of wrongs, the Irish peasantry understand that question with a clearness that would puzzle a philosopher. And in none of the provinces is it better understood than in Connaught, hence the unanimity and popular feeling there in relation to the Act.

ALL IN FOR THE BEST.

An Eastern Story.

Rabbi Akibe, compelled by violent persecution to quit his native land, wandered over barren wastes and dreary deserts. His whole equipage consisted of a lamp, his staff, and his light ass, upon which he rode to study—the law—his work. Night overtook him instead of a watch, to announce to him the rising dawn, and an ass, on which he rode.

The sun was gradually sinking beneath the horizon, night was fast approaching, and the poor wanderer knew not where to shelter his head, or where to shelter his weary limbs. Fatigued, and almost exhausted, he came, at last, near to a village. He was fain to find it inhabited, thinking where human beings dwelt, there dwelt also humanity and compassion; but he was mistaken. He asked for a night's lodging; it was refused. Not one of the inhospitable inhabitants would accommodate him, he was therefore obliged to seek shelter in a neighboring wood.

"It is hard, very hard," said he, "not to find a hospitable roof to protect me against the inclemency of the weather, but I will be right, and whatever is done is for the best."

He seated himself beneath a tree, lighted his lamp, and began to read the law. He had scarcely read a chapter, when a violent storm extinguished the light.

"What!" exclaimed he, "must I not be permitted even to pursue my favorite study? Let night come, and whatever be done is for the best."

He stretched himself on the bare earth, willing, if he could, to take a little rest, but sleep. He had hardly closed his eyes, when a fierce wolf came and killed the cock.

"What new misfortune is this?" exclaimed Akibe. "Misfortune! "My vigilant companions gone! whether, will be forth when no one is the study of the law! But no! I see, I know, I know, but what is good for us, poor mortals."

Akibe, fatigued by his journey, and by the other hardships he had undergone, fell into a deep sleep. He was roused at break of day by the crowing of his ass, which had wandered from the place where he had left it, and was feeding on the grass. The writer seems to be well versed in the Talmudic lore, and the author of the Talmud, Rabbi Akibe, was the author of the Talmud, Rabbi Akibe, was the author of the Talmud, Rabbi Akibe, was

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

WEDNESDAY..... OCTOBER 12.

A Stupid Sectarian Slander Squelched.

Editors of the Religious press repeating the chameleon sects of changeable Protestantism are generally supposed to be possessed of the intelligence necessary for their vocation, yet, by one of those peculiar phases of Protestant blindness, whenever they undertake to insert even an infinitesimal paragraph concerning the Catholic Church or its dogmas, they invariably display an amount of ignorance which is inexcusable in persons with such pretensions. This fact we have noticed on many occasions in these columns, and we are called upon again to notice it, in consequence of the editorial tour-de-force of the Occident—the Presbyterian organ in this city—in the columns of which appeared the following paragraph last week, under the caption of "Praying to Saints:"

"In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the former is represented as praying not to God but to Abraham. This, we believe, is the only instance in the Bible of prayer offered to a spirit in glory. If the Romish Church has prayers to the Virgin and the saints on this case, there is not much comfort to be derived from it. Abraham did not answer Dives' prayer, but referred him to the Bible. That is what the Virgin and saints would do now, if they were permitted to send a message to those who pray to them.

The writer of this paragraph is imbued with the idea that whatever is not found in the Bible should not be practiced by Christians, yet the sect which the Occident represents observes Sunday as a day to be devoted to prayer and pious works, without having the remotest reference in Scripture to warrant them in doing so. Without citing other Christian practices scrupulously followed by Presbyterians, regardless of Scriptural injunction, this fact alone completely rebuts the first proposition advanced by the Occident on this point.

The Presbyterian organ is also in error when it expresses its belief that the case it quotes is the only instance in the Bible of prayer offered to a spirit in glory. It is a preconceived notion among Protestants that Catholics are not permitted to peruse the Bible, but we can cite for our contemporary Scriptural facts which prove, in this instance, at least, that Protestant preachers know less about the Word of God than even Catholic laymen.

The pages of Sacred Scripture are filled with proofs of the power delegated by Almighty God to His angels and saints as His ministers over the actions and prayers of mankind. An angel was sent from heaven to dictate to St. John what he should write in the Apocalypse, and in that very portion of the Sacred Text we read that "the prayers the land of the angel." In the Old Testament we have scores of examples which prove that the saints pray for us and obtain many favors for us from God through their merits and their intercessions. Let our Protestant preacher consult Genesis, Exodus, and the third Book of Kings, and he will cease to sneer at what he does not understand. If our opaque friend of the Occident will peruse St. Luke, he will read therein that "there shall be joy before the angels of God upon one sinner doing penance," and this text alone is sufficient to prove that the angels of God hear the prayers offered to God through them, and that they assist us by their powerful intercession before the throne of God—the only thing they be joyful over the penitential sinner unless they knew that God had extended his mercy to the penitent through his own pious works and the prayers of the blessed in heaven. The fact is also proven in the Book of Tobias that the angel Raphael offered the prayer of Tobias to the Lord, and the prayer of the angel prevailed in favor of the prophet.

There are innumerable other instances in the Scriptures which we could adduce in order to show our shallow contemporary that—to use his own slang phrase—"the Romish Church does not base its prayers to the Virgin or saints" upon the isolated case which was known only to the obtuse Occident.

Our Presbyterian contemporary seems to sneer at the Catholic practice of praying to the saints, but he should remember that if he consumes Catholics for this act he must also condemn Jacob for praying to the angel; he must consume the friends of Job for asking him to pray for them, even though Almighty God commended them to do so; he must censure the Jews called in Babylon for asking their brethren in Jerusalem to pray for them; he must condemn St. Paul for asking his friends to pray for him, and he must censure every sinner, in every sect, who asks the prayers of the congregation in his behalf. If it is a holy practice among Christians to pray for one another, how much more beneficial to pray to those who are participators in God's glory in heaven, and whose benign influence is not circumscribed by even the taint of sublunary mortality. The potency of our prayers depends upon the purity of our soul; hence the saints of God, in the state of perfection in which they exist, are assuredly more powerful in heaven than any petitions sent from the sinful depths of depraved humanity. Common sense alone, to say nothing of Christian instruction, will convince any reflecting reader of the truth of this argument.

Offering petitions to God through Saints is one of the most natural, as well as the most reasonable dogmas of Christian faith. We see the same idea carried out in the world every day, where the influence of potential individuals is sought for in order to gain favors from the rulers of earthly realms. Carry the same idea into the supernatural sphere, and any intelligent mind can grasp the Catholic doctrine of the invocation of the saints. They are the beloved ones of God who have served him faithfully and died for His glory; we know that sinners at best, and it is the most supernatural feeling in the world to do humble, contrite Christian, to be convinced that he alone is really not worthy to appeal directly to God, but asks the intercession of the Mother of God and the angels and saints in his behalf. God loves an humble heart; He rewards humility, and when it is accompanied with piety and perseverance, it is sure to prosper, regardless of what Presbyterian papers may publish about it.

Singular Conversions to the Catholic Church.

It is one of the hallucinations of the Protestant public that Priests, Sisters and the dreaded Jesuits are constantly going about among the Protestant community like so many roaring lions "seeking whom they may devour," for the purpose of proselytism. Last week we proved to a disastrous Protestant lady that the Sisters at Rosedale only to thrive on business and let Protestant young ladies find the way to heaven after their own fashion, until they were called into the Church by the divine power of the voice of God speaking to their souls. We doubt if there is a man, woman or child where a respectable Protestant lady, who has been educated in a convent school, will certify over her own signature that the Religious who educated her made any strenuous efforts to convert her against her own inclination. "Maria Monks"—and other fictitious females of similar fallen virtue who are foremost characters in fabulous anti-Catholic literature—may be made to say so in order to slander the sacred character of the Catholic Sisterhood; but truth is a stranger to such shameless writers, and the intelligent portion of the Protestant public have become nauseated at the nauseous which such literature revels in; hence, no respectable person ever handles such defiling literature; much less accepts the statements of such anonymous writers as containing even a particle of truth.

The miraculous conversion of Saul has its counterpart in every century of the Christian era, and we find some of the very men who were foremost in assailing the Church they might confirm their convictions against the Catholic Church, led by that very path into her fold. Brownson, the ablest philosopher of America ever produced, tried mightly God to His assistance in order to find peace and confidence for his religious aspirations, yet he was compelled to acknowledge that they were all barren and unfruitful until he found out his place in the Catholic Church. He gave up his Episcopal office, sacrificed all his worldly prospects and became a simple layman in the one true fold, and gloried in the loss of all earthly honors in order to save his soul.

Lord Ripon is another example where the power of God made itself manifest in converting an enemy of the Church into one of her most faithful children. He was high in the Masonic Order, and he desired to seek for evidence whereby he could overthrow the condemnation of the Church against the body he represented. But in his research he was amazed to discover that the Church was right and himself wrong, so he gave up his honored title, forsook the fellowship of the craft, and became a Catholic.

We could cite innumerable instances in the lives of eminent Catholics who have been converted by means just as extraordinary, in order to prove to our Protestant friends that it is the power of God and not the machinations of Priests or Sisters that leads converts into the Catholic Church; but before closing this brief reference to this interesting subject we must allude to the conversion of a most exalted lady who was brought to the Church in a final simply by means of perusing the pages of a pagan philosopher.

Every intelligent person is aware of the fact that the Church has received into her bosom many illustrious converts among the most learned and influential classes of society in every land, men and women whose extraordinary genius cast a halo of renown over the age in which they flourished, and whose names will be mentioned in after ages with reverential respect. Among the glittering galaxy of names which deserve honorable mention in this regard stands foremost that of Christina, Queen of Sweden, the daughter of Gustavus Adolphus, the talented hero of Protestantism. From her infancy this celebrated woman was deeply impressed with the beauty and grandeur of Catholic worship, yet she dared not even to whisper her convictions to a confiding one as she knew that her queenly position would have to be forfeited if she mentioned her misgivings in the Protestant formal worship by continuing which she could above retain the crown of Sweden. Christina was a rare classical scholar, a woman whose mind was stored with the best thoughts of ancient philosophers, and one day as she perused the poems of Cicero's De natura Deorum she came across the memorable passage wherein that celebrated writer says "that possibly all the opinions of men concerning religion might be false, but that more than one of them could be true was impossible." Then the queen began to reflect that Protestantism was nothing more than segregated atoms of error, each sect contradicting the tenets of its neighbor, and only held together by the gossamer chord of opposition to the Catholic Church. She saw around her two great armies warring for spiritual supremacy, the old Church of seventeen centuries still presenting a single front to the allied powers of new-fledged Protestantism; she saw the so-called Reformers wrangling among themselves and their disciples disagreeing upon the most vital questions of salvation; and as she, reflected upon the words of the sage of Athens she vowed that no matter what penalty she might be called upon to pay for the sacrifice, she would search until Almighty God revealed to her the true religion. A few months reading and reflection satisfied her eager mind, and with joy unbounded she embraced the Catholic faith, at first privately in Brussels and afterwards publicly at Innsbruck. She resigned the crown of Sweden willingly into other hands, because she could not reign as queen and be a Catholic; she became a voluntary exile from her native land, visiting the memorable shrine of the Blessed Virgin at Loretto, wherein she placed her crown and her sceptre as a thank-offering to God for having called her to that true Church through which alone she could reach heaven.

After having been the patron of the arts and sciences in Rome for many years, this celebrated convert died there and her corpse received the high honor of being entombed in St. Peter's.

John Bull Badly Victimized.

Our readers will doubtless remember the extraordinary sensation which was created in August last by the discovery that a large number of "infernal" machines filled with dynamite had been shipped from New York for the purpose of destroying life and property in England. We published the truth of the whole story at the time, and it appears, from the following recent developments, that the whole thing was a conspiracy among a few smart Irishmen in order to scare $10,000 out of the plethoric pockets of the British Ministry. O'Donovan Rossa, it appears, purchased a lot of condemned clock work and packed them in tobacco boxes, and engaged a man named Foye to represent the plan to the British authorities under the guise of an informer. It is not possible to learn to whom Foye first made overtures, but in the course of time he was negotiating with the British Consulate New York. The first information given Foye was to the effect that a Fenian had left New York on the White Star Line steamer, having in his possession two of the infernal machines. This information was not lodged until the steamer had arrived, of which fact Foye had been advised by cable. He (Foye) said both his brothers were in the plot, and he undertook to secure the services of one of them to accompany the Sunday the 4th inst. Foye was to meet the party at the station of the Holy Father. He (Foye) at present resides in Brooklyn, and he (Foye) expected at any moment. Many of the Roman Catholic laymen are now in Rome, and are engaged in the cause of the Holy Father. He (Foye) is a member of the Catholic Church, and he (Foye) has been in Rome for some time, and he (Foye) has been in Rome for some time, and he (Foye) has been in Rome for some time

Farm and Home.

Over-Dressed Children.

"Silver Pen," the accomplished fashion editor of the Examiner, asserts that in no place in the world, including Paris and London, are women so passionately devoted to dress as they are in San Francisco and Oakland. This tendency is especially remarkable in the over decoration of children. From babyhood they are taught to be richly and gaudily dressed in the most important business of a woman's life. Little tots of things, scarcely able to walk, are decked out in velvet dresses, silken scarfs, little pyramids of costly lace on their small heads, little chains around their slender throats, rings on their little fingers, and only wanting bells on their toes to complete a caricature of a little old woman. This precocious trickery, the writer more than intimates, would be laughed at in the old-fashioned capitals of Europe, and is probably the result of a provincial situation and the newness of society. When she was a girl, she happened to see Queen Victoria at Brighton with her children. They were dressed in simple white dresses with blue sashes, and very coarse white straw hats, tied down with white ribbons. The Queen herself had on an equally simple garb of organdie muslin, a white Swiss mantle, and a bonnet like the children's of plain straw, with only a simple twist of ribbon round the crown. The poor little spectator was much disgusted at the simplicity of the royal party, having expected to see crown and jewels, silks and satins, and complained vaguely to her own gypsy finery, considered herself far better dressed than the princesses. But now, being a woman, and having seen much of the big world, she recognized the beautiful simplicity which made those children appear as sweet and pure as were the daisies beneath their feet.

Pruning Out Raspberries.

Different opinions have been expressed by cultivators as the best time to cut out the old canes of raspberries after they have done bearing. The practice is often recommended of doing it as soon as the crop is gathered, so as to let the new canes have more room to grow; others would not do it till the leaves have fallen and after they have given all their growing strength to the roots; while a third class would not cut at all in Summer or Autumn, fearing the practice may make the plants more tender for Winter, but would do all the cutting out early in Spring. We have favored the second practice mentioned, for all full hardy sorts. A writer in "Hearth and Home" said he cut out the old canes in Summer as done bearing, leaving from three to five strong canes for next year. A part of these broke by wind, and young shoots sprung but too late for any value. The operation was a failure. A common mistake, and common too by that writer, was in allowing too many new canes to grow in Summer. The result he treated as weeds, and all not needed, cut down to the ground as soon as they appeared above the surface.

Pretty Woman Scrubbing.

We passed a door, not long ago, and looked in. There was the lady of the house, with her pretty white feet and her pretty bare arms bare, and wielding the scrubbing brush with plenty of water on her floor. As she raised up, with her working gown on, she actually looked sweet enough to eat. We thought to ourselves, her husband must be mighty proud of her. O, how dignified she was in comparison with the poor dear ladies walking and perspiring in the hot sun, all over a big town trying to get somebody to do their work for them.

O, shams on such false notions, and false pride. Pshaw, ladies, throw all such nonsense to the winds. We have known ladies plenty, who could cook the dinner, wash the clothes, plant and tend to the garden, and all such, and then almost beat the world on the piano.

How Daniel Webster Proposed.

In old times it was the fashion for a suitor to go down on his knees to a lady when he asked her to become his wife, which with very stout gentlemen was a very uncomfortable proceeding. The way in which Daniel Webster proposed to Miss Fletcher was more modern, being at the same time neat and poetic. Like many another lover, he was once holding a skein of thread or wool which the lady had been unravelling. "Gracie," said he, "we have been untying knots; let us see if we cannot tie one which will not untie in a lifetime." With a piece of tape he fashioned the half of a true lover's knot; Miss Fletcher perfected it, and a kiss put the seal to the symbolical bargain.

To Fatten Poultry.

An experiment has been tried of feeding geese with turnips cut in small pieces like dice, but less in size, and put into a trough of water; with this food alone the effect was that six geese, each when lean weighing only nine pounds, actually gained twenty pounds each in about three weeks' fattening.

Malt is an excellent food for geese and turkeys; grains are preferred for the sake of economy, unless for immediate and rapid fattening; the grains should be boiled afresh.

Other cheap articles for fattening are oatmeal and treacle; barley-meal and milk; boiled oats and ground malt.

Corn before being given to fowls should always be crushed and soaked in water. The food will thus go further, and will help digestion. Hens fed thus have been known to lay during the whole of the winter months.

Turkeys are very tender while young, afterwards hardy. Put them in large and open coops; they may be well raised with meal, and ramble less. When hatched some put a grain of black pepper down their throats as a sort of cordial. The best food for chicks when hatched is bread and milk in a few days barley-meal, wetted into balls as big as peas.

—Dr. Pierce's Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, composed of extract of Jamaica ginger, smart-weed or water-pepper, and best French brandy, cures colic, diarrhœa, and dysentery (bloody-flux). By druggists, 50 cents.

DAY RUSKEY PAD CO., Buffalo, N. Y.: Please send me at your earliest convenience two dozen of your Pads. They are giving good satisfaction to my customers.

A. M. THOMPSON, Druggist,
Mason City, Ia.

WHAT SHE SHOULD DO.

A Few Suggestions of Importance on a Subject of Interest to the Ladies.

And Certain Facts which Should be Known by all Women.

[Home Journal, New York.]

A short time since an article appeared in the columns of this paper, being a synopsis of a lecture delivered by a prominent lady before a well known New England society. This article dealt so directly with the needs of woman, and contained so many hints which were valuable that it naturally attracted no little attention and like, we learn, been a subject of comment in social circles to nearly every part of the land. Realizing that no subject can be of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers, than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this same subject.

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Bernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that even her far famed French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excell, American women in quickness of perception and brilliancy of intellect. The minds and manners of American women are all that can be desired; but it is a lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their social and mental characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitution, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess no one of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in a slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary ways, devotion to fashion—but above all and more than all, carelessness and indifference to daily habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results and is both directly and indirectly of untold injury to the race. The laws, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as those they live! In Europe, or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The performance of the natural functions of womanhood and motherhood is not a disease, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the means which make and purify the blood must be preserved in, or restored to their normal condition. These organs are the kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poisonous constituents, of the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and give way and finally the kidneys and cutaneous organs become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all form of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing innovations are follow. This is especially true in the case of women. And if the bowels are thus inactive and overloaded, the neighboring organs, which are so intimately related to them, are affected upon the side of the liver, bowels and kidneys, become disordered, and the consequences which ensue are too well known to require repetition in a conspicuous article of this kind. The secret, however, of preventing these painful disorders, is to keep the kidneys and liver in perfect working condition. This is reason this is science, and it appeals with force to the suffering women of America.

When the body is in a healthy condition, "there is no beauty of complexion, clearness of step, buoyfulness of disposition, and comfort and happiness in the duties and responsibilities of a family. There is, therefore, every incentive to secure and preserve human health.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy described in the lecture to which reference has already been made, is receiving, as it certainly merits, the most careful attention and the trial of the women of the land. It is a pure and simple vegetable remedy which is now doing more to bring health and strength to the American women than any one thing which has ever been discovered. It acts directly upon the liver, kidneys and urinary organs, soothes any inflammation, allays all pain, and places those organs in a condition to bring health to the body and happiness to the life. The manufacturers of this great remedy, as we learn from the lecture, have the written thanks of thousands of women—many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. No true woman is pleased to have her physical troubles flaunted in the eyes of the public.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore no adequate remedy for the ills of women has ever been discovered. Nor have the medical profession ever been able to assist woman in her troubles as she desires. This is, perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much bigotry and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates the follies the blighting effects of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was oppressed and scoffed at. Thompson, the founder of the Thompsonian theory, was the victim of a hateful conspiracy. Morton, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet the discoveries of these men are to-day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach, not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death-bed scenes, and felt that it still were equal to the hour—death might have been postponed many years—that science if use were made of all the agencies that have been placed, was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated! A pill is contracted, it refuses to yield to a fixed form of treatment, the physician may not be candid enough to call in the aid of other schools, or of independent agencies, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not employ a remedy confessedly known to the world for relief! It has been the courage of his convictions and employers outside agriculture, he is visited with expulsion from the society of his fellows, and, forsooth, become what they choose to call a quack. When they have exhausted all the agencies approved by their schools, they "shirk the responsibility" of the death of their patient by advising a trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe. Such treatment may be in accordance with the "code of ethics" but in the view of the enlightened public it is downright cowardly, if it may not be even more strongly characterized.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of the country, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording for recovering lost health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health, by a wakeful eye over daily habits and duties, and by a regulation of the life with the remedy above named, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be secured in their highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention which it deserves, and the care which they are able to bestow, conscious that their efforts are certain to bring them perfect health and long and happy lives.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OUR $25 and $30 BUSINESS SUITS

Are First-Class in Every Respect.

Fit Guaranteed or Money Refunded.

T. G. PARKER & CO.,
418 Montgomery Street,
Bet. California and Sacramento Sts.

SWAIN'S
Family Bakery and Dining Saloon,
No. 636 Market Street.
Wedding Cakes, Ice Cream, Jellies, etc. Constantly on hand and made to order.
FAMILIES SUPPLIED.

C. E. PEARSON, Manager.

GRAND ORIENTAL CASH MARKET
1262 Market Street,
Bet. Taylor and Jones. SAN FRANCISCO

FLETCHER & JONAS,
—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN—
Beast American Meats.
OUR MOTTO: Fine Meats, Full Weight and Low Prices.

MISS C. J. JERABECK,
FLORIST,
39 CEARY STREET,
Bet. Kearny and Dupont Sts. San Francisco

Boquets, Baskets, Funeral and Wedding Designs, Cut Flowers, Etc.

Wax Flowers Kept on Hand in Great Variety.

Flowers Preserved so as to keep a Natural Appearance.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE

of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that for the sum of 25 cents, it will make one remittance, keeping an account of your dealings, and supplying you with any paper or periodical you may desire, which can be ordered through them, thus saving direct from the dealer. It also has facilities for transacting any private or public business, such as sending personal or family advertisements. The advantages it offers in acting as your agent are more valuable than ever. Address

THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 33 Barclay street, and 35 Park Place.

WHAT YOU WANT TO KNOW
—AND—
SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING
WHERE TO PURCHASE GOOD
THE FINEST TEAS
—AND—
CHOICEST COFFEES
Pure and unadulterated, at the GREAT AMERICAN Importing Tea Co.'s,
NEW TEA STORES,
522 and 524 Kearny street,
140 and 142 Sixth St.
SAN FRANCISCO.
It will pay you to try them. They are the only store—Tea and Coffee store in the city. They do not deal in the Eastern style.

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS
P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO.,
STEAM Book & Job Printers
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

SENT FREE on application—BRIGGS & IRONS Flower and Seed Catalogue. Large crop available as to SELL SEEDS LOW. 109 SECTION N.Y. and 109 CHICAGO ILL.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for ladies. Fan orders will be attended to by mail and throughout the Pacific Coast.
N. B.—Is acknowledged superiority in this branch of the business, largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of practical bootmakers, to whom the trade is indebted. The benefits of such a system are open to the village of a customer, who receives satisfactory. Sole Agent for Dr. A. H. Dixon's Condition Powders and McKinney's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Top Buggies. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English Leather and Gentlemen's Saddles, Gaiters, whips, spurs, blankets and gloves. JOHN O'KANE.

KNABE PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALLED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

P. McCLOSKEY,
405 Fourth Street,
(Near Harrison.)
WOOD & COAL,
At Bedrock Prices.
GIVE ME A TRIAL.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Cost. Outfit Free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine

MISCELLANEOUS.

EXCELSIOR STRAW WORKS,
120 Fourth Street.
Facing old Hay, and Jamaica dress straw for hats, bonnets, etc. Hats and Bonnets Dyed and Pressed.
P. H. LEONARD.
464 Sixth St. Between Harrison and Bryant

INFORMATION WANTED.
WILLIAM SMITH, aged 40 years, on the Bonanza, St. Charles, Mo., Alma, Ia., Leadville, Colorado, Omaha, Neb., Salt Lake City, Utah, Virginia City, Nev., Middle Branch, Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania. His mother, Sister, Mary Fisher, Eliza, or any relatives are requested to write to Mr. Peter Jaell, Pottsville, Cal-ifornia, from whom they may hear of something to their advantage.
☞ Boston Public and Dead Letter Offices copy.

ALTAR WINES.
Having purchased all the Altar Wines made under the immediate supervision of the Rev. P. J. Kaiser in the vineyards of His Grace Archbishop Alemany at the Old Mission San Jose, also the Wines made for ALTAR PURPOSES out of Col. Hooper's cellars at Sonoma, we herewith respectfully offer them to the clergy and others desiring an absolute pure wine, made with the utmost care, and guaranteed of the vintages represented.
ARPAR HARASTHY & CO.,
530 Washington St., S. F.

Patent, Nov. 11, 1879.
Patent, Nov. 2, 1880.
Medical Electricity
HORNER'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT.
The Great Medical Discovery. Cures Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Pain, Sore Stiff, Sick, Nervous Debility, Kidney Complaints, Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Exhaustion, Premature Old Age.
A PERFECT CURE. PROVE IT IN THE WORK IS DONE. Sent on Trial. Address for Pamphlet, Free.
RUPTURE GUARANTEED RELIEVED and cured. Send for Circular.
W. J. HORNER, Prop. & Manuf'r.
109 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

CURES ASTHMA, RHEUMATISM, PARALYSIS, FITS, Constipation, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney complaints, Dysentery, Nervous Diseases, Debility, Male or Female Weakness or Impotency, and Nervous Exhaustion. Sent on Trial. Address GRAY & CO., No. 9 Grant street, San Francisco, Cal.

RICHARD RICE,
Practical Plumber, Gas & Steam Fitter,
107 Ceary street, S. F.
Personal attention given to all work and satisfaction guaranteed. Jobbing promptly attended to.

COAL. COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.
☞ Telephone number 1872.

ROBERT MATTHEY,
PALACE BAKERY,
1323 Mission Street, bet. 11th & 12th.
Corner Mission and Lafayette Streets, S. F.

Ladies Fall Opening of 1881,
OF IMPORTED
Parisian Bonnets and Hats,
MRS. SKIDMORE'S,
1111 Market Street, San Francisco,
(Bet. Mason and Taylor.)
Thursday, September 29th.
Friday, September 30th.

THORS
PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDIO.
1005 Larkin Street.

JNO. F. SNOW & CO.

CLEANSING AND DYEING.
Blankets, Lace Curtains, Wool and Silk Goods, Ladies' Ladies' Suits, Velvets, Silks, Cloaks, Furs, Feathers, Kid Gloves, Crape Veils, Velvets, Etc., Etc.
CHAS. J. HOLMES, Proprietor.
—OFFICES—
633 Market Street, Under Palace Hotel
BRANCH: 1063 Broadway, Oakland.
Goods can be sent to and from any part of the country, not weighing over 5 pounds. Orders by postal card promptly attended to.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING
STYLISH AND PERFECT FITTING.
SUITS MADE AT REASONABLE PRICES BY MRS. M. E. CASTER, 216 Fifth street.

PENSIONS FOR SOLDIERS.
Widows, children and dependent fathers, Thousands entitled. Pensions are now granted for any disease or injury. INCREASE of PENSION for all who have lost a limb or are ruptured. Circulars sent free. Address, with stamp, N. W. FITZGERALD & CO., Pension Attorneys, Washington, D. C.

Tobacco Tags Famous $65 Organ

MISCELLANEOUS.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
"EUREKA."
WE HAVE FOUND IT. THE CHEAPEST STORE in the Union for Boots and Shoes of every kind and description. Ladies' Kid Button Boots, $2 and $2 50. Ladies' Kid Button Boots, with Tips, $2 50. Ladies' Kid Button Boots, Spring Heels, $2 50. Ladies' Kid Button Boots, Spring Heels, $2 50. Ladies' Kid Button Boots, Spring Heels

Latest Telegrams.

(Concluded from first page).

ers at the convention. It urges the representatives of farmers and landholders to fulfil the pledge they gave to secure better dwellings for laborers.

Archbishop Croke's Advice.

DUBLIN, October 10.—Archbishop Croke of Cashel, in his reply to an address from a branch of the Land League, after solemnly adjuring the good points of the Land Act and that its real value must be estimated by the reduction of rent the Commissioners were prepared to make. They must make the tillers of the soil, some of whom are now living in some respects in a manner inferior to savages, a fair settlement. The landlords should be paid their just demands, after the farmers were decently clad, fed and housed, and their families provided for.

Dillon and Parnell.

John Dillon resends being cited as approving the Land Act, and he will answer Gladstone's speech.

Parnell was to day presented with an address in the market place of Wexford, the town hall not being large enough to contain the enthusiastic crowds.

Serious Riots.

NEW YORK, October 11.—The Herald's cable special from Dublin of October 10th says: There was a riot last night at Ballyragget, county Kilkenny, which proves to have been a more formidable affair than at first was supposed. Shortly after the land meeting a detachment of police were marching to the railway station. They were followed by a large and heating crowd. Near the station stones were thrown, and the police turned on the people and charged with their bayonets. A man named Mansfield was fatally stabbed and fifteen other persons were seriously wounded. One man has since died. The people were infuriated at the sight of so many wounded, and were about to throw themselves upon the constabulary, but were restrained by a priest. Rioting continued all day. Two hundred and fifty extra police have been dispatched to the scene.

Narrow Escapes.

There are disputing reports from every quarter. Our Ennis correspondent telegraphs as follows: The residence of Robert Speight, J. P., was attacked Friday evening by an armed party. Shots were fired into it. Speight was going into his bedroom when a bullet grazed his head and lodged in the wall. Speight being a popular man, the only cause of attack assignable is his refusal to quit patronizing a Boycotted butcher.

Another bold outrage occurred near Ennis this morning. The landsmen of James Lynch were storing hay, when a regular fusillade was opened on them from an adjacent hillside. The bullets failed to take effect, but the terrified herdsmen fled into Ennis. The police scoured the country soon after, but found nobody.

Salisbury and Dillon Attack Gladstone's Policy.

LONDON, Oct. 11.—Lord Salisbury, speaking at a banquet to-night at Newcastle-on-Tyne, charged Gladstone with pursuing a policy of public plunder, which he (Gladstone) now denounces Parnellite advocating. Referring to the Transvaal question he said the Government was in a pitiful condition, having vainly eaten dirt, and it would have to eat still more.

DUBLIN, Oct. 11.—Parnell at Wexford said that the movement for using only the articles of Irish manufacture is more likely to succeed than any of a similar kind ever started. Ireland had plenty of capital of her own, and all the Irish wanted was a full and fair scope for the ingenuity and intelligence of Irishmen.

—Miss C. J. Jerabeck, Florist, of 30 Geary street, will furnish grooms, bakers, barista, etc., at short notice. She keeps on hand, in variety, wax flowers. She also preserves flowers so as to keep a natural appearance.

— Ladies desiring to keep up with the fashions in dresses should patronize Mrs. A. W. Kind, dressmaker, 1007 Market street. This lady has devoted a lifetime to the study of that business.

— For fancy show cards at low prices the place is Geo Mehrwald's, 841 Market street.

— In buying shoes a practical shoemaker is the best to buy of. His thorough acquaintance with the business gives him an advantage, as a buyer, over those who only turned to the business. Purchasers on the above supposition should patronize F. H. Leonard, 464 Sixth street.

NOTICE TO CLERGYMEN.

All Clergymen whose churches are in the Archdiocese of San Francisco who have church organs to be tuned or who contemplate the purchase of a church organ, either large or small, and would prefer to patronize a Catholic gentleman who is thoroughly qualified, and who will do tuning or supply organs at a reasonable price, should write stating their wishes to the undersigned. I contemplate a trip through the Archdiocese of San Francisco in the months of November and December of this year, and will call upon each clergyman who will write me that he desires my services. Address,

J. J. KENNEY, Willimantic, Conn.

Reference: Rev. F. DeBruycker, of this place.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A Most Useful and Timely Book.

THE BEATITUDES OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH; OR, HIS FRIENDS AND HIS HERO AND CHAMPIONS POPULARLY EXPLAINED. By Rev. F. J. Shaffer. With an introduction by Rt. Rev. M. N. Lynch, Bishop of Charleston, S. C.

It is a book of over 500 pages, full of valuable information for everybody, and should be found in every Catholic family. Price $1.25.

Fr. Pustet & Co., Publishers,
52 Barclay street, New York and 204 Vine street, Cincinnati, O.

Accept no other.

An Old Doctor's Advice.

It was this: "Trust to God and keep your bowels open." For this purpose many an old doctor has advised the habitually costive to take Kidney-Wort—for no other remedy so effectually overcomes this condition, and that without the distress and griping which other medicines cause. It is a reliable cure for piles. Don't fail to use it. —Translated from the New York Zeitung.

Go to McMullin Bros. No. 8 Sixth street near Market, if you want the best tinware, 36 gauge tin 25 c., 24 gauge tin 30 c.

Shaven's Cherry Tooth Paste.

An aromatic combination for the preservation of the Teeth and Gums. Far superior to any preparation of its kind in the market. In large handsome flint pots, price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MONITOR OFFICE, Oct. 12, 1881.

FLOUR—City Extras are holding at $5 62½@$6 75. City Superfine, $4 12½@$4 25; Interior brands, $3 50@$3 75; Oregon and $4 50@$5 for superfine.

WHEAT—Business dragged to day. No fresh quotations were received until late in the day, and a decided apathetic feeling prevailed. The only sales reported to date were 600 sks very choice, $1 75, and 2,000 sks No. 1, Port Costa, $1 72½. No. 1 to quitable at $1 70@$1 72½ and No. 2 at $1 65@$1 67½ ¢ ctl.

BARLEY—The same steady inquiry manifested for the past month or so continues. There is no excitement, but the market is firm. Sales of 1,135 sks fair bay Chevalier at $1 50, and 1,900 and 500 sks coast feed, $1 42½. Brewing is quotable at $1 47½@$1 55 for fight and $1 57½@$1 60 for bright heavy; standard Chevalier, $1 50@$1 52½cost do, $1 40@$1 45.

OATS—Are extremely quiet. Offerings on Chance are nearly neglected. No sales to-day, good and choice, $1 50@$1 60; common $1 30@$1 45; Surprise, $1 75 ¢ ctl.

CORN—Was freely offered on Change to-day, and holders asked $1 50 ¢ ctl for all kinds, but no bids were made. There is consequently no quotation.

HAY—Wheat, old, $11@$13; wild oats, $9@$12; volunteer and stable, $7@$10; cow, $8@$9 ¢ ton.

RYE—Quotable at $1 50@$1 62½ ¢ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 50@$1 60 ¢ ctl.

STRAW—Per bale, 62½@75c.

POTATOES—The market is strong and good lots sell readily. Humboldt Reds, nominal, potatoes from first cands being made to day. Salinas Blues, $1 37½; Chiffey Gems sold at $1 37½@$1 45; Petaluma and Tomales, $1 25@$1 37½; River Reds, at $1 15@$1 30; Early Rose, $1 10@$1 20; Sweets $2@$2 ¢ ctl.

ONIONS—Are quotable at 75@80c ¢ ctl.

CORNMEAL, ETC—Table Meal, $3 50@ ¢ ctl; Feed Corn, $35 ¢ ton; Hominy $3@$3 ¢ ctl.

BEESWAX—28@30c ¢ lb.

BEANS—Bayos, $2 25@$2 50; small Butter, $5 large, do, $5 25; White, $3 87½@$3 90; Pink, $2; Lima, $5 50@$5 75; Red Mexican, $3 75; Castor, $3 50@$4; Reds, $2 ¢ ctl.

SEEDS—Mustard, yellow, $1 75@$2; do, brown, $1 50@$1 75 ¢ ctl; Flax, $2 50@$2 62½ ¢ ctl; Canary, 4c; Alfalfa, 10@12c; Rape, 2½c; Hemp, 8c; Timothy, 8@9c ¢ lb.

DRIED PEAS—Quotable at $1 75@$1 75 ¢ ctl for Blackeyes, and $1 75@$1 90 for Green. Split, $5 ¢ ctl.

BUTTER—Opens strong and unchanged. Receipts are light. Good and Choice California roll, 42@45c; fair and good do, 37½@40c; mixed lots from country stores 30@35c; tubs, 32@37½c; Pickled roll, 30@35c; Eastern, 30@35 ¢ lb.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 18c; California, 15c ¢ ¢ lb.

POULTRY—Sold irregular to-day. Live Turkeys ¢ lb 15@18c for Hens, and 18@19c for Gobblers; Geese, $1 50@$1 75; Ducks ¢ doz, $4 50@$5; Hens, $5@$6 50; Roosters, young, $5@$6; do, old, $4@$4 50; Broilers, $3 50@$4.

EGGS—Open very strong. Oregon, 34@36c; California 30@31c; Utah, 27½@28c; Eastern 25@27c ¢ doz.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Very few cartloadings came in to-day. Apples are doing better, so the carriers say for fresh. Wisconsin Cranberries, $12 50@$13 ¢ bbl; Watermelons, $50@$70 ¢ 100; Muskmelons, $1 50@$1 50 ¢ crate; Grapes 75c@$1 ¢ box; Figs, 60@$1 per box; Pears, 50@$1 ¢ box and basket; Apples, 50@$1 25 ¢ box; Strawberries, $20@25 ¢ chest.

VEGETABLES—Marrowfat Squash, 8@8½c ¢ lb; Egg Plant, 5@6c ¢ box; Okra 25@50c ¢ box; Green corn, 12½@15c ¢ dozen; Cucumbers, 25@50c per box; Tomatoes, 25@50c ¢ box; Cabbage, 8@10c ¢ ctl; Cauliflower, 60@75c ¢ dozen; Onions, 30@35c; Turnips, 75c; Beets, 60c; Parsnips, 75c ¢ dozen; Green Chile Peppers, 50@75c ¢ box.

MARRIED.

RYAN—QUINAN—In Cuthe's Chapel, Sept. 22, 1881, by Father Sheridan, Michael R. Ryan and Sarah Quinan.

McKVOY-KENNY—In this city, Oct. 3, by Rev. Father Gallagher, John W. McKvoy to Kate E. Kenny, both of this city.

DUNN-GUNNISON—At Yale on the 12th ult., by Rev. F. Lecouve, Joseph Dunn of the C. P. R. S. to Miss Catherine Gunnison, late of County Kildare, Ireland.

DIED.

MENAMARA—In this city, Sept. 27, Robert McNamara, aged 22 years.

HURLEY—At St. Mary's Hospital, September 27, Patrick Hurley, aged 65 years.

MAGNEE—In this city, Sept. 29, Frank Magnee, a native of the Parish of Ilieworth, County York, Ireland, aged 31 years and 9 months.

MCNAMARA—In St. Mary's Hospital, Sept. 28, Mary McNamara, a native of the Parish of Ballynahinch, County Cork, Ireland, aged 26.

DESMOND—In this city, September 28, Mrs. Ellen Desmond, a native of the Parish of Killrogan, County Cork, Ireland, aged 65 years.

O'BRIEN—In this city, Sept. 29, John William O'Hiere, a native of Hull, aged 30 years.

SEKAYO—In this city, Sept. 29, Perry Sexton, a native of Ireland, aged 54 years.

FOGARTY—In this city, Sept. 30, Patrick, beloved daughter of Martin and Ellen Fogarty, a native of San Francisco, aged 15 years and 7 months.

DESMOND—In Mayfield, Santa Clara County, September 29, John A. Desmond, of San Francisco, daughter of Johana Cogan and Richard Driscoll, deceased, a native of San Francisco, aged 21 years, 3 months and 26 days. R. I. P.

STOKES—In Oakland, Sept. 22, Anna, daughter of Patrick and Mary Stokes, aged 3 years, 3 months and 7 days.

CONNOLLY—In this city, Sept. 30, Katie, daughter of Thomas and Margaret Connolly, a native of this city, aged 20 years, 10 months and 28 days.

MORE—At Yale Hospital, British Columbia, on the 19th ult., John More, aged 52 years. Deceased was a native of Ireland, and spent one years in California.

COYLE—In this city, Oct. 1, John, beloved brother of the late Hannah Coyle, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, aged 3 years.

O'HIERN—In this city, Oct. 1, James, beloved husband of Mary O'Hiere, a native of New York aged 19 years and 11 months.

CONNOLLY—In this city, Sept. 30, Katie, daughter of Thomas and Margaret Connolly, a native of this city, aged 20 years, 10 months, and 28 days.

MORE—At Yale Hospital, British Columbia, on the 19th ult., John More, aged 52 years. Deceased was a native of Ireland, and spent one years in California.

COYLE—In this city, Oct. 1, John, beloved brother of the late Hannah Coyle, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, aged 3 years.

O'HIERN—In this city, Oct. 1, James, beloved husband of Mary O'Hiere, a native of New York aged 19 years and 11 months.

CONNOLLY—In this city, Sept. 30, Katie, daughter of Thomas and Margaret Connolly, a native of this city, aged 20 years, 10 months, and 28 days.

—Cures kidney and bladder diseases. Send stamp for pamphlet, "How a Life was Saved."

Eucalyptus.

Eucalyptus has of late years been found very useful for a great number of the ills that flesh is heir to. Highest application is in the shape of Slaven's California Pine and Eucalyptus Porous Plaster, an article which is possessed of much merit, and is fast superseding the old fashioned pitch and frankincense plaster. It is endorsed by the medical profession throughout the land. For sale by all Druggists.

California Fruits Best.

Delivered to any part of the East by special fruit car, 25c or 50 pounds of the choicest California fruits at $1 50 and $2 freight per pound. This includes fruit and expenses. Lemons ordered 36 California street. E. T. Earl.

— Tourists and the traveling public in general, will find it to their interest to call at the Acme Photo. Studio, 911 Market Street, for first class work at lowest prices. All work warranted and equal to any competitor. Mrs. S. Fletcher (formerly of Stockton), proprietress. E. R. Higgins operator.

New Advertisements.

A. W. MYER.
PRACTICAL
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
No. 1017 Market Street,
OPPOSITE FIFTH. SAN FRANCISCO
Watches, Clocks, Jewelry and Music Boxes Expertly and Promptly attended to and warranted.

LADIES!
If you want to wear HATS or BONNETS that will be admired PURCHASE AT
MRS. SKIDMORE'S
MILLINERY ESTABLISHMENT,
1114 Market Street,
BET. MASON AND TAYLOR. SAN FRANCISCO

MICHAEL SHEA,
—DEALER IN—
BOOKS, STATIONERY, NEWSPAPERS, &c.
805 MARKET STREET,
Just above Fourth Street SAN FRANCISCO

HODGES
CLOAK
AND
SUIT ROOMS,
No. 10 Fifth St., near Market S. F.
☞ On hand a large variety of the Latest Styles Cloaks and Dolmans at very low prices.
Ladies Suits from $18 up. Also a Full Line of Fancy Silks, Morning Wrappers, Corsets and Latest Novelties in Dress Trimmings, Silks, Special attention to Orders at Lowest Rates.

Stylish and Perfect-Fitting SUITS
MADE FROM $4 UP.
251 Sixth Street. San Francisco

KIDNEY-WORT
THE GREAT CURE FOR RHEUMATISM
As it is for all diseases of the KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BOWELS.
It removes the cause of the evil, which causes the dreadful suffering which only the victims of Rheumatism can realize.
THOUSANDS OF CASES
of the worst forms of this terrible disease have been quickly relieved, in a short time PERFECTLY CURED.
KIDNEY-WORT
has had wonderful success, and as its numerous testimonials prove, it is a medicine of great power to cure the most painful of diseases.
KIDNEY-WORT
is the best aperient, and as its many friends say, it acts kindly but efficiently, CERTAIN IN ITS ACTION, but never irritating in its nature.
If it cleanses, Strengthens and gives New Life to all the important organs of the body. The natural action of the Kidneys is restored. The Liver is cleansed of its torpor, and the Bowels are freed from costiveness. In a word it works the worst diseases are eradicated from the system.
And it has been proved by thousands that is the most effectual remedy for cleansing the system of all impurities, whether it be in the Blood, or in the Urinary Organs.
KIDNEY-WORT
KIDNEY-WORT
Price $1.00. Dry Form, $1.00. Liquid Form, Concentrated for the convenience of those who cannot easily prepare it, Dry, from all druggists or by sending $1.00 to the Proprietors, GET IT OF YOUR DRUGGIST. PRICE, $1.00.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., PROPS. BURLINGTON, VT.
(VT.) send the dry post paid. BURLINGTON, VT.
KIDNEY-WORT

HEALD'S BUSINESS COLLEGE,
24 Post Street
Opposite Mechanics' Institute.
CONTINUES TO EXCEL IN ITS WORK. THIS BUSINESS EDUCATION is the best investment for the money, as the past thirteen years in the Remarkable Prosperity of its graduates attest. Its Graduates are in every business house in the city. Send for Circular. SPECIAL LUNCHEON TRAINING FOR BUSINESS.
President Business College, San Francisco.

R. H. McDonald, President.
Capital, $1,000,000.
PACIFIC BANK
Established 1863.
CAPITAL STOCK
$1,000,000.00.
Surplus 459,233.03.
San Francisco, July 1, 1881.
RESOURCES.

Real Estate (cost $115,000.00)	$150,000.00
Bills Receivable	1,097,092.15
Bonds and Stocks	1,068,923.15
Real Estate (other property)	243,922.15
Land Loan and Dock Stock	12,262.70
Due From other Banks	294,100.50
Cash (Coin in our vault)	509,611.46
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock	$1,000,000.00
Reserve Fund (Surplus)	459,233.03
Due Depositors	1,040,378.53
Due to other Banks	186,107.55
Due 30% dividends	36.50
	$3,111,751.26

We issue drafts payable in gold in the principal cities of the world.
We make collections throughout the United States on the most favorable terms, and with the utmost promptness and accuracy.
We give advice in detail of all credits, acknowledge promptly all letters, and will furnish a private telegraphic cipher to depositors when requested.
Shipments of Gold and Silver Bullion will be received and promptly paid for.
Exchange on the principal cities of Europe, Europe, Ireland, Canada and Branch Bank in Gold.
Collections made and prompt returns remitted at lowest rates of exchange.
Telegraph Transfers made with New York, Boston, Chicago, and the principal cities of U. S. at rates lower than any other Bank.
Letters of Credit issued for the use of travelers in all the principal cities of the United Kingdom and Europe.
National, State, City and County Bonds and Warrants, Gold and Silver Bullion and Coin bought and sold.
Loans made on good collaterals or approved Names. Gold Business Notes and Bills discounted at lowest market rate.
Deposits received, subject to check without notice.
R. H. McDonald, President.

New Advertisements.

THE CHEAPEST PLACE
TO BUY
OILS, GLASS, LAMPS,
CHANDELIERS, ETC.
IS AT O'CONNOR & McBRIDE'S
Pioneer Oil Store,
115 Sixth street.
All kinds of Lubricating Oils constantly on hand.
☞ Goods delivered free to any part of the city.

HALL'S PIANOS,
16 Tyler street.
☞ THESE PIANOS ARE ALL THREE STRINGED.

HOPE FOR THE DEAF
Dr. Peck's Artificial Ear Drums.
PERFECTLY RESTORES THE HEARING and Stops Discharges, Ringing in the Ears, Head Noises, &c. Always in position, but invisible to others. All Conversation and even Whispers heard distinctly. We refer to those using them. Send for descriptive circular with testimonials. Address H. P. K. PECK & CO., 548 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH MUSIC.
For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ. No. 1 Anthem, Gloria in Excelsis, Sanctus, Glorias, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Credos, Te Deum, Jubilate, Easter Hymns, Lord Have Mercy, Christ Have Mercy, Lord Have Mercy, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Gloria Patri, Gloria in Excelsis, Tantum Ergo, Ave Verum, Ave Maria, Stabat Mater, Veni Creator, Vexilla Regis, Pange Lingua, Tantum Ergo, for Tenor, Tantum Ergo, for Bass, Adoremus, Ave Verum, for T. A. Weissager, Ave Verum, for Bass, Ave Verum, for Tenor, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Gloria Patri, Gloria in Excelsis, Lord Have Mercy, Christ Have Mercy, Lord Have Mercy

Poetry.

OUR LADY OF THE SNOW.

The Romans tell a legend rare,
A quaint, sweet and graceful story,
How first the site was chosen, where
To build the temple, stately, fair,
Of Santa Maria Maggiore.

And thus, too, doth tradition show
Why Rome still keeps, mid Summer's brightness,
(Are, Yes in fested August glow)
Feast of Our Lady of the Snow,
Tying the flakes with pensive whiteness.

There dwell in Rome a noble pair
(When Faith ruled hearts with stronger power)
Vast wealth was theirs, that had no heir
Nor childless wife sore to waste his share,
No daughter's earthly for her dower.

And so, for Him whose Hand bestowed
Their golden store in bounteous measure,
They vowed to build a fair abode,
And thus, where "midst could snow's cascade,
To shrine rare wealth of heat sky treasure.

But long they sought a fitting site
Whereon to rear the dome of splendor,
Praying, meanwhile, Our Lady bright,
In gracious vision of the night
To lead her sill, besign and tender.

The prayer of trusting Faith was heard:
Hear's on their heart's sincere petition
The boon of blest reply conferred—
And to their Lady's gracious word
Hind heel they gave, and joyous obedience.

As thus she spoke: "By dreamest sign
His answer's well your God shall render,
And show wherein, for Love Divine
Your soul shall build a worthy shrine
A fitting home of stately splendor."

When whose this Summer morn, they say
The faithful pair their steps directed
Ov'ment a sun illumined way,
Our Lady's mandate to obey,
And seek the site by Heaven selected.

That chosen spot is rea-bled' for, lo!
Strange scene, amid the Summer's bright-ness!
Unsoiled by the fervid glow,
They see a well of purest snow,
That shrouds the place with wintry whiteness!

And so—thus runs the legend rare,
Tradition's sweet and wondrous story—
God's faithful servants builded there
The state's temple, grand and fair,
Of Santa Maria Maggiore.

And this is why, as the Romans know,
They keep in glad commemoration,
Mid festive heat of August glow,
Feast of "Our Lady of the Snow,"
With rites of joyous celebration.

And in that home of Love Divine,
Through all that day, in fragrant showers,
From dome to pavement of the shrine
Fair coaxlem types of Faith's pure sign
In the snowy leaves of jasmine flowers.

Behold! the Roman legend rare
Within its sacred words unshrinth
Most precious lesson, pure and fair—
O, Christian! would'st discover where "That hidden gem of Wisdom shineth!

And would'st thou in thine inmost heart
Find worthy site and meet location,
A sacred region, lone, apart,
Wherein to rear, with heavily art
A holy shrine for Love's Oblation!

Pity, then, that heaven the night may show,
By that same miracle of brightness,
Where, sub from life's fierce passion glow,
Our gracious Lady of the Snow
Symbols purity's snowy whiteness.

—Ave Maria. MARIE. San Francisco.

Literary Miscellany.

Light After Darkness.

BY H. BLOMGREN.

A dark night in March. Heavy clouds hung low in the sky, shooting out bolts occasionally and startlight. The wind moaned dirge-like, through the trees; the waves beat against the rocky cliff with a wearied murmur dash and splash.

Above, on the cliff, on the lonely road that skirted the edge, two forms came slowly along.

"Indeed, darling, you must go no further," said the man, coaxing in a whisper. "You have left your home a goodly distance behind you, and you know that I have not the time to go back with you."

"Most we say 'good-bye' then, Allan!" moaned the woman.

"It must be done," was the sad reply. "It is not for long, darling; in six months at most."

"Oh, six months will seem an eternity," she wailed. "If I could only shake off this dread of coming evil, I could endure our parting better. Oh, I have such a fear that we will never meet again! that something will happen to separate us forever!"

"Those are idle fears, my Annie; do not nurse them. You know I would not go if it were not that our future depended upon it; six months' steady work there will enable me to claim you for my wife. Hark! some one is coming."

Both looked in the direction of the approaching form.

"It is Edward Lane," whispered Annie, shuddering.

Allan nodded, and even in the darkness his eyes could be seen to flash fiercely.

Edward Lane came slowly along, muttering to himself.

As he looked up, and saw the two in the road, he started violently; then casting an angry look upon them, he hurried by.

"How! shrink from that man!" exclaimed Annie, under her breath. "Ever since he declared his love for me, and vowed such fearful things' at my refusal of him, I have trembled at his approach."

"Do not fear him, darling; he is a coward at heart. Refuse to notice him while I am away, and he will not molest you. But now, I must go; and you must hurry back to your house. Try and endure those months drearly, my Annie, and after that we will never be parted."

Again and again he kissed her, as she clung, weeping, to him. At last, he put her from him, and hurried away.

She stood looking after him as long as the faintest echo of his footsteps came to her hearing; then she turned and walked slowly back.

Something in the weirdness of the scene about her seemed in sympathy with her sorrow, for when she had walked awhile, she seated herself on a rock near the edge of the cliff, and looked out upon the angry waves.

Fell an hour must have passed ere she started on again.

Then she walked quickly, saying to herself.

"Father will wonder at my absence, I must hasten."

She had almost reached her home, she could see the light from the windows clearly now.

She quickened her pace still more, then suddenly she cried out a dead half, as her eyes fell upon the forms of two men stringing on the very edge of the cliff.

She was fairly paralyzed with horror, she could not move nor speak; she stood there swaying, trembling, her eyes riveted on the two forms, though she vain would have shut out the horrid sight from her view.

The one who seemed to have the advantage at length drew himself up erect, and for a moment, he stood so that the light from the window fell upon him.

Annie saw his face quite plainly, and with a cry of anguish, she cowered to the ground, moaning.

"My father! My God, it is my father!"

She could not take her gaze from him even then; she still looked, and she saw an arm upraised, the glittering blade of a knife, she heard a groan, a splash; she saw one man standing on the cliff, then her senses deserted her, and she knew no more.

When she recovered, the full remembrance of that horrible scene returned to her, and she started up in affright, and ran wildly toward her home.

It was deserted; the room on the ground floor was lighted, but her father was not there.

Beside herself with fear, she left the home at once, and ran on to one of the neighbor's dwellings.

There she soon attracted a number of the villagers ah-ut her by her strange behavior and incoherent mutterings.

"What's the matter w' the child?" said one. "We'd better send for the father, thinks I."

"No—no!" cried Annie, springing to the woman as if she would detain her. "Don't ty to find him. He's not home."

"Not home!—and with the light a burning in his house!"

"No, he's not there. I saw him—I mean I guess he's gone to town."

"She's daft," murmured one and another.

"Come, I'll take you home," said one. "You're shivering in every part 'you, and you must be put to bed."

"Oh, no—no!" she cried. "I can't go there! I can't go home!"

"Then what'll the father think?"

"Oh, he won't come back! He'll go away, I know he will. Oh, father—father!" she moaned to herself, covering her face with her hands, "how could you do such an evil!"

"Eh! What!" exclaimed several.

"Nothing—nothing! I didn't say anything. Yes, I'll go home," she added, with a desperate effort at calmness. "I had better go home. No, I will go alone," she cried in alarm, as a scare suffered to accompany her. "I must go alone."

The villagers drew back in astonishment, and Annie quickly left them.

What a night it was to her!—sitting alone in that little house by the sea, waiting for her father who did not come.

The next day the greatest excitement prevailed in the place.

"The body of a murdered man had been found in the cove.

"It was the body of a stranger who had lately come to the village, a travelling agent, who had been known to have money in his possession.

"The money was now gone!

Who was the murderer?

"Annie's father," was the cry.

Her strange behavior on the previous night proved that; and her still stranger behavior as they came to seek her father, was further confirmation.

Later in the day her father returned, and instantly he was accused and seized.

All he would say was that he had been out on the water all night, as he had often been before; but, of course, he was not believed.

A week—two weeks passed. Day after day Annie sat alone in that house, enduring her misery. She had only one hope to cheer her, and that was that Allan would write to her, as he had promised, but no word came from him.

Every day she hoped. Every night she wailed:

"I am a murderer's daughter, he will not write to me. We will never meet again.

Three weeks had passed, still no letter, and the day of the trial was at hand.

There was no hope for the prisoner. The verdict of "guilty," and the sentence of death, were already decided upon.

As the trial came nearer and nearer, Annie secluded herself more and more, as the full horror of her position—chief witness against her father—became more apparent to her.

Many came to offer consolation to her, but she refused them all.

One day, as she looked up after a spasm of grief and tears, she saw Edward Lane standing right before her.

He had entered unbidden.

"Go away," she cried, starting up, and turning aside from his dark, unpleasant face.

"I have come to help you, Annie," he said softly.

"There is no help for me!" she returned fiercely. "You have come to mock me. Go, I say!"

"Be calm, Annie, and listen—I can help you."

"How?" she interrupted, turning to him with a wild glimmering of hope in her eyes.

"By saving your father."

"Oh, Edward Lane, do that—do that—and I will bless you forever! Oh, can you save him! and will you?"

"Yes, on one condition.

"And what is that?" she cried out, eagerly.

"That you become my wife."

She recoiled from him, as if he had struck her.

"Oh, no—no, never!"

"Then your father must die—die a shameful death! You have it in your power to save him, and you refuse.

"Oh, God help me!" she moaned, falling on her knees in her agony. "Edward Lane, I ask you once again, will you be my wife?"

She knelt there, moaning, and rocking herself two and fro, for some time.

Edward Lane stood looking on, his arms folded, and his dark eyes glowing with triumph.

At length, she raised her wan, white face, and faintly uttered

"Yes.

"At last!" he cried, exultantly, as he stooped to lift her in his arms.

She sprang up suddenly, crying, passionately

"Do not come near me! Go, go, now! I wish to be alone. Do not come again until my father is free! Do you you can claim your prize.

He could not do else than obey her now, so he left her.

The next day was the day of the trial.

The room in the county court-house was filled.

The prisoner was in the dock, bowed and bent

Annie was on the witness-stand. Edward Lane was to be called next, as he had given out that he had important disclosures to make.

The hush of expectation was upon all. A moment of dead silence reigned, and the proceedings were about to begin, when suddenly the court-room door was flung wide open, and a tall, manly form entered.

A murmur ran through the assembly. Edward Lane started to his feet, and looked wildly around, as if seeking a way to escape.

Annie leaped from the witness-stand, and sprang to the newcomer, crying joyfully

"Oh, Allan—Allan! have you come to save me!

Yes, it was Allan. He clasped his loved to his bosom and held her there with one arm, while with the other he pointed to Edward Lane, and said, in a clear, accusing voice:

"There stands the murderer!

All looked at Lane, and at saw guilt written upon his face.

He was instantly seized and shackled.

Allan, standing there, with the weeping Annie clinging to him, told the following:—

"On the night of the murder I left our village, expecting to be absent for six months. When I got to town, I found a letter awaiting me, that contained words to the effect that I need not absent myself; that I could do the work as well at home. I hastened back at once with the joyful tidings. I went to my betrothed's house—it was empty. Filled with misgivings, I hurried along the road, and to my horror, became a witness to the murder. I saw Lane, even through his disguise, and when he was alone on the cliff I went to him and denounced him. It was a rash thing for me to do. He struck me—I became insensible. When I recovered, I found myself on board a craft out at sea, and managed by a villainous crew. Each day I expected would be my last, for each day I was threatened with death. I succeeded in making my escape, however, by jumping overboard. I was picked up by a vessel, and after going out of my way for weeks, I at last succeeded in reaching this spot. I heard at once of the trial and circumstances, and I have hastened here to denounce the murderer and save an innocent man."

Cheers filled the court-room, as Annie's father was released. Hisses followed Edward Lane, who cowed and trembling, was led away to a murderer's cell.

Annie's misery was at an end. Allan made her his wife at once, and ever after they had just known made the present and the future shine with redoubled brightness.

Chester A. Arthur as President.

The New York Sun thus outlines the policy of the new President:—

"During more than half a century sites the organization of our national Government no President died in office; and there came to prevail among the common people a semi-superstitious belief that any one holding that office bore a sort of charmed life, as many also believed of Gen. Washington, on account of his many marvellous, narrow escapes during the Revolution.

The sudden death of Gen. Harrison, in 1841, just one month after his inauguration, broke this spell. But though Harrison's death was followed by the death of Gen. Taylor, sixteen months after his inauguration, and, later, by the assassination of Lincoln, the American people have not yet become sufficiently familiarized with the idea of a President dying in office to give much effect to it in nominating and electing candidates for Vice-President.

Here is a fact, however, that will strike General, amid the thousand of soldiers of the present day who have seen real service. Little more than a purely ornamental office to his name; a gentleman amiable and sensible enough, but who—probably not one man in America are thought of for President: now, through the terrible crime of fortune, placed in that high office, with almost an entire term of four years in prospect, should he himself live so long.

While Mr. Arthur is not a man who would have entered anybody's mind as a direct candidate for the office, it is not at all certain that he will not make a successful administration. He is a gentleman in his manners, neither obsequious nor arrogant. His bearing is manly, and such as to prepossess in his favor all whom he meets. Truth in speech and fidelity to his friends and his engagements form a part of his character. He has tact and common sense. Of the three former Vice-Presidents who have succeeded through the death of the incumbent to the Presidency, he bears much more resemblance to Millard Fillmore than to Tyler or Johnson.

The greatest objection, by far, that can be brought against Mr. Arthur, is the fact that he was a warm and earnest supporter of Gen. Grant for a third term.

This, however, is in the nature of things, may now be expected to work its own cure. The ex-President of the Presidency will remove the scales from his eyes, and he will soon perceive the folly of running Gen. Grant for a third term, and the supreme wisdom and expediency of running, instead, a certain man named Arthur for a second.

An American lawyer made a speech at a London dinner, and took occasion to extol English hospitality. Monsieur Tapel, the next speaker, rather pointedly said: "Are we New Zealanders, that our civilization, strangers should be referred to such stories of astonished admiration?"

A lady who had heard a vigorous charity sermon, and yet had given nothing when the contribution box was passed around, had her pocket picked while she was going out of church. On making the discovery she exclaimed: "God evidently did not feel the way to my pocket, but the Devil did."

"I should like to see somebody abstract me," said Mrs. Smith at the breakfast table in a other morning. "Here you should!, my dear, so should I," said Mr. Smith, with scowling earnestness.

A medical journal has found that there are from 100,000 to 2,000,000 hairs in a woman's head. The number of hairs in a man's head depends considerably on the length of time he has been married.

News from Knock.

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF A RECENT PILGRIMAGE.

Crowded Confessionals—More Remarkable Cures.

A Pilgrim sends the following very interesting account of a recent pilgrimage to the far-famed shrine of Knock to the Cork Examiner:

The fame of this holy shrine has gone north and south, east and west to the great antipodes it is, if possible, more revered than here. On Wednesday evening and all the day the crush was tremendous, the confessional empressed with the weight of the crowd.

The good Priest would have been gladdened but for the interference of a few who formed a half circle in front of the confessional, interrupting and keeping the people from crushing the humble Priest, who is unsparing of himself in his zeal for souls. On the morning of the Feast of the Nativity he was besieged in the little sacristy to hear confessions and to bless beads, when he came to put on the holy vestments for the Holy Sacrifice. "Father, wait, you hear my confession!" "Father, do hear me!" "Father, there is no room in the church." Pentiters were prostrate, kissing the feet of him, and none appealed in vain; to all who entreated did he administer the Sacrament of Penance with the Lord's Prayer, and the merited reproof, or the gentle admonition and simple advice.

THE CROWD IN THE CHURCH WAS CRAMMED as full as it could hold, the numbers running in when the doors were opened at six o'clock in the morning, and the people remained patiently from daybreak outside. There was not an inch of space room, and patience was remarkable, the people pressing against each other was tremendous, their spirit of endurance was marvellous, in an expression of their faith they knelt for hours in kneeling and groaning at times and the press of feeds bowing down in adoration, was a vivid picture to be remembered for ever. At half past seven o'clock the good Priest was released, and permitted to come on the altar, and celebrate the Divine Mysteries, to which the congregation gave all their attention and devotion, and when the good Priest came out on the altar there was a low murmur of reverence all through the crowd. Their endurance during the fearful crushing they suffered was one of the features most striking of the living picture.

We had heard so much of the cures accomplished at this shrine, that to hear of them from the fame sources, from the sure himself, was the resolve we had made, and so to lowly residence we turned our steps.

SCORES THE WAY TO US MOVED, we entered through the half door, which is not attached to every humble cabin. We found him, seated at a table, reading a letter by the light of a small lamp. From his own lips we learn that the number of cures is almost incalculable. He told in several, some of which we subjoin. He has received in the case of one cure three medical certificates from three different physicians, but he just knows made the present and the future shine with redoubled brightness.

May our people be converted to see the evil of their present ways, may they cease labouring in His vineyard to root up the pernicious weeds.

An American in Ireland.

INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF IRISH RAILROADS.

Irish Turn-pike Roads the Best in the World.

An American gentleman furnishes the following correspondence on Irish roads to the Washington Capital:

"Please, sir, what are those—we asked of the conductor of a railroad porter as the train steamed in.

"Them's cars," he laconically answered. They were small, low, open cars, without backing things in the world. They are about twenty feet long, divided into compartments, accessible only by side gates, each compartment holding from ten to twelve, entered by doors opening on the side. The conductor stands there to open the key in his pocket. Without any water, and with the hope of escape in case of fire, you go on your journey confined as in a prison. There are three classes on these cars: the first class is certainly splendid, though by no means a comparison to our Pullmans, the second rather plainer, and the third class, which is the bulk, is the hardest kind of uncovered seats. When seven or eight Irishmen start their "divilment" with the fire (whether it is ever unknown), the compartment becomes unbearable. The conductor stands there in one place in the respective classes as seemed to us that most of the travel was in the second class, and as the train goes too, are considerably smaller than ours, and, as it is consequence room, the seats are hard, the backs low, and the cushions are forbidding protection from heat, rain or cold.

THERE ARE NO BELLS ON THE PASSENGER, a dinner bell is rung as the signal for starting by the porter at the station. Incontinence, all these things, never bell by the natives, but experienced keenly by the American. In all other details the Irish railroad is perfection outdone. The roadbed itself is laid upon a solid embankment, and runs hundreds of miles never crossing the turnpike, such a thing never is to be never seen. What a lesson the Baltimore and Ohio road would learn by the more and wise road system of the Irish railroad in this respect! Bear reader, if you have never felt your feelings cut by cruel sarcasm, procure a horse and buggy some time day and take a drive all over the country outside of Washington. You will pay your toll and believe you have some rights as a traveller in the road you are passing over. Suddenly you will find a gate across the road track, most likely at the foot of a hill, and you will read on a big signboard, if you get near enough to see it, an obituary notice couched in the words, "Look out for the Locomotive." Sometimes it reads, "It is Dangerous to Cross the Track." That is all the warning; no men with a flag to warn you; no bell to signal your; only that big board with the obituary notice on it. Individual life and personal property have certain rights in Ireland which Irish railroads are bound to respect.

ONE OCTOBER DAY WE STARTED IN AMAZINGLY in that ride of one hundred and forty miles from Cork to Dublin. From out the car windows we could see turnpike roads crossing and recrossing one another, and running as far as the eye could see or follow. Half one of these roads was as solid and firm as marble and as level as a table. And wherever the surface of the country carried the road up hill, the sides were so well graded as to be impervious. Along those roads men with nothing else to do in the world were laboriously breaking up any stone, breakage or damage needing repair. This is a solemn fact, and yet if you were to stop it in its naked truth to the road commissioners of Montgomery County, they would call it a miracle and pin a lie.

We stopped at several stations on the route to pick up fresh passengers and to discharge others. Such stations consist of lot of sheds thrown together as if built by an earthquake.

BUT ONCE MASSIVE STONE BUILDINGS, with every accomodation. The conductor, dressed upon a naval officer, would come to the door, look at his watch, open and put the key in his pocket; the porter, in small colored corduroy, would ring the dinner bell, and the train would be off. Not once, until the engineer would blow his whistle. The whistle of an Irish locomotive would scare any American out of his wits, if he ever heard outside of Ireland. It is a one short, sharp squeak, death to the nerves and terrible to the ear. Once or twice the old thing didn't work exactly up to its alarming squeak, it tried to give something like it, but the engine driver had to have his fun, and he would, with seven screws, blow it out of the tender its full power. The cough or the squeak, we don't know which was worse.

A Woman's Whims.

The Empress Josephine had 600,000 francs for her personal expenses, but this sum was not sufficient, and her debts increased to an appalling degree. Notwithstanding the riches of her husband, she could never submit to either order or etiquette in her private life. She rose at 6 o'clock. Her toilet consumed much time, and she lavished unwearied efforts on the preparation and embellishment of her person. She changed her linen three times a day, and never wore any a second time. She had her wardrobe renewed every day. The linen was of the finest and most costly texture. The dresses were always of the richest stuffs and the most costly workmanship, and the shoes were never worn a second time. Huge baskets were brought to her containing different dresses, shawls, and hats. From these she selected her costume for the day. She possessed between three and four hundred shawls, and she wore one this morning, another that, draped about her shoulders with unequalled grace.

She purchased all that were brought to her, no matter at what price.

The evening toilet was as careful as that of the morning. Such dresses were made for occasion for her to order a new costume, in spite of the hoards of dresses in the remaining halves. Bonaparte was frightened at these expenditures; he would fly into a passion, and his wife would weep and promise to do much greater profit; after which she would go on in the same way.

It is almost incredible that this passion for dress should prevent her from thinking of self. After the divorce she arrayed herself with the same care, even when she saw no one.

She died covered with ribbons and pale, rose colored satin.

Our Young Folks.

For Young Men to Ponder.

The day will come—and may I do something to hasten it—when the young men of our country will recognize that taken it itself, it is a mere vanity, and therefore in the old, trite sense, a mere nil; that to lolling a good handcraft, it is make the hands black as a coal, than to spend the day in keeping backs or making air accounts, though therein the hands remain white and the person clean. Labor is good for our souls, all work relieves God and honoredly, is equal honor, but when there is a choice I would gladly see a big or a name chosen rather to be a blacksmith, or a soft-maker, or a bookbinder than a clerk. Labor is a dignity, and there is nothing in no-indeed reality than mere trade, such as buying and selling. It is besides, easier to do honest work, than to buy and sell honestly. Geo. MacDonald.

A Strange Tradition.

The Seminole Indians have a singular tradition regarding the white man's cunning and superiority. They say when the Great Spirit made the earth he also created three men, all of whom were fair complexioned. He then led them to a small lake and laid down jug in it. Then immediately he called the command, and came out purer and fairer than before the second hundred

THE MONITOR.
TRUST SEEMS THE OF PUBLICATION
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
WEDNESDAY .... OCTOBER 19.

More Victims to English Vengeance.

When the news was called from Europe on Friday last that Charles Stewart Parnell had been consigned to prison by the action of the British Ministry, and when subsequent cablegrams announced the re-arrest of Dillon and other Irish patriots, it awakened a feeling of intense excitement in the breast of every lover of liberty throughout the world. In the eyes of every American citizen the champions of the rights of the people of any land are the typical heroes of the times, and in the performance of this sacred trust towards the people of Ireland, Parnell and his fellow-prisoners have attained an eminence seldom reached in the annals of modern agitation. Courageously and constantly he and they have labored with voice and pen to right the wrongs which English misrule has perpetrated upon the peasantry of Ireland. The Land League leaders permitted no opportunity to pass that they did not take the foremost rank in the constitutional conflict which the martyr Davitt inaugurated against the machinations of an alien Ministry. Even after the passage of the Land Act they had the manly courage to board the British lion in his lair, to proclaim the rights of the Irish people from the hustings in Erin, and Parnell had the audacity to brand the great English gladiator Gladstone as "the greatest coercionist and the unrivaled slanderer of the Irish people." Subsequent events proved Parnell's words to have prophetic import. Freedom of speech is no longer permitted in Ireland. The people of that misgoverned portion of the British possessions must meekly accept whatever crumbs fall from the table of their taskmasters, or be incarcerated in prison if they dare to express their doubts of the efficiency of English laws. This is tyranny in its barest brutality, and stamps the Saxon rule of Ireland as the cruelest coercion that ever disgraced a monarchy pretending to be a Christian nation.

Parnell truly portrayed the speeches of the English political charlatan as "unscrupulous and dishonest," and he charged the Prime Minister of England with designing "to carry fire and sword into Irish homesteads, unless the people humbled and debased themselves before him and the landlords." For these truthful utterances Parnell and his co-patriots were doomed to prison. The star-chamber of English cruelty was convened, and the Royal signet was appended to the warrants authorizing the arrest and incarceration of the men whose principles all the power of British brutality and British hypocrisy and bunkoshool not break down.

In the perpetration of this iniquity, no doubt Gladstone imagines that he has removed from the pathway of the English juggernaut of injustice in Ireland its greatest obstacle. But in this he assuredly reckons without his host. In no country in the world has the familiar Byronic stanza been more often put to practical test than in Ireland, for there, indeed, can we read in fire from centuries of experience that

> "Freedom's battle once begun,
> Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
> Though baffled oft, ever won."

The incarceration of Parnell and his fellow-prisoners will serve to swell the ranks of the Land League fully a hundred fold. It will merge the people of Ireland into one solid phalanx in the fight for freedom by constitutional agitation; it will attract to the Irish cause the active sympathy and cooperation of every nation where the people love liberty, for the good it bestows upon the whole people; and it will prove to the world that, notwithstanding all the praises which Gladstone pretended to bestow upon England for the humane manner in which she proposed to settle the Irish land difficulty, that she is still the "perfidious Albion" of the past; that she is true to her traditions as the persecutor of a people she could not conquer, and the jailor of those she could neither bribe nor gag.

Ireland is now represented in English prisons by many of her bravest and purest patriots, but though their number in English prison cells should be increased a thousand fold, there are still men in Ireland who are ready to step into the sorried ranks and fill up any gap which Gladstone may make. The people who would achieve republican liberty for their land must be prepared to furnish victims for the Moloch of monarchy. The road of the patriot is not strewn with roses; and when we reflect that the dungeons wherein the minions of England incarcerated the men of '98 are still standing as monuments of English cruelty, when we reflect that the memory of Tone, Fitzgerald and Emmet still lives and is cherished by the sons of freedom in every clime; when we think of the thousands of patriotic heroes who have fallen beneath the guillotine which Gladstone has applied to the Irish patriots of the present day—then, indeed, we can discern the halo of glory which the vengeance of England's Prime Minister has cast around the characters of Davitt and Parnell. These men will be honored in the pages of Ireland's history as among the purest and best of her sons, the spirit of liberty will hover over their shrines in age yet to come, while the tool of tyranny, who has consigned them to prison cells, will be execrated throughout the earth wherever freedom finds a foothold.

In the present crisis in the fate of Ireland's future there is only one course left open for Irishmen, and that is to unite as one solid body in order bravely to carry on the constitutional crusade against English injustice. Those must be no division in the ranks of those who would see Ireland redeemed, regenerated and free. Shoulder to shoulder, they must stand in solid array until they behold the hopeless aspirations of the great heart of Ireland's patriots gloriously consummated in the triumphant three principles of justice which are as eternal as the truth from whence they spring.

A Glance at Gladstone.

We cordially confess that we are not an admirer of Gladstone, nor can we discover in his character or antecedents a single feature which can command the respect of Catholics. Like nearly all his predecessors in the Prime Ministry of England, he has been the tool of that tyranny which crucified the Catholic Church and the Catholic people in Ireland; like them, he has made prisoners of Irish patriots; he has upheld with all the power of his position landlord injustice against the rights of the tenant-farmers of Ireland, England and Scotland, and the admission that he made in one of his recent speeches that the land laws of these countries needed amendment, was only dragged from his lips by the same power that coerced a minority of legislative justice from the British Parliament—the Irish National Land League. There are no thanks whatever due to Gladstone for the Irish Land Bill because he permitted it to be emasculated by the House of Lords and accepted it in its present mutilated condition rather than risk the loss of his place at the head of the British Ministry. Policy and not patriotism prompted this venality and cowardice on the part of Gladstone, and his subsequent action in causing the imprisonment of Parnell and other patriots caps the climax of his iniquity.

But it is as the virulent enemy of the Catholic Church that we more than all things else look upon Gladstone as one not to be held up to Catholics as a model for their admiration and applause. We may forgive him for his crime, but we can never forget that he it was who cast into the Christian world the literary fire-brand entitled The Vatican Decrees—a work which has received the condemnation of the United Episcopate of the Universal Church; a work which was written for the perfidious purpose of weakening the faith in the minds of Catholics everywhere, and of instigating them to rise in rebellion against the Divine authority of the Vicar of Christ. This was Gladstone's aim and animus in the publication of his perfidious pamphlet wherein he styled the Papal prerogatives of the saintly Pius the Great as "the perilous Pontificate," because Pius IX. chose to proclaim the Divine potential powers of the Pontiff as a person which the unbelieving world of the world said that such an act would rend the Church with schism, and yet the Catholic press of Europe was loaded with literary poison against the Papacy. The declaration of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception of the ever blessed and spotless Mother of God was characterized by Gladstone as one of "the follies of ecclesiastical power," and the promulgation of the Infallibility of the Pope he styled as "refurbishing old paraphernalia now every rusty tool she was fondly thought to have disused."

Thus, the Gladstonian pamphlet on the Vatican Decrees was nothing more than the brain-work of Belzebub, and the Catholic conscience can never be so stultified as to accept that poison-spreading publication as the work of either a great statesman or a man worthy to be the representive of a Christian people whose greatness is due to the Catholicity still extant in the laws which they received from their Catholic ancestors. Thanks to the stolid sense of the English Protestant public, the infamous results which Gladstone hoped to achieve from his tradictive essay on the Vatican Decrees failed to be accomplished. The replies given to the reptile stings of Gladstone against the Church were so powerful in their argument, so convincing in their logic, and so clear in their demonstration that the impartial people of Europe and America saw at once the falsity of Gladstone's ideas when reflected in the pure mirror of religious truth. The replies of the Catholic Bishops of Salford and Birmingham, as well as the notable and irrefutable reply of Cardinals Manning and Newman, changed the current of public opinion to the side of the Church, and covered garrulous Gladstone with an amount of obloquy which all his white-washing which weak-kneed Catholics can give him will never remove. Gladstone may be a "great man" in the estimation of some people, just as Garibaldi, and Bismarck, and Judas Iscariot are considered "great" because they are exalted in infamy. But Catholics should never forget the memorable words of the Divine Founder of their Church—He that is not with Me is against Me—and in the category of individuals who have gained infernal immortality as the enemies of the Church of God so far as the reason of their persecution could operate, either through the power of powder or the pen, the name of William E. Gladstone will ever remain to Catholics as one of the worst among the whole list of diabolical detractors of everything sacred in the eyes of all who love God, His Blessed Mother, and the vicegerent of Christ.

On the second page of the present issue will be found a beautiful Catholic poem which is calculated to add another leaf to the laurel have that already adorn the brow of the gifted writer—Miss H. M. Skidmore of this city.

—In the letter of our Roman correspondent on the third page will be found some very interesting facts relative to affairs in Europe, especially in the newly restored Diocese of Trevir, or Treves as it is sometimes called.

The "Churchman's" Criticism Considered.

The Pacific Churchman, in its issue of the 16th inst., devotes a few inches to the Monitor's strictures on the school-scaring note of "A True Catholic," published in the columns of our contemporary. The Churchman says, with all the ease of an Evangelical egotist, that the "Roman Church has a right to establish schools" (!) Why, bless your condescending conscience, the Church had schools long ages before the Episcopalian sect was out of the swaddling clothes furnished for it by its paternal parent, the much married monarch Henry VIII. In granting us the "right" to establish schools, so gracefully, we can only make a mock bow to our benefactory, and say in solemn tones, "Thank you for—nothing."

Ah! but says our charitably contemporary, "only let everything be open and above board." Does the Churchman mean to insinuate that Catholic schools are not as easy of access to respectable people as those schools under Protestant influence. We claim they are even more so, for the reason that in a certain Protestant proselytizing institution we know of, in this city, no priest is permitted to enter, even to administer the sacraments to a dying Catholic child! The children in Catholic boarding schools are not treated thus shallowfully. If they are in danger of death, their parents or guardians are notified, and if it is desired by them, the minister of the sect they belong to is permitted to pray over their bodies, or for their souls, if he sees fit. Hence, Catholic institutions are more liberal in this respect than those under the influence of proscriptive Protestantism.

The Churchman contends that Catholic schools are subversive of the faith it represents. Well, this is certainly something new and novel in the Protestant theory, where the faith of no two in the sect is precisely alike! In a body of individuals where the Bible is the base of belief, a unity of faith is impossible; hence we see, even in the Episcopalian sect, nearly as many divergencies of doctrine as there are members in the congregation. This is allowed even in the Book of Common Prayer, wherein the Sacrament of Baptism may be administered according to the desires of the individual. So that the possession of any faith is a misnomer when applied to such mongrel Christianity.

A LAND LEAGUE MANIFESTO.

The Voice of a Hopeful and Defiant People.

New Yoss, Oct. 19.—The following special cable has been just received from the legal adviser of the Land League.

The Executive Committee of the Land League held a splendid meeting at headquarters to-day. The rooms were packed, and enthusiasm, intense enthusiasm, was unanimously resolved to order a general strike against rent. This declaration was received with vociferous cheering for Parnell. The city is in a state of great excitement. The police are using every means to preserve order desired.

T. P. O'Connor, who gives them words of sympathy now, gave them none then. From the Archbishop of Canterbury all the official and semi-official class of Britain exhausted their trappings of woe. Then there were bridal garments and white flowers for the Republic was about to die.

Then there was a dispatch of troops to Canada to menace the northern frontier, and keep alive the hope of the southern combatant. Then also there was a French affair. Then finally England pressed so hard and so wickedly on Spain, that many Americans of high standing declared that they could wave the Spanish flag for her fruitful conduct to their country.

Then, on the other hand, the Irish people assembled in great numbers in Dublin to express their most cordial sympathy with the American side of the question.

There, on the other hand, they refuse to recognize England's hostile policy against the Republic; the Irish were so devoted friends to the American Republic as to call Cromwell a tyrant and a murderer. There was something in that, which is a warning in every country of the Epsilon manifestations—there was honest and ardent sympathy for a friend in need and in danger.

When America was in need and in danger, Ireland gave her sympathy and support. When Ireland is now in the grip of martial law, when no man dare express his opinions publicly; but the Irish people in America, Australia, and all over the world, should give expression to the feelings of indignation which cannot be spoken in Ireland which is writhing beneath the slavery of English oppression.

CONSOLATION FOR JOHN BULL.

The Virginia Chronicle very aptly remarks that while the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Yorktown is being celebrated, it may be some comfort to the English Government to know that they have licked in a second-hand way the Colonial Jail the grandson of Commodore Stewart, who, in the war of 1812 assisted materially in giving the mother country a sound thrashing. The Stewart of the commander of the shell frigate Constitution appeared before a New York audience last Saturday night and declared her intention of joining her son in his cell. To have Commodore Stewart's daughter as well as his grandson under lock and key will doubtless be an additional gratification to Mr Gladstone. Parnell is in jail for preaching the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence for which his grandfather gallantly fought. The doctrine are apparently as baleful to the British government in 1881 as they were in 1776.

A grand concert, in aid of St. Peter's new church, will be held at Mission Music Hall on next Twenty first and Howard streets, on to-morrow (Thursday) evening. Tickets are only 25 cents.

England's Grief for Garfield's Death.

The inconsistency of England's grief over the death of President Garfield is thus criticised by the Dublin Irishman, and as many Americans may be deceived by the insignia of English mourning into forgetting the fact that England had no sympathies whatever to shed over the republic when it was in the throes of civil war, it may be well to bring before them the following facts culled from our Dublin contemporary

All England is showing signs of mourning for the dead President of the American Republic.

We remember a time when all England did not mourn but exult, when she did not weep but laugh, when she did not lament but made merry. Hypocrisy and cowardice joy—at less the time when the American Republic confronted Sin in her own stronghold.

Hypocrites may put on a cape land to day as well as honest men. They may close shutters, provide a hypocritical mourn, they may fill their papers (in the absence of Parliamentary news) with every detail connected with Garfield's sickness, untimely end, and funeral ceremonies. All these things can be readily, easily and cheaply done—indeed they can be turned to profit, and an increased circulation or enlarged congregation, due to a sensation word on the sensation of the day, will secure the reward of such virtue.

But when the Republic was in danger, where were these sympathetic mourners? They were fitting out blockade-runners to make gain of America's evil, and arming-plating fast pirate-ships to make prey of her commerce!

Weeping there was no weeping in those days. All the organs of England, with scarce an exception, raised loud the shout of triumph, a veritable hurricane of hate, rants, exulting that at last "the bubble has burst, and that the backbone of the great Republic of the Rebel Washington had been smashed in twain! That was their cry, a lie—a lie they knew it to be—a lie which their aim, for never was the saying more true or more applicable, that here the wish was father to the thought.

They hoped they had done with the Republic forever. They were anxious to promote, and they longed to see, disunion sections in place of one united whole, stretching just a little further West, and there multiplying sections, in which the very name of the United States would have gone down in eternal ruin—the ruin they ardently desired.

The Queen, who gives them words of sympathy now, gave them none then. From the Archbishop of Canterbury all the official and semi-official class of Britain exhausted their trappings of woe. Then there were bridal garments and white flowers for the Republic was about to die.

Then there was a dispatch of troops to Canada to menace the northern frontier, and keep alive the hope of the southern combatant. Then also there was a French affair. Then finally England pressed so hard and so wickedly on Spain, that many Americans of high standing declared that they could wave the Spanish flag for her fruitful conduct to their country.

Then, on the other hand, the Irish people assembled in great numbers in Dublin to express their most cordial sympathy with the American side of the question.

There, on the other hand, they refuse to recognize England's hostile policy against the Republic; the Irish were so devoted friends to the American Republic as to call Cromwell a tyrant and a murderer. There was something in that, which is a warning in every country of the Epsilon manifestations—there was honest and ardent sympathy for a friend in need and in danger.

When America was in need and in danger, Ireland gave her sympathy and support. When Ireland is now in the grip of martial law, when no man dare express his opinions publicly; but the Irish people in America, Australia, and all over the world, should give expression to the feelings of indignation which cannot be spoken in Ireland which is writhing beneath the slavery of English oppression.

CONSOLATION FOR JOHN BULL.

The Virginia Chronicle very aptly remarks that while the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Yorktown is being celebrated, it may be some comfort to the English Government to know that they have licked in a second-hand way the Colonial Jail the grandson of Commodore Stewart, who, in the war of 1812 assisted materially in giving the mother country a sound thrashing. The Stewart of the commander of the shell frigate Constitution appeared before a New York audience last Saturday night and declared her intention of joining her son in his cell. To have Commodore Stewart's daughter as well as his grandson under lock and key will doubtless be an additional gratification to Mr Gladstone. Parnell is in jail for preaching the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence for which his grandfather gallantly fought. The doctrine are apparently as baleful to the British government in 1881 as they were in 1776.

A grand concert, in aid of St. Peter's new church, will be held at Mission Music Hall on next Twenty first and Howard streets, on to-morrow (Thursday) evening. Tickets are only 25 cents.

The "Churchman's" Criticism Considered.

The Pacific Churchman, in its issue of the 16th inst., devotes a few inches to the Monitor's strictures on the school-scaring note of "A True Catholic," published in the columns of our contemporary. The Churchman says, with all the ease of an Evangelical egotist, that the "Roman Church has a right to establish schools" (!) Why, bless your condescending conscience, the Church had schools long ages before the Episcopalian sect was out of the swaddling clothes furnished for it by its paternal parent, the much married monarch Henry VIII. In granting us the "right" to establish schools, so gracefully, we can only make a mock bow to our benefactory, and say in solemn tones, "Thank you for—nothing."

Ah! but says our charitably contemporary, "only let everything be open and above board." Does the Churchman mean to insinuate that Catholic schools are not as easy of access to respectable people as those schools under Protestant influence. We claim they are even more so, for the reason that in a certain Protestant proselytizing institution we know of, in this city, no priest is permitted to enter, even to administer the sacraments to a dying Catholic child! The children in Catholic boarding schools are not treated thus shallowfully. If they are in danger of death, their parents or guardians are notified, and if it is desired by them, the minister of the sect they belong to is permitted to pray over their bodies, or for their souls, if he sees fit. Hence, Catholic institutions are more liberal in this respect than those under the influence of proscriptive Protestantism.

The Churchman contends that Catholic schools are subversive of the faith it represents. Well, this is certainly something new and novel in the Protestant theory, where the faith of no two in the sect is precisely alike! In a body of individuals where the Bible is the base of belief, a unity of faith is impossible; hence we see, even in the Episcopalian sect, nearly as many divergencies of doctrine as there are members in the congregation. This is allowed even in the Book of Common Prayer, wherein the Sacrament of Baptism may be administered according to the desires of the individual. So that the possession of any faith is a misnomer when applied to such mongrel Christianity.

A LAND LEAGUE MANIFESTO.

The Voice of a Hopeful and Defiant People.

New Yoss, Oct. 19.—The following special cable has been just received from the legal adviser of the Land League.

The Executive Committee of the Land League held a splendid meeting at headquarters to-day. The rooms were packed, and enthusiasm, intense enthusiasm, was unanimously resolved to order a general strike against rent. This declaration was received with vociferous cheering for Parnell. The city is in a state of great excitement. The police are using every means to preserve order desired.

T. P. O'Connor, who gives them words of sympathy now, gave them none then. From the Archbishop of Canterbury all the official and semi-official class of Britain exhausted their trappings of woe. Then there were bridal garments and white flowers for the Republic was about to die.

Then there was a dispatch of troops to Canada to menace the northern frontier, and keep alive the hope of the southern combatant. Then also there was a French affair. Then finally England pressed so hard and so wickedly on Spain, that many Americans of high standing declared that they could wave the Spanish flag for her fruitful conduct to their country.

Then, on the other hand, the Irish people assembled in great numbers in Dublin to express their most cordial sympathy with the American side of the question.

There, on the other hand, they refuse to recognize England's hostile policy against the Republic; the Irish were so devoted friends to the American Republic as to call Cromwell a tyrant and a murderer. There was something in that, which is a warning in every country of the Epsilon manifestations—there was honest and ardent sympathy for a friend in need and in danger.

When America was in need and in danger, Ireland gave her sympathy and support. When Ireland is now in the grip of martial law, when no man dare express his opinions publicly; but the Irish people in America, Australia, and all over the world, should give expression to the feelings of indignation which cannot be spoken in Ireland which is writhing beneath the slavery of English oppression.

CONSOLATION FOR JOHN BULL.

The Virginia Chronicle very aptly remarks that while the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Yorktown is being celebrated, it may be some comfort to the English Government to know that they have licked in a second-hand way the Colonial Jail the grandson of Commodore Stewart, who, in the war of 1812 assisted materially in giving the mother country a sound thrashing. The Stewart of the commander of the shell frigate Constitution appeared before a New York audience last Saturday night and declared her intention of joining her son in his cell. To have Commodore Stewart's daughter as well as his grandson under lock and key will doubtless be an additional gratification to Mr Gladstone. Parnell is in jail for preaching the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence for which his grandfather gallantly fought. The doctrine are apparently as baleful to the British government in 1881 as they were in 1776.

A grand concert, in aid of St. Peter's new church, will be held at Mission Music Hall on next Twenty first and Howard streets, on to-morrow (Thursday) evening. Tickets are only 25 cents.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER A CATHOLIC BISHOP.

Since our inside forms went to press we have received another letter from our Roman correspondent in which he gives the following account of a most diabolical attempt to murder a living Catholic Bishop, which happily failed of its intended victim.

On the 13th inst. a party of Italian gentlemen, who had been spending the Feast of Pentecost at Frosinone, in the Diocese of Veroli, were about to return to their respective homes, when a bomb, which was concealed in a small portfolio, of dimensions not exceeding a foot square, exploded with great violence, close under the nose of the long-robed Bishop of Veroli, who was in their company. Another little confusion, a similar explosion would have rent the very side-scenes in the other part of the episcopal residence. Either explosion, taken place, which was under five miles around, took place, would have shaken the walls, and shattering to pieces the windows not only of the Bishop's palace, but of many other houses at a considerable distance off. The window and a portion of the walls of the Bishop's bedroom was blown in, shattering and destroying almost everything inside the chamber, but, by a special Providence, not inflicting the slightest injury to the venerable prelate. The servants escaped with no other injury than a slight shaking. The inhabitants of Frosinone and its vicinity have hastened to congratulate Mgr. Vitali on his almost miraculous escape, and to express to him their utter abhorrence of this cowardly and atrocious conspiracy. The authorities of Frosinone act are, so far, only known to have issued a notice that they will succeed in utterly eluding the hands of justice.

CATHOLIC GERMANS IN COUNCIL.

The general assembly of the Catholics of Germany was held this year at Bonn. The official report, that the number of cards of admission to the meeting was 1,500, and that there were hosted to temporary vestiers. The assembly, which was the 29th of the kind, may be said to have commenced on Sunday, September 4, when a procession of the Catholic Germans with flags and even garlands, triumphal arches being erected in their honor, passed through Bonn and called during the three days of the convention several hundred more members of the capital, lodged at Vorstenen. The leading and most influential Bishops and Prelates were present in the assembly, and the meeting will probably be one of the most important of the year, if we judge by the tenor of the letter.

Cologne, October 17.—Many meetings were held yesterday in the Diocese of the Archdiocese.

Wonesten (Mass.), October 17.—Two thousand people attended an indignation meeting of the Irish in the Wonesten Valley yesterday.

THE VOICE OF CINCINNATI.

Cincinnati, October 17.—Hon. Hon. Bolt, last month, in a speech before a meeting of Irishmen, to give expression, this evening, in regard to the arrest of Parnell, the assertion that Parnell was on the bold of debate for the lawful protest against a tyrannical Parliament, the great wrongs suffered by his countrymen, and that he and Parnell would not hold the cause. Resolutions were adopted, advising coolness and deliberation, and keeping within the line of peaceful, unswerving resistance. The telegram sent was: "Ireland's cause is the cause of all great improvement. Parnell. Let the people be cool and determined."

RECEPTION AT THE CONVENT OF THE ROSARY.

On Saturday last the beautiful ceremony of bestowing the white veil took place at the little chapel of the Sisters of the second Order of St. Dominic, near the German Church, Tyler street. The event was enhanced in interest by the fact of its being the first of its kind, since the Sisters settled in this city. Rev. Father Dominic Leale, O.P., of Benicia, was the officiating Father, assisted by Rev. Father Wolfe. Many friends of the young lady participant were present. The chapel presented an appearance of Heavenly beauty, and the sweet strains of the Sisters' choir could be read the joy, which they felt within their hearts, at the solemnity of operation of seeing a sixteen reads to sacrifice here?" for the sake of the Divine Spouse, Jesus Christ, sweet Miss M. Wolcher, who, penetrating herself in the spirit of the occasion, chose the name of the Order. The Rev Father Leale delivered a very appropriate address, in which he clearly explained the great advantages to be derived from a life dedicated to the service of the Almighty, and earnestness of the Sisters of the Rosary. Many regretted that such a grace should be lost to the world, but consoled by their choice when they saw the young lady clad in the vestments of the Order of the Dominic. She received the name of Sister M. Dominic.

The new branch of the Dominican Sisters has taken root in this city, and we trust they will have thousands hale of purity and sanctity all their days, and that their order will be greatly augmented. Their mission is a laborious one; they have to follow the Divine Office in the same as the Brethren, have to observe the rules by very severe rules of fasting and austerity, and have to do well-nigh everything that is attached to the church. Before the Sisters took their vows they underwent a rigorous ordeal and attended under a secular teacher; now the Sisters are in the Novitiate, and, as great number of people, give are attracted thereby the management of the Novitiate, Rev. Father Wolfe has opened a new school on Twenty first street, and Sister Mary Ignatius has taken a class in the basement of a house, which has been offered to her for the purpose. The school is flourishing at present inhabit a very small building, and we hope they will soon be able to erect a building of a great Union chief; a scarcity of which they can all find room in the house. A few years ago the Order of Mercy, the Sisters of the Mother House in New York paid a visit to this city and as we learned, have charged to a the new field of labor that we understand she intends to build a spacious convent in this city for educational purposes, and we hope she will succeed in carrying out her laudable designs.

CONCERT IN AID OF THE CHILDREN'S DAY HOME.

The long-contemplated Concert in aid of the Children's Day Home under charge of the Sisters of the Holy Family, took place last night at Platt's Hall, and was a magnificent success, the hall not only being overflowing's filled, but hundreds had to return home for want of even standing room. The entertainment opened with an overture perfectly performed by about thirty members of the Orchestral Union. Mr. Ward, the conductor, rendered a very pleasant solo, followed by selections from Shakespeare by Miss Chadwick. A Cavatina for Piano and Violin was next given by Messrs. Kuhl and Hoek. Miss Little then sang an Ave Maria that called forth a deserved encore. This was followed by a Piano solo, performed in an excellent manner by Miss Annie Coulliver. Mr. Dallmer then sang an Aria from Faust, and the first part closed with seven readings by Mrs. Fairweather Graham. The second part opened with a selection by the Orchestral Union, followed by an Irish ballad by Miss Jessie Lowe. Mr. H. Curtax next gave a Recitation, and Mr. L. J. Harrison then made a selection on the cornet in his accustomed splendid style, the entertainment closing with an instrumental concerto by the Orchestral Union. Mr. J. Morrison then thanked the ladies and friends of the Sisters of the Holy Family for the magnificent response they had given to the charitable appeal made in behalf of the poor, and the audience dispersed well pleased with the successful night's work. We hear that the receipts amounted to $700, and that the Home will be enabled to pay off a large portion of its debt, and of enlarged usefulness throughout the world.

THE ARRIVAL OF T. P. O'CONNER.

Mr. T. P. O'Conner, the representative of the Irish Land League left Ireland just in time to escape the Jail grip of Gladstone. He arrived in New York on Saturday, and was accompanied by James Redpath and Dillon Ryan, and was received by an immense multitude of people headed by Father Dominic and Gaudens, who had been sent out to meet him. The Rev. Father Dominic Leale, O.P., of Benicia, of Dublin, county Mayo, and the Land League delegate to Australia, is forming branches there with great success.

Major Morgan O'Connell, late of the 27th Regiment, died on September 23d, at the Royal Marine Hotel, Dublin. The deceased was the son of Mr. John O'Connell, and grandson of the Liberator.

The Mechanics' Pavilion is to be taken down and rebuilt on the new site, at a cost of $20,000.

AMERICA'S VOICE TO IRELAND

New Yoss, October 17. Thomas O'Connor, of the Land League, was received by an immense crowd last night at Steinway Hall. For nine years he had not addressed the people of his native Quiet home unacquainted, O'Connor said he was glad that had expressed Land League, their leader and advocate, the man who had so ably represented the Irish people in Parliament. For the single purpose to see another day. It the Land League, but the British Government, if they were to kill the Land League, would find that it is a great mistake. Ireland would send every jail in the world, if it wanted, and would still be Ireland. Ireland is another thing, and it is Ireland that is fighting. Ireland is another thing, and it is Ireland that is fighting. Neither could the government stamp out the strong feeling, which is the strongest in the land of Ireland's sons, and the movement is as strong as ever. Applause. Cheers followed, and O'Connor continued by saying all present to live their beautiful lives.

Dr. Lane, the commander of Fenmore, then made a short address, and was then followed by Miss Parell.

THE MOTHER OF THE IRISH AGITATOR.

And she was received prominent in the movement. As Mrs. Parnell appeared she was greeted. The servants escaped with no other injury than a slight shaking. The inhabitants of Fenmore and its vicinity have hastened to congratulate Mgr. Vitali on his almost miraculous escape, and to express to him their utter abhorrence of this cowardly and atrocious conspiracy. The authorities of Fenmore act are, so far, only known to have issued a notice that they will succeed in utterly eluding the hands of justice.

CATHOLIC GERMANS IN COUNCIL.

The general assembly of the Catholics of Germany was held this year at Bonn. The official report, that the number of cards of admission to the meeting was 1,500, and that there were hosted to temporary vestiers. The assembly, which was the 29th of the kind, may be said to have commenced on Sunday, September 4, when a procession of the Catholic Germans with flags and even garlands, triumphal arches being erected in their honor, passed through Bonn and called during the three days of the convention several hundred more members of the capital, lodged at Vorstenen. The leading and most influential Bishops and Prelates were present in the assembly, and the meeting will probably be one of the most important of the year, if we judge by the tenor of the letter.

Cologne, October 17.—Many meetings were held yesterday in the Diocese of the Archdiocese.

Wonesten (Mass.), October 17.—Two thousand people attended an indignation meeting of the Irish in the Wonesten Valley yesterday.

THE VOICE OF CINCINNATI.

Cincinnati, October 17.—Hon. Hon. Bolt, last month, in a speech before a meeting of Irishmen, to give expression, this evening, in regard to the arrest of Parnell, the assertion that Parnell was on the bold of debate for the lawful protest against a tyrannical Parliament, the great wrongs suffered by his countrymen, and that he and Parnell would not hold the cause. Resolutions were adopted, advising coolness and deliberation, and keeping within the line of peaceful, unswerving resistance. The telegram sent was: "Ireland's cause is the cause of all great improvement. Parnell. Let the people be cool and determined."

RECEPTION AT THE CONVENT OF THE ROSARY.

On Saturday last the beautiful ceremony of bestowing the white veil took place at the little chapel of the Sisters of the second Order of St. Dominic, near the German Church, Tyler street. The event was enhanced in interest by the fact of its being the first of its kind, since the Sisters settled in this city. Rev. Father Dominic Leale, O.P., of Benicia, was the officiating Father, assisted by Rev. Father Wolfe. Many friends of the young lady participant were present. The chapel presented an appearance of Heavenly beauty, and the sweet strains of the Sisters' choir could be read the joy, which they felt within their hearts, at the solemnity of operation of seeing a sixteen reads to sacrifice here?" for the sake of the Divine Spouse, Jesus Christ, sweet Miss M. Wolcher, who, penetrating herself in the spirit of the occasion, chose the name of the Order. The Rev Father Leale delivered a very appropriate address, in which he clearly explained the great advantages to be derived from a life dedicated to the service of the Almighty, and earnestness of the Sisters of the Rosary. Many regretted that such a grace should be lost to the world, but consoled by their choice when they saw the young lady clad in the vestments of the Order of the Dominic. She received the name of Sister M. Dominic.

The new branch of the Dominican Sisters has taken root in this city, and we trust they will have thousands hale of purity and sanctity all their days, and that their order will be greatly augmented. Their mission is a laborious one; they have to follow the Divine Office in the same as the Brethren, have to observe the rules by very severe rules of fasting and austerity, and have to do well-nigh everything that is attached to the church. Before the Sisters took their vows they underwent a rigorous ordeal and attended under a secular teacher; now the Sisters are in the Novitiate, and, as great number of people, give are attracted thereby the management of the Novitiate, Rev. Father Wolfe has opened a new school on Twenty first street, and Sister Mary Ignatius has taken a class in the basement of a house, which has been offered to her for the purpose. The school is flourishing at present inhabit a very small building, and we hope they will soon be able to erect a building of a great Union chief; a scarcity of which they can all find room in the house. A few years ago the Order of Mercy, the Sisters of the Mother House in New York paid a visit to this city and as we learned, have charged to a the new field of labor that we understand she intends to build a spacious convent in this city for educational purposes, and we hope she will succeed in carrying out her laudable designs.

CONCERT IN AID OF THE CHILDREN'S DAY HOME.

The long-contemplated Concert in aid of the Children's Day Home under charge of the Sisters of the Holy Family, took place last night at Platt's Hall, and was a magnificent success, the hall not only being overflowing's filled, but hundreds had to return home for want of even standing room. The entertainment opened with an overture perfectly performed by about thirty members of the Orchestral Union. Mr. Ward, the conductor, rendered a very pleasant solo, followed by selections from Shakespeare by Miss Chadwick. A Cavatina for Piano and Violin was next given by Messrs. Kuhl and Hoek. Miss Little then sang an Ave Maria that called forth a deserved encore. This was followed by a Piano solo, performed in an excellent manner by Miss Annie Coulliver. Mr. Dallmer then sang an Aria from Faust, and the first part closed with seven readings by Mrs. Fairweather Graham. The second part opened with a selection by the Orchestral Union, followed by an Irish ballad by Miss Jessie Lowe. Mr. H. Curtax next gave a Recitation, and Mr. L. J. Harrison then made a selection on the cornet in his accustomed splendid style, the entertainment closing with an instrumental concerto by the Orchestral Union. Mr. J. Morrison then thanked the ladies and friends of the Sisters of the Holy Family for the magnificent response they had given to the charitable appeal made in behalf of the poor, and the audience dispersed well pleased with the successful night's work. We hear that the receipts amounted to $700, and that the Home will be enabled to pay off a large portion of its debt, and of enlarged usefulness throughout the world.

Speeches were also made by Philip A. Roach and Colonel J. J. Tobin. The latter read the Albany death of a telegram, proposing that it be forwarded on behalf of the meeting, a sympathy which was cordially assented to.

New Yoss Herald, October 17, 1881.—Patrick Rosen, Paris: Immense public meeting tonight denounced Gladstone's imprisonment of Parnell and colleagues. California sustains Land League with her sympathy and wealth. Liberty for Ireland and all oppressed nations, the sentiment of the Republic.

The Pope Offered an Asylum.

London, October 18.—A Home dispatch says: "A meeting between Bismarck and Gambetta has taken place. The Emperor William and Bismarck have offered the Pope an asylum at Cologne."

THE MONITOR.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 19.

INDIGNATION MELTING.

Land Leaguers Around Gladstone Denounced Splendid Speeches Storming Resolutions and more than $300 in Cash.

A mass meeting of Irishmen in the Lower was held at Irish American Hall on Monday night. The large hall was crowded to overflow, enthusiasm was manifested, the recent arrest of Parnell, Dillon and other Land League leaders in Ireland apparently having been a sufficient stimulus to fan the latent Irish spirit into a higher flame than it had ever before shown.

Judge H. J. Tooby presided, and in opening the meeting made a concise and telling speech.

"Affairs in Dublin, said he, "show that the sublimest of all the history of Ireland is the repeating itself. Just one hundred years ago, at the little village of Yorktown, the bloodhounds of British power were driven back from the thraldom of American liberty. He later attorney has been in the city of Dublin, where, within three days, it is rumored the leader of the movement that is not only directing the freedom of Ireland to freedom, but is fighting the battle that will guide all Europe to everlasting freedom. (Applause.) Charles Stewart Parnell is now in Dublin, and the idol of millions of the down-trodden of Ireland, the favorite of the oppressed of every land where his name is known, has same to-night goes out from the battle of Kilmainham to encourage the hunted men in Erin against the oppressors of mankind.

FATHER NUGENT SPEAKS.

Rev. Father Nugent was introduced as one of the earliest and most active workers in organizing the Land League here, and spoke briefly. "I am here," he said, "in union with the rest of you, to sympathize with the Land League, which has been condemned to a prison cell, and I do so with all my heart, regardless of my position as a politian. When the people are united, and they make of the Land League a power, they will protect the British Government and all the people in jail, and the Land Leaguers and other leaders of the women. Other ladies will take up the work and assist the Land Leagues in Ireland as they did before the arrest of Parnell. (Applause.)

CASTLEBOND HELD TO NOTHING.

E. C. Marshall was the next speaker. He said: "I am not an Irishman, I am not a Land Leaguer. I am not a Land Leaguer, I am an Irish speaking man, and I feel, in common with every English-speaking man, that a wrong and an insult to the whole common law of Ireland and American civilization is destined to be now exercised in Ireland, and has received an unprecedented illustration in the arrest of that wise and great and patriotic man, the man before whom we have met here this evening. Lawless men can go no further than this pretended law under which this arrest was made.

SPEECHES OF THE PRESS.

Rev. Father Hugh Lagan spoke as a Irish. He said he was not an American citizen, never having been naturalized. He was there that night not for any ticket nor train with any party here. He thought it well that this crisis had come now. There was an odd saying that it was better to fight the devil you know than the devil you don't know. It was better for them to fight tilted Gladstone or Premier or England as the hypocritical, manipulating character he has been. Father Lagan said that the

WHAT SHE SHOULD DO.

A Few Suggestions of Importance on a Subject of Interest to the Ladies.

And Certain Facts which Should be Known by all Women.

[Home Journal, New York.]

A short time since an article appeared in the columns of this paper, being a synopsis of a lecture delivered by a prominent author before a well known New England society. This article dealt no directly with the needs of woman, and contained so many hints which were valuable, that it naturally attracted no little attention, and has, we learn, been a subject of comment in social circles in nearly every part of the land. Realizing that no subject can be of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this same subject.

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Bernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that ever her far famed French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excell, American women in quickness of perception and brilliancy of intellect. The minds and manners of American women are all that can be desired; but it is a lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their mental and moral characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitutions, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess no one of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in a slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary ways, devotion to fashion, but above all and more than all, carelessness and indifference to daily habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results and is both directly and indirectly of untold injury to the race. The cause, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as though they lived in Europe or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The particular function of womanhood and motherhood is not a disease, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the organs which make and purify the blood must be preserved in, or restored to their normal condition. These organs are the kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poison accumulates, all the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and give way and finally the kidneys and contiguous organs become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all forms of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing uneasiness follows. This is especially true in the case of women. And if the bowels are thus inactive and overloaded, the neighboring organs, which are so sympathetically connected, become involved in the disease. The kidneys, liver, bowels and kidneys, become diseased, and the consequences which ensue are too well known to require repetition in a suggestive article of this kind. The secret, however, (governing these manifold disorders, is to keep the kidneys and liver in perfect working condition. This is reason; this is science, and it appeals with force to the suffering women of America.

When the body is in a healthy condition, then some beauty of complexion, elasticity of step, hopefulness of disposition, and comfort and happiness in the duties and responsibilities of life fly. There is, therefore, every incentive to secure and preserve buoyant health.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy described in the lecture to which reference has already been made, is a remedying, as it certainly merits, the most careful attention and the trial of the women of the land. It is a pure and simple vegetable remedy which is now doing more to bring health and strength to the American women than any one thing which has ever been discovered. It acts directly upon the liver, kidneys and adjacent organs, soothes any inflamation, allays all pain, and places these organs in a condition to bring health to the body and happiness to the life. The manufacturers of this great remedy, as we learn from the lecture, have the written thanks of thousands of women, many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. Not one woman is pleased to have her physical troubles flaunted in the eyes of the world.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore no adequate remedy the ills of women has ever been discovered, nor have the medical profession ever been able to assist women in her troubles as she deserves. This is, perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much bigotry and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates to the fullest the blighting effect of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was opposed and scoffed at. Thompson, the founder of the Thompsonian theory, was the victim of a hateful conspiracy. Marion, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet the discoveries of these men are to-day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach, not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death bed scenes, and felt that it still were equal to disease death might have been postponed many years—that science if we were made f all the resources she has previously was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated! A cold is contracted, it refuses to yield to a first form of treatment, the physician may not be candid enough to call in the aid of other schools, or of independent practitioners, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not exhaust every ancient known to the world for relief! He has the courage of his convictions and employs outside agencies, he is visited with ostracism from the society of his fellows, and forsooth, becomes what they choose to call a "quack." When they have exhausted all the agents approved by their schools, they "shirk the responsibility" of the death of their patient by advising a trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe! Such treatment may be in accordance with the "code of ethics," but in the view of the unprejudiced public it is downright cruelty, for it may not be even as strongly characterized.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of the country, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording for recovering lost health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health, by a watchful eye over daily habits, diet and duties, and by a regulation of the life with the remedy above named, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be secured in their highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention which it deserves and the care which they are able to bestow, conscious that their efforts are certain to bring them perfect health and long and happy lives.

New Advertisements.

HALL'S PIANOS,
16 Tyler street.
THESE PIANOS ARE ALL THREE STRINGED.

CHURCH MUSIC.
For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ. No. 1 Sharpers, 25 cts.; 2 Kings, 25 cts.; 3 Horns, 40 cts.; Low Country, 40 cts.; 5 Chinese Melodies, 25 cts.; Dulcimer, 25 cts.; Sweet Home, 25 cts.; Solo and Chorus, 25 cts.; Lady Angelina and Dandelion, 40 cts.; Agnes, 25 cts.; Jo Pinin, 50 cts.; Numbers 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.

CHEAP MUSIC STORE
Sheet Music, Music Books, Pianos, Organs, Violins, Guitars, Flutes, Drums, Fifes, Accordeons, Harmonicas, Jew's Harps, Tambourines, Bones, Triangles, Cymbals, Castanets, Sleigh Bells, Tuning Forks, Pitch Pipes, Metronomes, Music Boxes, Music Stands, Music Rolls, Music Cabinets, Music Portfolios, Music Paper, Music Pens, Pencils, Rubbers, Erasers, Rosin, Violin Strings, Violin Bridges, Violin Pegs, Violin Tailpieces, Violin Mutes, Violin Boxes, Violin Cases, Guitar Strings, Guitar Bridges, Guitar Nuts, Guitar Pins, Guitar Capos, Guitar Tuners, Flute Screws, Flute Springs, Flute Pads, Flute Corks, Flute Cleaners, Fife Springs, Fife Pads, Fife Corks, Fife Cleaners, Drum Heads, Drum Sticks, Drum Snares, Drum Cords, Drum Tacks, Drum Keys, Drum Straps, Drum Tips, Drum Washers, Drum Rims, Drum Hooks, Drum Screws, Drum Springs, Drum Pads, Drum Corks, Drum Cleaners, Tambourine Jingles, Tambourine Skins, Tambourine Screws, Tambourine Springs, Tambourine Pads, Tambourine Corks, Tambourine Cleaners, Bone Screws, Bone Springs, Bone Pads, Bone Corks, Bone Cleaners, Triangle Beaters, Cymbal Straps, Cymbal Beaters, Castanet Springs, Castanet Pads, Castanet Corks, Castanet Cleaners, Sleigh Bell Straps, Sleigh Bell Springs, Sleigh Bell Pads, Sleigh Bell Corks, Sleigh Bell Cleaners, Violin Cases, Guitar Cases, Flute Cases, Fife Cases, Drum Cases, Tambourine Cases, Bone Cases, Triangle Cases, Cymbal Cases, Castanet Cases, Sleigh Bell Cases, Violin Bows, Violin Frogs, Violin Nuts, Violin Screws, Violin Springs, Violin Pads, Violin Corks, Violin Cleaners, Guitar Bows, Guitar Frogs, Guitar Nuts, Guitar Screws, Guitar Springs, Guitar Pads, Guitar Corks, Guitar Cleaners, Flute Nuts, Flute Screws, Flute Springs, Flute Pads, Flute Corks, Flute Cleaners, Fife Nuts, Fife Screws, Fife Springs, Fife Pads, Fife Corks, Fife Cleaners, Drum Nuts, Drum Screws, Drum Springs, Drum Pads, Drum Corks, Drum Cleaners, Tambourine Nuts, Tambourine Screws, Tambourine Springs, Tambourine Pads, Tambourine Corks, Tambourine Cleaners, Bone Nuts, Bone Screws, Bone Springs, Bone Pads, Bone Corks, Bone Cleaners, Triangle Nuts, Triangle Screws, Triangle Springs, Triangle Pads, Triangle Corks, Triangle Cleaners, Cymbal Nuts, Cymbal Screws, Cymbal Springs, Cymbal Pads, Cymbal Corks, Cymbal Cleaners, Castanet Nuts, Castanet Screws, Castanet Springs, Castanet Pads, Castanet Corks, Castanet Cleaners, Sleigh Bell Nuts, Sleigh Bell Screws dealt with, in first having been violently attacked by the Prime Minister, and then cast into prison for daring to reply.

Latest Telegrams.

(Continued from first page)

Gladstone Criticised.

Many English Liberals admit that the treatment of Parnell was unfortunately chosen, and say that if the Premier meant to deprive Parnell of liberty he might, at least, have refrained from making a savage personal attack upon him a few hours before the warrant was issued. Gladstone's course throughout the whole business cannot be justified. Bunting Beaconsfield's regime Gladstone encouraged the league both in the House and on the platform, and now he is imprisoning men whose policy he inaugurated. He declared, gleefully, at Guild hall, on Thursday, that the man who was responsible for the disorder in Ireland had been arrested, but Parnell might with justice assert that the actual ringleader was at that moment anything but participant before the Lord Mayor. The most astonishing part of the Premier's Guild hall speech was his attack upon the Irish landlords, whom he accused of cowardice, saying that the Government had been left without any support from the landed interest in this crisis. This is felt to be a cruel and cowardly charge, after all that the landlords have been made to suffer by Mr. Gladstone. The victim is bound and stripped and then his oppressor taunts him with making no show. Lord Ardlamon (Sir Arthur Guinness) and other landlords have made spirited replies to this attack, and the public see the cross injustice of it.

Plans of the League.

The summary of the situation, from all information gathered, is that Ireland will neither be cajoled or forced into submission; that the demand for the repeal of the Union will be supported by an increasing number of English Radicals, and that lawlessness in Ireland, combined with the now weak and despotic attitude of the Government, will eventually result in the disgrace and overthrow of Gladstone's Administration. Dillon is not in good health, his recent imprisonment having told on his weak constitution. He has been more than the right hand to Parnell, and Parliament commanded general respect by the frankness and fearlessness of his utterances, and his contempt for small arts of obstruction. Biggar will probably take Dillon's place, but it is reported that he will not be allowed at large long. Biggar is, according to Wm. Harcourt, the most contumacious member of the Parnellite party, fearing nothing and stopping at nothing calculated to annoy the Government. Gladstone is suffering from a cold.

Foreign Comment.

PARIS, OCT. 17.—A correspondent writes that the clemency press condemns the Irish arrests.

Last Meeting of the League.

The Land League to-day held its last public meeting for the present. The Rev. Mr. Cantwell presided. There was a crowded attendance, including T. D. Sullivan, J. C. Biggar and Edward Leamy, members of Parliament. The Secretary announced that the week's receipts amounted to £2295, of which £1764 were from America. He read a long manifesto. It states that the League is now unable to present tent cases to the new Land Courts, and there is only one constitutional weapon left which the League has previously hesitated to use. The executive advise the members of the League henceforth to pay no rent until the leaders are released. The chairman said the present was the time for doing, not for speaking. The leaders might be arrested, but the priesthood remained to guide the people. He counseled passive resistance.

In Kilmainham Jail.

It is understood that Sexton declined an offer of the Government to release him from imprisonment on account of his health provided he would leave the country. It is not considered probable that the members of Parliament in Kilmainham Jail will be detained beyond three months.

Dennis O'Carthy, Poor Law Guardian and Land Leaguer, has been arrested at Dublin.

MISCELLANEOUS TELEGRAMS.

Pilgrimage to the Tomb of Pius IX.

ROME, Oct. 15th.—A thousand Italian pilgrims yesterday visited the tomb of Pope Pius IX. and deposited floral wreaths on it. No disturbance occurred.

Church Damaged by Fire.

New York, Oct. 12th.—The new St. Francis Xavier Church was damaged $10,000 by fire this morning.

The Pope and the Pilgrims.

ROME, Oct. 16th.—The Pope to-day, seated on the Throne of St. Peter's Cathedral, received 2000 Italian Pilgrims. His Holiness was enthusiastically greeted. Replying to an address, he renewed his declaration that he could never accept the accomplished facts without failing in his duty.

Death of a Catholic Bishop.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The death is announced of the Right Rev. Jas. Brown, Roman Catholic Bishop of Shrewsbury.

—To-morrow evening (Thursday) will be inaugurated a Ladies Fair for the benefit of the new schools recently erected by Father King in Oakland. No doubt the Fair will be well patronized by the people of our sister city, and we hope that many citizens from this side will visit it. Those who cannot go might send a supper cent for some of the tables or a donation in coin according to their means.

"I Don't Want a Plaster, said a sick man to a druggist, "can't you give me something to cure me?" His symptoms were a bitter back and disordered urine and were a sure indication of kidney disease. The druggist told him to use Kidney-Wort and in a short time it effected a complete cure. Have you these symptoms? Then get a box or bottle to-day—before you become incurable. It is the cure; safe and sure.—Emerville Republican.

Wrinkled Faces

It is painful sight to see young ladies in their teens with wrinkled and prematurely old faces; nevertheless it is quite common, and to any one who deserves the tendency of the times it cannot be very apparent. Owing to flaming advertisements and vigous certificates, in which are included the names of emine nt physicians and chemists, the unsuspecting and credulous are induced to use some of the so called liquid beautifiers, all of which are known to be positively injurious, and if used for any length of time will destroy the complexion, so that it will be next to impossible to restore it. Females should be very careful to see that their daughters do not use these preparations. Just ask for and obtain Sozodont's Harmless Yosemite Face Powder, the only harmless beautifier. For sale by all druggists.

Have Winter's Cough of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption, and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle.

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MONTDAY, OCT. 19, 1881.

FLOUR.—City Extras are quoted at $5@$5 25; City Superfine, $4 75@$5 00; country brands $4 25@$4 50; Oregon and Washington, $5@$5 50.

WHEAT.—The week opened strong under the foreign market, were very firm, and a fair trade ensued, the market closing quiet and steady. Holders were very firm and generally held No. 1 above the views of buyers, which they were not disposed to meet half way. The eastern market paper forwarded shippers freely was 4@5c. at which figure buyers could not be induced to take. As the week wore on the demand increased, and at the close quotations were for large at less than $1 30. Although buyers refused to bite at the bait. The sales reported to day were 30,000, 22,000 and 1,100 ctls No. 1, at 72c; 2,000 ctls No. 2 at 72½c; 10,000 ctls, $1 70; 500 ctls No. 1, $1 70; was refused. No. 1 is quotable at $1 70@$1 71; and No. 2 at $1 69@$1 72½ ℄ ctl.

BARLEY.—Is still lifeless. The lull in the inquiry is growing prolonged, but holders are firm. Sales today of 1,500 ctls light feeding, $1 22½; 1,000 ctls coast Chevalier at $1 42½; and 900 ctls poor do, $1 40. Feed, $1 42@$1 45; Brewing is quotable at $1 50@$1 60 for light, and $1 55@$1 60 for bright heavy; standard Chevalier, $1 50@$1 55 ℄ ctl.

OATS—The market is so heavily supplied that purchasers are holding off with considerable decidence for a decline. Holders, however, are firm. No sales today. Feed and choice, $1 45@$1 55; common $1 35@$1 42½; Surprise, $1 55@$1 60.

CORN—Sales of 100 ctls small round Yellow at $1 42½, and 600 ctls large do, at $1 40 ℄ ctl. The market is dull. White is nominal.

HAY—Wheat, old, $11@$12; will cute, $9@$12; volunteer and stable, $7@$10; oat, $9@$10 ℄ ton.

RYE—The market is higher at $2 50@$2 75 ℄ ctl; Brewing barley is at $2 50.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 55@$1 60 ℄ ctl.

STRAW—Per bale, 42½@45c.

POTATOES—Only a few slight variations to report. Arrivals are liberal. Salinas, Bluss, $1 35@$1 40. Oulley Cows sold at $1 45; Texas Issue and Tomatoes, $1 25@$1 40; River Reds, $1 15@$1 25; Early Rose, $1@$1 12½; Humboldt Reds, $1 40; Sweets 75@$1 ℄ ctl.

ONIONS—Are quotable at 70@75c ℄ ctl.

COUNTRY PRODUCE—Butter, 25@30c ℄ lb. Feed Corn, $30 ℄ ton; Hominy $32@$35 ℄ ton.

BEESWAX—25@28c ℄ lb.

BUTTER—Arrivals are still light and prices firm. Fancy, 42½c; Good and Choice Fall, California roll, 42@45c; Fair and good do, 37½@40c; mixed lots from country stores, 30@35c; tubs, 32@35c; Pickled roll, 32@35c; Eastern, 30@35c ℄ lb.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 18c; California, 12½c ℄ lb.

POULTRY—Prices are steady. Live Turkeys ℄ lb, 18@18c for Hens, 14@16c for Gobblers; Geese, ℄ pair $1 25@$1 75; Ducks ℄ doz, $5@$6 Hens, $4@$5; Roosters, young, $6@$7 50; do, old, $4; Broilers, $3@$5 50.

EGGS—Open very strong. Oregon, 30@35c; California, 30@35c; Utah, 27@30c; Eastern 25@27c ℄ doz.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Strawberries were scarce and higher to-day. Wisconsin Cranberries, $10@$13 50 ℄ bbl; Oregon $6@$8 per box; Pears, 50c@$1 ℄ box and basket; Apples, 50c@$1 25 ℄ box; Strawberries, $12@$14 ℄ chest.

VEGETABLES—The cold snap has damaged the Tomatoes and Cucumbers in the country. Marrowfat Squash, $10 ℄ ton; Egg Plant, 50c ℄ box; Okra 25@c ℄ lb, Green Corn, 15c@20c ℄ dozen; Cucumbers, 75c per box; Tomatoes, 50@75c ℄ box; Cabbage Sprouts, 6@7c; Cauliflower, 60@65c ℄ dozen; Onions, 30@50c; Turnips, 75c; Beets, 60c; Parsnips, 75c@$1 ℄ ctl; Garlic, 6@7c; Artichokes, 25c ℄ dozen; Green Chile Peppers, 50@75c ℄ box.

MARRIED.

COLLINS—SHITH—In Vallejo, October 9th, by Rev. Father Lonis, James Collins of Suisun, to Miss E. Smith of Jeffersville, Ky.

O'BRIEN—CHALINE—In Napa, October 15th, by Rev. Father Hamert, Patrick O'Brien of Napa, to Miss Mary Collins of Suisun.

DIED

HADE—In Redwood City, September 18, 1881, Mary, wife of Richard Hade, a native of the parish of Killount, county Kerry, aged 34 years. Solemn Requiem Mass for the repose of her soul was celebrated by Father Riordan, in St. Mary's church, San Mateo. May her soul have mercy on her soul.

KENNEDY—In Marysville, October 15th, Mrs. Mary Kennedy, mother of John C. Herbert of Marysville, and Thomas Kennedy of Smartsville, aged 82 years.

Requiem Mass for the repose of her soul was celebrated in St. Joseph's Cathedral, and Rev. Father Callan delivered an appropriate and impressive sermon on the life and character of the deceased. The large procession moved thence to the Catholic Cemetery. The following named gentlemen acted as pall bearers: M. Lemmon, F. Dorscheck, E. Gamary, M. H. Bradley, C. O'Slattery and Don Donahue.

Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," for all those weaknesses peculiar to women, is an unequalled remedy. Distressing backache and "bearing down" sensations yield to its strength-giving properties. By druggists.

Tourists and the traveling public in general, will find it to their interest to call at the Arcade Photo. Studio, 204 Market Street, for first class work at lowest prices. All work warranted and equal to any competitor. Mrs. S. Fletcher (formerly of Stockton), proprietress. E. R. Higgins, operator.

What Ails You?

It is a disordered liver giving you a yellow skin or restless bowels; which have resulted in distressing piles or whose kidneys refuse to perform their functions? If so, your system will soon be clogged with poisons. Take a few doses of Kidney-Wort and you'll feel like a new man—nature will throw off every impediment and each organ will be ready for duty. Druggists sell both the dry and liquid.—Emerville Tribune.

Slayton's Cherry Tooth Paste.

An aromatic combination for the preservation of the Teeth and Gums. It is far superior to any preparation of the kind in the market. In large bamboo Opal pots, price 50 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

LUNDYS!

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

LUNDY'S

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

Prices lower than ever on his stock of fine Gold Jewelry and Silverware.

Sole Agent for Nicholas Muller's fine Clocks and Bronze Figures.

The E. N. Welch's Manufacturing Company's Clocks:

Prep (Office) Alarm Clock	$1 50
Office Alarm Fine Nickel Clock	2 50
Dawn Alarm, Fine Nickel and Gilt	3 00
Parlor Gong Clock, with chime	10 00
Walnut Clock, with Two Figures (Cupid)	10 00
Fine Marbelized Clocks	$10 and upwards
Repeat Clocks in all styles	from 1 day to 8 day

Call and examine our line of Gold Watches, suitable for Christmas presents.

Call and get one of our Gold Stem Winding Watches for $12 75, warranted for one year.

Goods sent to any part of the country C. O. D. All orders promptly attended to.

LUNDY'S,

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

No preparation compares with Day's Kidney Pad in curing diseases of the kidneys and bladder. Send stamp for pamphlet. DAY KIDNEY PAD CO., Buffalo, N.Y.

New Advertisements.

REAL ESTATE

FOR SALE BY

Thomas Magee,

PUBLISHER

REAL ESTATE CIRCULAR

20 Montgomery Street

Opposite Lick House

New Property.

McAllister, near Market, south side of McAllister, 137½ feet more or less, by 137½ feet in depth, with a large two story and attic house, containing 10 rooms and bathroom, and all modern improvements and conveniences, and in good order. Very fine view of the City and Bay from the upper windows. Lot is level with the street. Very fine view of the City and Bay from the upper windows. Lot is level with the street. Very fine view of the City and Bay from the upper windows. Lot is level with the street

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

MY LADY'S JEWELS.

[The month of October belongs, deservedly, to the Rosary of our Ladye and Holy Angels, and the month of November to the Holy Souls, and our good Angels bear many a chaplet of Ave's up to the throne of mercy, as offerings for our loved ones who have passed home on through the mystic gateway of the Land.]

They are my Lady's jewels
And that is why I prize
As a treasure, what seems to common
And worthless to other eyes.

They are my Lady's jewels,
And all through life's sad years,
They have been to my heart a comfort
That soothed my darkest fears.

Holding them close in sorrow,
In sickness and bitter pain,
I have felt my cross grow lighter,
And been strengthened for toil again.

They are my Lady's jewels,
And no Monarch's casket's hold
Gems of such wondrous splendor,
As those in my casket inclosed.

True they are brown and homely,
And fashioned of common wood,
But I see in them shining diamonds
And rubies as red as blood.

With milk-white pearls that emblem
"The purity of soul,
We all must keep while striving
To win the heavenly goal.

And let us look upon them,
Unseeing them heal by heal,
See how they open unto me
A volume of light to read.

Chapter and page and column,
Are shining before me here,
The life of our blessed Mother,
And the Saviour's love and fear.

Mary's joys and her sorrows,
Mary's glories and pain,
And the crown we win through Mary,
Falling like precious rain.

Graces that blow and brighten,
Graces won by her prayers
As down at the Throne of Jesus,
She lavish her children's cares.

Dear are my Lady's jewels,
Meet precious and dear to me,
For the sake of the pure white wailing
Our Jesus to set them free.

The poor souls watching and waiting
In purgatorial pains,
Till the prayers of our earthly kindred
Move our Lady to break their chains.

Oh lovers of Mary's jewels,
Think as you bend to-day,
That some one you loved most dearly,
Some one who has passed away

May now be calling unto thee,
And as alms of you,
Prayers, that our holy Mother
May pour on their souls the dew

That quenches the flames, and loosens
Each closely prisoning band,
And free, and lead them rejoicing,
To a home in the heavenly land.

They are my Lady's jewels,
Ah! would that their light might glow
In every heart, and homestead,
Oh! how it would lighten woe.

They are my Lady's jewels,
And earthly cares and needs,
Vanish away as vapor
At touch of my rosary beads.

What were the wealth of Ophir,
What were the Indies store,
If this chaplet of Mary's roses
I could claim as mine no more.

Ah! I would spend them cheerily,
MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.
Mossy Woodland, Cal., Oct. 7th, 1881.

Literary Miscellany.

A DEATH-BED DISCOVERY.

A TRUE STORY.

CHAPTER I.

In a room on the third floor of a house in H., a wealthy city of Ohio. Though the room was ample it was almost void of furniture, which made it somewhat difficult to judge to which class of society she belonged or had belonged. Old curtains scarcely showing that they had once been blue hung in front of the windows, their faded and worn yellow, and the dust had perforated them in many places. Only one strawbottomed chair and a little wooden table covered with medicine bottles and glasses were there, and on the floor lay two or three towels, a sponge, and a plain white earthenware basin. At the first glance, one could not keep off the thought that want and poverty reigned here, for nothing else was there beyond the articles enumerated, with the exception of an old mahogany arm-chair which stood at the foot of the bed; in spite of this discovery which the drawn curtains spread, one could see that a hand had robbed it of the lace with which it had formerly been adorned, probably to sell it.

The room looked out upon a courtyard, in the middle of which stood a acacia, surrounded by a small plot of grass. The dark, bare branches waited pearingly for the first rays of the coming spring, to reconnoitre a new life, when nature revives with fresh verdure.

"Therese," faltered, the patient, "I am thirsty."

A woman of about fifty years, who had been standing by the window, approached the bed, and poured a few drops into a glass of water. Then she gently raised the head of her mistress from the pillow, and put the glass to her lips.

"You seem to be in very great pain, my lady" said Therese.

"Irrepressible," replied the invalid, and laid her thin hand on her chest. "It burns like a fire." Then she sank back again on the pillow groaning.

The woman, who was awaiting her last hour in this dreary, empty room, was the once illustrious singer, Aurora Franzika, who had left behind her a widespread reputation in her art and for the charms of her person. Only a few years since the whole land had been full of her praise. Persons of the highest rank had contended for her favors. Riches, luxuries in profusion had surrounded her, and all that lavish wealth there only commanded to her an old Turkish shawl, in which she was enveloped, for she could not even call a counterpane her own. What a contrast to her former life! Many a nobleman retains to this day her picture, in which her beautiful and lovable face is displayed. Now all her beauty had vanished, for still black hair seemed too heavy for her sick and tired head. All the freshness of life had flown from her cheeks, and on her wax brow was written her approaching end. A dry cough appeared to shake her chest painfully. Though but thirty-six years of age she was marked with death's hand. No she lay, solitary and deserted by all who had formerly knelt at her feet worshipping her beauty.

CHAPTER II.

In her want and abandonment she said one dismissed after the other her servants, and finally only a faithful one remained, who the wardrobe had gone and the handsome furniture was dispersed of. One single friend remained to her, the Dr. H——, whose fortune had been made by speaking for and recommending him to a nobleman; but he was not rich, his practice only brought him in enough for himself and family, however, he visited her daily, and each time left on the table one or two shillings. From this charity lived the sufferer and her domestic. This servant, Therese, who had spent the former good days of luxury, jewellery, equipages, and slumbers with her mistress, could not believe that that brilliant time would never again return. Her faithful attachment enabled her to remain true to her lady in the hour of trial.

She looked very pale and worn, and no wonder, food was scarce, and for weeks she had spent her nights in the rickety old arm chair at the foot of the sick bed. Dr. H—— saw that the feeble old Therese could not continue nursing without great risk of her own health.

"You must think of sparing yourself, Therese," he said to her one day. "Lehahl send you for a time to my old aunt's where you can somewhat recover your strength. I will get other aid for the invalid, which will certainly not be less active than yours has been. The pious sisters of the Convent of the Redemption have made it their task to nurse the sick. This very night one of the nuns will be here.

At six o'clock that evening the nun sent by Dr. H—— appeared, to relieve the weeping farewell of the dying woman and pitiousness to visit her daily. She then gave the sister a few words of advice about administering the medicine and went. So thirsty the nun seated herself in the armchair. The patient soon asked for some water to drink; the sister rose quietly and gently raised the invalid from the pillow and gave her the draught, but instead of drinking the latter gazed with her large black eyes full of astonishment at the nun.

"How old are you?" she asked.

"Eighteen," was the answer.

"Eighteen," with a sigh, whispered the sick woman. She drank quickly, and then laid down again.

"Do you know that I must soon die?"

"They did not tell me so, lady; perhaps it will be possible to save you."

"To save me," cried out in ironic tones the invalid, "and for what! what would become of me! Youth and beauty, those give life. I am already dead, my child."

The nun was silent, and quietly opened the book of prayers which she had brought with her. The young girl had a face of entrancing beauty. The white cap which formed a frame around her fair brow became her wonderfully, and showed up the light of purity and innocence which beamed in her lovely countenance. Her dark eyes (which were shaded by beautiful lashes) gazed sometimes anxiously across at the invalid, who contemplated with admiration, envy, this magnificent face. Suddenly she began:

"Tell me, my dear, are your vows binding forever?"

"Yes," replied the sister.

"Are you happy?"

"We are forbidden to tell it."

"Why?"

"It is the rule of our order."

"But, surely you are allowed to tell me where your parents live?"

"I have no parents."

"Your mother?"

"I never knew her."

"And your father?"

"He is dead."

CHAPTER III.

Where can this lovely girl come from? thought the invalid to herself; from what root did she have beautiful flower spring? In consequence of what unhappy fate, or by what chain of circumstances had this charming creature reached herself in a nun's dress. And then out loud to the sister she said—

"Oh, my poor child, you are more dead than I am; perhaps to-morrow a handful of earth will cover my body and my memory, and I have enjoyed life in all its phases. You will never know anything but grated walls and continual silence, dry bread, rigorous prayers and fasting. Oh, you also could spend a life to more advantage if you liked. Everywhere homage would be paid to your beauty. You need only enter the world to benefit it."

The nun rose.

"What do you say?" she cried, "do you not know that all the world offers is but vanity? you have tasted of all things and yet I am happier than you are. In my profound solitude in the retirement of my convent, I meditate with so much pleasure and it gives me comfort, lets me forget the world, and discovers to me a life of glory and splendor which far outshines all the glitter of this one."

"Vanity," called out the invalid, "God feel what it is to be sought, loved and adored. What is life without joy and pleasure! However short it may be, enjoyment lengthens it, and only those who have drained the cup of pleasure to its dregs have lived."

Trembling Sister Franzika laid her hand on the lips of the sick woman as if to hold back the words.

"You speak feverishly, and blaspheme God, and pain me. Oh, repent before it is too late, for I repeat again your life was nothing was vanity."

The invalid passed her hand over her brow; for a short time she remained silent, and then seemed to brush a tear from her eye.

"And even if all is vanity, my child, she then said, "this handsome face lit up the path in life and now gilds these my last hours. I have once truly loved. I was 15 years old as you are now Sister Franzika, what has become of him! If he who had the first energy of my heart where now to stand by my bed I should die easily. There, take," and she drew from beneath the pillow a small key, "take and open this casket; it contains my papers, the certificate of my birth, and my true name, Marie Amelie Bringer, and a marriage lines also."

A dark flush spread over the nun's face, and trembling she stretched out her hands towards her patient.

"He whom you loved, did he call himself Gabriel von Tennemann!"

"Yes," cried the dying woman, "Gabriel von Tennemann. How do you know?"

"That man brought me up.

"And your father?"

"Was Gabriel von Tenne—"

"You were born in Switzerland, he took you to Germany, after I had left him, and now he is dead!"

Sister Franziska nodded silently. The invalid sobbed. The nun approached her, sank on her knees, and laid her head in her hands. The dying woman, exerting her last energies, covered her with kisses.

"And you did not know who I was when you came?"

"O! the finger, Aurora Franzika, my father had never told her.

"And, tell me, how did your father die?"

"Four years again a small town on the Rhine, some then I have been in the convent. Husband with one hand in mine, and with the other he cooped that of his only friend, a venerable and trusted priest, who now reaches near our convent."

The dying woman raised herself. "You are my deliverance my child, the cloud is make haste, and let me speak to this revered man before I die.

One hour later she was dead, falling quietly asleep. Sister Franziska held one of the dim hands, seated on the other lay the emotion which the priest had brought her.

The Shrine of St. Bridget.

In Ireland, recently, a pilgrimage or excursion under the auspices of the Historical Antiquarian Society to pine to "Kildare's holy shrine." It would be impossible to discover any spot of deeper interest. To the religious bodies of Ireland Kildare is ever famous as the spot where St. Bridget, the patroness of Ireland, received the veil from the hands of St. Patrick, and for over a thousand years the sacred fire has kindled and burned upon her shrine. The ancient and highly interesting cathedral church has recently been restored by Mr. Street with equal reverence and success. Quartz and a more interesting edifice, the chapel of St. Bridget, or "Fire House," in which the sacred fire burned, and which is of great antiquity. Above the group stands the slender and graceful Round Tower, grey from the storms of centuries, but perfect as if the engineering was laid but yesterday. Beneath and graceful Round Tower, grey from the storms of centuries, but perfect as if the engineering was laid but yesterday. Beneath the nun sented herself in the armchair. The patient soon asked for some water to drink; the sister rose quietly and gently raised the invalid from the pillow and gave her the draught, but instead of drinking the latter gazed with her large black eyes full of astonishment at the nun.

"How old are you?" she asked.

"Eighteen," was the answer.

"Eighteen," with a sigh, whispered the sick woman. She drank quickly, and then laid down again.

"Do you know that I must soon die?"

"They did not tell me so, lady; perhaps it will be possible to save you."

"To save me," cried out in ironic tones the invalid, "and for what! what would become of me! Youth and beauty, those give life. I am already dead, my child."

The nun was silent, and quietly opened the book of prayers which she had brought with her. The young girl had a face of entrancing beauty. The white cap which formed a frame around her fair brow became her wonderfully, and showed up the light of purity and innocence which beamed in her lovely countenance. Her dark eyes (which were shaded by beautiful lashes) gazed sometimes anxiously across at the invalid, who contemplated with admiration, envy, this magnificent face. Suddenly she began:

"Tell me, my dear, are your vows binding forever?"

"Yes," replied the sister.

"Are you happy?"

"We are forbidden to tell it."

"Why?"

"It is the rule of our order."

"But, surely you are allowed to tell me where your parents live?"

"I have no parents."

"Your mother?"

"I never knew her."

"And your father?"

"He is dead."

CHAPTER III.

Where can this lovely girl come from? thought the invalid to herself; from what root did she have beautiful flower spring? In consequence of what unhappy fate, or by what chain of circumstances had this charming creature reached herself in a nun's dress. And then out loud to the sister she said—

"Oh, my poor child, you are more dead than I am; perhaps to-morrow a handful of earth will cover my body and my memory, and I have enjoyed life in all its phases. You will never know anything but grated walls and continual silence, dry bread, rigorous prayers and fasting. Oh, you also could spend a life to more advantage if you liked. Everywhere homage would be paid to your beauty. You need only enter the world to benefit it."

The nun rose.

"What do you say?" she cried, "do you not know that all the world offers is but vanity? you have tasted of all things and yet I am happier than you are. In my profound solitude in the retirement of my convent, I meditate with so much pleasure and it gives me comfort, lets me forget the world, and discovers to me a life of glory and splendor which far outshines all the glitter of this one."

"Vanity," called out the invalid, "God feel what it is to be sought, loved and adored. What is life without joy and pleasure! However short it may be, enjoyment lengthens it, and only those who have drained the cup of pleasure to its dregs have lived."

Trembling Sister Franziska laid her hand on the lips of the sick woman as if to hold back the words.

"You speak feverishly, and blaspheme God, and pain me. Oh, repent before it is too late, for I repeat again your life was nothing was vanity."

The invalid passed her hand over her brow; for a short time she remained silent, and then seemed to brush a tear from her eye.

"And even if all is vanity, my child, she then said, "this handsome face lit up the path in life and now gilds these my last hours. I have once truly loved. I was 15 years old as you are now Sister Franziska, what has become of him! If he who had the first energy of my heart where now to stand by my bed I should die easily. There, take," and she drew from beneath the pillow a small key, "take and open this casket; it contains my papers, the certificate of my birth, and my true name, Marie Amelie Bringer, and a marriage lines also."

A dark flush spread over the nun's face, and trembling she stretched out her hands towards her patient.

"He whom you loved, did he call himself Gabriel von Tennemann!

"Yes," cried the dying woman, "Gabriel von Tennemann. How do you know?"

"That man brought me up.

"And your father?"

"Was Gabriel von Tenne—"

"You were born in Switzerland, he took

Sample copies to a conspicuous Methodist in St. Louis, and the Chicago Advocate assumes a tone of indecent playing cards in the northwest—Sioux City Journal. The editor of the latter journal knows of the cards are "marked and loaded," and is a gambler of no mean genius, but it cards nothing for that, because all cards are equally marked in his sight.

— Use nothing else but Merino Star.

The Voice of Ireland.

THE LAND BILL TO BE REPUDIATED.

NO PEACE WHILE AN IRISHMAN IS IN PRISON.

What the Priests Said at the Dublin Convention.

[Following are the speeches of two patriotic priests, Fathers Cantwell and O'Boyle, at the National Convention, held recently at Dublin.

FATHER CANTWELL'S SPEECH.

REVEREND FATHER O'Boyle, P.P., Santfield, had he had been so much frightened by backslide and the like that he had almost resolved never to open his mouth again on the part of the Land League. (Cheers.) but when he saw that all Ireland was roused, and every heart was beating with the spirit of the Land League, and that they were determined to allow no tyranny and no brute force to keep them beggars and slaves, he was not afraid to speak with the Land League (cheers). They had to deal with a resolution which asked them to give a chance—what was called a fair trial—to the Land bill. Now, if he were to make up his mind to give it a fair trial he would not, speaking for himself, allow it into the court at all (cheers). The Government had shown by their appointment of the Commission on whose side they were, and who were to benefit by the Land Bill. How could they expect that any Land Bill would receive a fair trial while there remained a many of their people in prison? (Cheers.) The people had been rouned hitherto by divisions, and it was to their duty to unite. They had discovered that by union they could gain their independence from any power. (Cheers.) Ever since he entered the Land League let them give the bill a fair trial in the courts, but he had no hope of it in the courts. Every wastefile rents reduced so that they could live. They had, of course, obtained a reduction in the rents of a little, but that would not do much good. John Bright had said to some of the leaders of the Land League that the bill would not reduce the rental of Ireland by anything an acre, but that it would satisfy the people by giving them a little of tenure (no, no). When they came to give it a hearing in obedience to the mandate of the Land League,

THEY SHOULD MAKE UP THEIR MINDS NOT TO YIELD AN INCH

from the programme laid down by Michael Davitt (cheers). Let them put 20, 30, 40, or 50 test cases into the court, but they would not be satisfied with the result. They might secure 2s. 3s. or 5s. an acre of a reduction, but that would not satisfy the people (cheers). The people would not be allowed to cease, it had done so much for them they could not permit it to stop. If England save them the land of Ireland for nothing to morrow they would not be satisfied, while she kept so many of their countrymen in jail (cheers). He, for his part, could tell England that he took part in this movement in the first stage with the one motive, charity for the poor. He thought the Land League was a benevolent institution, and he had another motive, and that was to help his power to strike down any tyranny that the British Government would exercise over them (cheers). He would have the land for the people, they should have the land for the people respected, and they would not allow any Russian force to come over the land (cheers). The London Times had said that the people of Ireland had been so reduced that the Irish people would now show their teeth but they could not bite. England had left only four millions of people in Ireland out of eight. They had sent millions to England and Scotland, and they had twenty-five millions to America. Let them remember all the blood that had been lavished out of the country by England. Let them remember the sufferings of Ireland if ever an Irishman would, when the day came—when it was forced upon him—not be (Enthusiastic cheers and waving of hats). Mr. Parnell, and all the force at his back, and the nation of Ireland had risen up to fight for the farmers of Ireland (cheers). As a clergyman, he would say that it was not against any class of landlords or labor in the endeavor to make the people of Ireland independent (cheers). They were able to take care of themselves, and they would take their foes, and they would remember them for the future. Let them remember the men who stood by them, and they would stand for their principles. They might have a long time to fight before they got the land for the people, for they should fight for it until they got that by legal agitation, and if it was not possible by legal agitation they should have it by some other agitation (loud cheers and waving of hats). The tiverments had put their leaders into prison and they should have the opinions of even infidel Prussia and persecuting Germany; and if he could strike against the Government for that act he would strike (cheers). They should have in Russian Government in Ireland. They should have the land for the people, and they should have justice for the people, and they could not get it legally, he was prepared to say with the best of the people, "Oh! for a thousand battles to shake a thousand pinnacle cheers.

PREPARED TO STRIKE A BLOW FOR FREEDOM.

ADDRESS BY FATHER CANTWELL.

The President and that he would take the liberty of making a slight deviation from the rule that had been laid down. The Rev. Father Cantwell was speaking the sentiments of his Grace the Archbishop of Cashel in the strongest terms. He had but to repeat the lesson that the Archbishop of Cashel had given to the people. He would therefore ask Father Cantwell to address the Convention.

The Rev. Mr. Cantwell, on coming forward, was loudly cheered. He said—Fellow-countrymen, I come from the North of Ireland laying down the principles that the future work and business of the Land League is based upon (cheers). Fellow-countrymen, I do not offer a speech, but a plain and plain statement of the facts of the case. The Land Bill is based upon the principle that the tenant farmers of Ireland, if they have the land of Ireland, have a property in it, and

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

WEDNESDAY..... OCTOBER 25.

Catholic and Protestant Missionaries Compared.

The sectarian press is occasionally filled with laudatory articles in praise of the "spread" of Protestantism in pagan lands, and the "sufferings" which the missionaries of that religious error undergo in their efforts to propagate Protestantism. A great many of the boasted statements made in this regard are mere romances without any foundation in fact. They are made by the pensioned preachers of some sect who require the pennies of the people to keep themselves, their wives and their babes at their post. A reported "conversion" of a single native in a Catholic country acts as a regular magnet to draw the dollars from the pockets of those who think the great mission of Protestantism is to pervert "Papists." So, whenever the funds in the ecclesiastical exchequer begin to run low, a few sensational sketches of "missionary work among the Munchausens" (or some other equally unheard of race), is furnished to the journal representing the peculiar sect in want of funds, and at once the plethoric pockets of the rich are emptied into the Evangelical treasury, and the extensive and expensive household of the so-called "missionary of the gospel" is once more supplied with funds whereby they can live in comfortable affluence.

Perhaps some Protestant reader may ask, Can this be true? But we can assure him that the charge is neither new nor novel. We have it on the authority of a score of Protestants themselves, some of whom charge that the so-called "foreign missions" under Protestant sway are the most gigantic gospel frauds ever heard of.

No later than last month a meeting was held in Salisbury, England, in aid of the Protestant Society for the Propagation of the Gospel," at which one of the honest referees in attendance—an Anglican minister with the very English cognomen of Jenkins—made a few startling revelations on this very subject. He began by telling the audience

"That he would that night bear a good deal about the success of missions, but he thought that what he saw of their own Protestant mission in Hongkong was scarcely successful. Though he was there one night and a day, he thought he did not see the Bishop more than once, and he did not see the clergy in Hongkong more than two or three times. Their work seemed to be rather assigned English colonists than among the poor people."

Precisely so! Acting upon the maxim that, "little boats should keep near shore," the Protestant missionaries in foreign lands never go further off from the cities than where their vision can see the flag of their nation float over the Consulate. The great difference between them and the Catholic

Take away the fat salaries and the rich pickings from Protestant missionaries in foreign lands, and the pagans might sit in "the darkness of the shadow of death" from now until doomsday before a Scripture-slinger would waste his sweetness on their desert air. No! If the pay-roll was stopped they would one and all return to the lanes of their nativity just as rapidly as steam and sail could carry them, and they would leave all the missionary work to those true Apostles of the Cross for whom neither salary nor comfort has any allurements. The true missionary never thinks of earthly emolument; the highest honor the earth can give him is to let him die at his post in the service of that God to whose name he has given the glory of the gospel. But, as Mr. Jenkins has shown, no such idea pervades the breast of any sectarian pioneer in pagan lands. They go there to have a good time, to preach the gospel to the few English resets around them, and to draw a good salary for the supposed risks they run in consequence of their residence in a land inhabited by "savages."

We have already heard Mr. Jenkins opinion of how Protestant missionaries conducted themselves in Hongkong, and now let us hear the evidence of a Protestant who was for eight months in that city, regarding the manner in which the Catholic missionaries spread the light of Christianity in China. Here is his language:

"Where one saw missionary work really doing justice to itself and getting forth its utmost exertion was among the Roman Catholics. The Roman Catholic priests were trained better than the Anglican ones for the work. Before they were allowed to go and work in a benighted place like Hongkong they had to live three or four years on the mainland, where they had to rough it in every way. They had to provide all spiritual privileges for the people, and had to learn the language, or else they could not make themselves understood by any one. Their work was thorough mission work. After they had served their three or four years, and in some cases eight years, perhaps, they went to Hongkong, Singapore, or some other place where there was need of such exertion. What did they do when they got to such a place? Instead of living in the valleys or on the hill, instead of taking houses among the English residents, as the Church of England missionaries, Wesleyans, and so on did, they planted their houses in the very midst of the people, they built small mission places and lived close to them, and they not only lived among the people, but actually assumed their dress, and even the manner of wearing their hair. Unlike the new Roman Catholic priests with long pig tails and little skull caps, talking through their nose, and acting as if they were natives. They had capital schools, they had a house of charity, where the sick poor might obtain things that they required, they had nurses, and they had a creche in which mothers could leave their children when they went out. They had perfect organization. They had a bishop and clergy, there was unity among them, and there was self-denial in their work. Without self-denial there could be no true missionary spirit. It was one thing for a missionary to say, "I have forsaken all to come to you," but another for the native to see the missionaries living comfortably."

"Their work," says this Protestant gentleman, alluding to Catholic missionaries, "is thorough missionary work." And why is this? Simply because their religion is thorough and their faith is thorough. The light of God's truth in the Catholic religion is as clear to the minds of Catholics as is the noon-day sun to the visual organs of mankind. It is only the blind who cannot see it. The spirit of our Blessed Saviour is just as divine, as powerful and as strengthening to the true missionaries of the Cross in this nineteenth century, as it was at the moment it fell from the lips of our Blessed Redeemer when He told the precursors of His present priesthood to "Go, teach all nations . . . . and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world."

This is the sacred spirit that infuses divine courage into the hearts of Catholic missionaries. It is this command and this promise that cheers them in their heroic efforts to plant the standard of Christianity in every clime. It is this divine spirit that animates their souls and nerves their naturally timid hearts to undergo every species of suffering in order to save souls from the snares of Satan. Inspired with this divine spirit, they can accomplish miracles, while the Protestant propagandist, who does not possess it, is merely a sham of sanctity and a snare for the unsuspecting. The Catholic priest is the only true apostle of Christ; all others are mere humbugs who spit the customs of Christianity, and of whom St. Paul so forcibly says "whose end is destruction; whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame; who mind earthly things."

A Turbulent Ebullition of Pixley's Passion.

Glancing over the pages of Pixley's paper last week we enjoyed a hearty laugh at the fussing, fuming and fretting indulged in by the Irish-hating victim of Tyldesmania. The shot and shell of the Monitor seems to have penetrated the hide of fanatical Frank, so he shouts and spurns in a manner that would evoke a laugh from the most lugubrious mortal that ever fell a victim of melancholy.

Pixley devotes nearly a page to the Monitor, yet no purblind is he in his fury that he fails to bring a single allegation against us worthy of serious consideration. He starts out by asserting a falsehood, and ends by clinching it with a score of assertions of the same caliber. Such assumed gas and undiluted ignorance we have rarely met, and it is to the honor of the press of this city that Pixley is looked upon as a parasite of a peculiar species which is addicted to periodical spasms of savage spleen, emptying out in the unfortunate victim wounding himself with his own poisonous virus. The Catholic Church, the Pope, the Prelates, and all the institutions therein, are no more for the freaky fulminations of fanatical Frank than they do for the mouthings of a mad dog. The Irish people, in like manner, despise the despicable demagogue whose slanderous slobber is cast upon themselves, their country, and their religion in every issue of his crazy sheet. It is not the Catholic Church alone when he assails the dogmas of the Church or the civil rights of Catholics; hence we pass over much of his recent fusillade against the Monitor, for the reason that those who read his vaporings can see upon their face the incognizancy of the whole incongruous mass of literary trash.

In order that our readers may have an idea of the "intelligence" possessed by this incorrigible transgressor against the laws of truth and decency, we append a folio of falsehoods culled from the malignant rant recently in order to ventilate his vituperative virus.

FALSEHOOD No. 1—The Monitor is a Roman Catholic Church-organ, printed in San Francisco under the patronage of the Mitre-in-Almanacs, and sustained by his satan at the head of the ecclesiastical columns.

Archbishop Alemany's name does not appear at the head of our editorial—or any other—columns, nor is his Grace responsible for a single sentiment contained therein, except such communications of an official character which appear over his signature.

FALSEHOOD No. 2—This paper is edited by an Irish Papist, who holds the same extreme views in reference to Irish politics, and delights to see what the most malignant blackguardism toward the other of the Argonaut, and to angle by one who does not blindly assume all the bigoted dogmas of the Roman Church, and who does not unite with him in the denunciation of everything that is English, and who does not believe in the Democratic party.

We glory in being "an Irish Papist," and as such we deeply and sincerely sympathize with the people of Ireland in their struggle to obtain for their land the same liberty which Washington gained for America. We glory also in defending the Catholic Church from the insolent and indecent assaults of the possessed pen of Paleopanmixes, whether they come in the shape of scurrilous slanders from the foul mind of the arch-enemy himself, or from the equally slimy source of some of his satellites. But we do not assail any man who does not first fling missiles at the Basilica of Christ, nor do we decry any man for his Democracy or his Republican predilections. Politics is not our trade, and we respect the political preferences of every American citizen which is more than can be said of the literary scavenger whose rubbish we are raking over.

FALSEHOOD No. 3. That journal declares that the parochial schools are under "paganizing influences." It calls them "godless," and demorals, and, reflecting the sentiments of all the Roman clergy, asks parents to withdraw their children from them under the threatened penalty of withholding from them the Sacraments of the Church.

The results of public school education are the best test whereby to judge of their "paganizing influences." It was only a short time since that Rev. Aaron Williams, a well known Protestant clergyman of this city, and openly at a noon-day prayer meeting of Protestants that a teacher in the public schools assured him that a majority of the boys and girls therein were utterly skeptical regarding Scripture truth and their souls eternal welfare. "They were going down to hell as fast as they could go, and they never thought of it, never, apparently, even dreamed of it." This single fact alone is sufficient to prove the "paganizing influences" and as to the schools being "godless," they have been acknowledged to be of that mythical character by the best informed non-Catholic writers of our day. But neither "the Roman clergy" nor the Monitor ever advocated the ridiculous theory of withholding from Catholic children the Sacraments of the Church for the reasons above stated. Parents will be held responsible before God for the salvation of the souls of their children, who are the innocent victims of a vital error when their faith is endangered by proximate paganism such as has been illustrated by the Protestant clergyman whose words we have quoted.

FALSEHOOD No. 4—It sympathizes and gives countenance and indorsement to everything in that journal, that is false. It is not in sympathy with anything that is American.

The Monitor is the representative organ of the faith of the Irish people, hence it extends the hand of fellowship to every movement for the welfare of the race, just as prejudiced Pixley indorses everything English through his membranous mahoe against the people of Ireland. The Monitor is in full sympathy with everything American that is legal and in consonance with the principles of liberty, truth and justice. But we hope never to be in sympathy with the Know-nothing Paleopanmixes who spit in the tribune the proud name of American citizens by their proscription of adopted citizens in consequence of their race or their religion. To such renegades we show no mercy, as their proscriptive principles deserve the condemnation of every citizen who cherishes the bright glory of American liberty & conscience and official eligibility. The land is freedom's home, and it shall never come under the rule of fanatical demagogues of the dark-lantern cabal so long as the power of one pious can prevent it.

FALSEHOOD No. 5—It does not hesitate to claim that the ceremony of marriage celebrated by a Protestant divine leaves the parties in the relation of concubines, and the children bastards.

No such declaration was ever made in these columns, nor could it be made, for the reason that it is indirectly contrary to Catholic teaching. The ignorance who pens this false assertion into our columns is wanting as to time. We pity the calamity of his intellect, while we condemn the glaring falsehoods he publishes through sincerest presumption.

FALSEHOOD No. 6—Blaming the Monitor for its editorial writings, and in the spirit of Diogenes, it is determined to hold up a lantern to the Paleo, and to convince the world that it is a Democrat and a Republican, and that it is for the rule of the majority in the United States.

This, too, we deny in toto. The highest civil allegiance known to American Catholics is that which we owe to "the laws and magistracy of the United States. The agitation is a reshaped magazine of telling the truth by reason of his being blinded by rancor and maddened by malice.

FALSEHOOD No. 7—The Monitor is antagonistic to the Democratic party. It is not. It is the friend of the people, and it is democratically friendly way to the Democrats, and it is democratically friendly way to the Republicans with which the Republicans of Ireland. Who we mean by the people, but those who have such orders, should be ashamed of themselves.

THE CONDITION OF IRELAND.

The full dispatches which we publish on our first page this week will give our readers a good idea of the condition of the country up to the hour of going to press. The most important event of the week has been the letter of Archbishop Croke which has been tortured by the enemies of Ireland into a cunning, demoniac "gallows," they have been acknowledged to be of that mythical character by the best informed non-Catholic writers of our day. But neither "the Roman clergy" nor the Monitor ever advocated the ridiculous theory of withholding from Catholic children the Sacraments of the Church for the reasons above stated. Parents will be held responsible before God for the salvation of the souls of their children, who are the innocent victims of a vital error when their faith is endangered by proximate paganism such as has been illustrated by the Protestant clergyman whose words we have quoted.

FALSEHOOD No. 8—It sympathizes and gives countenance and indorsement to everything in that journal, that is false. It is not in sympathy with anything that is American.

The Monitor is the representative organ of the faith of the Irish people, hence it extends the hand of fellowship to every movement for the welfare of the race, just as prejudiced Pixley indorses everything English through his membranous mahoe against the people of Ireland. The Monitor is in full sympathy with everything American that is legal and in consonance with the principles of liberty, truth and justice. But we hope never to be in sympathy with the Know-nothing Paleopanmixes who spit in the tribune the proud name of American citizens by their proscription of adopted citizens in consequence of their race or their religion. To such renegades we show no mercy, as their proscriptive principles deserve the condemnation of every citizen who cherishes the bright glory of American liberty & conscience and official eligibility. The land is freedom's home, and it shall never come under the rule of fanatical demagogues of the dark-lantern cabal so long as the power of one pious can prevent it.

FALSEHOOD No. 9—It does not hesitate to claim that the ceremony of marriage celebrated by a Protestant divine leaves the parties in the relation of concubines, and the children bastards.

No such declaration was ever made in these columns, nor could it be made, for the reason that it is indirectly contrary to Catholic teaching. The ignorance who pens this false assertion into our columns is wanting as to time. We pity the calamity of his intellect, while we condemn the glaring falsehoods he publishes through sincerest presumption.

FALSEHOOD No. 10—Blaming the Monitor for its editorial writings, and in the spirit of Diogenes, it is determined to hold up a lantern to the Paleo, and to convince the world that it is a Democrat and a Republican, and that it is for the rule of the majority in the United States.

This, too, we deny in toto. The highest civil allegiance known to American Catholics is that which we owe to "the laws and magistracy of the United States. The agitation is a reshaped magazine of telling the truth by reason of his being blinded by rancor and maddened by malice.

FALSEHOOD No. 7—The Monitor is antagonistic to the Democratic party. It is not. It is the friend of the people, and it is democratically friendly way to the Democrats, and it is democratically friendly way to the Republicans with which the Republicans of Ireland. Who we mean by the people, but those who have such orders, should be ashamed of themselves.

THE NEW BISHOP.

Under the above caption the correspondent of the Sacramento Bee, dated Rome, September 7th, 1881, writes:

"Rome, September 7th, 1881.

Yesterday the Consistory met, and the Pope made the following appointments:

Vicar Apostolic of Sandwich Islands, Father Damien, the celebrated leper priest.

Bishop of Sacramento, Father Grace, Vicar General of Sacramento.

Bishop of Vancouver Island, Father Lemmens, Vicar Apostolic of Belgian Congo.

Bishop of Nesqually, Father Durieu, Vicar Apostolic of New Caledonia.

Bishop of Marquette, Father Vertin, Superior of the Lake Superior Mission.

Bishop of Natchitoches, Father Jeanmard, Vicar Apostolic of Western Louisiana.

Bishop of Natchez, Father Heiss, Vicar Apostolic of Mississippi.

Bishop of Galveston, Father Gross, Coadjutor Archbishop of Oregon City.

Bishop of Dallas, Father Dubois, Vicar Apostolic of Western Texas.

Bishop of Brownsville, Father Pellicer, Vicar Apostolic of Western Texas.

Bishop of Denver, Father Lenhart, Vicar Apostolic of Colorado.

Bishop of Cheyenne, Father Carroll, Vicar Apostolic of Wyoming.

Bishop of Helena, Father Brondel, Vicar Apostolic of Montana.

Bishop of Boise City, Father Gilmore, Vicar Apostolic of Idaho.

Bishop of Portland, Father Junger, Vicar Apostolic of Oregon.

Bishop of Vancouver, Father Paul, Vicar Apostolic of Northern Oregon.

Bishop of Los Angeles, Father Mora, Vicar Apostolic of Southern California.

Bishop of Monterey, Father Amat, Vicar Apostolic of Southern California.

Bishop of Sacramento, Father Grace, Vicar Apostolic of North

WHAT SHE SHOULD DO.

A Few Suggestions of Importance on a Subject of Interest to the Ladies.

And Certain Facts which Should be Known by all Women.

[Home Journal, New York.]

A short time since an article appeared in the columns of this paper, being a synopsis of a lecture delivered by a prominent woman before a well known New England society. This article dealt so directly with the needs of woman, and contained so many hints which were valuable, that it naturally attracted no little attention, and has, we learn, been a subject of comment in social circles in nearly every part, of the land. Realizing that no subject can be of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers, than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this same subject.

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Bernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that even her far-famed French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excell, American women in quickness of perception, and brilliancy of intellect. The minds and manners of American women are all that can be desired; but it is a lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their social and mental characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitutions, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess no one of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in a slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary ways, devotion to fashion—but above all and more than all, carelessness and indifference to daily habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results; not in both directly and indirectly of untold injury to the race. The cause, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as those they lived in Europe or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The performance of the natural functions of womanhood and motherhood is not a disease, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the organs which make and purify the blood must be preserved in perfect order to their normal condition. These organs are the kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poisons accumulate, all the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and crippled, and finally the kidneys and conditions organs become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all forms of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing inconveniences follow. This is especially true in the case of women. And if the bowels are thus inactive and overloaded, the neighboring organs, which are particularly dependent for their right action upon the state of the liver, namely the kidneys, become displaced, and the consequences which ensue are too well known to require restatement in a suggestive article of this kind. The secret, however, of preventing these manifold disorders, is to keep the kidneys and liver in perfect working condition. This is reason; this is science, and it appeals with force to the suffering women of America.

When the body is in a healthy condition, then come beauty of complexion, elasticity of step, hopefulness of disposition, and comfort and happiness in the duties and responsibilities of a family. There is, therefore, every incentive to secure and preserve buoyant health.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy described in the lecture to which reference has already been made, is receiving, as it certainly merits, the most careful attention and the trial of the women of the land. It is a pure and simple vegetable remedy which is now doing more to bring health and strength to the American women than any one thing which has ever been discovered. It acts directly upon the liver, kidneys and adjacent organs, soothes any inflammation, allays all pain, and places those organs in a condition to bring health to the body and happiness to the life. The manufacturers of this great remedy, as we learn from the lecture, have the written thanks of thousands of women—many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. No true woman is pleased to have her physical troubles flaunted in the eyes of the world.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore all adequate remedy for the ills of women has never been discovered; we have the medical profession ever been able to assist women in her troubles as she deserves. This is perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much bigotry and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates to the fullest the blighting effect of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was oppressed and ostracised. Thomson, the founder of the Thomsonian theory, was the victim of a hateful conspiracy. Morton, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet the discoveries of these men are to day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach, not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death bed scenes, and felt that it skill were equal to disease death would have been postponed many years. Our science and use were made. All the agents we have named, was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated. A child is contracted, it refuses to yield to a blind form of treatment, the physician may not be candid enough to call in the aid of other schools, or of independent agencies, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not or must every expedient known in the world for relief. If he have the courage of his convictions and sought outside agencies, he is visited with an edict from the society of his fellows, and forsooth, becomes what they choose to call a "quack." Were they have exhausted all the agencies approved by their schools, they frankly the responsibility of the death of their patient, by advising trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe. Such treatment may be in accordance with the "rule of ethics," but in the view of the unprejudiced public it is downright cruelty, if it may not be even more strongly characterized.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of the country, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording or restoring best health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health, by a wholesome, ever daily habits and duties, and by a judicious use of the life saving remedy above named, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be secured in their highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention which it deserves, and the care which they are bound to have, conscious that their efforts are certain to bring them perfect health and long and happy lives.

New Advertisements.

HALL'S PIANOS,
16 Tylor street.

☞ THESE PIANOS ARE ALL THREE STRINGED.

CHURCH MUSIC.

For Voluntaries, Alto, Tenor, Bass and tenor. No. 1 Antiphonal, 25 cts; 2 Kyrie, 30 cts; 3 Gloria, 30 cts; 4 Credo, 30 cts; 5 Credo, 30 cts; 6 In Ex. Tonibus, 25 cts; 7 Ex Cathedra, 30 cts; 8 Ex Cathedra, 30 cts; 9 Antiphonal Responses, 40 cts; Approx. 25 cts; 10 Missa, 50 cts—Numbers 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10 are in Latin. Any of these numbers in one book, bound: Nos 1 & 2, $1; 3 & 4, $1; Bound, side-fold, $1.50; bound in boards, $2.00; in cloth, $4.50. Tantum ergo, in F, B flat, A, G, D, E, Bemol, Eb, F, A. Worth 40 cts, 15 cts. Offertory music work with order half off. Will be sent on receipt of price.

F. W. RATH, Cincinnati, O.
P. O. Cincinnativille.

CONSENT OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION. Fair Virgin, Mother Most Pure, 15 cts. F. W. RATH, Sole Agent. Do. is asked to send one in exchange of equal value of A. Pol. etc.

SR M. ELSINE.

A. W. MYER.
PRACTICAL
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
No. 1014 Market Street.
Corner Fifth, San Francisco.
Watches, Clocks, Jewelry and Music Boxes Repaired and Satisfaction Guaranteed.

CARFIELD Agents wanted for Life of Garfield in prose by the author of Garfield's book, well. Books all ready for delivery. The elegantly illustrated edition. Fifty-seven engravings. Liberal terms. Agents take orders for from 20 to 50 copies daily. Unlike any other book. Intense interest. Agents make money so fast. The book sells itself. Experience unnecessary. Extra terms to agents. Address, Hubbard Bros., Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Chicago, Ill., or St. Louis, Mo.

PAPAL MASS
BY
Rev. Father Di Marzo, O.P.
ENDORSED BY ALL THE LEADING FATHERS AND Music critics, as being the finest modern composition of its kind.
The organists of all the Catholic Churches in the United States, when they try it and sing it, will order it. Price, retail, $2.50. To the Clergy and Churches, $1.25.
J. B. O'CONNOR & CO.,
AGENTS.
23 Dupont Street, S. F.

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
ALSO—
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

FIRE!! FIRE!!
JNO. R. SIMS & SON,
Manufacturers of All Kinds of
Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.
LITHOGRAPHERS BOOKBINDERS
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
SEND FOR ESTIMATES.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

SAVE YOUR MONEY
—AND YOU ARE THE—BARGAINS
OFFERED AT THE
X L N T AUCTION HOUSE,
530 and 532 Kearny Street,
Bet. California and Sacramento sts. San Francisco.
MIERSON, JEWELL & CO.,
Proprietors.
Our Superb Stock Comprises
Clothing, Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats and Caps, TRUNKS, VALISES, AND UMBRELLAS,
Rubber and Oil Clothes, Etc.
All of which we offer remarkably
CHEAP FOR CASH.
Remember the X L N T, 530 and 532 Kearny Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OUR $25 and $30 BUSINESS SUITS
Are First-Class in Every Respect.
Fit Guarantoed or Money Refunded.
T. G. PARKER & CO.,
MERCHANT TAILORS,
418 Montgomery Street.
☞ Bet. California and Sacramento Sts.

SWAIN'S
Family Bakery and Dining Saloon,
No. 636 Market Street.
Wedding Cakes, Ice Cream, Oysters, Jellies, etc. Cleanliness and hard work the order.
FAMILIES SUPPLIED.

C. E. PEARSON, Manager.

GRAND ORIENTAL CASH MARKET
1262 Market Street,
Bet. Taylor and Jones. SAN FRANCISCO

FLETCHER & JONAS,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN
Beast American Meats.
OUR MOTTO: Fine Meats, Full Weight and Low Prices.

MISS C. J. JERABECK,
FLORIST,
39 CEARY STREET,
Bet. Kearny and Dupont sts. San Francisco
Boquets, Baskets, Funeral and Wedding Designs, Cut Flowers, Etc.
Wax Flowers Kept on Hand in Great Variety.
Flowers Preserved so as to keep a Natural Appearance.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
of the NEW YORK DATING AGENCY is that it by the writing of one letter, can be on remittance, keeping the account, saving time freight or express charges, obtaining any kind of goods wanted and every article you require from the Pacific coast standard to order. It also has facilities for obtaining any kind of public business, it gives needing personal and proper attention. The advantages offered by this agency are more fully set forth in our Circular.
THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 41 Barclay street and Park Place.

WHAT YOU WANT TO KNOW
—AND—
SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING
WHEN TO PURCHASE GROCERIES
THE FINEST TEAS
—AND—
CHOICEST COFFEES
Pure and unadulterated, at the GREAT AMERICAN Importing Tea Co.'s,
NEW TEA STORES,
322 and 324 Kearny street,
140 and 142 Sixth St.
SAN FRANCISCO.
It will pay you to try them. They are the only stores Tea and Coffee stores in the city. They are distributing the Famous gift

KNABE PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALLED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.
204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

P. McCLOSKEY,
405 Fourth Street,
(Near Harrison.)
WOOD & COAL,
At Bedrock Prices.
GIVE ME A TRIAL.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EXCELSIOR STRAW WORKS,
120 Fourth Street.

Dr. G. LaBrie
HAS REMOVED FROM
1018 to 1030 MISSION STREET

DR. GEO. J. COOK.
108 Ceary Street.
HOURS FROM 9 A. M. TO 4 P. M. PRACTICE LIMITED to the treatment of Piles, Fistula and other diseases of the rectum.

The Golden Palace TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street,
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.
THE CHOICEST GROCERIES ONLY KEPT IN STOCK. Tea and coffee prepared and sold cheaper than Pacific can positively save money by trading in this store. The weight and satisfaction guaranteed. Goods sold wholesale and retail. The celebrated Rosebud Flour sold wholesale and retail. Orders from country dealers promptly attended to. Goods packed for country trade free of charge. Orders can be sent by postal or express. Orders attended to as satisfactorily as if the purchaser were present. Remember the place.
CHARLES MONTGOMERY, Proprietor.

GRAY & CO'S GALVANIC GIRDLE
CURES ASTHMA, DIZZINESS, PARALYSIS, PILES, Kidney Affections, Nervous Debility, Liver and Stomach complaints, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Fainting spells and Hearing. Our Girdles are warranted to last one year. Price $5 each. Gentle Battery Spring $1 per box. Results are sure. When ordering, state waist measure and if for gent or lady. Sold by druggists. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address GRAY & CO., No. 9 Sunny street, San Francisco.

RICHARD RICE,
Practical Plumber, Gas & Steam Fitter,
107 Ceary street, S. F.
Personal attention given to all orders and satisfaction guaranteed.

COAL. COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco
☞ Telephone Number 1412.

ROBERT MATTHEY,
PALACE BAKERY,
1523 Stiaton Street, bet. 11th & 12th.
Corner Mission and Lafayette Streets, S. F.

THORS
PHOTOGRAPHIC STUDIO.
1025 Larkin Street.

JNO. F. SNOW & CO.
CLEANSING AND DYEING.
J. F. SNOW & Co.
Blankets, Lace Curtains, Wool and Silk Goods, Gents' and Ladies' Suits, Shawls, Cloaks, Crapes, Veils, Kerseys, Linens, Cottons, Ribbons, Etc.
CHAS. J. HOLMES, Proprietor.
633 Market Street, Under Palace Hotel.
Goods can be sent by express or any part of the country. Goods will be packed and forwarded promptly attended to.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING
STYLISH AND PERFECT FITTING
SUITS MADE AT REASONABLE PRICES BY MRS. M. E. CARTER, 215 Fremont street.

PENSIONS. For Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Widows, Children, Dependent Fathers and Mothers, Brothers and Sisters, Discharged Soldiers, Regulars, Volunteers, Militia, Navy, Marine Corps, Indian Wars, Regular Army, Mexican Veterans, Act July 27, 1868, Act March 3, 1879, Act March 3, 1881. Bounties, Back Pay, Pensions Obtained. Address, with stamp, Pacific Pension Agency, 1 Montgomery St., S. F.

TWO FAMOUS $65 ORGANS
Best Selling Organs in the World. Illustrated Catalogues free. Mention this paper. Address Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Co., 154 Tremont St., Boston; 46 East 14th St., New York; 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

MISCELLANEOUS.

W. J. HORNER'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT.
Patent, Nov. 11, 1879.
Patent, Nov. 9, 1880.
Medical Electricity
HORNER'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT.
(Patent Applied for.) Four Patents Secured. Electro Magnetic Belts, Electro Magnetic Belts, Electro Magnetic Belts,

THE VIRGINIA LAND LEAGUE.

Resolutions of Sympathy with Parnell and His Fellow Patriots Condemnatory Denounced.

The Virginia Branch of the Irish National Land League met at National Guard Hall last Tuesday evening. There was a large attendance and much enthusiasm shown.

A. T. Mackey and Matt. Canavan spoke on the struggle in Ireland and the recent outrages of the British government. President William Hayes read the following

RESOLUTIONS,

Which were received with longcontinued applause and unanimously adopted

Whereas, The British government has arrested and thrown into prison Parnell, Dillon and other leaders of the Irish Land League for the offence of maintaining that the land of Ireland belongs to the people of Ireland, and that a handful of landlords have no right to collect rent from the people for the use of the land which belongs to the people and not to the landlords. Be it therefore

Resolved, That the arrest of Parnell and his fellow workers while agitating the cause of Ireland's people by perfectly constitutional methods is an outrage upon national justice and the principles of civilization which must fill every lover of liberty—no matter what the land of his birth—with righteous indignation. And that in having ordered this outrage upon right, William E. Gladstone has acted the part of a tyrant and made himself the political brother of the Czar of Russia and the Sultan of Turkey. Be it further

Resolved, That the Land League of Virginia City send greeting to the Irish people and urge upon them the wisdom of exercising a wise control—the manifest intention of Gladstone and his tyrannical government being to goad them into revolt, and to drown the land agitation in the blood of a defenceless people. The Virginia City Land League sends assurance that Irishmen, the descendants of Irishmen, and the friends of freedom in America at every nation ality will support them with sympathy and substantial aid in the struggle for the rights of the many to resist robbery at the hands of the few—which struggle will ere long shake the whole world as it is now shaking Ireland. Be it further

Resolved, That the course of certain American newspapers in approving the outrage upon Ireland, involved in the arrest of Parnell and his other patriotic leaders of Ireland for maintaining the principles of the Declaration of Independence and battling by peaceful and lawful methods for the rights of the many as against the privileges of the few, would be more befitting Tory organs published in London in 1776 than American papers published in these closing years of the nineteenth century. The only American journals that approve the infamous course of Gladstone are the organs of corporate monopolies—which are to America what landlords are to Ireland. Be it further

Resolved, That our future efforts for the welfare the Land League shall be redoubled, and every assistance within our means shall be used to promote the teachings of Davitt, Parnell and Dillon.

The next meeting of the League will be held on Monday evening, November 7th, when the exercises will be of a musical and literary character. For this occasion the place of meeting will be St. Mary's Hall. Every lover of liberty should buy one and add a strong voice in their presence to position to tyranny. The entire proceeds will be remitted to the National League.

TEMESCAL LAND LEAGUE.

The Parnell Branch of the Land League at North Temescal, Alameda County, held an enthusiastic meeting on the 23rd inst. Addresses were made by Rev. Father Scala, John J. Mahoney, and President F. Gill. It was resolved to hold a grand entertainment at St. Lawrence Hall on November 3d, at which suitable resolutions will be presented and all who attend will no doubt be well entertained as well as performing the part of patriots in supporting the cause of Ireland through one of the most active branches of the League in the State.

PRAYERFUL ROGUES.

Mrs. Phebe Upham, a woman of advanced age, the widow of the late Prof. Thomas C. Upham of Brackett College, has caused the arrest of Miss Mary C. Ward of Waverley, N. J., an actoress, and the Rev. John A. Lambie, pastor of a Methodist church in Brookline, Mass., who swindled Mrs Upham out of $14,000. Miss Ward is the daughter of a late prominent physician of Newark, N. J., and figured as a frequent speaker at the Quaker Green Methodist camp meeting of last season. She is aged about 45; prim and sanctimonious appearance, and constantly wears gold-bowed eyeglasses. Her manners are very ladylike, and judging from her appearance, she is a woman of considerable shrewdness.

When Mrs. Upham sought to recover the money ($14,000 in bank stock) the pious preacher had cajoled her into placing it in the minister's hands, to be invested at ten percent, interest, the pious fraud made her the following reply:

"I cannot meet with your demand to-night; the plans and arrangements were all made in God and I can more only as he commands. Can you not only follow the word of God as it came to you first, 'Carry the word and leave it to God and follow it as you know it to be true.' The papers are all drawn in God, and we are at His disposal. Yours, in Christ Jesus, the Lord God, amen."

(Signed) J. A. LAMBIE."

MRS. GARFIELD'S MATIN SONG.

Mrs. Garfield, amid all the doubtful phases of the President's case, never lost hope, and the "Sunday morning before he died, when he had heard was sitting by the window, she sat in the adjoining room singing that beautiful hymn 'Guide me, O thou great Jehovah!' Her soft and plaintive notes floated into the sick chamber, the President turned his eyes up to Dr. Hine and asked:

"Is that Crete?"

"Yes," replied the doctor, "it is Mrs. Garfield."

"Quick, open the door a little," anxiously repeated the sick man.

Dr. Hine opened the door, and, after listening a few moments, Mr. Garfield revelaxed, as the large tears coursed down his sunken cheeks:

"Glorious, Hine, isn't it?"

— A Mormon missionary informs the press there are no Irish Mormons among the Mormons. He did not intend it, but he paid a just and high tribute to the Irish character.

— There are grave apprehensions of a financial panic in England and France, owing to the great and steady flow of European gold to the United States.

NOTICE TO CLERGYMEN.

All Clergymen whose churches are in the Archdiocese of San Francisco who have church organs to be tuned or who contemplate the purchase of a church organ, either large or small, and won't prefer to patronize a Catholic gentleman who is thoroughly competent, and who will do tuning or supply organs at a reasonable price, should write stating their wishes to the undersigned. I contemplate a trip through the Archdiocese of San Francisco in the months of November and December of this year, and will call upon each clergyman who will write me that he desires my services. Address,

J. J. KENNEDY, Williamsville, Conn.

Reference: Rev. T. McDermott, of the place.

What They Say.

DAY RIDGWAY PAD CO., Buffalo, N. Y.: I have used your Ridgway Pad on your pads and have never heard a complaint. It gives excellent satisfaction, and I believe it to be best kidney remedy now in the market.

I. N. REED, Druggist, Toledo, O.

— Tourists and the traveling public in general will find it to be to interest to call at the Alpine Photo. studio, 104 Market Street, for first class work at lowest prices. All work warranted and equal to any competitor. Mrs. E. Fletcher (formerly of Steckel st), proprietress. E. R. Higgins, operator.

— Use nothing else but MERINO SOAP.

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, Oct. 26, 1881.

FLOUR—City Extras are selling at $5 62½@$5 75; City Superfine, $4 75@$5 25; interior brands, $3 25@$4 50; for extra, and $4 [illegible] for superfine.

WHEAT—Tuesday continues to arrive freely, and as ships are held back, more business than would be ordinarily expected under the large amount of vessels in port, business is quiet. The sales reported today were 1,000, and 500 tons and 100 sks No. 1, $1 75; 15 tons No. 2 $1 71, and 900 sks off grade, $1 50. No. 3 is quotable at $1 72½@$1 76; and No. 2 at $1 [illegible] $1 75 off.

BARLEY—In still listless. Offerings meet with indifferent attention, but the market is steady. Sales today of 500 sks new brewing, $1 [illegible], and 300 sks coast feed at $1 [illegible]. Feed, $1 [illegible] 87½; Brewing is quotable at $1 [illegible] $1 55 for light and $1 [illegible]@$1 62½ for fright heavy; standard Chevalier, $1 [illegible] 57½, coast do., $1 62½@$1 [illegible] off.

OATS—Arrivals to-day were 19,958 sks, of which 18,58 were from Washington Territory. These latter arrivals are mostly held by two or three consignees, who purpose storing it a suitable price cannot be obtained. Holders generally are confident that the market will sustain itself, owing to the high price of Barley, which is worth nearly as much as Oats, when the difference between them ought to be wider. No sales to-day. Good and choice, $1 [illegible] for common $1 [illegible] 45; Surprise, $1 [illegible] 47½.

CORN—Is somewhat weaker, sales of [illegible] off for Yellow. Sales of 500 sks Yellow last of November delivery, at $1 50 off. White is nominal.

RYE—Wheat, old, $1[illegible]; wild oats, [illegible]; volunteer and other, [illegible]; Rye, $[illegible].

RYE market is higher at $2 50@$2 [illegible] off.

BUCKWHEAT Quotable at $1 55@$1 60 off.

STRAW—Per bale, 42½@[illegible].

POTATOES—The market opens weak. Receipts to-day, 5,012 sks. Salinas Ellas, $1 [illegible]; Valley Cows sold at $1 [illegible]; Peerless and Tomatoes, $1@$1 [illegible]; River Reds, at $1 [illegible]; Ten Rows, [illegible]; Humboldt Reds, $1 [illegible]; Sweets [illegible] off.

ONIONS—Holders are firm, but sales are weak at $1 [illegible].

CHEESE—Eastern, [illegible]; Fresh Factory, $31 [illegible]; Homily [illegible] $18.

BEESWAX—[illegible] off.

BUTTER—Is quite steady and unchanged. Fancy, [illegible] Good and Choice California roll, [illegible]; Fair and good do, [illegible]; mixed lots from country stores [illegible]; Eastern [illegible]; Pickled roll, [illegible]; Firkin, [illegible].

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, Ins California, [illegible] 19.

POULTRY—Prices are steady. Live Turkeys, [illegible]; Gobblers, [illegible]; Hens, [illegible]; Gobblers, Geese, [illegible] 75; Ducks [illegible]; Chickens, [illegible]; Broilers, [illegible]; Pigeons, [illegible].

EGGS—Choice California have sensitive, being scarce. [illegible] Eastern [illegible] off.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Strawberries will be unsalable after 20, but subsequently declined to $6. Wisconsin Cranberries, [illegible] 11 [illegible]; Oregon Pears, [illegible]; Peaches, [illegible]; Plums and Prunes, [illegible]; Apples, [illegible] 25; Quinces, [illegible].

VEGETABLES—Cucumbers are no longer worth quoting, as they are [illegible] off the market. Marrowfat Squash, [illegible] to ton; Egg Plant, [illegible]; Dried Okra, [illegible]; Corn, [illegible]; Green Tomatoes, [illegible]; Cabbage [illegible]; Cauliflower, [illegible]; Dried Carrots, [illegible]; Turnips, [illegible]; Beets, [illegible]; Parsnips, [illegible]; Garlic, [illegible]; Artichokes, [illegible]; Green Chile Peppers, [illegible]; Sweet do, [illegible].

New Advertisements.

THE CHEAPEST PLACE
TO BUY
OILS, OIL STOVES, LAMPS,
CHANDELIERS, ETC.

O'CONNOR & McBRIDE'S
Pioneer Oil Store.
115 Sixth street.
All kinds of Lubricating Oils constantly on hand.

R. H. McDonald, PRES'T. S. DENT.
PACIFIC BANK
Established 1863.
CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00,
Surplus 459,233.03.
San Francisco, July 1, 1881.
RESOURCES.

Real Estate (Bank Build'g)	$150,000.00
Bills Receivable	1,607,092.11
U. S. Bonds	1,000,000.00
Pacific Coast Bonds for deb	2,325.83
Land Assn's and Dock Stock	12,323.70
Due from other Banks	$61,500.39
Cash (Coin in our vault	508,611.45
	$3,111,851.26

LIABILITIES.

Capital Stock	$1,000,000.00
Reserve Fund Surplus	459,233.03
Due Depositors	1,466,017.23
Due to other Banks	186,107.23
Due Dividends	67.58
	$3,111,631.26

We take pleasure in presenting the above correct statement of our condition.

We call attention to our increased facilities for collecting business bills, and solicit accounts from Merchants, Manufacturers, Farmers and all other business in our line.

We give satisfaction to our customers, and will process a prompt settlement, and will process a prompt settlement of any business entrusted to us.

Shipments of Gold and Silver Bullion will receive our best attention.

Exchange [illegible] on the Peoples Bank, London, London and Canada Bank of Ireland.

Collections made on all points where our [illegible] can be reached.

Telegraph Transfers made with New York, Boston, Chicago and the principal cities of California.

Letters of Credit and Commercial Credits issued, on the principal cities of Europe, available everywhere.

National, State, City and County Bonds and Warrants, and other securities, bought and sold.

Loans made on good collaterals or approved Names, and interest below Bank Discount on large or small sums.

Deposits received, subject to check without notice.

R. H. McDonald, President.

TRADE MARK
KIDNEY-WORT
THE ONLY MEDICINE
IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM
That Acts upon the Kidneys,
THE LIVER, THE BOWELS, AND THE KIDNEYS.
WHY ARE WE SICK?
Because we allow our Blood and Secretions to become clogged or fouled, evil humors accumulate and poison the system. Nature tells us that should be expelled through
KIDNEY-WORT
WILL SURELY CURE
KIDNEY DISEASES.
LIVER COMPLAINTS,
PILES, CONSTIPATION, URINARY DISEASES, FEMALE WEAKNESS, AND NERVOUS DISORDERS.
by causing free action of Your organs and restoring their power to throw off disease
Why suffer Bilious pains and aches?
Why tormented with Piles, Constipation?
Why Frightened over disordered Kidneys?
Why endure nervous or sick headaches?
USE KIDNEY-WORT and be healthy.
It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans one package of which makes a quart medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.
It acts with equal efficiency in either form.
GET IT OF YOUR DRUGGIST. PRICE, $1.00.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Prop'rs,
BURLINGTON, VT. Send stamp for Book.
WANTED
$66 Agents wanted everywhere. Business legitimate. Address J. Ewer & Co., Portland, Maine.

New Advertisements.

REAL ESTATE
FOR SALE BY Thomas Magee,
PUBLISHER
REAL ESTATE CIRCULAR
20 Montgomery Street
Opposite Lick House.

New Property.

McAllister, near Market; [illegible] lot, [illegible] feet; [illegible] dwelling, separate flats and stables; [illegible] Income [illegible] per month; [illegible] $14,000.

Sixth st., near Howard; [illegible] dwelling, [illegible] $3,000.

Very fine view lot, [illegible] Washington and Jackson streets, [illegible] $3,000.

Jackson street, [illegible], between Octavia and Laurel Sts., [illegible] $3,000.

N side Washington, between Franklin and Gough; [illegible] $3,000.

Fine Block on California street, between Steiner and Fillmore, [illegible] $40,000.

$16,000, Rents $1400; fine business investment, at [illegible] Market and Sixth streets.

Cor. Taylor and Greenwich, 60x80, and business property.

New House and Lot, $4000; cor. Sacramento and Buchanan, [illegible] $4000.

Two Houses and Lot, $4700; Washington, near Fillmore, [illegible] $4700.

20x100; $1,050; Larkin, near Filbert, [illegible] $1,050.

Other Property.

Mission, [illegible] $1,000.

Sutter, [illegible] $1,000.

Bush st lot, $1,200.

Two lots, Howard, W side, bet. 24th and 25th, [illegible] $1,000.

NE cor. Ellis and Pierce [illegible] $1,000.

Fell, bet Octavia and Laguna, [illegible] $1,000.

Market st, $1,400; 3 lots; 25x100, W side, [illegible] $1,400.

Sacramento st, above Franklin, [illegible] $1,000.

Washington street, [illegible] $1,000.

California st, bet. Fillmore and Steiner [illegible] $1,000.

Square; $11,000; corner 50x100 [illegible] $11,000.

NE corner Broadway and Leavenworth, [illegible] $1,100 Only; house and lot, [illegible] Geary [illegible] $1,100.

Wine Powell, [illegible] $1,100.

Stockton street, bet. Sacramento and Clay, [illegible] $1,100.

MICHAEL SHEA,
DEALER IN
BOOKS, STATIONERY, NEWSPAPERS, &c.
805 MARKET STREET,
Just above Fifteenth street SAN FRANCISCO

HODGES
CLOAK
AND
SUIT ROOMS,
No. 10 Fifth St., near Market S. F.
Gives hand-labels variety of the Latest Styles in Cloaks and Dolmans at cost to close.
Ladies' Suits from $15 upward.
Misses' Mackintoshes, Cloaks and Jackets at cost.
Ladies' Mackintoshes, $10. Special attention to orders from Interior Towns.

HEALD'S BUSINESS COLLEGE.
24 Post Street,
Cor. Powell,
Opposite Mechanics' Institute.
EVENING SESSION COMMENCES AUG. 22nd. Catalogue free. Specimen of penmanship sent on receipt of 10 cents. Thorough Practical Training. For the commercial college, or business education, address
HEALD'S BUSINESS COLLEGE,
President Hutchins' College, San Francisco.

LUMBER YARD
SAN JOSE, FRUITVALE LUMBER

UNION FURNITURE COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
SIGNAPIGS HALL 855 MARKET STREET Opposite The Palace.
The Largest Warehouse and the Best assorted Stock of Furniture on the Coast.
Our Extra Dealers can purchase here cheaper than at any other house in the City. A large assortment of Second Hand Furniture and Pianos constantly on hand. Call and examine our assortment and prices before purchasing elsewhere. Satisfaction guaranteed. Orders by mail will receive prompt and careful attention. Home Parcels Delivered Free.
Ask for anything you require and obtain our Prices.

DAMIANA makes the weak strong and the old young and healthy!
Liquor Dealers, Druggists, and Grocers:
FOR SALE BY
LEWIS HESS, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 13 Sansome Street, San Francisco.
Give Health and Strength to Your Dyspeptic! Gives Appetite!
DAMIANA BITTERS!
The Mainstay of Hunters and Miners and Soldiers!

JONAS J. MORRISON,
LUMBER DEALER,
Corner Mission and Spear Streets. SAN FRANCISCO
A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.
Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

229 222 BUSH STREET. 224 226
CALIFORNIA FURNITURE
The Largest Stock. The Latest Styles.
CALL AND SEE BEFORE PURCHASING!
GOODS SHOWN WITH PLEASURE.
MANUFACTURING CO.

WINTHROP PORTABLE RANGE!
(ALL SIZES.)
SELF-ACTING DOUBLE OVEN
SINGLE AND DOUBLE OVENS
Chas. Brown & Son, Agents,
NO 18 DUPONT STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.
These New Improved RANGES combine all Modern Improvements, are Beautiful in Design, have DOUBLE FLUE, extra heavy Fire Plates, Ventilated Oven, Portable Fire Pot.
For Economy, Durability, Cleanliness and Convenience, the New Improved WINTHROP RANGE stands unrivaled, and others are the Cheapest in the Endorsed and paid for themselves in a few weeks by the saving of Fuel usually wasted by other Cooking Stoves and Ranges.
New Designs in Parlor and Office Stoves at the lowest prices.
False Claims for the Saving of 1/4 the Fuel, fitted to any Range or Mantel Grate.
Agents for Gold Water Coal Oil Stoves, and Enameled Workmen, and work warranted before Entire Satisfaction. A large stock of Tinware, Woodenware, and Kitchen Utensils always kept on hand, made to order at Wholesale and Retail.
Orders filled from all parts of the country.
CHAS. BROWN & SON, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

HOPE FOR THE DEAF
Dr. Peck's Artificial Ear Drums
PERFECTLY RESTORE THE HEARING and perform the work of the Natural Drum. Always in position, but invisible to others. All conversation and even whispers heard plainly. Write for Book with testimonials FREE. Mention this paper. Address, H. P. PECK & CO., 548 Broadway, New York.

Important Notice
HOUSEHOLD ENCYCLOPEDIA of practical Receipts and methods of making baking powder, yeast, bread, cake, pastry, puddings, preserves, pickles, &c. Every person who makes bread, cake, pastry, puddings, preserves, pickles, &c., should have a copy of this valuable book. It is not a mere collection of receipts, but a complete encyclopedia of information, and will prove a perfect treasure to the housekeeper. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address
GREAT WESTERN PUBLISHING CO.
PREMIUM ORDER
Gentlemen: Send me your Premium Price Catalogue and Circular, and I will use my influence among my friends to induce them to patronize your Tea Company. Yours, [illegible]
Name [illegible]
Address [illegible]
Date [illegible]
Tea Sold. Premium Received.
1 lb. 1 Premium
2 lbs. 2 Premiums
3 lbs. 3 Premiums
4 lbs. 4 Premiums
5 lbs. 5 Premiums
10 lbs. 10 Premiums
15 lbs. 15 Premiums
20 lbs. 20 Premiums
25 lbs. 25 Premiums
30 lbs. 30 Premiums
35 lbs. 35 Premiums
40 lbs. 40 Premiums
45 lbs. 45 Premiums
50 lbs. 50 Premiums
60 lbs. 60 Premiums
70 lbs. 70 Premiums
80 lbs. 80 Premiums
90 lbs. 90 Premiums
100 lbs. 100 Premiums
GREAT WESTERN PUBLISHING CO.

"INSTALLMENT PLAN."
Furniture, Carpets and Oil Cloths
ON EASY TERMS.
JAS. KITTERMAN, 1318 Stockton street.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL
DEVOTED TO THE PROPAGATION AND DEFENCE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO. Office 508 Clay street, San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Single Copies	10c
Per Year by Mail	$4 00
Six months "	2 00
Three " "	1 00
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces	5 00

All subscriptions are payable in advance.
Address all communications, remittances, bills and postal orders to P. J. McGinnis, Editorial Manager.
Monday, 8, 1881 P. J. McGINNIS, Editor.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth . . . Strive for Justice for thy Soul, and even unto Death Contend for the Truth, and the Lord God will fight for thy Justice with the Nations.

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY.

STIRRING NEWS
—FROM—IRELAND

Sexton Released.

PARNELL REPORTED SICK

Archbishops McCabe and MacHale Coddemn the "No Rent" Theory.

TELEGRAMS OF THE WEEK.

Change in the Land League Name.

DUBLIN, Oct. 24.—Arrangements are making to hold a Land League meeting in every Catholic church in Roscommon, Sunday and convert the branches into Tenants' Defence Associations.

Moulding the Irish Press

In the number of the United Ireland, Land League organ, to be published to-day, the border edition will be discontinued, and the Irish edition will be blank, with "Freedom of the Press in Ireland" printed on it.

The statement that Archbishop McCabe has expelled a priest for being a Land Leaguer is denied.

Freedom of Speech Portrailed.

A Dublin dispatch says: The constabulary has been instructed to warn persons against retaining Land League pennies in their houses. Any person attempting to hold a meeting will be immediately arrested.

The Land Mayor Biased.

At the opening of the new market by the Lord Mayor grocers and hucksters, contrary to directions, in revenge for his rejection of Grey's motion in order to "a freedom of the city upon Parnell and Dillon, prevented him from being heard.

The Government's Determination.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—Sir William Harcourt speaking at Glasgow yesterday, after receiving the freedom of the city, said that both the late and the present Governments were reluctant to place Ireland in a state of siege against the Land League because it was not necessary to do so, and was prevented to be a constitutional agitation, especially if it was conducted by a peaceful society; but when such an agitation avowed illegal aims, the Government would fail in its duty if it in all the measures it might take for the safety of the Queen, Throne and Empire, if it failed to let the Government having set its hand to the plough, they might only map forward and not back. The speech was received with prolonged cheering.

"No Rent" Condemned.

New York, Oct. 26.—The Catholic Bishop of Rice, has issued a letter in condemnation of the "no rent" manifesto of the Land League, in which he says the manifesto excited widespread alarm among the best and truest friends of the Irish people.

The Premier's Movements.

Gladstone has arrived at Kinsweisy. Special precautions were taken for his safety during the journey. Demonstrations are expected.

Mrs. Parnell on Gladstone.

NEW YORK, Oct. 26. At the meeting held in Brooklyn, on Tuesday night, Mrs. Parnell said: "When I go back to Ireland I hope I will find Gladstone in the cell and the police after me I will gladly go with them. Gladstone is a tyrant, and I am not a palace. I do not know what awaits me when I go back, but I am ready any one, for I would go to sleep, as some Sp-Van Winkle, with the lullaby of the Union. A bluff seems to have fallen upon Ireland, and I know not what will have to be inflicted by her own cutlasses. As her home supply is cut, I am ready to do the best I can to Boycott England to induce to send her food, and to starve her people."

Vin. Robinson said that he should move in Congress the Queen's Government be forbidden or recognized as long as Parnell and his associates remain in prison.

Henry George Heard From.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27.—Henry George telegraphs the Dublin as follows: "Three centuries The Land leagues has caused to hold public demonstrations, and Gladstone has to call out thousands and bonnets. The Ladies' Land League, which I addressed, has never ceased to work long case, is increasing. There is a determination to hold public demonstration in some shape. The pictures are allowed to remain in the Land Leagues, as only two "interview cases" are used, which are hung in the conditions are not seriously humiliating. Two barricades stands in front of the house. The police stands behind the prisoner and one before, catching every word and gesture. Not a word is shown to matters political is strictly prohibited. Visiting visitors are compelled to stand outside of the jail, exposed to all sorts of weather. Even the hour is purely arbitrary, and their feet all day in this rain. All letters addressed to the prisoners are opened. The ladies of the Land League are working with industry and intrepidity. The wonderful Anna Parnell is peace is spiking as bonefully to her work as ever. The land of Ireland is ripe for a struggle in war. They are rapidly growing ready made for the fight. The arrest of Parnell tells me that 50,000 will soon be required.

Arrests Under the Coercion Act.

DUBLIN, Oct. 27.—Six arrests have been made today under the Coercion Act, including the President of the Kilkenny branch of the Land League. The arrests include Stack of Tralee, who is prosecuted for treason, and now under bail for treasonable practices. The ladies of the Land League are working with industry and intrepidity. The wonderful Anna Parnell is peace is spiking as bonefully to her work as ever. The land of Ireland is ripe for a struggle in war. They are rapidly growing ready made for the fight. The arrest of Parnell tells me that 50,000 will soon be required.

After the Ladies' Leagues.

The Government believe that they have smashed the agitation, but they will not desist till they have killed the Land League. The ladies are working hard to keep the movement alive if carried on under the coercion act, which is in force in England. The Government, however, appeared no danger in that direction. Society's arrest was partially aimed at the ladies, for she is the Queen in the Land League. They are now likely to think that even they may be arrested.

Danger in England.

It is not, however, in Ireland that the Government has the most to fear, but in England, and it is to be credited with even an ordinary amount of activity, the precautions everywhere are really necessary. The Government is in a hard fix. They have to deal with a people who will do all three of the members could be in meeting there, but the remaining members are careful about this legal point. The meetings also are in a quarter about the Fenian rising, consequently, we expect to have legal fun before we get through. The new square is open to the public to understood, without either. But since the Land Leagues have suppressed it, it is good to avoid bringing itself under the policy of the law.

Leaguers in Paris.

PARIS, Oct. 26.—The Land Leaguers are still hesitating whether or not to transfer their headquarters to Paris. Virtually they are here already, as the only influential leaders of the League are on hand, with the exception of Arthur O'Connor, T. P. O'Connor and Justin McCarthy, are now at the Hotel Normandy. Arthur O'Connor was here a couple of days ago, but received a summons to London, when he arrived yesterday. The Leaguers have a shrewd opinion that the French Government would not permit any regular organization hostile to England on French territory. It is probable, however, that the center of the movement will for some time to come be here, but the opening of offices appears to be impossible.

Expressions of Confidence.

The Land Leaguers still affect the several confidence in the eventual triumph of their cause, though the turn which things have taken for the last days might depress the most cheerful of them. The Treasurer of the League has not given up hope of getting that million sterling which he wants so badly, but so far nothing justified the hope. He was fain to confess to-day that since he has been at the Hotel Normandy he has only received subscriptions amounting to about 12500, the greater part being from Boston. The Land League has now quite decided not to have any offices in London. The idea of the reopening of an office in England might be regarded as a conspiracy and have disagreeable consequences. Messrs Egan and Digger will remain in Paris for a short time, and yet the Irish Land League affairs requires, other members will come to Paris, and Mr. Parnell will be here before the present almost entirely on the exertion of Mr. Gladstone. It is said Mr. Parnell has been warded $10,000, and will be compelled to live on the small pittance allowed of three shillings that meagre fund.

Farmers and the Land Commission.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—At the recent meeting of Irish Attorney, Moate, Roscommon and other towns in the West of Ireland a large number of tenants have paid their rents in accordance with the statements. Despite the Land League's advice not to do so, many thousand tenants in the counties of Wexford, Meath and Roscommon have decided to take advantage of the Land Commission. Land meetings announced to be held outside of churches in these counties on Sunday have been denounced by the clergy, and will not take place.

Since the Land League has been proclaimed trade in the west of Ireland has commenced to revive.

Many farmers on the properties in the neighborhood of Youghal, County Cork, have applied to the Land Commission to have their rents fixed. There is a growing desire among tenants of Cork and Waterford to apply to the Commission. In Waterford alone a thousand applications have been lodged.

The Land League branches of Tuam district of County Galway are but breaking up.

A telegram from Armagh says that calls have been prepared in the jail there for Parnell and forty others.

Parnell to be Punished.

DUBLIN, Oct. 26.—Directly after the publication of Parnell's letter deprecating the formation of a Tenants' Defence Association, the Governor of Kilmainham jail was superseded by a more severe disciplinarian. A severe reprimand will probably be inflicted. Parnell will probably be deprived of some days of his imprisonment of visits for issuing the letter.

The League Still Lives.

There seems to be a reaction setting in. Although the Land League is proclaimed, reports reveals show that the spirit underlying the League movement still survives.

A Priest Arrested.

Anthony McHale, a Catholic curate, has been arrested for allowing a Land League meeting to be held in his chapel.

Irish Prisoners Miss Parnell.

Already 7,500 cases are before the Land Court, of which 3,600 were entered on Saturday.

Twenty-three prisoners in the Land League has been ordered to quit its rooms in Dublin castle.

Pastoral from Archbishop McCabe.

NEW YORK, October 30.—A Herald cable special from Dublin of the 28th inst., says: Archbishop McCabe will deliver an important pastoral on the subject of the agitation, referring to the present crisis, kindly furnished me by his Grace: "The conditions of our fear some rally calls for our bitterest tears. Only a little while ago we were happy and prosperous, now insecure which might discrace an no Christian people. Now, we are reduced to be a painful of misguided youths, but it is nevertheless true that the fault is not on our side, and that the youthful culprit of to-day may become the hardened profligate, if society fails in its duties to the rising generation. We have endeavored, very reverend fathers, imperatively called on to enter our most strong protest against such an indignity which has been offered to the moral character of our people by the laws recently Catholic Ireland. Only a few days ago every Catholic Ireland was proclaimed a crime against security by the publication of a manifesto which, if it were sanction by the authority of the Church, struck at the foundations on which society rests. The principle of the order case in which the peace threatened, let us confine ourselves to one particular class of the community. There are hundreds of honest, industrious men among us, who trusting to their faith in the public conscience and calculating on the security which a duly constituted Government is expected to give, have invested the fruits of their years of toil and self sacrifice in property, from which they hoped to derive a small income for their support in honorable subsistence.

Day after day we must be aware away by the breath of a handful of men, the bulk of w'om have neither stake nor interest in the country. We disregarded the warnings which cautioned us against the dangers that lurked in the specious promises pretending to aim at nought save the welfare of the weary and oppressed people, but now God's Providence has forced from the lips of the misguided men a crowd of their aims, and notice to pay no rents to not the landlords, but to communism, is yet to be hoped, let no one suppose, very reverend fathers, that we have a word to say in the defense of the oppressors of our people. We feel as keenly as the most outspoken of our brethren, insulted by the arrogance, and that intense weight by the law on the defenceless tenants of Ireland, but we must not allow our abhorrence for injustice to betray us into a repudiation of the claims of justice. The landlords have claims to be respected questioned, who will guarantee the tenant against the outlay of money and labor on mere? Injustice will repay injustice, and in the stage of retribution the strong may be laughed at when he seeks for sympathy in his weakness.

The issue is now plainly put to our people. While of the two paths will you follow—the one which has marked out the road that must lead to ruin, or the other, which disgrace before the Christian world, or the Blessed Redeemer, who, through centuries, and unbroken succession of fourteen generations, has blessed those who encouraged purity and exile, and dared death in its most terrible form for the sake of those who, in their weakness are irrevocably bound up.

A letter from Mr. Sullivan is published recommending Dr. Kenny as a Parliamentary candidate for Meath.

Parnell has been forbidden to see a solicitor for the purpose of instructing him to take steps to test the validity of his arrest, unless the Warden be present. His cousins have been lodged with the Governor of the prison.

Two thousand more applications to have fair rents fixed have been sent to the Land Court.

LONDON, October 31. The police prevented a meeting at the East Finsbury, which was to have been addressed by the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Irish Parliamentarian Sheridan and others.

Irish Poor Relief.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—Among the sums to day are the donations of the Catholic and all Sects branches of the League, the President of the New Zealand Parliament, the Mayor of Melbourne, Australia, [illegible].

At a meeting of the Corporation to day a number of resignations of members of the Council were received in consequence of the rejection of E. Dwyer Gray's motion to confer the freedom of the city upon Parnell and Dillon.

It is stated that a secret meeting of the Branch Land Leagues held in Dublin, Saturday, when 200 new members were enrolled.

The Freeman's Journal publishes a letter, dated in Kilmainham jail, from Wm. O'Brien, adhering to the fund for Dr. Kenny.

Rumor that Gladstone will Resign.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The Standard says: "It is the best reason to the belief that Gladstone contemplates resigning the Premiership. Nothing is definitely settled, and also grounds for the belief that he meditates retiring altogether from official life.

Archbishop MacHale Speaks.

Archbishop McHale of Tuam, in a sermon on All Saints' Day, condemned the doctrines of "no rent" in unsparing language.

Land Act Decision.

The first decision under the Land Act was given at Mountbas today. The Commissioners, after viewing the holding in a case, reduced the rent by fifty shillings for the next fifteen years.

Sexton has been released from prison on account of ill-health.

The Government has discovered the delinquent who wrote and delivered the Parnell manifesto from Kilmainham Jail.

Parnell Sick.

At Sellinullet, County Mayo, last week, when the police were being attacked they fired upon the people. Two persons were fatally shot and twenty wounded. A renewal of disturbance is feared.

The Freeman's Journal predicts the Land Court will fail by reason of the overwhelming business.

A. M. Sullivan has consented to withhold his resignation as a member of Parliament for Meath, because an election now would incrimidate the Parnellites.

The Town Council of Waterford has conferred the freedom of the city upon Dillon.

Parnell was suddenly seized with violent hoarseness on Sunday, and suffered greatly for several hours.

Parnell Honored.

DUBLIN, Nov. 1. Parnell has been unanimously elected Chairman of the Cork Chamber of Commerce.

DRAMATIC INCIDENT.

A Dublin correspondent describes one incident in the recent ovation to Mr. Parnell:

As Mr. Parnell's coach passed the old House of Lords and the remnants of the Parliament building, he rose and uncovered, while the bands stopped playing and the horrahing multitude was hushed in silence, baring his head, his figure standing out in bold outline, amid flashing bayonets, and the sun shining on the tastefully dressed resources on a useless legal struggle.

"Parnell not to express, in conclusion, the unanimous feeling of every man in the jail, that they are willing to remain "here for any number of years that may be necessary, as long as the Irish people, whom it is impossible to imprison, clearly by the course we taught them during two years."

Additional Arrests—A Secret Meeting of the League.

DUBLIN, Oct. 31.—Among the arrests to-day are the chairmen of the Kilkenny and Athlone branches of the League, the President of the New Zealand Parliament, and Hermann, the League organizer of Kildare.

At a meeting of the Corporation to-day a number of resignations of members of the Council were received in consequence of the rejection of E. Dwyer Gray's motion to confer the freedom of the city upon Parnell and Dillon.

It is stated that a secret meeting of the Branch Land Leagues held in Dublin, Saturday, when 200 new members were enrolled.

The Freeman's Journal publishes a letter, dated in Kilmainham jail, from Wm. O'Brien, adhering to the fund for Dr. Kenny.

Rumor that Gladstone will Resign.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The Standard says: "On the best reason to the belief that Gladstone contemplates resigning the Premiership. Nothing is definitely settled, and also grounds for the belief that he meditates retiring altogether from official life.

Archbishop MacHale Speaks.

Archbishop McHale of Tuam, in a sermon on All Saints' Day, condemned the doctrines of "no rent" in unsparing language.

Land Act Decision.

The first decision under the Land Act was given at Mountbas today. The Commissioners, after viewing the holding in a case, reduced the rent by fifty shillings for the next fifteen years.

Sexton has been released from prison on account of ill-health.

The Government has discovered the delinquent who wrote and delivered the Parnell manifesto from Kilmainham Jail.

Parnell Sick.

At Sellinullet, County Mayo, last week, when the police were being attacked they fired upon the people. Two persons were fat

With stat
In th
Willie or Willie ha
And
And they
Thos
Wha
To a fam
The wise,
Now
Aye, and Tom
Of those
And all
Ayo
How they her
In th
That in c
Nor head
Nor s

Let her prove by a life that's noble and true,
Not so sad was her father's trust;
She can bear with honor that noble name,
With her deeds of goodness uphold the fame.
The fame and world must rapt
With her soul-born words in the hour of test,
The staunch hearts of her listener nerve
To be true to valor, honor and love,
To their native land and to God above,
And proud victory's crown deserve.

Let her womanly tenderness win their hearts,
And her deep worth win their esteem,
Till they bend in homage, where now they hurl
Invective against fate that heaves "only a girl"
All unmeet for such ponderous scheme.

Ah! only a girl! is there nothing of use
In a girl's watchful tender love
To lead you away from temptation's snare,
As you reach the cover that earth's noblest wear,
With a strength that seems of above.

While the world of science she soothingly speaks,
While her bright eyes lighten your way,
While she seeks to comfort, to cheer and bless,
Do you always see that her own grief's less,
Because never one glimpse she'll show?

While still to the calm of her gentler sphere
The wounded heart is true
To gladden, to comfort, to aid and light
The careworn, the suffering, to make her home bright
Is a work that a girl may do.

To link absent hearts by sweet thoughts to their homes
The day's dreary drudgering, and by
Such a chain of love that can change care to bliss,
Make this world's "Sunset yet a revealing, in this Life of ones, of God's home in the sky.
G. A. W.

Literary Miscellany.

Jesus of Nazareth Passes By.

BY LUCY HENRY MILLER.

Jenny O'Sullivan was a true Catholic and a fair and lovely girl. Her sires had been Ireland's noblest men, but for many generations they had been exiles. Each successive generation, though, had been taught to love Ireland—"the loveliest isle of the ocean." Boru and scourged on freedom's land—American soil—their brave hearts beat with ready response to The "bold men" of Erin go Bragh." But Jenny had a lover who was neither Irish nor Catholic. Young Manning was the son of a proud American family, who looked down with scorn upon the land of Irattan, Curran, Sheridan and Moore; patriots and poets of fame, unrivaled even in the annals of ancient Rome or Greece. Tom Manning loved the beautiful Jenny, and for her sake was standing every Sunday morning at St. Peter's—though within its sacred portals he never entered. This grieved Jenny sorely, for they were betrothed lovers.

"Jenny," he said one day, when he had ventured so far as the door of the church and ventured to look in, "why do you grow so suddenly silent, when I tell you I love three times! What ceremony is that?"

"Jesus of Nazareth is passing by," Jenny replied, combining the sublimity of Biblical language with the fervid eloquence of her Irish poetry.

"What a church of form and knee and lip, worship," exclaimed Tom Manning. "Who in his right sense can believe in that Real Presence."

"I don't see why you make a riddle of what is plain," quietly replied Jenny. "You admit He lived here, and so once veiled His Godhead in flesh and blood, then why can't He veil the flesh and blood again for our food—food so necessary to eternal life? With the Protestants, inward grace is certainly signified or understood to be given, a hidden virtue; what is it, then, they partake of? You see you are obliged to take half of it on trust—half on trial, unless you construe it as he meant it—literally."

"I admit that understanding a reasonable—why may I not take my version of it and be right as well as you?" Tom Manning now impatiently asked.

"It is not my version," said Jenny, "a good, pious life is my sole task on earth. The Church explains to me and guides me in the building, and here and yonder, you know, cannot a saint, if it has lived," continued the beautiful enthusiast, "in all ages—from generations until at last it proudly rests with its patriotic founder, Jesus Christ Himself; one rounds rising like Jacob's ladder, the lowest are here on earth, the highest high in heaven."

What did possess Tom Manning to be so angry with Jenny? And angry he was, he made such a strange reply: "Jenny," said he, "let us be married on the 11th of February next."

"Why," said Jenny, "no, that is Ash Wednesday; it is against the rules of our Church."

"And that was the reason I wished it at that time," said the young man, "was there ever such a superstitious creature! Well, if not on that day, we will never be married; now do you understand?"

She did understand; her ruddy color was all gone—she was white to the very lips. Had Tom Manning never loved her? Was the past—the blissful past—all a dream? "No, he loves me," Jenny thought, as she gave an anxious sad look, as the man she and does in such momentous moments, back to the days and weeks and months that they had enjoyed together—"he loves me, but he despises my religion, and THAT I will die for."

She felt deeply, but she nerved herself up for the issue, let it be what it might. The passers by little imagined, the conflict in her heart, as masked in dignified reserve she hid her humiliation and pain; and the deep pure love she felt for the proud, passionate man, now standing upon such bitter terms with her. There was a chilled up smile upon her face. Ah! pity such smiles and pity the woman who, though she walks the thornest road, will walk it erect; will trail her robes ment to Manning was a well-known fact.

"Do you mean a personal insult?" Phil. asked, his blue eyes glittering like steel, in their anger.

"Just as you please, all the infernal Irish ought to be sent home again to their huts, about which they are sometimes so tiresomely grand," continued Manning, in a drunken drawling tone.

"You offer a deliberate and cowardly insult to me and my sister," said young O'Sullivan; "an Irishman knows how to resent an insult," and he dealt Manning a blow that would have felled a smaller man. Manning sprang at his assailant, and the two young men grappled and fought furiously. At last Manning seized a knife from the table and plunged it into O'Sullivan's side. All had been done so quickly no one had time to interfere. And now O'Sullivan lay with the blood gushing from his side, apparently dead, and Manning, so lately flushed with intellectual success, with fame ready to sound his name, and future power displaying her gorgeous charms to his ego, and wealth and pleasure and hope and ambition all wooing him, stood now with blood upon his hand, and hatred and hope and conscience—to all appearances what earth hates worst—a murderer. A surgeon was summoned.

"O'Sullivan is not dead, not just yet," the surgeon said

He was taken home, and Manning spent the remainder of the night in gaol. The next morning he received a note from Jenny:

"My brother is better. God is so good. With careful nursing he will recover.

JENNY."

Notes had once been written differently—she had not always signed so formally. But how kind in her to write at all, thought Tom Manning.

"What a wretched fool I have been," exclaimed the miserable man, and somehow those sweet words, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," came back to him, and his tongue was forced to utter them. About noon that day his prison door was opened, and Mr. O'Sullivan, Phil's father, entered. Manning rose and stood before him; so subdued and humble that the father's heart, though so justly incensed against him, was softened.

"I come," he said in a voice that quivered considerably, "at the request of my son, to go bail for you, and to give you the earliest possible assurance that his wound is not mortal."

Tom Manning (let those laugh who can) fell on his knees and caught Mr. O'Sullivan's hands, and kissed them and bathed them in tears. His prison doors were opened, and side by side, arm in arm, they left those prison walls. That one fearful night, then, shut up with remorse, had wrought such an impression upon Manning's

CHRISTIAN WOMANHOOD.

What the Illustrious Archbishop of Sidney thinks of it.

In opening a new convent and school of the Sisters of Charity at Woollahra, in his diocese of Sydney, Australia, a few weeks ago, Archbishop Vaughan spoke as follows on the Position of Christian Womanhood. His Grace said

"The Revered Mother of the Sisters of Charity asked me to come here to-day to bless the convent and school of Erin's Hill which she has established in this district, and I was also requested to say a few words. It may possibly be thought that I have spoken so frequently on education that nothing remains to be said that has not been said before; and yet it seems to me that this subject is so especial in its interest, and so rich in its suggestions, that it is a very difficult thing indeed to exhaust it. I propose this evening to make a few remarks, not so much on children and the training of children, as on woman, and the position of Christian womanhood in the world.

MODERN PROGRESS,

as it is called, has dealt with this subject as with every other; and it would not be altogether uninteresting to look this question in the face, and try to grasp the principles on which it is based, or rather should be based, the position of women in the modern world. Now, when I look back to history—I mean to the history of the best of pagan times—to the social condition of Greece and Rome, and study the position of woman before her elevation and emancipation by the Incarnation, I find that her position was not what I mean as ideal. She was not regarded as man's equal or companion, but rather as his instrument, and her portion was one of drudgery and subserviency. The last companionship a man would look for, was that of his wife, and, instead of brightening and embellishing and adorning his home and house, she was kept apart, and buried in the darkness of obscurity and isolation. She was, to all intents and purposes, a slave. Empires came and fell, civility of a rude order would naturally follow upon such a state of things, and she who might have been an element of refinement and elevation practically exercised no advantageous influence over the Pagan household. How marvellous a change was that produced by the Incarnation! I mean by Christ's coming, by His assuming human nature, and allowing himself to be born of a woman and of a virgin. The principles which surround the Incarnation compose the character of woman. Purity and express the scheme of her elevation. Mrs. Norton, who, in having a woman for His mother,

STRICK OFF THE FETTERS WHICH KEPT HER DOWN and emancipated her from the bondage to which she had been reduced. She was made man's equal in the noblest sense. Heaven and all its splendors were for her equally with him. The Master's blood had been spilt on her redemption as well as his redemption, and that Master's mother, holding so exalted a station, became not only a model for all womankind, but also an evidence of woman's exaltation, and a token of the position which she was to occupy in the Church. Christ, by raising matrimony to a sacrament, the indissolubility, sanctity and individuality of the contract, and the presence of the Holy Spirit, as it were, at the nuptial ceremony, lent a stability to woman's position, and gave a permanency to in the Christian meaning of those words, which the world never knew in her position, and made her capable of an influence which had never been hers before, and which among the Pagans found thus forever in immutable bonds to one man her natural protector and friend. In the early construction, woman possessed a standing ground for the exercise of her high mission in the world. The Apostles, Fathers of Christian life, and to her was given to labor for it in woman's way, and according to the character and position God had given her. The great revelation of faith and all its glorious promises lay as much as man's, and her heart could beat high, in anticipation of the future, and her courage receive an additional glow through the consciousness of the splendid recompense that was held out to her if she acted her part well on earth. Now, as I said at starting, "modern progress" cannot leave woman and womanhood alone. I do not say this because I condemn modern progress, for if there was nothing good in it. There is much good in it, I look on it as a sign of the times, and there is very much evil, and that much of its progress is progress astray, like the early progress of Eve, and her race, and shows that the modern idea that it is benevolent, and is to be wished for, that is a painful and saddening blunder. We cannot make the world better, and to be more merciful and metamorphosed into female men, contending in the forum, cutting up bodies in the dissecting-room, or pitching a rough crowd from the pulpit or the stump. There are scenes in this world sufficiently revolting without such. Civilization is good, and it is to be hoped that "modern thought" will turn its energies in another direction, and that the work which would result in mixing up the sexes in the contentious battlings of public life in such a way as to destroy, eventually, the sweetness, rest, and purity of man's home, which is, or ought to be, his safest and most secure retreat, not only against external assaults, but also against internal roughness and ungentleness. No no! think, ladies and gentlemen, that I am in the way of my individual theory of my own, I am not so vain, I trust, as to do that. I speak of the true and lineaments of the Christian model. Where I see that departed from, I know a mistake has been made. I would not turn women into men, nor thrust women into employments that practically unsex them, not only because it disgusts me to see them thus degraded and unhinged, but because it is at variance with God's plan and

"WOMAN'S RIGHTS,"

WOMAN SHOULD GO OUT OF HER OWN SPHERE, DESTINY, AND PLACE, AND BECOME

AND STEPMOTHERS

THE CHRISTIAN IDEAL OF WOMANHOOD.

Let me explain myself. For instance, I hold that there is a charmed type, and a valuable type, of the Christian woman in the world. Leaving out history for a moment, look at her. What have the great artists in the world done for us except to leave us types of beauty, force, and love? Go all ages, through the Christian womanhood in most admirable, the down into the catacombs and you will see women depicted there; follow that loving band of art all down the Christian ages—it is the same. There is one main type reproduced in a thousand forms, and having as its emblem the Mother of Christ—the Madonna. Whether it be the devout simplicity of a Cimabue or a Giotto, or the more elaborate and warmer tints of modern models, it is the same. Women and womanhood mean Christian women and Christian womanhood all down the ages present us with one type and a figure in harmony with it. Why, and of what, is this the case? It is timely as words whether or not such a type as that was ever meant to rough it in the rending world, and to come out and shout and yell on the open platform.

IT MATTERS NOT TO WHAT CLASS THE GREAT

the type never changes. The faces may be different, the expressions vary, but the main character is ever one. If you recall the pictures you have seen of the wives of Pagan kings—a Bertha or Ethelrede—or a great Abbess—or a Hildegarde—or Hildwige, or of women profoundly versed in theology, like St. Teresa, or of women who served the diplomatic world in their day, like the Countess Matilda or St. Catharine of Sienna—you may take St. Frances, or St. Gertrude, or even women of later times, like Mrs. Elizabeth Seton, the great foundress of the Sisters of Charity in America—and you will find one main expression running through all those likenesses, and illuminating itself in the lives of those women's lives. They represent, in picture, the true type of Christian womanhood; in their works, in their heroism, they display before the world the character of that vocation to which they were called. Now, I am trying to bring out into expression the principles, the fundamental basis, from which those types of Christian life sprang, and in it energizes, and it seems to me to be reduced to two, first,

THE CONSTANT, EVER PRESENT, AND THEN,

THE REFINEMENT OF GENTLENESS.

These two, the internal strength and heroism, and their external expression, in the gentleness and refinement of life, in every picture of woman painted by true art, since the coming of Christ. These two characteristics are made manifest when the lives of high Christian women all down the ages are examined, and the work they have been called to have been accomplished, and when the latter has failed the grace of Christian womanhood has withered away. Where these two are lightest as in the Madonna, in her life, and in the representations of her in art, there is the ideal woman. Take these like here what refinement of gentleness equal to that of the

VIRGIN MOTHER

And since her coming all true Christian women, in their place and according to their measure, have followed, in steps and marks, in her footsteps, adding the sacrifice of the heart to the refinement of gentleness, and sanctifying, sobering, and strengthening, and making the home of a man a hallowed place. Mrs. Norton, who, in her superior women, had her trials to sustain, was accustomed to say—as so many women have said since—that "man is backward, but I look upward." Ladies and gentlemen, these ladies, these Sisters of Charity, are the women who, in the great work they have made their heart's sacrifice, they (you know it) you cannot come into contact with them without knowing it) bear about with them woman's sweetest mark, the refinement of gentleness. You cannot come to the Bro without being warmed, as you cannot pass on the sun without seeing the light; so your dear children cannot be placed under the influence of these without receiving these impressions, without learning the secret of the sacrifice of the heart and the refinement of gentleness, although you may be unknowing of it. Well, I am speaking of loving type of Christian womanhood. Thus they will learn, as I said, have been sent here, between the lines of moonlight and to impress upon their actions the three great texts of faith, and charity, which adorning life, looking forward to death without repining, have for ages of Christian history illuminate their path, and solacing and comforting those who have been entrusted to their care, to which they have led, as a stranger conducts than the cords of Adam, making

SISTERS OF CHARITY

"Life, death, and the great Forever
One grand sweet song."

Who are the Men that have Built up this Republic?

An able Protestant American William Matthews, L. L. D., in "Hours with Men and Books" says: "Who are the men who have built up this nation and made it the great Republic it is? Are they all, or nearly all, of Anglo-Saxon birth and blood? Not at all. Half of them are the Germans, the Huguenots, the Dutch, and other minor peoples, let us look at the Revolutionary army and count heroes. From the very first settlement of the country, in field and street, at the ploughs, at the anvils and in the pulpits, the Germans were represented. Maryland and South Carolina were largely populated by Huguenots. Miles, New Hampshire, and Kentucky received Irish emigrants. During the first half of the Revolutionary war, emigrants from Ireland to this country was not less than a quarter of a million. Now, for fatefulness of blood, the British yoke, the Irish formed a sixth or seventh of the whole population, and one fifth of all the commissioned officers in the army and navy were of Irish descent. The first general officer killed in battle, the first artillery officer appointed, the first commissioner commissioned, the first victor to whom the British flag was struck at sea, when the Catholics of Maryland, in 1745, published their great "Toleration act," they gave us alphabet we know by the words "religious liberty," and when I tell you the Catholics in America are as loyal to the Stars and Stripes as their fellow citizens, and that they will defend them as boldly and protect them as securely as the best, I but tell you what statistic show to be the exact signed. I contemplate a trip through the Arch-Diocese of Baltimore, in the month of November and December of this year, and will call upon such clergymen who will write me that he desires my services. Address,

J. J. KENNEDY, Willmington, Del.

Reference: Rev. C. Deshyvelles, of this place.

"Made New Again."

Mrs. Wm. D. Buckman, St. Catherines, Ont., says: "R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., I have used your "Favorite Prescription," "Golden Medical Discovery," and "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," for the last three months and find myself (what shall I say)—"made new again" are the only words that express it. I was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk across the floor without fainting, could keep nothing in the shape of food on my stomach. Myself and friends had given up all hope, as the immediate death seemed certain. I now live (to the surprise of everybody) and am able to do my own work."

Family Fun.

Practical Demonstration of the Catechism.

Not long ago a bright little girl in a New Jersey public school, after a lesson in the Catechism class, and recently had reached the bottom facts of the mere creation of man out of the dust of the earth, and the breathing into his nostrils of the breath of life, and the making of man a living soul, full of confidence in the Scripture theory and her own reflective conclusions, and exclaimed: "Oh, mother, I know it is all true what the catechism said about Adam being made out of the dust of the earth. I know it is!" "Why?" "Because I saw Aunt Emma shin Tracie, and I saw the dust fly out of her. I know it is so. But the Tracie had been playing with ashes.

Didn't Know Cato.

One day this past Summer a little band of men, among whom were two Michiganders, got into a dispute in Boatwood regarding some of the ancients. A part of the crowd held that Cato was a great poet, while others asserted that he was an orator, and it was finally agreed to leave it to a grocer around the corner who was supposed to be well posted on all matters. The crowd therefore proceeded to his store in a body, and the spokesman brusquely queried

"Say, Jim, can you settle a dispute?"

"Yes, sir," was the prompt reply.

"Well, then, what was Cato's best hold?"

"Cato—Cato—hold on a minute," replied Jim, as he started for his desk. He opened his ledger, put his finger down to "C," glanced over the names and then returned and said:

"Don't find him here on my books, and I reckon he was some scrub who jumped in here while I was out to dinner. I don't do no credit business on Cato."

"Yes, Jim, Cato, the Roman poet."

"Poet? Didn't know he was a poet. I reckon he was some scrub who jumped in here while I was out to dinner. I don't do no credit business on poets."

"Yes, Jim, Cato, the Roman orator."

"Orator? Didn't know he was an orator. I reckon he was some scrub who jumped in here while I was out to dinner. I don't do no credit business on orators."

"Jim, you can settle a dispute."

"Yes, sir," was the prompt reply.

"Well, then, what was Cato's best hold?"

"Cato—Cato—hold on a minute," replied Jim, as he started for his desk. He opened his ledger, put his finger down to "C," glanced over the names and then returned and said:

"Don't find him here on my books, and I reckon he was some scrub who jumped in here while I was out to dinner. I don't do no credit business on Cato."

"Jim, you can settle a dispute."

"Yes, sir," was the prompt reply.

"Cato—Cato—hold on a minute," replied Jim, as he started for his desk. He opened his ledger, put his finger down to "C," glanced over the names and then returned and said:

"Don't find him here on my books, and I reckon he was some scrub who jumped in here while I was out to dinner. I don't do no credit business on Cato."

THE MONIT
WEDNESDAY ..... NOVE
MONITOR SUPPLEMENT.

In consequence of the great increase ance to our Advertising Department and stant demand for space therein, we are to issue a ten column supplement this cede it by inviting our readers to speeches of Archbishop Croke on the Land
Our Financial, Civil, and other matters of interest, to our readers. We intend to rejoice these inestimable addresses—addresses the country deep as it, as we think that our readers shall be pleased in all others of importance.

A Catholic Bishop on the Allegiance of American Catholics.

On President Garfield's funeral day, before a great assemblage of citizens of all religious persuasions, in the Cathedral city of his Diocese, Portland, Maine, a distinguished Prelate, the Rt. Rev. James A. Healy (who will be well remembered here in connection with the dedication of St. Ignatius' Church nearly two years ago), used these words:

And even here to-day, in presence of a national calamity, I hope to see a great and beneficial result—and that result will be a return to the principles of the old inspired Book, where man is often on our lips, but whose teachings are too often forgotten.

And I believe when I say that all power of one man over another is from God; that parental, patriarchal, national authority springs from the same source; and that to me—to those who are with me in faith—the ruler, by whatever name he may be called, whether king, or prince, or president, is the representative of God's authority, and when we lift a hand against him, lift his hand not only against the dignity, the life of a nation, but against the Lord's anointed; for it is written: "Who shall put forth his hands against the Lord's anointed and be guiless?"

The people by constitution and laws may determine who are to be the depositories of power; but it is from God that power is given, and this was the old New England doctrine and practice, before the wild theories of pretended philosophers entered amongst us.

Your honor must remember with what reverence and obedience we were taught in our youth to speak of the law, and with what awe we looked upon the representatives of civil power, almost as upon persons of another world. In the days a simple constable would have marched unresisted through any crowd in the execution of his duty.

May I venture to hope that the event which we now deplore will have the wholesome effect of "turning the heart of the children to the fathers" of inculcating our respect and obedience to those who bear lawful sway; of making us ready to uphold those in authority by our prompt and earnest co-operation. Therefore let us take courage; for if by his short and memorable administration, if by his tragic death, the lamented President should arouse our hearts and induce us to these great truths, he would not have lived in vain; and his death, and as it has been, would be a sacrifice fraught with blessing to the country he loved and served so well.

I venture to hope also for another good result, that in view of the dangerous channel through which the ship of state has passed so quietly and promptly, the sons of Malise, mentioned as they are to rely upon the skill of the pilot, may nevertheless recognize the guiding Power from on high; and re-coiling to their early teachings, may say from their hearts, "God save our country."

Here is presented a text upon which the American people may with benefit ponder. The President's murder, the causes that led to it, and the results that may flow from it have been—by the secular press—for the most part viewed from a political standpoint and discussed in a worldly spirit. We were filled with horror at the foul deed, with detestation of the assassin, with pity for the victim, and with unbounded sympathy for the bereaved family; but beyond that, almost the only feeling expressed from this bitter experience seems to have been the desire for vengeance upon the murderer; and almost the only speculation the policy of the new Administration and the formation of a new Cabinet.

The quotation above given strikes a keynote that we have not yet heard sounded and that is well worthy our profoundest consideration.

It is not the purpose of this article to sermonize upon the text afforded us from this eminent source. Its pure morality, its lofty patriotism and its sound theology are patent upon its surface; and yet it is pregnant with the material for a hundred discourses from any pulpit. Our object just now is to call attention to the speaker and his hearers, as well as to the time and place of the utterance.

Bishop Healy, then, is one of those whom Mr. Pixley, in his Argonaut, contemptuously styles "the Pope's Irish." The people of his own faith, within his Diocese (with the exception of the Canadian French upon the northern boundary), are made up almost wholly of "the Pope's Irish." He is speaking in a Diocese where, within a generation, churches have been burned and private mobbed. He addresses a vast throng of all denominations and creeds—drawn together by a common sorrow.

Now, we ask, in all the words that were said throughout the world upon that solemn day of mourning, was there any better lesson taught than this? And what gives it might is that "the Pope's Irish" have faith in their ecclesiastical rulers, from the Pope himself, down to the humblest priest of the poorest parish; and when one high in authority like Bishop Healy pronounces a doctrine like this, the people of his faith receive it as something more than mere empty phrase, or even individual opinion; they take it upon their conscience as a dogma of their Church which they are bound to believe and to obey.

It is true that Catholics are taught to look with reverence and to lean with confidence upon their spiritual advisers. And yet the Pirleymanites would have men believe that because they seek advice and consolation from the ordained of God and follow them before all others, they give such allegiance to a higher power that they undermate their duty to their temporal rulers. Thoughtful men know that this is false, and candid men will say so. The more religiously one obeys God, the more faithfully will he observe the laws of the land and obey the temporal authorities. In every Catholic Church in the United States, prayers are offered daily—not once a week, exclusive of vacations—for the President

Protestant brother late doctrine
Mr. Sewall, who called the founder of [illegible] Christian Schools. Happy [illegible] to lead a life a noble object—life capable [illegible] good—their fellow-

[illegible] Rt. Rev. Bishop Healy, therefore, that we appeal to the last body of Catholics in this city and State to share in the honor and glory which resounds to all who help along the holy cause of Christian education—the cause of God. There is no Catholic so callous as to deny that the Christian Brothers have accomplished a vast amount of good for the youth of California in every region where their schools have been established, and now, in return for their unfortunate labors, their zeal and their privations in the holiest cause that can animate the heart of man—let us prove our gratitude by helping them secure from our own midst trained teachers to take the places of those whose lives are devoted to the labor at present. We hope, therefore, every Catholic will unite in making the forthcoming entertainment the grand success which the Christian Brothers and cause of Christian education deserve.

Attitude of the Irish Bishops on the Land Act.

A false impression seems to have been made on the public mind regarding the attitude assumed by the Irish Bishops on the Land Act which Parnell and his copatriots wrung from the British Parliament. The tenor of the meagre dispatches left the impression that the Bishops had condemned the Land League and left the people at the mercy of the landlords and their numerous army of allies, known under the general title of "the crow-bar brigade."
But the full text of the resolutions adopted by the Irish Bishops at their Maynooth meeting puts an entirely different aspect upon their course of action. It is admitted, even by the most extreme wing of the dynamite school of Irish patriots, that the Land Act has bestowed rights upon the Irish tenant which hitherto he had not possessed.
The Prelates—in asking the tenant-farmers of Ireland to give the Land Act a fair trial—to accept the bill as a partial remedy for long-standing wrongs against a suffering community, style the measure "a large instalment of justice," and they exhort their flocks to get all the justice they can for themselves, under its provisions, believing, that if rightly used, this Act will bring "present substantial benefit, and help them obtain the rights, social and political, which they justly claim."

This expression on the part of the Bishops does not look as if they had turned their backs on the Land League cause. On the contrary, it manifests the same patriotic purpose which inspired the ever-faithful and prudent Prelates of Ireland to animate the people with the spirit of constitutional agitation more than a year ago, when the Land question was in its inception and the Land League almost unknown. In July, 1880, the Bishops of Ireland subscribed to a series of resolutions, in which they made these important and patriotic declarations:

That we emphatically reiterate the resolution adopted by the Irish Episcopacy in the year 1867 viz: "The Bishops of Ireland, deeply sympathizing with the sufferings of their faithful flocks, believe that the settlement of the Land question is essential to the peace and welfare of the United Kingdom. They recognize the rights and the dignity of landlords. They claim, in the same spirit, the rights, as they recognize the duties of tenants. They believe that the present system tive destitution, the chronic discontent, and the deepening discouragement of the people of Ireland, are at this period of her history to be attributed more to the want of a settlement of the question on fair and equitable principles than to any other cause."

That, in the present severe crisis of our country, we desire to convey our special sympathy to the farming classes, and we exhort all those who have at heart the best interest of Ireland, to use their influence with our Parliamentary friends towards remedying the manifold injustice of the laws which regulate the sale and tenure of lands in this kingdom, and which have so long fettered and depressed the energies of our people.

Thus, it will be seen, that for nearly a quarter of a century the Prelates of Ireland have been advocating the very question which eventually culminated in the organization of the Land League. It will be apparent to all intelligent minds that in their recent manifesto the Irish Bishops do not recede a single inch from the position they have so long occupied on this all-important question to their flocks, and that the Prelates these elevated ecclesiastics, who have grown old in the service of God, and always been true to their patriotic inspirations, have now turned traitors to the cause of Ireland, to a blind unworthy the tongue of any man save an enemy of the Irish race. The Priesthood and priesthood of Ireland have been from time immemorial the prudent counsellors of the Irish people. In times of national agitation they have tempered the tone of an excitable people and led them to victory through the avenues of peaceful, constitutional agitation. That is precisely the position they occupy to-day when their patriotic purposes are based on the land court principle that any organization looking for the amelioration of the tenant-classes of Ireland must keep its principles within the sphere of justice, alike to those who use the land of others as well as to those who hold the title-deeds to the soil.

The Bishops of Ireland are a unit with the people in all agitation based upon the principles of "equal and exact justice to all men," but they will not permit their flocks to be led into a secret conspiracy which can only end in general disaster and the destruction of the hopes which legitimate agitation may have engendered in the hearts of the Irish people. Their policy is one of peace, and in this they have the full sympathy of all reflecting men, both in and out of Ireland. They believe that the Land Act "will help the tenants to obtain their rights," and it is time enough to censure their judgment when time has proved them to be in error.

Catholics who give their influence to any organized agitation for the amelioration of any wrongs perpetrated against the race they represent or their religion, must not forget the fact that while there are supreme duties which we owe to God, there are also certain tributes which we must render unto Cæsar—if we design to carry out the plain letter of the gospel, which is the divine law followed by the Irish Bishops, and which binds the Prelacy, the priesthood and the people in one common bond of fraternal fellowship so long as the masses are not led astray by following the false lights of modern theories, which are alike impracticable and antagonistic to the law of God. The Church recognizes—not only in Ireland, but in every country of the civilized world—the right of the people to receive all the errors of the laws under which they live, by means of constitutional agitation based upon Christian principles. She will adhere to the profound maxim laid down by St. Augustine centuries ago: "In essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, in all things charity"—and this is precisely the fundamental principle by which every Catholic must be governed if he desires his aspirations for liberty and justice to receive the benediction of God.

Bravery of the Irish on the Battle-field.

The pages of ancient and modern history are replete with deeds of martial valor performed by Irish soldiers in the armies of the European powers and their prowess on the battle-field has been admitted by even their most ancient and inveterate enemies.
But it is not in Europe alone that the valor of Irish troops has won for them the admiration of the world, as the records of the American Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, our several Indian wars, and the recent Civil War most attest. Has the Irish soldiery of the present day have lost none of the prestige which marked the courage of the Celts of the past. The latest development of heroism which history reveals is found in the pages of "The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government," written by Jefferson Davis, in which he gives a graphic description of Irish gallantry which he truthfully describes as "with no parallel in ancient or modern war," and which we transcribe for our readers. Speaking of the battle of Sabine Pass, the author we have quoted says:

The capture of the enemy's fleet in Galveston harbor, by means so novel as to excite surprise as well as grateful admiration, was followed by another victory on the coast of Texas, under circumstances so remarkable as properly to be compared to romance.

The strategic importance to the enemy of the possession of Sabine River caused the organization of a large expedition of land and naval forces to enter and ascend its river. If successful, it gave the enemy short lines for operation against the interior of Texas and for relief of the blockadersure resulting from their expulsion from Galveston harbor.

The fleet of the enemy numbered twenty three vessels. The forces were estimated to be ten thousand. No adequate provision had been made to resist such a force, and, under the circumstances, none might have been promptly made. Our whole reliance could have been reasonably placed. A few miles above the entrance into the Sabine River, a small earthwork had been constructed, garrisoned at the time of the action by forty men and two lieutenants, with an armament of six guns. The officers and men were all Irishmen, and the company was called the Davis Guards, in honor of Jefferson Davis.

Under the command of Lieutenant R. W. Dowling there grew to that bourn whence no traveler returns, and but few members of the band have ever been heard of by their friends, those few reside in the City of Houston, and often meet together and talk about the battle in which they participated on the memorable 8th of September, 1863. The following are the names of the heroes who defended the gun in Fort Griffin and to whom the credit is due for the glorious victory: Lieutenant R. W. and N. H. Smith;
Privates Timothy McDonough, Thomas Dougherty, David Fitzgerald, Michael Meaghan, John Howett, John McKeefer, Jack W. White, Patrick McDonnell, William Gleason, Michael Carr, Thomas Hagerty, Timothy Hurley, John Mc-Grath, Matthew Walsh, Patrick Sullivan,
Michael Sullivan, Thomas Sullivan, Patrick
Clair, John Hennessy, Hugh Logan, Maurice Forsyth, Abner Darby, David McMurry, Patrick Mahone, James Donovan, Patrick Abbott, John McNevin, Patrick Ragan, David Allen,
John Wesley, John Anderson, John Fogarty,
Peter O'Hare, Michael Delaney, Terence Mulkern.

The inquiry may naturally arise how this small number of men could take charge of so large a body of prisoners. This required that to their valor they should add stratagem. A few men were placed on the parapet as sentinels and the rest were marched out as a guard to receive the prisoners and their arms; thus was concluded the fact that the fort was empty. The report of the guns bombarding the fort had been heard and soon after the clear of the battle reinforcements arrived, which relieved the little garrison from its embarrassment. The success of the single company which carried the enterprise with such paralyzing amount of moral force—by prudently numbers of the honor which their contemporaries admiringly accord.

Denunciations that will kill a Good Cause.

If we are to believe the published proceedings of a Land League meeting in this city on Monday night last, there is an element in that organization which will permitted to occupy any prominence will kill the cause of the Land League in the estimation of every practical Catholic. We know that class of turbulent individuals who apply the term "traitor" to Irish Bishops and who avow themselves ready to "cut the throat" of a venerable dignitary in Dublin. The freedom of Ireland can never be achieved by such foul denunciations of the ministers of God, and the holy office renders them sacred in the eyes of Catholics, and whose conscientious convictions have led them to warn their flocks against the pernicious principles adopted pugnant to Christian teaching and the moral law. The Bishops of Ireland have a perfect right to do what they have done, and we tell the turbulent element in the Land League organization that they can never achieve independence by howling curses upon the consecrated heads of Irish Bishops. The Irish people have enemies enough in hostile camps who are willing to see the Land League cause sink in shame it in a Land League meeting hurls the cause he may seek to help.

There are thousands of Irish Catholics, and Catholics of every other nationality, who will withdraw from any organization in the public meetings of which the name of some eminent Bishop is made a football to be kicked almost by every dissident fellow who wants to show his contempt for the sanctified ecclesiastics of the Church, and to parade his impudence publicly before the admiring atheism of our city. The "current" denouncing the Land League which the Bishops denounced may have been a radical measure in the minds of men whose hasty action had no maturity of thought; it may even yet prove the death-knell of an organization which has accomplished a great deal of good for Ireland, and which received the tacit endorsement of nearly every Bishop and Priest in Ireland, America, Australia, and even in Rome itself, so long as its principles were founded upon Christian principles of doing unto others as we would be done to. Rome knows the united Hierarchy of Ireland have opposed this "no rent" innovation into the platform of the Land League, then they are to be publicly cursed and their sacred office trailed in the dust of America? Shame upon the men who would commit such a sacrilege under the name of liberty! Ireland's greatest glory is her fidelity to the Faith and her reverence for the anointed of God—the Bishops and priests of the Catholic Church—and we appeal to the Catholic people of Ireland, Europe, who cherishes a respect for the Christianity of the Irish people, to permit no slander against the long Hierarchy of Ireland to be belched forth at their meetings by frothy mouthed men who profess to be Catholics.

Tell those blatant blackguards who fling their blasphemous bullingsgate at Irish Bishops, that the Land League was not established to denounce the sacred character of the successors of a St. Patrick or a St.
Lawrence O'Toole. Tell them that these curses, like chickens, may come home to roost, and do not permit any man, to matter how much he may prate about his patriotism, to disgrace the name of Catholic Ireland before the world by dragging the demagogism of demons into the meetings of a Christian and a civilized people. No cause can be victorious in Ireland that does not commence its consecrational prayer at the altar of God, and as Catholics, we should remember that the curtailment of our civil liberty is only temporary, while the dangers to faith through such scoundrels as those who at that meeting on Monday night, entailed eternal disgrace upon all who degrade their souls by such diabolical denunciation. If these fire-brands desire to denounce the truest friends of the Irish people, let them organize under another name, but do not permit them to prostitute
the cause advocated by Cardinal Manning,
Archbishop Croke, Bishop Nulty, Bishop
Fitzgerald, and other Prelates, by the foul curses to which the tongues of traduction can be turned.

EDUCATION WITHOUT RELIGION.

One by one the leading journals of the country are being forced to acknowledge the correctness of the position of the Catholic Church on the educational problem. The New York Times thus stamps the mark of its disapproval on the public-school abuse:

The Times, after publishing a long list of notable defaulters—secretaries, cashiers, presidents, treasurers, commissioners and other officials—remarks that "No read the antecedents of most of these who figure in this black list, might well make those persons despair who have given education to be a great preventive of crime." Well, you see, that before one can argue on this question there must be a clear understanding of what is meant by "education." If by education is meant the mere sharpening of the wits and instruction as to modes of doing business, then it certainly is not a great preventive of crime, but often a great provocative and accessory of crime. But if by education is meant not only the culture of the mind but enlightenment and guidance of the heart and conscience with respect to duties toward God and man, then education is indeed a great preventive of crime. The trouble is that at present the kind of education is too often wholly neglected.

A Pure Judiciary.

One of the most important points which the people should watch with eternal vigilance is to select as candidates for the Judiciary men of sterling worth, unsullied reputation and legal requirements. A corrupt judge is the most dangerous official that a community can contend against, and there has been so much monopoly interest advanced by illegal decisions in the Eastern Courts that we hope the people of California will use extreme caution in selecting candidates to fill the Supreme Bench at the ensuing election, and in this connection we call their attention to the following timely article from the Amador Dispatch, which has the ring of the right spirit in every sentiment it utters

If there is any office within the gift of the people of this State which should be filled only by good, true and noble men, that position is upon the Supreme Court Bench. The merits and demerits of the man should be thoroughly looked into before he receives a nomination for that all-important trust. He should not only be a man of profound legal learning, but should be unencumbered by the dangerous influence of cliques, machine politicians, corporate schemes, etc., and under these points he should stand upon the adamantine rock of rectitude. We have a man in our mind's eye whom we know we can pass through the ordeal unscathed, and come out with honor to himself and gratification to his intimate friends. That man is John W. Armstrong, of Sacramento, formerly of this county, and whose name we take the liberty of suggesting to the Democracy of this State as a most suitable and available candidate for the Supreme judgship next fall. He would be an honor to the Bench and the State, and we mention his name in this connection thus early in the hope that the people may have an opportunity to discuss his qualifications. We know of no better man than Armstrong's nomination for the position whether he wants the honor himself or not.

A METHODIST MINISTER ON "THE POPE'S IRISH."

Rev. V. M. Simmonds, pastor of the Methodist Church in Holyoke, Mass., preached a sermon on the assimilation of the Irish Catholic to his nonconformism, recently. In the course of which he said of Christian nationality—say "Tonga, cities, villages, societies, land leagues, Christian associations and churches have joined to say,
'God save the Queen!' while the outward heads of the Old World have made haste to respond, 'Amen!' Not so the Pope and his Church.
Even Roman Catholic prelates have made ceility protestations of their share in our sorrow.
Never was there a more beautiful pastoral written than that which the Archbishop of Dublin addressed unto both to the faithful of his Diocese, calling them to unite with us in our grief. And to lay over this hand their churches have been royal in Ireland for a thousand years, put by the assembly's bulletin into the minutes of the Church. It does seem to me that now we should be closer away with our church talk of danger to our liberties because of the presence of a few Irishmen. They are here by our invitation.
They have labored for us. In our dark days they prayed for us, and now, in the time of our sorrow, they have prayed for us. They have more than even a 'shadow right' to call our land their land, our institutions, their institutions, our liberties their liberties, our homes, their homes, and our free country their home. And we are ready now to let them share our privileges of American citizenship. Birth, labor, blood, prayer, tears, and death, have made them free forever. No, men, and brethren, the danger, if danger there is, impending our nation will be looked for in quarters far more remote. Our love of ease and honor, our purse-proud pride, our worship of wealth, our lust of power,
Iowa principles on which our forefathers founded this nation; our law-measures and laws and institutions; these, the privileges of the upper classes, these are our republic, is in danger, these are the sources of our danger and the seeds that threaten our overthrow."

CURRENT EVENTS.

Father McNelly's Fair.

The Fair inaugurated for the purpose of paying off the indebtedness of St. Patrick's church, West Oakland, proved a great financial success and their pastor Father McNelly, who is a Parnellite Irishman, deserves the real thanks of his people for the manner in which he conducted the affair. The fair is one of the oldest and most respectable in the city, have occupied their present premises over twenty years, and built up their immense business by scrupulous integrity and fair dealing with their customers. There are several obvious reasons why this old and popular firm can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply several of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms House,
City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore buy at and purchase in such large quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the next place ARMSTRONG WASHINGTON STREET are at the head of the business in the more central parts of the town, which gives them a great advantage in competing for public patronage. But the great secret of their success is the HONESTY AND FAIRNESS OF THEIR DEALING, THE GENUINENESS OF THEIR WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, AND THE CONSTANCY WITH WHICH ORDERS ARE SUPPLIED
TO ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY. Their reputation confirms the confidence of the public in the excellence of their goods, which after all is the grand secret of their success. Thirty years, wise, imported or home manufactured, are all of the best brands that can be used for medicinal or domestic purposes. THEIR TEAS always come direct from the place of exportation, and never go through any other hands on reaching them particulars and cheapness from the first TEAS, SUGARS AND CHEESE come from the first dairies in the State, and THEIR FLOUR is selected with the greatest care and prudence. We speak this particularly in the praise of

MESSRS. SHARBORO & CO.,

because we have known them for twenty years as business men, and we feel proud the Monitor ranks them among its patrons. Below will be found the price current list of the distinguished firm for November, and it will be found worthy the attention of the many dealers who read the Monitor. The proprietors should always endeavor to assist the readers where to get the necessaries of life cheapest. The business of rents spoken of in connection with SHARBORO & CO. also applies to the old Washington—San Francisco and Clay streets Markets below, to the same block, emphasize the reason why we find all articles sold there so much cheaper than elsewhere.
Next week we shall go through these old popular Markets and further much information in the connection, and we hope our readers will

SEE OUR ADVERTISEMENTS.

CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 12.

6—Sunday—Twenty second Sunday after Pentecost.
7—Monday—Of the Octave of All Saints.
8—Tuesday—Octave of all Saints.
9—Wednesday—Dedication of St. John Lateran.
10—Thursday—St. Andrew Avellino, Confessor.
11—Friday—St. Martin, Bishop and Confessor.
12—Saturday—St. Martin, Pope and Martyr.

MONITOR MENTION.

Book Notices, Correspondence and Editorial crowded out this week.

The Merino Soap which we advertise is very highly spoken of by all who have used it.

Thanks to a new contributor for a translation of a celebrated Irish poem, which will appear your next week.

—George C. Gorham addressed an indignation meeting at Washington City on the 28th ult.,
Lord for Congress.

At the recent meeting of the Sacramento
Land League, Miss M. Brennan presented a gold watch, to be raffled for the benefit of the League.

To day is the festival of ALL SAINTS, and we hope every reader will remember their deceased friends during the octave by having Masses said for their relief from suffering.

—Mr. Peter D. Bailey died recently at Napa and bequeathed $7,000 to the Magdalen Asylum in this city. His estate is valued at $111,000.
Special to Government bonds.

—"The resources of Tillmanism are not yet exhausted," said Gladstone at Leeds, and he called upon the Irish people to pull down Dublin and opened the prison cells to the men that hold there.

A Branch of the Land League will be formed in San Luis Obispo this week. It is our mind that at least one Branch should be organized in that county to help Ireland in her present emergency.

History repeats itself. Parnell was arrested on October 13, 1881, by Gladstone's order. On October 14, 1843, thirty-eight years ago, Daniel O'Connell was arrested at the order of Sir Robert
Mr. Gladstone's predecessor in office.

The Castlecomer Board of Poor Law Guardians have resolved to erect large premises for the tables of Irish manufacture. This is the right spirit and when it is followed by other corporations in Ireland the country will be on the high road to prosperity.

The Virginia City Land League will give literary, social and musical entertainment on next Monday evening for the benefit of the Land League treasury, and we know they will be successful, as the Monitor congratulates the Sister we heart and soul in the good work of regenerating Ireland from the dominion of the Saxon.

The entertainment given by the Knights of St. Patrick at Irish-American Hall on last Wednesday evening, was very successful in every any and musical treat. Instrumental music selections was rendered by Miss Ella Wood and songs sung by Miss Ellen Gunnison and Mr.
T. McGrath, of San Salvador, in the time of Dr. Jacobs delivered a public address on the Land question, which was received a reception in his usual masterly manner.

DEATH OF THE REV. JAMES COGHLAN O.P., OF BOULA.

A memorable period has passed away from this earth!
Gone, gone, gone forever, that man who was the cheerful and most pious companion. He was familiar with the people of Boula, Sabrano, Oroville, Marysville and the adjacent districts, where for many years he labored, and he was loved by all who knew him. Nothing was too insurmountable to obstruct him taking any active part in the cause of his Master.
Nothing was too difficult for him to accomplish. He was a man of great energy, and beauty in the Church Beauty, he was born in the, neighborhood of Ballina in the County of Mayo, Ireland, and he was about, among a population for his religious state and his zeal for the cause of Christ. He was of Mary, County Galway. After his profession, he was sent to Ireland, and for some time he engaged in teaching in Castlebar, he received his Master's degree, and was ordained a priest Ireland, he was ever remarkable for his simplicity of character, and a man united, he was ever the deep interest in the welfare of his fellow-men he was noble in all his charming and unfailing qualities. He was a man of great energy, and great gladness of his disposition, and the even tenor of his life was a beautiful example of the virtues of a true Christian gentleman and a true priest.

Yours truly.

CHURCH FAIR AT CHICO.

Chico, Cal., October 3rd, 1881.

Dear Sir: In my travels up this way I have passed the Catholic church in this place, and I was sorry I attend the Catholic Fair but I saw by the ladies of the congregation, who I met on the road, that it continued for nights. One notable feature about the fair was the absence of "drinks right" to call our land their land, our institutions, their institutions,
our liberties their liberties, our homes, their homes, and our free country their home. And we are ready now to let them share our privileges
of American citizenship. Birth, labor, blood, prayer, tears, and death, have made them free forever. No, men, and brethren, the danger, if danger there is, impending our nation will be looked for in quarters far more remote. Our love of ease and honor, our purse-proud
pride, our worship of wealth, our lust of power,
Iowa principles on which our forefathers founded this nation; our law-measures and laws and institutions; these, the privileges of the upper classes, these are our republic, is in danger, these are the sources of our danger and the seeds that threaten our overthrow."

SACRED HEART COLLEGE.

Roll of Honor for October.

[illegible]

New Advertisements.

READ! READ! READ!

The History of Sharboro & Co.'s Grocery Firm, the Pioneers of the Business in San Francisco.

At the end of this article will be found the business card of Messrs. SHARBORO & Co., grocers, No. 701 Washington street. The firm is one of the oldest and most respectable in the city, have occupied their present premises over twenty years, and built up their immense business by scrupulous integrity and fair dealing with their customers. There are several obvious reasons why this old and popular firm can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply several of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore buy at and purchase in such large quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the next place ARMSTRONG WASHINGTON STREET are at the head of the business in the more central parts of the town, which gives them a great advantage in competing for public patronage. But the great secret of their success is the HONESTY AND FAIRNESS OF THEIR DEALING, THE GENUINENESS OF THEIR WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, AND THE CONSTANCY WITH WHICH ORDERS ARE SUPPLIED TO ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY. Their reputation confirms the confidence of the public in the excellence of their goods, which after all is the grand secret of their success. Thirty years, wise, imported or home manufactured, are all of the best brands that can be used for medicinal or domestic purposes. THEIR TEAS always come direct from the place of exportation, and never go through any other hands on reaching them particulars and cheapness from the first TEAS, SUGARS AND CHEESE come from the first dairies in the State, and THEIR FLOUR is selected with the greatest care and prudence. We speak this particularly in the praise of

MESSRS. SHARBORO & CO.,

because we have known them for twenty years as business men, and we feel proud the Monitor ranks them among its patrons. Below will be found the price current list of the distinguished firm for November, and it will be found worthy the attention of the many dealers who read the Monitor. The proprietors should always endeavor to assist the readers where to get the necessaries of life cheapest. The business of rents spoken of in connection with SHARBORO & CO. also applies to the old Washington—San Francisco and Clay streets Markets below, to the same block, emphasize the reason why we find all articles sold there so much cheaper than elsewhere. Next week we shall go through these old popular Markets and further much information in the connection, and we hope our readers will

SEE OUR ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHARBORO & CO'S PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR NOVEMBER.

SUGARS.

COFFEE.

TEAS.

CANNED GOODS.

EXTRACTS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PROVISIONS.

FISH.

CANDLES.

COCOA AND CHOCOLATE.

FRUITS.

PICKLES.

FLOUR AND MEAL.

Having laid in a large supply of Flour before the recent rise we can furnish our customers with the best Flour at the lowest market price.

N. B. The Managers of our house having TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' EXPERIENCE in the grocery business in this city, and being an expert in buying large stocks of goods, is a guarantee that under his management we are able to sell first class GROCERIES CHEAPER than any other house in the City Coast. Examine our goods and prices before purchasing your supplies, and judge for yourself. Economy is the result of trading with us. Wealth is the result of economy. Country orders promptly and carefully filled.

B. SHARBORO, Manager.

New Advertisements.

NEWMAN & LEVINSON

Successors to Bayer & Reich.

129 KEARNY STREET. 129

Importers and Jobbers in Berlin Zephyrs, Corman Yarns, Canvas, Floss, Beads, Chenille, Embroidery, Laces, Trimmings, White Goods, HOSIERY AND FANCY GOODS.

Also, new designs in Mantle Stripes, Chair Stripes, Table Covers, Table Scarfs, Lambrequins, Foot stools, Foot Rests, Slipper Patterns, Slipper Cases, Cushion Covers and Tidies in Kensington Worsted & Embroidery

Do your own Stamping: we keep

Brigg's Patent

TRANSFERRING PAPERS.

A warm iron passed over the back of the paper transfers the pattern to any fabric.

Silk and Satin Ribbons for Theatrical and Society purposes.

Decorative Art Rooms, up stairs.

Goods delivered free to all parts of the city, Oakland, Alameda and San Rafael.

Orders by mail promptly attended to. P. O. order or send C. O. D. Samples sent on application free.

JUST RECEIVED

A Large Line of

Bonnets, Hats, Feather Turbans,

AND A FULL ASSORTMENT OF FINE MILLINERY GOODS

At Low Prices, at the

PARIS MILLINERY,

708 Market Street,

AND BON TON,

133 Kearny Street.

MRS. S. MISH.

A GRAND

Combination Concert,

In aid of the Building Fund of the Christian Brothers Novitiate,

WILL GIVE ONE OF

THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE,

On Tuesday Evening, the 22nd inst.

For the students of the various Colleges of the Christian Brothers will take part, and some of the best literary, dramatic and musical talent of the city has kindly volunteered to assist on the occasion.

TICKETS, ONE DOLLAR.

Children, Half Price.

Tickets can be procured at the residence of all the pupils in this city and Oakland.

P. T. FLINN & SON,

S. W. cor. Howard and Eighth Sts.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

HAY, GRAIN,

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines and Liquors.

Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to.

PETER P. CAIN,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

CHOICE FRUITS, PRODUCE AND CONFECTIONERY.

Fine Brands of Havana and Domestic Cigars and Tobacco.

Also Foreign and Domestic Nuts constantly on hand.

S. E. cor. Tunk and Taylor Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

S. C. T.

CUT THIS OUT!

We predict the time will come when all our friends, enemies, subscribers, and every reasonable person will purchase their Household Furniture of TERRY & CO., 747 Market Street, opposite Dupont. They sell Carpets, Stoves, Crockery, Elegant Chamber Sets, Parlor Sets, Pianos, Pictures, Oil Paintings; in fact, everything you can ask for. They treat you liberally, give you what you buy, and never lose a customer.

Always remember TERRY & CO.'S Mammoth Furniture and Art Emporium, 747 Market Street, opposite Dupont.

NOTE. The above ills a want the public have long felt. It has already grown into a large enterprise. Yet it is nothing compared to what it will be, as our readers find out when a nice place it is to visit, and to buy goods.

New Advertisements.

C

Gra

911 & 913

MARKET STREET.

Blankets!

Blankets!!

Blankets!!!

500 PAIR LARGE SIZED

Fine Mission Blankets

SLIGHTLY SOILED)

Reduced from $18 00 to $14 50

PER PAIR.

500

PAIRS LARGE SIZE BLANKETS

At $4 75 a Pair.

BEST VALUE IN THE CITY.

400

PAIRS FULL SIZE BLANKETS

(VERY HEAVY.)

Reduced from $8 to $6 50 a Pair.

150

PAIRS FULL SIZE BLANKETS

(VERY HEAVY)

Reduced from $10 to $8 a Pair.

Country Orders Promptly Filled.

SAMPLES OF DRESS GOODS, SILKS, Satins and Velvets in all the latest styles. Sent Free of Charge on application.

Goods Sent C.O.D. to all Parts.

C. CURTIN

A LARGE AND COMPLETE

MAP OF

California and Nevada.

This Map has just been Published.

IT IS LAID OUT ON A SCALE OF 12 MILES TO THE inch—4x4½ feet. In compiling this work free use has been had of the Surveys of the Land Office, and a full view of both States. Also, to the Military and Railroad surveys, with numerous County and private surveys.

The two States are laid out with Base Lines and Meridians, Townships, Sections, Railroads, Railroad Lands, Grants, Land Districts, Land Offices, Indian Reservations, Military Reservations, Mining and Agricultural Lands, Indian Reservations, Mineral Springs, Mineral Springs, Mineral Springs ture delivered by a prominent woman before a well-known New England society. This article dealt so directly with the needs of woman, and contained so many hints which were valuable, that it naturally attracted no little attention, and has, we learn, been a subject of comment in social circles in nearly every part of the land. Realizing that no subject can be of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers, than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this exceedingly

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Hernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that even her far-famed French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excel, American women in quickness of perception and brilliancy of intellect. The minds and manners of American women are all that can be desired; but it is a lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their social and mental characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitutions, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess none of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary ways, devotion to fashion, but above all and more than all, carelessness and indifference to daily habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results and is both directly and indirectly of untold injury to the race. The cause, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as though they lived in Europe or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The performance of the natural functions of womanhood and motherhood is not a disease, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the organs which make and purify the blood must be preserved in, or restored to their normal condition. These organs are the Kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poison accumulates, all the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and give way and finally the kidneys and contiguous organs become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all forms of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing inconveniences follow. This is especially true in the case of women. And if the bowels are thus inactive and overloaded, the neighboring organs, which are particularly dependent for their right action upon the state of the liver, bowels and kidneys, become displaced, and the consequences which ensue are too well known to require re-statement in a suggestive article of this kind. The secret, however, of preventing these manifold disorders, is to keep the kidneys and liver in perfect working condition. This is reason; this is science, and it appeals with force to the suffering women of America.

When the body is in a healthy condition, then some beauty of complexion, elasticity of step, buoyancy of disposition, and comfort and happiness in the duties and responsibilities of a family. There is, therefore, every incentive to secure and preserve buoyant health.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy described in the lecture to which reference has already been made, is receiving, as it certainly merits, the most careful attention and the trial of the women of the land. It is a pure and simple vegetable remedy which is now doing more to bring health and strength to the American women than any one thing which has ever been discovered. It acts directly upon the liver, kidneys and allied organs, soothes any inflammation, allays all pain, and places those organs in a condition to bring health to the body and happiness to the life. The manufacturers of this great remedy, as we learn from the lecture, have the written thanks of thousands of women—many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. No true woman is pleased to have her physical trouble thusadvertised in the eyes of the world.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore no adequate remedy for the ills of women has ever been discovered; nor have the medical profession ever been able to assist women in her troubles as she deserves. This is, perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much bigotry and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates to the fullest the blighting effect of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was persecuted and scoffed at. Thompson, the founder of the Thomsonian theory, was the victim of a baleful conspiracy. Morton, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet the discoveries of these men are to-day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach, not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death bed scenes, and felt that if skill were equal to disease death might have been postponed many years—that science if one were made of all the agencies she has revealed, was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated! A cold is contracted, it settles to yield to a brief form of treatment, the physician may not be careful enough to call in the aid of other schools, or of independent agencies, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not exhaust every empirical known to the world for relief! If he have the courage of his convictions and employs some agencies, he is visited with expulsion from the society of his fellows, and, forsooth, becomes what they choose to call a "quack." When they have exhausted all the agencies approved by their schools, they "shift the responsibility" of the death of their patient by advising a trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe! Such treatment may be in accordance with the "code of ethics," but in the view of the unprejudiced public it is downright cruelty, if it may not be even more strongly characterized.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of the country, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording for recovering lost health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health; by a watchful care over daily habits and duties, and by a regulation of the life with the remedy above named, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be secured in their highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention which it deserves, and the cases which they are able to bestow, conscious that their efforts are certain to bring them perfect health and keep and happy lives.

HALL'S PIANOS,
16 Tyler street.
☞ THESE PIANOS ARE ALL THREE-STRINGER.

CHURCH MUSIC.
For Sopranos, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ. No. 1 Soprano, 50 cts.; 2 Alto, 50 cts.; 3 Tenor, 50 cts.; 4 Bass Treble, 40 cts.; 5 Treble, 30 cts.; 6 Alto, 30 cts.; 7 Tenor, 30 cts.; 8 Bass, 30 cts.; 9 Organ, 75 cts.; 10 Piano, 50 cts. Sent on receipt of price. Any of the above numbers in one book, bound. Mass in F, Flat, Mass in E Sharp, stitched, $1 50; bound in boards, $2 00; in cloth, $2 50. Tedium copy, by F. Weiss, 40 cts. To Drum, by F. A. Wenzel, $1 00. Jerusalem, 25 per cent off. Five or more sent with order, 25 per cent off. Will be sent on receipt of price.
F. W. RAUCH, Cincinnati, O.
Publisher of Sacred Music.

CURED IN ONE DAY. Cure Guaranteed. Dr. Sanford's Liver Invigorator. Best Family Medicine. Cures Constipation, Piles, Jaundice, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Fever and Ague, Malaria, Blood Poison, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Nausea, Nervous Headache, Costiveness, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colic, Pain in the Side and Chest, Worms, and all kindred complaints. Purely vegetable, mild and pleasant. Fifty cents. Sold by druggists. Genuine has our signature on wrapper. DR. SANFORD'S INVIGORATOR, 162 Fulton St., N. Y.

A. W. MYER,
PRACTICAL
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
No. 1014 Market Street,
Opposite Fifth. San Francisco.
Watches, Clocks, Jewelry and Music Boxes Repaired and Satisfaction Guaranteed.

CARFIELD Agents wanted for Life of President Garfield. A complete to press, by the President's brother, Full time, well. Books all ready for delivery. Fifteen of the illustrated volume. Endorsed as first. Liberal terms. Agents take orders for from 20 to 50 copies daily. Outfits, any other book, 50 cts. Agents never make money so fast. The book sells itself. Experience not necessary. Fifteen volumes. All make immense profits. Private terms free. Common Sense & Co., Portland, Maine.

PAPAL MASS
—BY—
Rev. Father Di Marzo, O.P.
ENDORSED BY ALL THE LEADING PAPERS AND Bishops of America, as being the finest modern composition of its kind.
The organists of all the Catholic Churches in the United States, when they try it and sing it, will echo its merits.
Price, retail, $1 50. To the Clergy and Teachers, $1 25.
J. B. O'CONNOR & CO,
AGENTS.
23 Dupont Street, S. F.

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
—ALSO—
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

FIRE!! FIRE!!
JNO. R. SIMS & SON,
Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.
LITHOGRAPHERS. DESIGNERS
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
416 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.
SENT FREE on application—BRIGGS & SHUR'S Flower and Vegetable Catalogue. Our Seeds are reliable. SELL SEED LOW. ROCHESTER, N.Y. or CHICAGO, ILL.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. This refers to all the principal trainers and horsemen on the Pacific Coast.
N. B. My acknowledged superiority in this branch of business is largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "surfaces" in the United States. The benefits of which reverts to the public in the shape of a superior, well-served article. Sole Agent for A. B. Dixon's Condition Powders and Horse Medicines. Agent for Pettibone's Celebrated Hightops. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English Ladies' and Gentlemen's saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and 3-ply race saddles. JOHN O'KANE.

SAVE YOUR MONEY
—UNTIL YOU SEE THE—BARGAINS
—OFFERED AT THE—
X L N T AUCTION HOUSE,
530 and 532 Kearny Street,
Bet. California and Sacramento Sts. San Francisco
MIERSON, JEWELL & CO.,
Proprietors.
Our Superb Stock Comprises
Clothing, Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats and Caps, TRUNKS, VALISES AND SATCHELS,
Rubber Boots, Etc.,
AT
the lowest Auction prices.
C. H. Mierson devote their talents, a home for all respectably dressed men to be in a religion in the Society of the Catholic

T. G. PARKER & CO.,
MERCHANT TAILORS,
418 Montgomery Street,
☞ Bet. California and Sacramento Sts. ☜

SWAIN'S
Family Bakery and Dining Saloon,
No. 636 Market Street.
Wedding Cakes, Ice Cream, Sherbets, Jellies, etc. Particularly on hand and made to order.
FAMILIES SUPPLIED.

C. E. PEARSON, Manager.

GRAND ORIENTAL CASH MARKET
1262 Market Street,
Bet. Taylor and Jones San Francisco

FLETCHER & JONAS,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN
Beast American Meats.
OUR MOTTO: Fine Meats, Full Weight and Low Prices.

MISS C. J. JERABECK,
FLORIST,
39 GEARY STREET,
Bet. Kearny and Dupont Sts. San Francisco
Boquets, Baskets, Funeral and Wedding Designs, Cut Flowers, Etc.
Wax Flowers Kept on Hand in Great Variety.
Flowers Preserved so as to keep a Natural Appearance.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the writing of one letter, making one remittance, keeping one account, paying one freight or express charge, one can get any kind of goods wanted, and every item more (generally less) than when ordering direct from the dealer. It also has facilities for procuring any private or public business matters needing personal and prompt attention. The advantage of thus in acting as your agent are more valuable than ever. Address
THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 25 Barclay street, and 36 Park Place.

WHAT YOU WANT TO KNOW
—AND—
SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING
WHERE TO PURCHASE CHEAP
THE FINEST TEAS
—AND—
CHOICEST COFFEES
Pure and unadulterated, at the
GREAT AMERICAN
Importing Tea Co.'s,
NEW TEA STORES,
522 and 524 Kearny street,
146 and 148 Ninth St.
San Francisco.
☞ It will pay you to try them. They are the only climate Tea and Coffee stores in the city. They are docked on the Eastern style.

BOOK-BINDERS
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
416 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PENSIONS.
ARE PAID when disabled or on account of death, to officers, soldiers, sailors, marines, and their heirs. Pensions are granted for all disabilities. Pensions are granted to widows, children, and dependent relatives. Pensions are granted for all diseases. Pensions are granted for all wounds. Pensions are granted to all who are disabled by accident or rupture. Pensions are granted to all who are disabled by the ravages of time. Pensions are granted to all who are disabled by the ravages of disease. Pensions are granted to all who are disabled by the ravages of war. Address, with stamp, for full information, P. H. Fitzgerald & Co., Box 1, Washington, D. C. Mention this paper every time you write.

EXCELSIOR STRAW WORKS,
120 Fourth Street.
Leave Cal. Dock and Ferries to the north, Leave the Railroad Depot Ferry, cross one block.
A. H. LAFITTE, PROPRIETOR.

DR. GEO. J. COOK.
108 Geary Street.
HOURS FROM 9 A. M. TO 4 P. M. EXCLUSIVELY FOR the Treatment of Piles, Fistula and other diseases of the rectum.

The Golden Palace
TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street,
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.
THE CHEAPEST GROCERIES ONLY SELL FOR CASH and sell at prices that defy competition. Families can positively save money by trading at this store. Well assorted and selected teas, coffees, and groceries always on hand. Fresh ground coffees a specialty. Sugar cured hams, bacon and lard. Pure leaf lard in tins. Butter and lard sold by the pound. Eastern butter, cheese, etc. Fresh eggs

Market

Domestic Produce Market

WHEAT—A fine ship during October, the c realized at $2,366,673; s $2,007,000 for September, for the central year of 6, $26,035,666. The failure sent in the extraordinary for port, that suitable for register. Quite a percent unable to find room at the Of course freight are wo nominal, as shippers and owners are apart in their views, and no charters are reported on the spot. The heavy influx of tonnage acts as a counterbalance to the continued weakening of the foreign markets, and prices were consequently maintained. The sales reported to-day were 2,000 sks No. 1, $1 76@; 500 and 100 tons and 1,000 and 500 sks do, $1 75; 100 tons No. 2, $1 72½; 700 sks do, $1 70; 160 tons off grade, $1 65, and 100 tons do, $1 60. No. 1 is quotable at $1 76@$1 76½ and No. 2 at $1 70@$1 72½ ⅌ ctl.

BARLEY—Opens very dull to-day, with a single sale of 600 sks good feed at $1 65. Holders of Chevalier hope for a decline in trouble, owing to the remarkably large fleet in port, which will present an opportunity to ship this description to England. Feed is quotable at $1 40@$1 42½; Brewing, $1 60@$1 70; for light and $1 60@$1 62½ for bright brawy; standard Chevalier, $1 75@$1 75½; coast do, $1 62½@$1 67½ ⅌ ctl.

OATS—The market is firmly held, but purchasers are apathetic and trade is slow. No sales to-day. Good and choice, $1 47½@$1 52½; common $1 40@$1 45; Surprise, $1 75 ⅌ ctl.

CORN—On Change this morning, 2,000 sks Mixed Yellow at $1 26, mostly to 100 sack lots. Sale also of 200 sks small round Yellow, $1 27½ ⅌ ctl. White is nominal.

HAY—Wheat, old, $12@$14; wild oats, $9@$12; volunteer and stable, $8@$10; cow, $8@$9.50 ⅌ ton.

RYE—Market is firmer. Sale of 200 sks at $1 00 ⅌ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 50 ⅌ ctl.

STRAW—For bale, 65@65c.

POTATOES—Oregon are in large supply, but quotations are nominal, as no sales of Salmon River's arrivals have yet been made. The market opens weak. Cuffey Cows sold at $1 25@$1 30; Petaluma and Tomatoes, 90@1 00; River Reds, 75@90c; Early Rose, 65@75c; Humboldt Reds $1 25@1 37½; Sweet Potatoes ⅌ ctl.

ONIONS—Market is quiet at 75@75c ⅌ ctl.

CORNMEAL, ETC—Table Meal, 2c⅌ lb; Feed Wheat, $34 ⅌ ton; Hominy 4@4½c ⅌ lb.

BEESWAX—28@29c ⅌ lb.

BUTTER—Opens steady and unchanged. Fancy, 47@; fresh and Choice California roll, 43@45c; fair and good do, 40@41c; mixed lots from country stores 36@38c; brine, 34@36c; Pickled roll, 34@35c; Eastern, 20@22c ⅌ lb.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 18@20c; California, 14@15c ⅌ lb.

POULTRY—Prices are steady. Live Turkeys ⅌ lb 13@15c for Hens, and 13@15c for Gobblers; Geese, ⅌ pair $1 50@2 00; Ducks ⅌ doz, $4 50@5 50; Hens, $4 50@6; Roosters, young, $4 50@5 50; do, old, $4@5; Broilers, $3@3 50.

EGGS—The market opens firm to-day for Choice California, Oregon, 36@38c; California 34@36c; Utah, 27@30c; Eastern 25@30c ⅌ doz.

POMPEROY'S PEARS—Wisconsin Cranberries, $12@14 ⅌ bbl; Grapes 50c@$1 50 per box; Pears, 75c@$1 50 ⅌ box and 1 basket; Apples, 50c@$1 25 ⅌ box; Strawberries, $10 ⅌ chest.

VEGETABLES—Egg Plant is out of the market. Marrowfat Squash, 3c@3½c ⅌ lb; Okra 50c@$1 ⅌ box; Tomatoes, 25c@$1 ⅌ box; Cabbage 75c@1 ⅌ ctl; Cauliflower, 75c@1 ⅌ dozen; Carrots, 35c@; Turnips, 75c; Beets, 65c; Parsnips, 75c@1 ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 3@3½c; Artichokes, 25c ⅌ dozen; Green Chile Peppers, 75c ⅌ box; dry do, 15c ⅌ lb.

MARRIED.

BREEN-BURNS—On the 26th ult. in St. John's church, by Rev. A. Cullen, Mr. Edward Joseph Breen and Miss Mary J. Burns.

DONOVAN-KELLY—On the 1st inst. in St. John's church, by Rev. A. Cullen, Mr. Jeremiah J. Donovan and Miss Annie Kelly.

DIED.

HART—In Kildalkey, County Meath, Ireland, Patrick Hart brother of the late John Hart and father of Mrs. Anna Mulvey, of this city.

MCCLUSKEY—In this city, Oct. 28, Grace, beloved wife of James McCluskey, daughter of the late Patrick Field, a native of Co. Donegal, Ireland, aged 44 years.

MCCANN—In this city, at her late residence, 136 Hyde street, Oct. 31, Cecelia, beloved wife of Thomas H. McCann, a native of New Orleans, La., aged 46 years, 11 months and 17 days.

O'NEILL—In this city, Oct. 28, Patrick O'Neill aged 83 years.

SWEENEY—In this city, October 31, Michael Sweeney, a native of Ireland, aged 51 years.

MALONEY—At Cuffey's Cove, on May 16th, fortified by the Sacraments of the Church, Mrs. Jenny E. Maloney, a native of Listowel, County Kerry, Ireland, aged 57 years. May she rest in peace.

PRESIDENTS OF IRISH BLOOD.

The New York Commercial credits two Presidents, Jackson and Arthur, to the Irish emigrant, the father of each having been born in Ireland. The Pilot Observer adds, James Buchanan, whose father, it says, emigrated from Donegal eight years before the President was born. A fourth is put on the list by the Buffalo Courier, in the person of James K. Polk, who, the Courier says, "was of Scotch Irish descent." The Irish emigrant he certainly does his share in America.

Why Wear Plasters?

They may relieve, but they can't cure that lame back, for the kidneys are the trouble and you want a remedy that acts directly on these sovereigns to purify and restore their healthy condition. Kidney Wort has that specific action—and at the same time it regulates the bowels perfectly. Don't wait to get sick, but get a package to-day and cure yourself. Liquid and dry sold by all Druggists.—Germantown Telegraph.

Have Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand.

It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption, and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle.

— We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of P. H. Fitzgerald & Co., in another column, showing how every soldier disabled by accident or otherwise, can secure a pension.

— Tourists and the traveling public in general, will find it to their interest to visit the Arcade Photo. Studio, 914 Market Street, for first-class work at lowest prices. All work warranted and equal to any competitor. Mrs. N. Fetzer (formerly of Stockton), proprietress. E. E. Higgins, operator.

As a Cure for Piles

Kidney-Wort acts first by overcoming in the mildest manner all tendency to constipation; then, by its great tonic property, it strengthens the system, restores to health the debilitated and weakened parts. We have hundreds of certified cures, where all else had failed. Use it and suffer no longer.—Exchange.

— Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are a perfect revelation in medicine, put up, inclosed in glass bottles, always fresh. By all druggists.

— O'Brien & Ward's long established employment office, 610 Clay street, furnishes help and makes no charge to employers. At this establishment can always be had hotel help, farm hands, teamsters, outsiders, shipboards, sawmill hands, mechanics, gardeners, coachmen and married couples for private families and ranches.

— Use nothing else but MERINO SOAP.

THE MONITOR.

Advertisements.

APEST PLACE
O BUY—
STOVES, LAMPS,
LIERS, ETC.
IS AT & McBRIDE'S Oil Store,
North street.

All kinds of Lubricating Oils constantly on hand.
☞ Goods delivered free to any part of the city

ARTICLES OF DEVOTION, PIANOS AND ORGANS,
—AT—
J. B. O'Connor & Co.,
23 DUPONT ST., S. F.

Special Announcement
M. J. SAHLEIN,
922 Market street,
Has received within the past few days from the EAST a full line of FALL NOVELTIES, CONSISTING OF—
Fringes, Gimps, Passementeries, Jet and Steel Ornaments, Necklaces,
Also the Latest Novelties in LACE TIES, FANS, HOSIERY and BUTTONS.
In order to make room for additional novelties which will be received daily, goods will be sold at the More Reasonable Prices. Please call and see for yourselves. Remember the number
922 MARKET STREET, S. F.
(Between Stockton and Powell.)

The Original Pioneer Stove & Tin Store.
J. BERTRAM, Dealer in all kinds of STOVES, RANGES,
Tinware and Cooking Utensils,
PLUMBING AND GAS FITTING.
1017 Folsom Street,
Near 8th. San Francisco.
☞ All kinds of Cans made to order.

KIDNEY-WORT
DOES WHY?
WONDERFUL CURES!
Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.
Because it strengthens the muscles, the seat of pain, diseases known that develope in Kidney and Dropsical Swellings, Rheumatism, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or its Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and Female Complaints.
SEE WHAT PEOPLE SAY:
Eugene S. Stack, of Junction City, Ecsema, Kidney-Wort cured him after regular doctors had been trying for four years.
Jos. Jones, of Wilmington, Ohio, says he was given up to die by four prominent physicians and was cured by two bottles of Kidney-Wort.
E. M. B. Goodwin, an editor in Chardon, Ohio, says he was a wreck of misery, but Kidney-Wort made him a well man.
Jesse L. Jarvis, of Hartford, Conn., says Kidney-Wort cured him after Doctors, Bitters and other compositions was ended by his use of Kidney-Wort.
John B. Lawrence of Jackson, Tenn., suffered for years with Kidney Disease, Piles, Constipation, Rolling Stomach, Dizziness, Sick Headache. Kidney-Wort made him well.
Richard Dean of Montgomery Center, Vt., suffered eight years with Kidney Difficulty and Dropsical Swelling. Kidney-Wort made him a well man.
PERMANENTLY CURES
KIDNEY DISEASES,
LIVER COMPLAINTS,
Constipation and Piles.
It will stand up in Dry Vegetable Form in 50 cents, one package of which makes six quarts of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated, for those who prefer it to prepare themselves.
It acts with equal efficacy in either form.
Dry or Liquid (Kidney-Wort) is sold by all Druggists.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Prop's.
BURLINGTON, VT.
Send for the dry or liquid, postpaid, on receipt of price.

SOLID GOLD WATCHES, AT
LUNDY'S!
Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.
Ladies' Solid Gold Watches, 14 karat, Hunting Case, Stem Winders $125.00
Ladies' Solid Gold Watches, 18 karat, Hunting Case, Stem Winders 150.00
Gents' Solid Gold Watches, 18 karat, Hunting Case, Stem Winders 200.00
Gents' Hunting Case Silver Watch, stem winder and winder 15.00
Gents' Hunting Case Silver Watch, key winder 12.00
Nickel Stem winding Watches, at which I have just received 500, will be sold at 7.50
Deep Dial Alarm Clock 3.50
Marble Alarm Clock 3.50
Jewelry Assortment Complete.
Beautiful Marbleized Iron Clocks (eight day) 10.00
Sole Agent for Nickle Muller's Sun Clocks and Arcade Figures.
Every Watch and Clock sold warranted a good timepiece. All orders promptly attended to.
Goods sent to any part of the country C. O. D. All orders promptly attended to.
LUNDY'S
Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

HOPE FOR THE AFFLICTED!
Dr. Peck'sAnti-Fat
Has been the Novitiate of the Future home for all respects feel in themselves a desire to devote their talents, religion in the Society of the Catholic

New Advertisements.

REAL ESTATE
FOR SALE BY Thomas Magee,
PUBLISHER
REAL ESTATE CIRCULAR
20 Montgomery Street
Opposite Lick House.

New Property.

McAllister, near Market, north side, w. of Leavenworth, 27x137½ and five story and embalmed basement dwelling, separate bags and entrance, 6 and 7 rooms and modern conveniences, also one story 2b rear; $14,000.

444|272; $9,000; flatter, beyond Leavenworth side, or 7|137½; if desired.

Very fine view of lake; N. W. corner Washington and Octavia, 3 blocks beyond Franklin, 50 x 80 and house, well, etc.; $60,000.

Shotwell street, N. side, between Octavia and Laguna, 50x122; $7,000.

N. side Washington, between Franklin and Gough; 80x127, on rise, very fine view.

Sixth, N. side Folk, between Hayes and Grove, and large sun story house; $7,800; 1|1 blocks only from Market; 2 blocks from Market; 1 block from Grove.

$46,000; Rents $500. Fine business investment, at Broadway and 13th, at ticket office and depot, Oakland.

Cor. Taylor and Green streets, 60x60; and house $5,000. See owner.

New Houses and Lot, $4,000; west side Steiner, one block beyond Fillmore, and from Geary, 25x97; and very neat, stylish two story of six rooms and bathroom complete; or will sell with furniture for $3,000.

Cor. Sutter and Steiner, 137½ x 137½; 2 houses; $12,000; or will divide into 4 lots at $3,000 each.

Money and Lot; $750. Western Addition, 25 x 120; cottage of 5 rooms; $1,250.

Sixth; $1,050. Larkin, near Filbert, on grade; size 25 x 100; 1 block from Market; and a very rare place.

Other Property.

Mission, 1st Front and Second, 22x60; and stable; front cottage of 6 rooms; $2,250.

Sutter; Mason, First and Second; 2 houses; $1,750.

Sixth st. lot; $1,300. Cor. Minna; 25x100; $1,300.

Two lots, Hermann, W. side, bet. 24th and 25th; each 25x122; $1,000 each; 10 blocks also in rear beautiful homes.

NE cor. Ellis and Pierce, 80x87½; $2,000; 1 cottage, 5 rooms; rent $15 per month.

Fell, bet Octavia and Laguna; 27½x120 to rear; $1,000.

Flats, 25 or 50x137½; N side Washington, bet Webster and Fillmore.

Market st, $1,400; 3 lots; 25x115; N side, near Sanchez; and back 3 houses each 25x100; best offer.

Sacramento st, above Franklin; fine house and lot, 34x137½; $8,000; one of the best blocks in the city.

Washington, between Powell and Mason, 27x137½ and large, nearly new, fine residence of 11 rooms and conveniences; modern style; all large lofty rooms; block well built up; $16,000.

California st, bet. Fillmore and Steiner; 34x137½; and fine modern house, 9 rooms and all conveniences; $10,000.

Pacific Square; $14,000, corner 50-vara house and grounds northwest corner Pacific and Buchanan; very fine view of bay.

NE corner Broadway and Laguna, 50x137½; magnificent view which will never be cut off; $18,000.

$3,100 Only; house and lot, 1216 Geary 30x137½, near Franklin; cost $4,000; must be sold now; see this.

Harrison, near Powell, bet. Fourth and Fifth; 25x80; $1,000; 5 blocks from cars; $800.

Stockton street, bet. Sacramento and Clay; Friday, sold 3 story house of 12 rooms; rents $45; $6,000.

UNION FURNITURE COMPANY.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
ST. IGNATIUS HALL. 855 MARKET STREET Opposite The Baldwin
The Largest Warehouse and the best assorted Stock of Furniture on the Coast.
COUNTRY DEALERS can purchase here cheaper than at any other house in the City. A large assortment of SECOND HAND FURNITURE and CARPETS constantly on hand. Call and examine our assortment and prices before purchasing elsewhere. Satisfaction guaranteed. Orders by mail will receive prompt and careful attention. GOODS PACKED FOR COUNTRY BUYERS.
☞ Send for anything you require and obtain our Prices.

Liquor Dealers, Druggists, and Grocers.
Sencrite picking DAMIANA LEAVES for manufacturing the Bitters.
LEWIS RICE, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 12 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco.
Gives Health and Strength! Cures Dyspepsia! Gives Appetite!
DAMIANA BITTERS!
The Mexican Remedy for Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder.

JONAS J. MORRISON,
LUMBER DEALER,
Corner Mission and Spear Streets, SAN FRANCISCO
LUMBER YARD
A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood Paper Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.
Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

229 222 BUSH STREET. 224 226
CALIFORNIA FURNITURE
Unequalled for quality of workmanship.
The Largest Stock. The Latest Styles.
CALL AND SEE BEFORE PURCHASING!
GOODS SHOWN WITH PLEASURE.
MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

HODGES
CLOAK
AND
SUIT ROOMS,
10 Fifth St., near Market St. S. F.
☞ We have a large variety of the Latest Styles Cloaks and Dolmans ready for immediate wear, for Ladies' Misses' from $4 00 up. Also, a Full Line of Ladies' Suits, Walking Suits, Dresses and Ulsters, Etc. Special attention to Orders at Lowest Rates.

HEALD'S BUSINESS COLLEGE,
24 Post Street, San Francisco.
Opposite Mechanics' Institute.
CONTINUES TO IMPART SUCH BUSINESS EDUCATION as has made its graduates in demand for the most thrifty years in the Western States. Its Graduates occupy positions. Pupils are filled for the month they room, by mail or telegraph. SPECIAL BUSINESS TRAINING. Our Circulars sent all to inquirers, or address
E. P. HEALD,
President Business College, San Francisco.

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Coos Bay Coal at . . . . . $ 7.50 a ton
Eastport Coal at . . . . . 9.00 a ton
Seattle Coal at . . . . . 9.50 a ton
Scotch Coal at . . . . . 10.00 a ton
West Martley Coal at . . . . . 10.50 a ton
and Wellington Coal at . . . . . 11.50 a ton
Cider at Gas House Rates Delivered Free.
Nos. 1113 and 1115 Mission Street.
Pioneer Soap Co.,
MANUFACTURERS OF MERINO SOAP
(And all other kinds of Soap.)
OFFICE: 215 Sacramento street.
FACTORY: 106 Brannan street, S. F.

WANTED
An active industrious man of steady habits to travel in section in which he resides. Permanent employment and good compensation to an energetic man. References required.
SENTINEL PUBLISHING CO.
311 Broadway, New York.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATTRACTIONS!
Having for the past four months employed the full force of our FACTORY in the preparation of a stock of goods for the fall and HOLIDAY trade that should surpass all exhibitions heretofore made by us, we now offer an assortment of DIAMOND WORK, FINE JEWELRY, and NOVELTIES that will stand the test of the closest criticisms as to STYLE, QUALITY, and PRICE.
In imported goods, our facilities enable us to offer the best manufactures of WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., on the most favorable terms.
Our assortment is beyond question the LARGEST, the FINEST, and the CHEAPEST on this coast.
All goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.
Orders by mail will be as promptly and cheerfully answered, and on the same terms, as though selections were made in person.
GEO. C. SHREVE & CO.,
110 MONTGOMERY STREET.

"INSTALLMENT PLAN."
Furniture, Carpets and Oil Cloths
ON EASY TERMS.
KITTERMAN, 1318 Stockton street.

3,000 Allotment
In order to secure the benefit of this unequalled offer, it will be necessary to make immediate application.
The Great Western Publishing Company, (Incorporated), of the Lawhead Publishing Company, Lockport, Illinois, will be sent free of charge, to the first 3,000 subscribers, a copy of the Lawhead Publishing Company's Illustrated Catalogue of Choice Books, Pictures, Etc., Etc., Etc., (Retail Value $1.00), and the Great Western Publishing Co. will also expend Twenty-five Cents, on making the Presents will be promptly packed, and all charges prepaid in any point. The original cost of the Catalogue is made to cover the expense, which amount must be remitted with the application.
SUBSCRIPTION APPLICATION
To be Cut Out and Forwarded to the Great Western Publishing Company, Lockport, Illinois.
The undersigned hereby agrees to the above offer, and has enclosed the amount of Twenty-five Cents, in full payment for the Catalogue, and the Lawhead Publishing Co. will send the Catalogue and Presents to the undersigned, at the address given below.
Name
Post Office
County
State
THE TRINITY OF LOVELY GRACES.
This Premium Engraving is without doubt, the finest art work ever offered in this country. It is a magnificent Steel Engraving, 22 inches long by 16 inches wide, and is the original copyright of the Lawhead Publishing Co. Each subscriber will receive the original copy of the Lawhead Publishing Co. Each subscriber will receive the original copy of the Lawhead Publishing Co. Each subscriber will receive the original copy

Poetry.

[For the MONITOR.]

LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

(The following verses are translated from the Irish. No poem having been written on NOAH, the last of the northern mastodons who died in the latter part of the last century, "Ireland's Harp" has substituted one of the ancient moral ground of Ossian, beside the accidental same year of Finbal's Dutch land, over looking the expelled round towers of Lough Neagh's mystic waters.)

A wake! arise! the cock's shrill horn
Troubles the silence of the morn;
Far an in heaven the skylark flings
The yearly dew drops from his wings;
Skyward I hear his matin prayer
Like faint music in the air.
Oh, feel to throw such hours away
While nature's glories wake to-day.

The mists are creeping from the hills
The chirrella' sings the forest trills;
He notes resound o'er hill and brae
To welcome in the new-born day.
Wing aloft's incubus from your eyes
And meet the morning ere it flies.

Far eastward o'er dark Lough Neagh a-blim
A glittering shield with golden rim
Up rises slowly from the foam,
Shimmering the hills of green Tyrone.

Bright as Golconda's richest gem,
Radiant on spray and leafy stem,
The glittering dew-like crystal lies,
Bedi as the glance from beauty's eyes;
Wake, drowsy, wake, the earth and air
Resound with praise; resound with prayer.

From Loolly Mena's roof-tree high
The spiral smoke ascends the sky;
Like incense pleasing heaven's blue height
From censer swing by acolyte.
The loosened lambs from pen set free
Bound over the plains in wanton glee.
The herdsman's call reechoes
The moorlands to dark Assaroe.

Oh, glorious dawn, resplendent hour!
From snowy thorn and opening flower
Sweet exhalations fills the air
'Tis nature's solace in silent prayer.
Oh, eloquent breaks the chanted strain
Your soul and sense in drowsy sleep,
Awake! arise! slumbers and arise
To join our morning sacrifice.

San Francisco. E. Mitti.

Literary Miscellany.

How Tom Purcell was "Served."

AN IRISH SKETCH.

It was with no small feeling of relief that I turned away from the horrors of an eviction scene, and doubtless the driver of a passing car to get me into Bantry as quickly as possible.

"Well, begor, air, but that was square work-to-day anyhow," said he leaning familiarly over the side of the car which I occupied. "He me sorr I don't think they'll be a process server seen this side o' the country again for some time."

"I should think not," I replied as I thought of the unfortunate old man who, but for the timely arrival of the police, would have lost his life at Ballycther during the day.

"Wahs, air," continued my driver, "would ye believe, bys I tried me hand at the sarvin' wanat myself."

After expressing my surprise that he should have chosen a calling so precarious, he replied: "Well, don't ye blame me anyhow till ye hear me out. Ye know, sir, the wahs don't say anything about it that could get me into a bould; an' as we've a good spell o' the journey, and a long night before us, I'll up and tell you the whole story.

"It's now near thirty years next Candlemass since me father (God be merciful to him) died an' I first took on to the drivin. I wasn't at it very long when, if ye please, I took it into my head to get married—for ever since I was a slip of a gossoon I had my eye on Molly Doolen. Molly like meself was after loan' the ould people, an' was in service; so there was no wan to prevent our marryin.

"Faith—though I suppose 'tian't right for me to say it—but at that time there was not a finer girl in the six parishes round than the same Molly. She was thin, a tall straight damsel wid hair as beautiful as the sunshine on Bantry of a summer's evenin,' an' eyes as wild an' as sparkin' as a clean run o' poatheen; an' a face as if ye see the shadow of it in a stream—be me sowl—ye'd leap in d' Iwas academy thatthe Falls of Niagara. Well, anyway, betune the jigs an' the reels we got married, an' faith 'tis comfortable an' happy enough—we were—for some time.

"Wan could night as good luck should have it, I was comin' home after drivin a newspaper man like yourself (good luck to your honor) into Bantry, an' twas freezin' like blazes the same night; well the bitter mare was gin' as smooth as a cat after a tripe—wonder, when all's said, what she slipped an' fell; an' I barely escaped, sin kilt myself.

"I called out a couple of the nabors, an' we soon found out that her two foremost legs was broken, so we were obliged to put her out o' pain; an' nasty's the salty tear I let for her.

"After comin' home I sould the car for a thrifle an' took on to doin' a little farmin' or a bit of laborin' work, or anythin' at all that would keep the hunger out from Molly an' the children—for I forgot to tell ye bonor that we were after bein' two. But the times got bad, an' the work wasn't there; an' mind ye one morinn' I was obliged to go out! idout a taste of breakfast in me stomack. I was valiant, an' I set down the bit of a street wid a sorrowful heart an' a hungry craw, when who do you think comes up to me but Jack Connell the bailey.

"Good-morrow, Mick," says he, for he was always free makin' an' aisy like, the bastoon be his bed (for he's dead he this).

"Good-morrow, kindly, Master Jack," says I.

"Well Mick, Jeddey, says he, how is Molly an' all the children?

"Poorly, yer honor, poorly, says I.

"I'm sorry to hear it Mick, says he.

"Glad aren. I know that, sir, says I.

"Begor, Mick, says he, I think I'd be able to put somethin' in yer way, says he, ye don'd the phuck to do it?

"Wahs, faith, sir, says I, I'd do anything at all honest that would bring in a wale o' victuals to the poor craythurs at home.

"Then, says he, wahs thing, Mick, says he, ye know cold Tom Purcell?

"Know him" says I, the ould villian—an' well.

"Faith, Mick, says he, he's into a heap o' trouble of late. The ould estates is gone to the dogs; an' to make a long story short would you serve a writ on him? says he.

"Hedad, yer honor, says I, if we're poor we're decent, an I didn't come to been a process server yet, says I, speakin' up to him.

"But, says he, it ill be as good as a tim pound note to you if you'll do it.

"Well, sir, final I forgive me, but I was tempted, I was thinkin' what a limb ould Tom was in his day, always turnin out the poor to starve afin the roads, an' among me nor poor grain father, glory to him (tonight) an' thin again I remembered Molly with her beautiful face pinched by d' Church land, an' the two children crym o' starvation, an' fair me mind was med up in a minute.

"Begor, says I to Jack, begor, says I I do it.

"Aisy, says Jack, aisy a second, says he, an' come in here, says he, an lay me tell ye the whole story.

"Well, me bould Mr. Jack took me into the office an' tould me all about the trouble they had in regard o' sarvin Tom. How he barricaded up the doors an' wouldn't leave man 'nor mortal next or near the place—let alone a bailiff; an that many a the fellow tried to serve him, an' was near being shot for his throuble.

"Oh, be this an' be that, says I to Jack, I'll sarve him, for I'd an ould grudge agin the same Tom be the way he thrated me gran father. I'll sarve him, says I, in spite o' Doctor Forster, if you'll only show me how.

"So, after gettin' instructions from Jack in regard to the 'riginal an' the copy: an a couple o' shillins to get a-suntho to sit. I made the best o my way home.

"Never a word I said to Molly about it, an' the next mornin after four o'clock away I staked for Tom's house, wid the riginal in wan o' me trousers' pockets, the copy in the other, an a sampers in the heel o me fist.

"After a purty smart walk of a couple of miles I came up wid Tom's house, an sure enough there it was barricaded like the charge o' Hallyclava, wid all kinds o' plunder an' harrows, an the Lord knows what drawn up agin the doors. I threw off me coat and wesket an bounced up a big sorkymore tree just over-right a windy an as I looked begor, there was ould Tom himself smearin away like a porkypine in a few dirty grass.

"Down I slips again an kicks up the mornings delight in the haggart, screhin an roarin, an' dancin, an singin, the same as if I was out of me senses.

"Twasn't long, anyway, till I heard a noise in the house, and behold ye-who comes to the windy but me bould Tom. What did I do, bys! I picked the sorrow, and up the tree wid me. I tied wan end of it to a bough, tied the other round me neck (God preserve us), an I jumped down purtenlin I was hangin' meself—keepin a strong hould of the rope for fear o' doin' it in earnest. I wasn't long hanging when I heard ould Nancy Malone, Tom's housekeeper, roarin murdhr murdhr, that there was a poor idiot boy hangin himself in the haggart, goin' to the other world, says she, 'idiot priest or diethur.' In a half a jiffey I feela Tom grabbin me be the heels.

"'Hould on a minute,' says he, 'don't destherey yerself like that,' says, he, 'goin up the tree and cuttin' the sampers. Down I hops, an he ran over an' ketched a hould o me.

"'What the blazes are ye up to' says he.

"'All right, me hayro, says I, I'd do more

"'Then, says he, wahs thing, Mick, says he, ye know cold Tom Purcell?

"'Know him' says I, the ould villian—an' well.

"'Faith, Mick, says he, he's into a heap o' trouble of late. The ould estates is gone to the dogs; an to make a long story short would you serve a writ on him' says he.

"'Hedad, yer honor, says I, if we're poor we're decent, an I didn't come to been a process server seen this side o' the country again for some time."

"'I should think not,' I replied as I thought of the unfortunate old man who, but for the timely arrival of the police, would have lost his life at Ballycther during the day.

"'Wahs, air,' continued my driver, 'would ye believe, bys I tried me hand at the sarvin' wanat myself.'

"After expressing my surprise that he should have chosen a calling so precarious, he replied: "Well, don't ye blame me anyhow till ye hear me out. Ye know, sir, the wahs don't say anythin about it that could get me into a bould; an as we've a good spell o' the journey, and a long night before us, I'll up and tell you the whole story.

"'It's now near thirty years next Candlemass since me father (God be merciful to him) died an' I first took on to the drivin. I wasn't at it very long when, if ye please, I took it into my head to get married—for ever since I was a slip of a gossoon I had my eye on Molly Doolen. Molly like meself was after loan' the ould people, an' was in service; so there was no wan to prevent our marryin.

"'Faith—though I suppose 'tian't right for me to say it—but at that time there was not a finer girl in the six parishes round than the same Molly. She was thin, a tall straight damsel wid hair as beautiful as the sunshine on Bantry of a summer's evenin,' an' eyes as wild an as sparkin' as a clean run o' poatheen; an' a face as if ye see the shadow of it in a stream—be me sowl—ye'd leap in d' Iwas academy thatthe Falls of Niagara. Well, anyway, betune the jigs an' the reels we got married, an' faith 'tis comfortable an' happy enough—we were—for some time.

"'Wan could night as good luck should have it, I was comin' home after drivin a newspaper man like yourself (good luck to your honor) into Bantry, an' twas freezin' like blazes the same night; well the bitter mare was gin' as smooth as a cat after a tripe—wonder, when all's said, what she slipped an' fell; an' I barely escaped, sin kilt myself.

"'I called out a couple of the nabors, an' we soon found out that her two foremost legs was broken, so we were obliged to put her out o' pain; an' nasty's the salty tear I let for her.

"'After comin' home I sould the car for a thrifle an' took on to doin' a little' farmin' or a bit of laborin' work, or anythin' at all that would keep the hunger out from Molly an' the children—for I forgot to tell ye bonor that we were after bein' two. But the times got bad, an' the work wasn't there; an' mind ye one mornin' I was obliged to go out! idout a taste of breakfast in me stomack. I was valiant, an' I set down the bit of a street wid a sorrowful heart an' a hungry craw, when who do you think comes up to me but Jack Connell the bailey.

"'Good-morrow, Mick,' says he, for he was always free makin' an' aisy like, the bastoon be his bed (for he's dead he this).

"'Good-morrow, kindly, Master Jack,' says I.

"'Well Mick, Jeddey, says he, how is Molly an' all the children?

"'Poorly, yer honor, poorly, says I.

"'I'm sorry to hear it Mick, says he.

"'Glad aren. I know that, sir, says I.

"'Begor, Mick, says he, I think I'd be able to put somethin' in yer way, says he, ye don'd the phuck to do it?

"'Wahs, faith, sir, says I, I'd do anything at all honest that would bring in a wale o' victuals to the poor craythurs at home.

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY..... NOVEMBER 2.

Death of Archbishop John MacHale.

A telegram from Ireland, yesterday morning, brought the sad intelligence that Most Rev. Joun MacHale, Archbishop of Tuam, was dead. This news will revive in the minds of many readers of the MONITOR the memory of one of the best known Bishops in Ireland, and one who has exercised more influence over the people of that land, in the past, than any other Prelate of modern days.

Archbishop MacHale was born in the year 1786, in the parish of Adragool, at the foot of Mount Nephin, one of the most romantic portions of the county Mayo. In 1812 he was sent to Maynooth, where he completed his theological studies and was ordained, continuing as Professor of dogmatic theology in that College until he was nominated as coadjutor to the venerable Dr. Waldron, Bishop of Killala. He was consecrated by Archbishop Murray, in June, 1826, and, ten years later, he was appointed to succeed Archbishop O'Kelly in Tuam, over which he has presided during forty-five years of the ninety-three years during which he lived.

Such is the summary of the ecclesiastical career of Archbishop MacHale, the "Lion of the Fold of Judah," as O'Connell delighted to call him. But how can we touch upon the vast influence which this great Prelate exercised over the religious progress and civil struggles of the Irish people during his long career! As a boy, he witnessed the fearful outrages perpetrated upon the Irish people in 1798. He saw the persecution to which the Catholics of Ireland were subject in order to tear the faith from their hearts, and he also beheld with what tenacity they struggled to save their souls and the souls of their children by clinging to the Cross of Christ implanted in the rock of Peter. He saw the very faith of the Irish people forbidden by Act of Parliament, the priests of God's Church declared outlaws, and even the education of Catholic children declared illegal! And all this was perpetrated by the English Government in Ireland less than a century ago.

In later years Archbishop MacHale encountered the educational theories of the British Government when it sought to corrupt the youth of the country through godless and anti-Irish schools, and, under the signature of "Heliopolis," in the Dublin Freeman's Journal, in 1831, he wrote to the people of Ireland a series of letters on this important subject, which opened the eyes of the people to the nefarious scheme prepared for the destruction of their children's souls. His next essay in print comprised a series of letters, which he addressed respectively to Lord John Russell and Sir Edward Peel, during their official careers as English Ministers, and the influence which these missives exercised on the Irish public made Archbishop MacHale the idol of the people and a man whose very name drove terror into the heart of England's representatives in Ireland. When the Repeal movement was inaugurated, in 1840-41, the deceased Archbishop gave it his powerful influence, and when, in 1843, the English Government sought to bribe the Irish Bishops into silence on English injustice, by offering to appropriate six hundred thousand pounds per annum out of the public treasury as pension money for the Irish priesthood, Dr. MacHale convened a Synod and publicly declared that no Irish money should ever be accepted by any Bishop or priest from the Government which had persecuted, slaughtered and starved the Irish people. England could easily afford to donate a million pounds sterling a year in order to induce the Prelates and priests of Ireland not to use their voices and their influence against English legislation in Ireland—but, thank God!—England could never bribe an Irish Bishop; they prefer to stand by their flocks through persecution and poverty, rather than wallow in wealth presented by the blood-red hand of British bribery and brutality.

But it was not in his public or his religious life alone that Archbishop MacHale will be remembered among the celebrities of the Church in Ireland, as his literary acquirements were sufficient to entitle him to be ranked among the literati of Europe. His love for the Irish language led him to take the lead in its revival in Ireland; he also translated and published a selection of Moore's National Melodies in the Irish language; this was followed by the translation of Homer's Iliad into the Irish, and he subsequently translated a large portion of the Scriptures into the same tongue. His Grace also preached frequently in Irish, and up to the day of his death he was constantly journeying through his Archdiocese, administering the Sacraments and exhorting the people to fidelity in their religious duties. Thus this eminent Bishop died at his post in discharge of his sacerdotal duties, and this exalted ending was a fitting close to an extraordinary long life, every hour of which was devoted to the service of God, the salvation of souls, and the amelioration of the civil disabilities under which his native land labored. What a glorious career! Greatness has been permitted by the Scriptures in the man who is faithful to "a few things," but Archbishop MacHale proved himself faithful to his trust in all things pertaining to his God, his religion, and his country.

Eternal rest give unto him, O Lord,
And let perpetual light shine upon him.

R. I. P.

Cardinal Peter Gianselli, died on the 7th inst. He was born in 1811, and created Cardinal March 15, 1875.

Did Henry VIII. Establish the Church of England?

The MONITOR, as a general rule, makes it a point never to make an assertion regarding the religious vagaries of the Protest ants which we cannot prove from the pages of impartial history. We recently stated that Henry VIII. was the paternal parent of the Church of England, but the organ of the American "branch" of the religious abomination comes forward and boldly challenges the proof of our assertion, and in order to enlighten the darkness which seems to pervade the Pacific Churchman's mental vision, we will quote a few extracts from the pages of Protestant historians, which will help to prove that the MONITOR was right and the Churchman wrong as usual.

Protestantism being based on error, must naturally be supported by falsehood, and if Protestants could only be made to understand that Almighty God established one Church, and one only, they would soon forsake the false gods of sectarianism and worship in the shrine of the Catholic Church. It is an undeniable fact that every species of sectarianism extant in the world today, or which has ever existed in the past, had its origin in the mind of some monomaniac who thought he had a mission to start a narrow-gauge religious railroad by which passengers could reach Paradise by has-bandle route, instead of reaching his haven by the broad gauge gospel line of Faith, Hope and Charity, as followed by the pioneer line universally known as the Catholic Church. Any reflecting person ought to know that the tenets of true Christianity never could originate in the mind of corrupt and fallible man. Christian principles, to be in harmony with God, must emanate from Him, enduring as Him, omnipotent and universal, as He is omnipotent and omniscient; hence, it follows that as none but the Protestant varieties of erroneous religious theory possess these attributes, there can be, and there is only one true Church, planted by Christ Himself, immutable, enduring and universal as He is, and that is the one holy Catholic and Apostolic Church.

Having thus glanced at the subject very briefly in a general way, let us proceed to particulars in the present case and prove the assertion we made relative to the religious sham known as the Church of England, which bears on its very frontispiece the brand of its birth, it being entitled in the English Acts of Parliament as "by law established." But we will leave even this fact in order to show up the Churchman's chuckle in denying a fact that is patent to all intellectual people, but which it desires to hide from its deceived dupes through fear that they might become wise enough to cast off their "paternal" Popery. The Churchman thus chides the MONITOR for our expression relative to the Church of England

"The MONITOR ought to know that the union in England had existed in England more than a thousand years before Henry VIII's time. The gospel obtained a foothold there before the close of the second century, and as early as A. D. 313, three British Bishops were present at the Council of Arles. So much for Henry VIII.'s 'paternal parentage.'"

In one sense, the Churchman's language may be construed as eminently correct, because very intelligent Christian knows that the faith of the Roman Catholic Church was planted in England "a thousand years" before Henry VIII. was born. But this is regularly begging the question, inasmuch as our strictures were directed against the Church of England and had no reference whatever to the origin of the Catholic Church in England. The Church we alluded to was the mother-in-law of the sect represented by the Churchman, and its play upon words will in no way affect the truthful statement we made that the Church of England was fathered by that much-married monarch Henry VIII., the proof of which we proceed to parade for the benefit of our communicative contemporary.

The first evidence we shall adduce upon this question is an extract from the statute laws of England, published during the reign of Henry VIII., and quoted by the historian Collier, in which we find this admission of the lustful monarch's paternal parentage of the British ecclesiastical bantling:

"Albeit the king's majesty justly and rightly is, and ought to be, supreme head of the Church of England, and recognized by the clergy of this realm in their convocations, ... be it enacted, by the authority of the present Parliament, that the king our sovereign lord, his heirs and successors, kings of this realm, shall be taken, accepted, and reputed the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England, called Anglica Ecclesia." (Stat. 26 H. VIII. cap. 1)

Here we have the highest legal authority in England endorsing the MONITOR, and proving the Churchman's catch-penny trade of evasion to be the last resort of ecclesiastical error. But it is not alone in the Statutes of England that we have evidence on our side of the question that the Church of England was fathered and founded by one of the most immoral monarchs that ever sat on the English throne. Every historian of note admits the same fact, thus Macaulay, in alluding to the mother-in-law of the Protestant Episcopal sham, says that "the king was her head." Henry was Pontiff, prelate, priest and patentee in general for this illegitimate offspring of his licentiousness, and as it had such a bad beginning, it has had a bad career ever since. The historian Hallam admits the same fact, and even the falsifying Froude, in his so-called "lectures" in New York (which Father Tom Burke so ably annihilated), was forced to admit—when alluding to Queen Elizabeth—that this tyrannical virago returned to her father a pedigree and re-established the English Episcopal sect.

Thus we have clearly contested the Churchman's evasion of a most important question for all Christians who earnestly desire to belong to the Church of Christ rather than to that anti-biblical sectarian sham known as the sect of a scandalous English monarch.

From the extracts above given, all intelligent readers will clearly understand that in the year 1534 King Henry VIII., and the Parliament—not Christ, nor any one of his Apostles or their successors—laid the foundation-stone of the corrupt ecclesiastical sham known as the Church of England. And yet the cavilling Churchman has the hardihood to deny a fact as visible to human intelligence as any fact ever revealed to the mind of man. Here we have a specimen of sectarian scheming unworthy of that Christianity of which Episcopalianism is such a specious pretender, and which proves Protestantism to be nothing but a shallow sectarian sham.

The Sunday Law Declared Constitutional.

Judge Morrison has recently rendered a decision in favor of the constitutionality of the Sunday law, which has attracted a great deal of attention. The section of the Code under which the proceedings in the case were had, is the following:

"Every person who keeps open on Sunday, any store, workshop, bar, saloon, banking house or other place of business, for the purpose of transacting business therein, is punishable by fine not less than five or more than fifty dollars." (see sec. 300.)

Judge Morrison quotes a large number of decisions made in other States wherein the supremacy of the law was sustained, and concludes his exhaustive and learned review of the whole question with these remarks:

"The foregoing citation of authorities is sufficient to show clearly and conclusively that Sunday laws will receive the sanction and support of many of the highest courts of the Union, if, as far as my examination has gone, the support of authority upon the subject is almost unbroken by any conflicting decision.

"The Sunday law was passed on the 19th day of April, 1858. It was entitled "An act to provide for the better observance of the Sabbath," and for all purposes of the case now in hand may be considered substantially the same as the act now in force, the validity of which is attacked in the proceeding. Very soon after the passage of the act its constitutionality was assailed in the case of Ex parte Newman (9 Cal., 502), and by a majority of the three Judges at that time constituting the Supreme Court, the act was held unconstitutional. Field, Justice, dissented, however, and the decision in the Newman case was not permitted long to remain the law of this State. In the case of Ex parte Andrews (18 Cal., 678), which was decided at the July term, 1861, the same question was presented to the Supreme Court, and the act of 1858 was declared constitutional by the concurrent opinions of all the Judges. The dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Field in the case of Ex parte Newman was adopted, so fully and correctly defining the views of the Judges then constituting the Court. The question came before the Court again in Ex parte Hirschfeld, 1861, and the Sunday law was again declared constitutional and the Andrews case affirmed.

"It will thus be seen that the departure from the line of authority was of short duration and that the highest court of this State, at an early day in our history, returned to the well-beaten track of judicial authority on this interesting and frequently discussed question. It is not to be to indulge in another departure, even if I were inclined to set aside the great weight of judicial opinion by which Sunday laws have been sustained and enforced. But I feel no such inclination. My views are fully in accord with the opinions of the other Judges, and regard the matter from a purely secular stand point, the law is a proper and salutary one. It imposes no restraint upon the conscience of any member of the community; it exacts from no person the performance of any religious rights or ceremonies; it prescribes no religious faith or creed; it asks no man to be an Episcopalian, a Methodist, a Catholic, a Hebrew, or, if he sees fit, even an infidel. He may worship one God, or a plurality of gods. He may be a Trinitarian or a Unitarian, or he may reject all belief in the supernatural, even if a Deity be admitted. Sunday laws leave the religious belief and practices as free as the air he breathes. It only forbids the carrying on of certain kinds of business on a certain day of the week, and the day selected in deference to the feelings and wishes of a large portion of the community is that day commonly denominated the 'Christian Sabbath or Sunday.'

"I have examined the questions involved in this case at some length because they are important, and because there are many other cases similar in their nature, which may possibly be determined by the views herein expressed. My conclusion is, that there is nothing in the so-called 'Sunday law' which in any manner interferes with the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, secured to all men by Section 4, Article I., of the Constitution."

Archbishop Croke Endorsed.

Nearly all the influential papers in Ireland are unanimous in endorsing the opinions of Archbishop Croke on the "no rent" manifesto. The following, from the Cork Examiner, will give an idea of the opinions generally maintained on that point:

We require to be able to rent today a letter from the Archbishop of Cashel advocating in most emphatic language the suggestion that the recent measures of the Government are to be met with the very of no rent. No one can doubt the perfect sympathy of the illustrious prelate with the cause of the Irish tenant. No Irish Bishop has from the first more markedly and unsparingly denounced the principles on which the Land League commenced its career. He is, therefore, in better entitled to attention than his peers on a vital point, namely, that Ireland throughout the country to the principles on which it was founded. The leading feature of the prelate's letter was, as the Archbishop pointed out, a protest, a rent which would allow a tenant to be absolutely and for ever ruined. That was never aimed at in a single day since, and the attempt to make it a means of great evasion of rent and when men's minds were badly fitted to weigh it literally all the consequences of such a distortion. At the end suggestion of it we felt that it involved a peril to the country. It was not only seeking revenge by a means decidedly immoral, but it was counting the people in a fearful struggle, the consequences of which it would be impossible to foresee. It would be perfectly ineffective for the object for which it was intended, because it would not only allow and enforce payment for filling prisons, but it would lead to either English feeling against the prisoners, and so protract the suspension of Irish liberties, while it would lower the natural cause in the eyes of the world. We have understanded to condemn the action of the Government, those, however, who would preach the whole doctrine of which Archbishop Croke has pronounced his own, would do the utmost to aid in a cause that. The only way to place the Government unquestionably in the wrong is to act upon the principle of honesty and morality."

The Dublin Freeman's Journal of the 19th ult. thus to say about Archbishop Croke:

The Archbishop of Cashel is above all things a typical and representative Irishman. Every third of his heart beats in unison with the heart of the nation. Intense sympathy with his country, absolute identity with her wishes and aspirations, are not with him passing moods, but essential elements of his being. At the same time he is not that mischievous thing, an emotional patriot. If his heart is warm, his hope is hard-cool, and therefore at times of crisis all sentiment his country can have no better counsellor.

PARNELL'S REPLY TO GLADSTONE.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

same difficult efforts which Mr. Gladstone has taken up policy and well from his predecessor in the title of nine years ago Ireland. I should like to know what other efforts than Mr. Gladstone takes of which he speaks of the sustained efforts which he is making for the benefit of the peopleof Ireland. He charges us with having refused to vote for the second reading of the bill; he charges us with having used every effort to obstruct the bill, and, if we could, to destroy his land bill, and points to our refusal to compromise our position by voting on the second reading as his proof, and then he goes on to say, "On every subsequent occasion the same policy was pursued." On the two subsequent occasions on which the bill was really in danger

I ASK THE IRISH PEOPLE, THROUGH ANYBODY and his Cabinet by our thirty-six votes from destruction and defeat (hear, hear) and then, in the close of his speech, he admits our sole position and contention. In one last deprecative sail he says "And the Government is expected to preserve peace with no moral force behind it. The Government has no moral force behind it in Ireland; the whole Irish people are against them. They have to depend for their support upon a self-interested and a very small minority of the people of this country, and, therefore, they have no moral force behind them; and Mr. Gladstone in these few short words admits that English Government has failed in Ireland therefore, he admits the contention that I raised and the volunteers for 1782 fought for; he admits the contention that the men of '98 died for; he admits the contention that 40 Governments failed to do, namely, that the men of 1848 staked their all for; he admits the contention that the men of 1867 died for after a long period of depression and great death of national life in Ireland, that it is based upon the principle of moral force and that it is for and he admits the contention that to day in our country nothing but moral force is established, and, please God, will bring to a successful issue the great cause, namely, that Ireland's cause in Ireland has been a failure, and that Irishmen have established their right to govern Ireland by laws made by themselves for themselves on the Irish soil. Now, I have read up to you a threat—this man who knows no moral force behind him—this man who knows that he has lost Ireland, and afraid of from through force, stand, as he says, to arrest the handiwork of his life—I say it is not in the power to frustrate in the aspirations and the rights of the Irish nation with a moral force behind him. You are trying to frustrate the aspirations of Ireland because you think that we are the men who have given them like the whole of Ireland, and you have shown that you are prepared to do so by your treatment of the Irish people, and you have shown that you are prepared to do so by your treatment of the Irish people, and you have shown that you are prepared to do so by your treatment of the Irish people

WHAT SHE SHOULD DO.

A Few Suggestions of Importance on a Subject of Interest to the Ladies.

And Certain Facts which Should be Known by all Women.

[Home Journal, New York.]

A short time since an article appeared in the columns of this paper, being a synopsis of a lecture delivered by a prominent women before a well known New England society. This article dealt we directly with the needs of woman, and contained so many hints which were valuable that it naturally attracted no little attention, and has, we learn, been a subject of comment in social circles in nearly every part of the land. Realizing that no subject can lay of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers, than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this same subject.

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Bernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that even her far-famed French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excell, American women in quickness of perception and brilliancy of intellect. The minds and manners of American women are all that can be desired; but it is a lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their social and mental characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitutions, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess no one of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary ways, devotion to fashion—but above all and more than all, carelessness and indifference to daily habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results and is both directly and indirectly of untold injury to the race. The cause, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as though they lived in Europe or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The performance of the natural functions of womanhood and motherhood is not a disease, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the organs which make and purify the blood must be preserved, in order to their normal condition. These organs are the kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poison accumulates, all the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and diseased, and finally the kidneys and cuticles or skin become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all forms of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing miseries are the result. This is especially true in the case of women. And if the bowels are sluggish and overloaded, the neighboring organs, which are particularly dependent for their right action upon the state of the liver, bowels and kidneys, become displaced, and the consequences which ensue are too well known to require repetition here. Now, we claim that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, is the most complete and reliable remedy for the relief of women, and that it is the only one which can be relied upon to cure the most aggravated forms of these troubles. The testimony of women—many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. No true woman is pleased to have her physical troubles flaunted in the eyes of the world.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore no adequate remedy for the ills of women has ever been discovered; nor have the medical profession ever been able to assist women in her troubles as she deserves. This is, perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much delicacy and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates to the fullest the blighting effect of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was oppressed and scoffed at. Thompson, the founder of the Thompsonian theory, was the victim of a baleful conspiracy. Morton, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet our discoveries of those men are to-day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach, not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death-bed scenes, as fair that it will were equal to disease death might have been postponed many years—that science if use were made of all the agents available has revealed, was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated! A cold is contracted, it refuses to yield to a fixed form of treatment, the physician may be candid enough to call in the aid of other schools, or of independent agentsers, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not exhaust every expedient known to the world for relief. If he have the courage of his convictions and employs outside agencies, he is visited with reproach from the society of his fellows, and, forsooth, becomes what they choose to call a "quack." When they have exhausted all the agencies approved by their schools, they "shift the responsibility" of the death of their patient by advising a trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe. Such treatment may be in accordance with the "code of ethics," but in the view of the unprejudiced public it is downright cruelty. Of many instances we more strongly characterized.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of this country, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording for recovering lost health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health by a watchful eye over daily habits and duties, and by a regulation of the life with the remedy above named, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be secured in their highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention which it deserves, and the cure which they are able to bestow, remembering that their efforts are certain to bring them perfect health and long and happy lives.

New Advertisements.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Club whips for all the principal theatres and horsemen in the Pacific Coast.

N.B. My acknowledged superiority in this branch of business largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "turfmen" in the United states. The benefits of which reverts to the public in the shape of a superior, well fitting article. Sole Agent for Dr. A. H. Dewees Condition Powders and McKinnon patent "Equipoise" and "Eclipse" Top Weights. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English, Landaulette and Coach Whips, Saddles, Bridles, Robes and Horse Clothing. JOHN O'KANE.

COAL.— COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.
☞ Telephone number, 1192.

CHURCH MUSIC.
For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ. No. 1 Antiphon, 25 cts. 2 Kyrie 25 cts. 3 Gloria, do. do. 4 Veni Creator, 40 cts. 5 Credo, 50 cts. 6 Jubilate, 50 cts. 7 O S. Solo and Chorus, 30 cts. 8 and 9 Sanctus and Benedictus, 40 cts. 10 Agnus Dei, 25 cts. 11 Doxology—Nunc Dimittis, 25 cts. 12 Ave Maria, 40 cts. All for above 50 numbers in one book, 1000 Music of Ps. Ps. 1 F. W. Rasch, cloth bind, $2 50; bound in boards, $2 00; in cloth, $4 50—Tugdist, cpn. by F. W. Rasch, 40 cts.—Tu Domo, by F. A. Weisiger, $1 00; copies 25 per cent. off. $3 00 per more sent with order half off. Will be sent on receipt of price.
F. W. RASCH, Cincinnati, O.
P. O. Cincinnati, O.

CONVENT OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION,
Lake Vegas, N. M., Sept. 15, 1881.
F. W. RASCH—Kind Sir: Be so kind as to send me by mail a copy of your Mass in E flat, etc.
SR. M. ROSINE.

DANVILLE, MORTON CO., Pa., Oct. 17, 1881.
F. W. RASCH—Please send my four more copies of your Mass, and Ent. Weisiger's Te Domo.
P. A. SCHWIND, Parish of St. Hubert's Church.

PAPAL MASS
—BY—
Rev. Father Di Marzo, O.P.
ENDORSED BY ALL THE LEADING PAPERS AND Ex Monkmen, as being the finest modern composition of the kind.
The organists of all the Catholic Churches in the United States, who adopt it, buy it and sing it, will write in praise.
1 Tow. octav. $2 50. Treble Clergy and Tenor Bass, $1 25.
J. B. O'CONNOR & CO.
AGENTS.
23 Dupont Street, S. F

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
—ALSO—
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

FIRE!! FIRE!!
JNO. R. SIMS & SON,
Manufacturers of all sizes of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.
SHUTTERS, DEADLIGHTS, BANK VAULTS AND Safes, wrought iron girders and beams wrought and cast iron Railings, Balconies, Stairs, Gratings, Fire Escapes and other architectural iron work, at the Old Stand, established in 1852, 511 to 517 Pine street, near Sansome street, San Francisco, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OUR $25 and $30
BUSINESS SUITS
Are First-Class in Every Respect.
Fit Guaranteed or Money Refunded.
T. G. PARKER & CO.,
MERCHANT TAILORS,
418 Montgomery Street,
☞ Bet. California and Sacramento Sts. 93

SWAIN'S
Family Bakery and Dining Saloon,
No. 636 Market Street.
Wedding Cakes, Ice cream, Oysters, Jellies, etc. Constantly on hand and made to order.
FAMILIES SUPPLIED.

C. E. PEARSON, Manager.

WHAT YOU WANT TO KNOW
—AND—
SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING WHERE TO PURCHASE THAT THE FINEST TEAS
—AND—
CHOICEST COFFEES
Pure and unadulterated, at the
GREAT AMERICAN
Importing Tea Co.'s,
NEW TEA STORES,
522 and 524 Kearny street,
146 and 142 Sixth St.
SAN FRANCISCO.
It will pay you to try them. They are the only Chinese Tea and Coffee stores in the city. They are the best on the Eastern states.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC R. R.
Commencing Monday, November 7, 1881, and until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco as follows:
9.20 A. M., Daily (Sundays excepted.) From Spear St. between Market and Mission streets, for Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Fulton, and way points. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 4 25 P. M.
3.30 P. M. Daily (Sundays excepted) Steamer "Sonoma" leaves Market Street Wharf, connecting at Sonoma Landing with train for Sonoma, Glen Ellen, Kenwood, Boyes Springs, Agua Caliente, Glenwood, Glenbrook, Kelseyville, Soda Springs, Cobb's, Harbin Springs, Adams Springs, Middletown, Hoberg's, Harbin Springs, Guenoc, Coyote, Lower Lake, Witter's, Bartlett Springs, Upper Lake, Pomo, Potter Valley, Ukiah, Calpella, Willits, Sherwood, Longvale, Laytonville, Cummings, Leggett's, Harris, Scotia, Eureka, Rohnerville, Alton, Ferndale, Petrolia, Capitola, Camp Grant, Garberville, Redway, Briceland, Shelter Cove, Alderpoint, Dyerville, Cuneo's, Ingle's, Cooper's, Orr's, Springs, Zenia, Bridgeville, Shively, Arcata, Blue Lake, Korbel, Orick, Requa, Klamath, Trinidad, Hoopa, Willow Creek, Orleans, Somes Bar, Denny, Humboldt Hill, Fairhaven, Salyer, Grant's, Dorris's, Preston's, Pittsburg, Vera Cruz, Delta, Lewiston, Weaverville, Douglas City, Hayfork, Hyampom, Wilson's, Cinnabar, Calistoga, Larioda, Napa, and Vallejo.
Sundays excepted.
A. HUGHES, General Manager.
PETER J. McGLYNN, General Passenger & Ticket Agent.

The Golden Palace
TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.
THE CHOICEST TEAS EVER SOLD AT 50 CTS. and not a cheaper tea at any price. I make no pretensions, nor mislead by trading in this class. Full weight and satisfaction guaranteed. Wholesale and retail. Also, Coffees, Spices, Canned Fruits, Jellies, Preserves, Pickles, Sauces, Fish, Oil, Vinegar, Starch, Soap, Tobacco, Cigars, Cracker, Flour, Sugar, Rice, Beans, Potatoes, Onions, Cheese, Butter, Eggs, Lard, Ham, Bacon, Hams, Canned Meats, Poultry, Game, Oysters, Fish, Fruit, Vegetables, Nuts, Raisins, Figs, Dates, Prunes, Candies, Soap, Starch, Blue, Matches, Brooms, Brushes, Buckets, Tubs, Washboards, Clothes Pins, Pails, Cups, Saucers, Plates, Knives, Forks, Spoons, Tea Pots, Sugar Bowls, Cream Jugs, Lamps, Chimneys, Wicks, Oil Cans, Lanterns, Nails, Hammers, Hatchets, Saws, Planes, Augers, Bits, Screws, Hinges, Locks, Door Knobs, Door Plates, Door Springs, Door Bolts, Door Mats, Scrubbing Brushes, Stove Brushes, Shoe Brushes, Clothes Brushes, Hair Brushes, Tooth Brushes, Paper Bags, Twine, Wrapping Paper, Tacks, Glue, Ink, Pens, Pencils, Rubber Bands, Paper Weights, Scissors, Knives, Razors, Strops, Hones, Mustard, Pepper, Spices, Ginger, Cinnamon, Nutmegs, Cloves, Allspice, Saleratus, Soda, Cream Tartar, Baking Powder, Yeast Cakes, Washing Powder, Soap Powders, Starch, Blue, Matches, Candles, Coffee Mills, Lamp Burners, Tea Kettles, Sauce Pans, Frying Pans, Stew Pans, Boilers, Washtubs, Wash Boards, Clothes Pins, Brooms, Buckets, Mops, Mop Sticks, Feather Dusters, Cocoanuts, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Pineapples, Bananas, Figs, Dates, Prunes, Candies, Soap

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MONTHLY OFFICE, Nov. 9, 1881.

FLOUR—City Extras are selling at $5 62½@$5 75; City Superfine, $4 75@$5 25; Interior Family, $5 37½@$5 50 for extra, and $4 50@$4 for superfine.

WHEAT—Holders are sustaining the market with difficulty. The contest between freights and Wheat has thus far, singularly enough, resulted in weakening both, owing to the stagnation of the foreign markets, although freights have been the heaviest sufferer. Holders are still confident of maintaining prices, and as exporters are to some extent out of the market, business is of course quiet. The sales reported lately were 500 tons choice No. 1, $1 74@$1 75; one old milling, $1 75, and 2,000 sks wevvily (?), $1 73; No. 1 is quotable at $1 75@$1 76½ and No. 2 at $1 70@$1 72½ ₩ ctl.

BARLEY—Feed is improving again under an increased inquiry. Sales of 2,000 sks good feed at $1 45; 1,000 sks fair do, $1 42½, and 1,700 sks fair brewing, $1 55. Brewing is quotable at $1 50@$1 55 for light and $1 57½@$1 62½ for bright heavy; standard Chevalier, $1 50@$1 57½ cond do, $1 42½@$1 47½ ₩ ctl.

OATS—There were no arrivals by the Oregon steamer yesterday. The market continues quiet, and steady. No sales to day. Good mid shipping, $1 47½@$1 50; common do, $1 40@$1 45; Surprise, $1 60@$1 75 ₩ ctl.

CORN—Nothing doing. Yellow at $1 25 ₩ ctl. Quotations are nominal.

HAY—Wheat, old, $12@$15; wild oats, $12@$14; volunteer and stalks, $11@$17; stock, $8@$11 ₩ ton.

RYE—Market is firmer. Quotable at $1 50 ₩ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Additional sales on Saturday afternoon of 500 sks choice, $1 70, and 700 sks fair do, $1 60 ₩ ctl, which is above the rates to-day. The demand for the East, cannot probably be satisfied, as stocks here are none too abundant, and millers do not want to run short.

STRAW—As has been observed, arrivals for some weeks have been very light, and one week some at all events. This scarcity has caused a salary advance, as I last week at San Francisco, dealer paid 65 ₩ bale for 2,000 bales good in the interior, which this morning, 250 bales stalled out and barely sold at 65 ₩ bale.

POTATOES—Arrivals to-day were 6,845 sks, of which 4,825 were from Oregon. Nevertheless of which 4,825 were from Oregon. Nevertheless choice are not any too plentiful and are bringing better prices. Chiffey Cross sold at $1 40; Jersey Blues, $1 35; Petaluma, $1 10@$1 20; Tomales, $1 25@$1 30; River Reds, $1 40@$1 50; Early Rose, $1 50; Humboldt Reds, $1 35@$1 40; Sweets, $1 50 ₩ ctl.

ONIONS—Market is up a little at market ctl.

CHEESE—Eastern, Cal. Table Meal, 20@20½c; Fresh Cows, $30@$31 ₩ ton; Hondoy 4@4½c.

BUTTER—Is even weaker than on Saturday, but prices are maintained with difficulty. Fancy, 50; Good and Choice California roll, 46@47½c; Good and Choice California roll, 46@47½c; fair and good do, 36@38c; mixed lots from country, 30@35c; bkls, 32@35c; Pickled roll, 34@35c; Eastern, 30@35c ₩ lb.

CHICKEN—Eastern Creamery, 16@20c; California, 16@18c ₩ lb.

POULTRY—Was weaker to-day. Live Turkeys ₩ lb 13@16c for Hens, and 14@16c for Gobblers; ₩ pair $2 50@$2 50; Dressed ₩ doz, $5 00@$5 50; Hens, $3@$3 50; Roosters, young, $5 00@$5 50; do, old, $4@$5 00; Broilers, $3@$4.

EGGS—The market was not as quick to-day as on Saturday, as the high prices restrict business. Fresh are still very scarce. Choice California, 45@47½c ₩ doz.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Only a few chests of bananas came in today, and they sold higher. Wilcomas Cranberries, $13@$14 ₩ bbl; Bananas, $3@$4 ₩ bunch; Pears, 75c@$1 50 ₩ box; Apples, 50c@$1 25 ₩ box; Strawberries, $12@$14 ₩ chest.

VEGETABLES—Marrowfat Squash, $10 ₩ ton; Okra, 50c ₩ lb; Tomatoes, 15c@25c ₩ box; Cabbage 75c@$1 ₩ ctl; Cauliflower, 75c@$1 ₩ dozen; Beets, 50c; Turnips, 75c; Beets, 50c; Parsnips, 75c@$1 ₩ ctl; Garlic, 20@25c; Artichokes, 75c ₩ dozen; Green Chile Peppers, 75c ₩ box; dry do, 15c ₩ lb.

MARRIED.

DEVOST-CHARRON—In Cassaroche, Cala veras county, Nov. 30th, by Rev. P. O'Connell, Jeffre Devost and Delina Charron both of Canaiche.

DIED.

BROWN—At Gilroy, on the 10th ult, Mrs. Margaret Brown, a native of the County Monaghan, Ireland, aged 66 years. R. I. P.

DEATH OF CHARLES CARVALHO, S. J.

Dispatched this life, in Santa Clara, October 31, Charles, a member of the society of Jesus, and eldest son of Elizabeth and the late Charles Carvalho, a native of San Francisco, aged 19 years and 9 months.

The above announcement will prove to be a most untimely young man, whose death will well known in this city, of late years, resumed entered the Novitiate of the Society of Jesus, and at the end of two years he was seen as a scholastic, looking forward eagerly to the day when he would be ordained, but to his disappway, and he resigned his soul into the hands of that God to whom he had given it, dying with the names of Jesus, Mary and Joseph on his lips. May his pure soul rest in peace!

TO FAMILIES AND HOUSEKEEPERS.

We call the attention of every family and housekeeper who desire to reduce their expenses for the winter to the price current of the lowest grades for first-class groceries ever offered on the Pacific Coast, and those who wish to economize should carefully examine the prices as published in another column of this paper by the old firm of Shaffer & Otto, Pioneer Grocers, 633 Washington street, San Francisco, Cal.

Important to the Ladies.

In consequence of the constant increase of business, Mme. Salomon has removed to the new and elegant Parlors, No. 1110 and 1112 Market street, where she has on exhibition one of the largest and most varied displays of Ladies' Hats and Millinery Goods ever opened in the city and at prices that are sure to please all who give her stock early inspection.

—If you have any umbrellas, canes, fans, or fancy goods to be made or repaired, give your work to J. Creighton, 310 Post street, whose advertisement appears this week.

—J. A. Girardin & Co., 27 Ellis street, under the Baldwin Hotel, are agents on this coast for the celebrated "AIMARK," which is said to be a most useful auxiliary to every lady's toilet.

—Tourists and the traveling public in general, will find it to their interest to call at the Artist Photo. Studio, 914 Market Street, for first class work at lowest prices. All work warranted and equal to any competitor. Mrs. S. Fletcher (formerly of Stockton), proprietress. E. E. Higgins, artist.

The Peruvian Syrup

has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston.

—Use nothing else but Meaths Soap.

New Advertisements.

THE CHEAPEST PLACE

—TO BUY—

OILS, OIL STOVES, LAMPS, CHANDELIERS, ETC.,

IS AT

O'CONNOR & McBRIDE'S

Pioneer Oil Store,

115 Sixth street.

All kinds of Lubricating Oils constantly on hand.

Goods delivered free to any part of the city.

DR. HENLEY'S CELEBRATED CALIFORNIA FLUID AND PILLS

BEST TONIC IN USE.

Dr. Henley's Celebrated Bitters never fail to give relief in cases of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Liver Complaint.

READ PHYSICIANS CERTIFICATE IN BOOK OF BOTTLE.

Never purchase without Dr. Henley's name on the cork. Sold everywhere.

PARISIAN DYEING & CLEANING WORKS

TENTH STREET.

CITY OFFICES:

718 Washington street, opposite the Plaza.
212 Post street, and 37 Fourth street.

F. THOMAS & CO.

REMOVAL.

WM. J. MALLADY,

General Undertaker and Coffin Furnisher,

HAS REMOVED TO

733 MISSION STREET. 733

(Opposite Lick House.)

Prices as low as possible. Orders promptly attended to. Goods can be forwarded to any part of the country. Metallic and other burial goods kept constantly on hand.

R. H. McDonald, Cashier, San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC BANK

Established 1863.

CAPITAL STOCK $1,000,000.00.

Surplus 459,233.03.

San Francisco, July 1, 1881.

RESOURCES.

Real Estate (Bank Build'g)	$150,000 00
Bills Receivable	1,607,993 11
U. S. Bonds	609,977 33
State and City Bonds	5,953 35
Road Stock and Dock Stock	12,253 70
Due from other Banks	204,500 39
Cash (Coin in our vault)	540,811 43
	$3,114,531 26

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock	$1,000,000 00
Reserve Fund (Surplus)	459,233 03
Due Depositors	1,440,296 50
Due to other Banks	186,107 23
Due to other Banks	28 30
Due Dividends	$3,114,631 26

We take pleasure in presenting the above statement to our patrons.

We call attention to our increased facilities for conducting business, and solicit a share of banks, bankers, merchants, manufacturers, farmers and all business men in our line.

We give advice in detail of all credits, which we issue generally all between the last year private telegraphic code to correspondents when requested.

Sight Drafts on Eastern Cities and Sydney, Exchange on the United States, Ireland, France and Germany bought and sold.

Collections made and prompt returns made at current rates of exchange.

Telegraph Transfers made each New York Business day, on the following terms:

Between Banks and Commercial Commercial Credits issued on London, Paris and Berlin.

National, State, City and County Bonds and Warrants, and other securities, bought and sold.

Loans made on good collaterals or approved business paper, subject to check without notice.

R. H. McDonald, President.

KIDNEY-WORT

THE GREAT CURE FOR RHEUMATISM

As it is for all diseases of the KIDNEYS, LIVER and BOWELS.

To cleanse the system of the acrid poison that causes the painful suffering which makes life a burden, use KIDNEY-WORT.

THOUSANDS OF CASES

of the worst forms of this terrible disease have been quickly relieved, in a short time PERFECTLY CURED.

KIDNEY-WORT

has had wonderful success on the Pacific Coast, the mildest and healthiest of the Country. It has proved its value in all those troublesome diseases that result from a disordered KIDNEY-WORT.

If it cleanses, Strengthens and gives Vigor to all the important organs of the body. The natural action of the Kidneys is restored. The Liver is stimulated of sluggishness, and the Bowels move freely and healthfully. In this way the worst diseases are overcome and eradicated from the system.

And it has been proved by thousands that is the most effectual remedy for cleansing the system of all morbid matter, and for giving vigor to every household as a

KIDNEY-WORT

SPRING MEDICINE.

It acts promptly and pleasantly. It moves the bowels, CONSTIPATION, PILES, and kindred diseases yield to its mild influence. It is prepared in Liquid Form, in tin cans, and in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans, in packages of sixty and twenty-five cents. Also in Liquid Form, very Concentrated for the convenience of those who cannot conveniently prepare it. Recommended equally in either form. GET WORT FROM DRUGGIST. Price, $1.00. WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Prop'rs, Burlington, Vt. Send for pamphlet, mailed free.

KIDNEY-WORT

No More Dyspepsia!

We Challenge the World.

DR. HENLEY'S CALIFORNIA IXL BITTERS

BEST TONIC IN USE.

Dr. Henley's Celebrated Bitters never fail to give relief in cases of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Liver Complaint.

READ PHYSICIANS CERTIFICATE IN BOOK OF BOTTLE.

Never purchase without Dr. Henley's name on the cork. Sold everywhere.

THE MONITOR.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co. OF CALIFORNIA.

GEO. A. MOORE, President; W. R. CLUNESS, Vice President and Medical Director; E. B. MOTT, Jr., Secretary.

Has removed its principal office from Sacramento to San Francisco. This is the only Life Insurance Company doing business and loaning money solely in the Pacific and Northwestern States and Territories. Active and Reliable Agents can have profitable fields opened to them on Application. Resident or visiting policy holders and friends are cordially invited to call at the new office.

418 California street, San Francisco.

WALL PAPER! WALL PAPER!!

Just receiving, Large Stock Art Paper Hangings, Newest Predestions of French, English and American Manufactures.

INTERIOR DECORATIONS IN FRESCO AND PAPER HANGINGS.

GEO. W. CLARK, 645 MARKET STREET.

IMPROVEMENTS—NEW STYLES—NEW CATALOGUE.

THE Mason & Hamlin Organ Company

Whose cabinet or parlor organs have won renewed honors at every recent exhibition, have now added to their various styles the new Art Organ, which, for beauty of form and tone, combines more and greater practically valuable improvements than any other one instrument. Illustrated catalogues free. Warerooms, 596 Washington street, Boston; 25 Union Square, New York; 149 Wabash Avenue, Chicago. Manufacturers of cabinet organs of higher excellence and greater variety than any other house. Organs for Churches, Schools, Lodges, Concerts, etc., of any size, style or price desired, from $55 to $1,000 each. Illustrated catalogues free. Warerooms, 596 Washington street, Boston; 25 Union Square, New York; 149 Wabash Avenue, Chicago. Manufacturers of cabinet organs of higher excellence and greater variety than any other house. Organs for Churches, Schools, Lodges, Concerts, etc., of any size, style or price desired, from $55 to $1,000 each. Illustrated catalogues free. Warerooms, 596 Washington street, Boston; 25 Union Square, New York; 149 Wabash Avenue, Chicago. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO CO., 596 Washington Street, Boston; 25 Union Square, New York; 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

R. W. THEOBALD,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN COAL.

COAL YARD

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS,

35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 487.

CALIFORNIA BEDDING HOUSE.

JAS. CONNELLY & CO.

DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF

FURNITURE AND BEDDING,

Wholesale and Retail at very Low Prices.

532 and 534 MARKET STREET, OPPOSITE SECOND, S. F.

WINTHROP PORTABLE RANGE!

ALL SIZES.

THE FIRST RANGE WARRANTED

SINGLE and DOUBLE OVENS.

Chas. Brown & Son, Agents,

NO 18 DUPONT STREET,

San Francisco, Cal.

These New Improved RANGES combine all Modern Improvements, are Invulnerable, Durable, have DOUBLE TOP, extra heavy Plates, Ventilated Oven, Large Fire Box, Reversible Grates, Fire for Economy, Durability, Cleanliness and Convenience, the New Improved WINTHROP RANGES excel all others, are the Cheapest in the Market, and pay for themselves in a few weeks by the saving of Fuel usually wasted by other Cooking Stoves and Ranges.

New Designs in Parlor and Office Stoves at the lowest prices.

False Grates for the Season of the Year, fitted to any Range or Mantel Grate.

Tinware, Woodenware, and Kitchen Utensils always kept on hand; made to order if desired, and sold at very low prices.

Orders filled from all parts of the country.

CHAS. BROWN & SON, San Francisco, Cal.

CATHOLIC BOOKS,

ARTICLES OF DEVOTION,

PIANOS AND ORGANS,

AT

J. B. O'Connor & Co.s,

23 DUPONT ST., S. F.

P. T. FLINN & SON,

S. W. cor. Howard and Eighth Sts.

HAY, GRAIN,

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines and Liquors.

Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to.

GRAIN, FRUIT and VINE LANDS.

EXTRAORDINARY!

Prices Still Lower!

LUNDY'S!

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

Having for the past four months employed the full force of our FACTORY in the preparation of a stock of goods for the fall and HOLIDAY trade that should surpass all exhibitions heretofore made by us, we now offer an assortment of DIAMOND WORK, FINE JEWELRY, and NOVELTIES that will stand the test of the closest criticisms as to STYLE, QUALITY, and PRICE.

In imported goods, our facilities enable us to offer the best manufactures of WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., on the most favorable terms.

Our assortment is beyond question the LARGEST, the FINEST, and the CHEAPEST on this coast.

All goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

Orders by mail will be as promptly and cheerfully answered, and at the same terms, as though selections were made in person.

LUNDY'S,

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

New Advertisements.

SULLIVAN'S.

ADAMS & WESTLAKE

Wire Gauze

NON-EXPLOSIVE

OIL STOVE.

BEST AND MOST DURABLE IN USE FOR HEAT. Cooking, Stoves, Lamps, Lanterns, Burners, etc.

NO. 2 MYERS, 135 Fourth St., S. F.

HODGES

CLOAK AND SUIT ROOMS,

10 Fifth St., near Market St., S. F.

MEDICAL.

GEO. G. GERE, M. D.

301 Sutter Street.

OFFICE HOURS—From 11 to 2 and 6 to 7 P. M.

DR. GEO. J. COOK,

108 Carry Street.

HOURS FROM 9 A. M. TO 8 P. M. PRACTICE LIMITED to the treatment of Piles, Fistula and other diseases of the rectum.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

Physician and Surgeon,

Nos. 411 Kearny Street.

GIVES PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO THE TREATMENT of cases of chronic diseases of the lungs, liver, kidneys and urinary organs, and those delicate and all special diseases and female complaints. Charges moderate; patients in the country successfully treated at home.

DR. C. C. O'DONNELL,

Office and Residence:

N. W. cor. Kearny and Washington Streets, S. F.

TAPE WORM REMOVED

In 1½ HOURS by CHINO.

CARR'S TAPE WORM SPECIFIC.

No Cure, no pay. Agency,

DR. JUSTIN GATES, Turkish Baths, 722 Montgomery street.

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION WANTED.

WILLIAM SMITH, aged 50 years, died at Dowdsville, August 24th. He was a native of Rathfriar, Ballina, County Mayo, Ireland, and came to this place in company with Peter Kelly and John Riley, from Boston. Kelly and Riley are now in Sacramento. He married sister, Mr. Patrick Riley, or any other relatives, please write to Mr. Peter Kelly, Sacramento, or any information from whom they and how of something to hear of.

N.B.—"Boston Pilot" and "Irish World" please copy.

INFORMATION WANTED

OF THE WORKMEN WHO WERE EMPLOYED ON THE Mansion of Mr. James Lick, in West Lick Avenue, Mission district, between the years 1875 and 1878, any person knowing of her death, or of her present address, will confer a great favor on a poor lady by addressing such information as she may possess to Mrs. Mary Ann Lick, care of Messrs. Jones and Wolf, 637 Las Ancinas, Colorado.

INFORMATION WANTED

OF John Lynch and of WILLIAM GALLIGAN, who left Lynch's place in Ballyhaunis, County Mayo, Ireland, for Boston, about 30 years ago. Any information regarding him will be gratefully received by

THOMAS GALLIGAN,

Livermore, California.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SAVE MONEY.

SEND YOUR ADDRESS TO H. A. SMITH, 218 Post street, San Francisco, and receive free information by return mail of great benefit to you, whether you need anything in wholesale or retail. Single goods sold at wholesale prices. Agents wanted. Lady agents make from $5 to $10 a day. Send 10c. for sample and catalogue, which is worth the money. Address H. A. SMITH, 218 Post street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE

OF THE NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that in addition to the ordinary business of a newspaper agency, it is doing the account, paying the freight or express charges, and taking receipts, for all goods purchased by its patrons, previously known than when ordering direct from the East. Catholic Publishers, Manufacturers and Dealers in other business matters needing personal and prompt attention, will find it to their interest to address the undersigned, who will give their business prompt attention.

THOMAS D. EGAN,

New York Catholic Agency, 33 Barclay street, and 38 Park Place.

FOREIGN POSTAGE STAMPS.

1,000,000 MIXED FOREIGN STAMPS JUST Received. 500,000 per Thousand. Catalogues, Albums, Stamps, Stamped Envelopes and Supplies and sold.

D. J. KING,

210 Tyler Street.

WANTED

Ten active Gentlemen may of steady habits, Personally employed and good compensation to the right man.

PENZIGER BROTHERS,

311 Pearl street, New York.

THE CHEAPEST PLACE FOR BAR-ROOM FURNITURE IS AT THE UNION FURNITURE WAREHOUSE, 1017 Market Street, Opposite Hayes Park. TUBBS, 17 Fourth street.

KINZE, 1117 Market, Manufacturer and Retailer of Furniture, Bedding, Feather Dealer, etc. Mission st.

Printing.

CONSOLIDATION PRINTING HOUSE, F. J. Tennant, 536 Clay st.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.

Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

LUMBER YARD

ATTRACTIONS!

MEYER'S

BAKERY & DINING ROOMS

211 Sutter Street.

L. MEYER, - - Proprietor.

JERRY D. LYNCH

Contractor and Dealer in

BARTLETT SPRINGS WATER:

Depot and Office, 35 Stockton St.

Telegraph Office and Residence, San Francisco.

JONAS J. MORRISON,

LUMBER DEALER,

SAN FRANCISCO

Corner Mission and Spear Streets.

THE MONITOR,

A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL

Devoted to the Propagation and Defense of Catholic Principles.

Published by The Monitor Publishing Co. Office: 607 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Single Copies	10c
Per Year by Mail	$4 00
Six months "	2 50
Three "	1 50
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces	5 00

☞ All subscriptions payable in advance.

☞ Address all communications, remittances, books and postal orders to

S. J. MCCORMICK,
Editorial Manager.

Monitor Office, Box 2349 P. O., San Francisco, Cal.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

For thy Soil be not ashamed to say the Truth . . . Strive for Justice for thy Soul; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiastes iv. 34.)

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1881. NO. 6.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

A. M. HESLEP,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

Gives attention to Admiralty, Probate, and the better class of Criminal Suits, on reasonable terms.

Office—Room 12 and 13, No. 606 Commercial street, between Montgomery and Kearny Streets, S. F.

JOHN M. BURNETT,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

Rooms 1 and 2,

507 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento

San Francisco.

M. COONEY,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

565 Kearny street, cor. Pine,

Rooms 5 and 6, Second floor, San Francisco, Cal.

J. D. SULLIVAN,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

Rooms 8, 9, and 10,

234 MONTGOMERY ST., San Francisco.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND

Cases Before the Land Commission.—Home Rule.

DUBLIN, Nov. 4.—The usual number of applications made to the Land Commission to 17,661, the Land Court Commissioner, Litton, in the case of Fardell, a tenant holding three farms of land, reduced rent from £70 to £50. The decision was unexpected. An increased number of tenants are joined to apply to the Court. Sir Maurice O'Connell, nephew of the Liberator, has sent his tenants at Tralee, and there are in two cases, arrived at arrangements which will be presented to the Land Court. The agreements involve considerable reduction of rents.

The Freeman's Journal welcomes the revival of the Home Rule Association, I believe the question of home rule is now the great and only question.

Arrests Under the Coercion Act.

Among the persons arrested under the Coercion Act are James Ennis, a West-end landlord, three Tullamore farmers and the Secretary of the Parkstream branch of the Land League.

The Campaign in Londonderry.

The election campaign in Londonderry for Member of Parliament, vice Lane, is apparently fairly begun. Mr. Lane, the retiring candidate is the last Parliamentary election in Ireland, has asked the electors of Londonderry to re-elect him, but the Land League candidate will be selected at the County Convention on Friday.

Thos. Secretary of the Irish Land League has been arrested for advocating "no rent."

Another Manifesto.

The Central Executive of the Land League of Great Britain has issued a violent manifesto to the effect that the League, proclaimed, but unarmed, will save the nation and appealing for subscriptions.

A Satisfactory Arrangement.

LONDON, November 7.—The first arrangement between the landlords and tenants under the Land Act occurred on the Brown estate, belonging to an member of Parliament for County Mayo. The agreed to take half a rent for fifteen years at a reduction of from 13 to 15 per cent on each holding, calculated on the rent fixed for the last ten years. In consequence of this arrangement several tenants have withdrawn the notices that they sent to the Land Commission.

General Notes.

At the first sitting of the Land Commission in Limerick there was a large attendance and about 200 claims for reduction of rent were presented.

A Dublin correspondent, discussing the Home Rule meeting, says: Its little wonder politicians who met under the name of the Home Rule League think they are a force to be reckoned with, emerging from the insignificance into which they were cast by the Land League. Some of the people were present at the meeting at which the manifesto was promulgated.

A Dublin dispatch of 7th says:

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A conference of Trades Unions was held to-night for the purpose of taking steps to issue addresses to the Trades Unions of Great Britain, France, Germany and the United States, calling attention to the condition of laborers in Ireland, and requesting that further the project will soon be held.

Receptive to Irish Agitators.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A reception was tendered to-night by the Land League of this city to M. Dillon, Sheridan, Sullivan and Sexton. The audience was large and unusually enthusiastic. Judge John Hoey presided.

Work of the Land Commission.

DUBLIN, Nov. 10.—The first sitting of the Land Commission was held at Ballymoney to-day, though only four cases were presented. It is now stated that more than ever in May, advantage for the advanced view on the land question, the Land Commission has rattled an agreement between landlord and tenant, the universal rule by which the rent of £15 is reduced to £8, 10s, slightly over the Land Law valuation. Other cases on the same estate were settled on a similar basis.

Policy of the Government.

LONDON, Nov. 10. Gladstone, in his speech at Leicester last night, declared that the law would be enforced with firmness and decision in Ireland. The government had been entreated by their agents who had already earned a title to the gratitude of their countrymen for their courage and their exemplary patience with which they had performed their duties.

The Times says: This emphatic statement may serve as a warning to those who have been tempted to yield even a temporary alliance to the penal party. We understand that the practical difficulty of engaging in a conflict with the large body of Irish tenantry, will be met, if it be met, by a change of front, and, if need be, the courts in which difficulties occur.

A National Convention.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—An Irish National Convention has been called to meet in Chicago, Nov. 30th, for a three-day session.

LONDON, Nov. 11—Reports from all parts of country show Irish Halloe the most extensive exercises in the part of farmers to go before the Land Courts. In some districts large sums of money are being subscribed towards the formation of a national protection fund.

"United Ireland."

DUBLIN, Nov. 11.—United Ireland denies that action has become milder, and states he never had any connection with it. The editor issues an address to the Friends of the Land at Home, branches, asking them to forward him the weekly amounts of the rents in their respective districts, in order to keep their brethren in America informed in regard to the interests of the tenants.

The corporation of Limerick has passed a resolution to confer the freedom of the city upon Dillon, 10 forty members only fifteen voting against it. Dillon is now addressing the street.

It is stated that Kettle is threatened with paralysis, and Dillon has lost the sight of one of his eyes.

Work of the Land Court Guarding the "Suspects."

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—A cable special to the Herald from Dublin of Nov. 12th, says: The country is still in a transition state. Applications continue to pour into the Land Court, the number of which for the week just ended, the 7th, reaches to over 2,000, but it appears that the Act is generally accepted, for about half a million Irish tenants are entitled to the benefit of the Act. The Land Court has developed the continued determination of tenants to avail themselves of the opportunity to pay rents without liberal reductions. It may be considered as a certain fact that the Act will be manifested fairly perfectly that. Only a few instances have come to light where the people decline to pay any rent whatever. The amnesty case was in Kilkenny, where the tenants judged that the landlord, and gave the following promissory notes in lieu of rent.

I promise to pay Ralph Dempsey ——— pounds on the day Messrs Farrell, Davitt, and the other suspects are set at liberty.

Reductions Wanted.

As a general thing, however, the tenant offers to pay if heavy reductions are made, but these being refused they will pay nothing. As the old intimidation still is practiced, though not so openly, it has the effect of preventing many from going into the Court, who would gladly do so. The Land Commission has the mills of the gods, "grind slowly but they grind exceedingly small." Two Commissions have a sitting for two weeks. The two Commissions in one week have only given decisions involving thirty-one tenants, twenty-nine of those by one Commission. Even with the new Commissions the work accomplished will be small compared with the vast number of cases which call for investigation. This delay, like everything connected with the act, bears against the landlords, for the Court has decided that when the tenant has once applied to the Court the landlord cannot disturb him until the case is decided, so that if the trial of the case can be delayed one or two years, it is so much gain to the tenant, while the landlord may get no rent whatever during that time.

No One Satisfied.

Of course the great reductions in rent made by Commissioners have caused profound astonishment, but the landlords are silent, seemingly waiting for further decisions, as they are not seemingly satisfied. The Tory papers are attacking Parnell, Sexton and other leaders of the League, while the League press says that the reductions are not nearly so great as they should be, and that be feared that rents in Ulster would not be reduced sufficiently.

Work of the Commission.

DUBLIN, Nov. 12. Among the applications for reduction of rent are those of Lord Ely on the estate of Sir George Colthurst of Cork, Lord Ely's rent is £1,000 and the Land Commissioners and Marquis Ely, Fermanagh, Lord Ely's rent is £1,000 on the estate of Marquis Lanes, where the tile tenants have long refused to pay rent. The Land Commission has reduced, and in other cases have been reported to, or before today, that it will note the application, and if it will only to-day, it is greatly increased the tenants families. The Monaghan Land Commission has rendered decisions in all the pending cases, granting, in nearly every instance, a reduction of 20 per cent on the rents. The number of applications to the Land Court is now over 25,000.

The "Suspects."

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Hayes, President of the Kilkenny branch of the Land League has been arrested. Six suspects have been removed from Kilmainham Jail to Island Jail. The Lord Chancellor granting Limerick Jail has been released by a habeas corpus. Thirty-eight suspects have returning from Natal will proceed to Ireland to-day for the mainton.

At a banquet tonight Earl Spencer, Lord Privy Seal of the Cabinet, said the Land Act of Ireland will be enforced. We shall extend to Irish all the privileges and liberty we possess, but we are ready to shed our blood against a repeal of the Union.

General Notes.

Dempsey the proprietor of the Ulster Examiner and the Northern Star, has been elected to County Cavan Jury in the interest of Parnellite in the coming Parliamentary election.

Parnell has written to a member of the Wick Land League that he will not, under any circumstances, be a candidate for the Wicklow seat, that he would be a mistake to consider the truth of cause a breakdown of the influence of the leader. Thousands are not paying, although all the members of the Land Court are asking for a liberal reduction. It can only be conjectured what they will come from the Court, after they find the Court giving reductions on demand. Meanwhile there may be trouble with the most contumacious tenants.

Diverse Views Regarding Rent.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The experience of extensive land agents is that rents are being paid in the Queen's County, Kilkenny, Tipperary, Queen's County, and Kilkenny, Irish Wexford, Clare, Kerry, and Cork, and other parts of the country, there is a general determination not to pay. The Kilkenny Jury, Nov. 7, gave a decided and confident the recent outrages on the Jury.

The Government contemplates establishing a temporary exchequer under the Land Act.

Gladstone Praised by a Fenian.

O'Leary, a member of the Fenian triumvirate, has written a letter from Paris declaring that, while he maintains his principles, he is resolved to combat Ireland, he deprecates the malignine of Parnellite leaders. He says, he gives Ireland a Land Act such as nobody a few years ago dared to hope, and if Gladstone is very much better than most of the Irish Secretaries.

The Fenian Scare.

An important discovery in connection with the operations of the Fenian organization has been made in Dublin. Accident led to the seizure of a box containing fifty revolvers, with bayonets and other chess, including a list of local members and Fenian organizers throughout the country. The box containing the arms was found in the cellar of the house of an Irishman named John Tobin, in Manningham, a suburb of Bradford.

A mysterious box sent from America to Ralph Cody, a member of Parliament, was opened with great precautions at Woolwich arsenal, under the idea that it was an infernal machine, but it was found to contain samples of guns.

Cashel, Nov. 12.—Mr. Lyons, a Fenian lecturer in Roscommon and Leitrim counties, has been arrested under the Coercion Act and imprisoned.

Fenian Documents.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The documents seized in connection with the arrest of Tobin, the Fenian, relate to the establishment, by force of arms, of the Irish Republic. They reveal the existence of an extensive organization, known as the Revolutionary Executive Society, with ramifications everywhere. The books, rules and list of members of the society are likely to throw light on the extent of similar organizations elsewhere.

Arrests and Perhaps Denial.

LONDON, Nov. 13. Archbishop Croke of Cashel, writes to the Dublin Freeman's Journal approving the existence of the Irish Land Leagues, and pledges to the New York Irish Land Leagues, that he will give all in his power to help the harvest.

Prisoners were released from prison yesterday.

Considering the Irish Question.

DUBLIN, Nov. 15. The Pope said in Consistory with a select congregation of Cardinals, to consider the Irish question to-day.

Overtures.

The usual returns show that there are only 30,000 aliens in the United States. What! And yet, according to Mr. Blaine, there are twice that number of discoverers. There must be a mistake somewhere.

A Great Pilgrimage to Rome.

20,000 PEOPLE IN ST. PETER'S.

Magnificent Pageant.

Our Rome correspondent sends the following account of the Italian Pilgrimage which was briefly alluded to in the cablegrams two weeks ago.

On Friday morning the Italian pilgrims assembled at the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome, to make the tour of their visit to the patriarchal basilicas prescribed by the Bull of Jubilee, but which, in their case, the Pope has been pleased to reduce to two, the basilicas of Santa Maria Maggiore and St. Peter's. An address was delivered by the Patriarch of Venice, Sanvitale, which concluded with the words "Ite ad Jesum Mariam" in red letters were printed on the breasts of all the pilgrims. Holy Mass was celebrated, and general Communion was administered. On leaving the basilica the pilgrims put their crosses in their pockets, or otherwise concealed them, in conformity with the Papal fiscal fiscal relating to the pilgrimage. Outside there was a considerable police force, many in civil clothes, but no crowd had gathered, and no attempt was made to molest the pilgrims.

On Sunday the Basilica of St. Peter's was closed to the public, and great curtains were drawn within the iron grates of the vestibule on the occasion of the solemn reception by Leo XIII of the members of the Italian pilgrimage, organized, as distinctly stated, in reparation of the sacrilegious committed on the night of the 13th of July and of the insults and calumnies at the public meetings held in the principal cities of Italy. The pilgrims, who come from all parts of the Peninsula, led by the Patriarch of Venice and accompanied by twenty-two Bishops, entered by the bronze gates of the Vatican, and thence turning at the foot of the Scala Regia into the vestibule of St. Peter's, passed into the Basilica. The Diplomatic Body, members of the Roman nobility, members of the societies of Catholic interests, and deputations from the Roman parishes, and clubs to whom tickets had been granted, had in through the sacristy. By half past eleven some 20,000 persons had assembled in the Basilica, and the southern transept was crammed to suffocation. The Palatine Guard, numbering 200 men, marched in, formed an hollow rectangle, transversely across the nave of the Basilica from the chapel of the Blessed Sacrament to that of SS. Simon and Jude as the end of the world transept, and the Pontifical throne had been erected, and grounded arms with the exception of the Bersaglieri, stationed by order of Venice, with the twenty-two pilgrim Bishops, escorted by the Swiss Guards in full uniform with their halberds, went down in procession to the Confessional. Then passed all the members of the College of Cardinals at present in Rome, walking two and two, attended by their train-bearers and gentlemen, and escorted by Swiss Guards, and at twelve o'clock precisely

UTTERED DAILY AGAINST THE POPE

THE

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THE ORIGIN OF THE RED ROSE.

A POETIC LEGEND OF A LEGEND GIVEN BY A RECENT NUMBER OF THE "NEW MARTA."

When the tender smile of God
Shone on Eden's favored sod,
Ere the shade of guilt and gloom
Blighted all the blissful bloom,
They the Rose bower her reign,
So rejoice of the floral train,
And His smile, with holy light
Crowned her leaves of spotless white.
For no other hue she wore
In that sinless time of yore.
But she shed her balmy breath
Near the woeful Tree of Death,
And when Eve's rebellious hand
Proudly scorned her God's command,
Then the rose's stainless white
Vanished at that fearful sight—
Then the crimson hue of shame
O'er her snowy petals came,
And that blush alone she wore
Till the demon reign was o'er,
Till a Saviour's Precious Blood
Flowed in blest, atoning flood
O'er the Mystic Mount of Death,
Till she shed her balmy breath
Where the sinless Mother clung
Where the Saving Victim hung,
Thus, with Eve, indignant flame
Its deep-empurpled Cross—
Then that Life-Stream's torrent bright
Gave her back her primal white,
And she smiled in bloom unstained,
Ere a world from death regained,
But not off her blossoms glow
With that sheen of spotless snow—
Some, upon their petals fair
Color of His Life Blood bear,
And the crimson hue of shame,
That, with them, indignant flame
Bids each petal, dew-impearled,
Blush to-day as in the world.

San Francisco. MARIE.

Literary Miscellany.

The Last Glass---The First Feast.

"Why, you careless man, you've been and broken your glass," said a smart-looking young landlady with a quick tongue, to one of her best customers, who spent the bulk of his wages at her husband's house, and kept his wife and family in rags and misery.

"Nonsense, miss," said the man, Saul Hobson by name; "I haven't broken your glass."

"But you have, then," she retorted impatiently, annoyed at his contradiction; "just look at that crack; do you mean to tell me that crack was there when you took your drink? You've knocked it against something, that you have—why the pitiage is utterly ruined."

"All right," said Saul, pacifically, in a rather maudlin tone, for he had already drank a good deal.

"Tisn't all right," said the provoked landlady; "it's all wrong, and I can tell you you shall not have this house without paying for the glass that you have broken."

"Nonsense," said Saul, "you know me, and you ought to believe my word. I didn't break that glass. You don't mean that?"

"I do mean it," she said.

"Blest my heart! and think what an old friend I am of you and yours; you'd never be so hard upon a poor fellow as that! Besides, I didn't break it."

"You did break it!" she exclaimed still more angrily.

Then Saul Hobson grew angry in his turn.

"Very well, missus," he said sternly, "what's to pay?"

"Fourpence; and 'twas worth every farthing of the money, too."

He flung down four penny pieces noisily upon the table.

"There, then; and now the glass is mine, and I can take it home."

"Of course you can," she rejoined haughtily and sarcastically, "if you've a mind to go filling up your place with poor broken stuff like that. Take it and welcome."

"There's no welcome about it; I've paid for it, and it's mine."

With these words Saul Hobson rose to leave the "Three Fawns," carrying in his hand the broken tumbler. At the door he met the landlord, who had been out.

"Good evening, Saul; where are you going off to, man?"

"Home," said Saul.

"Home, nonsense!" said the landlord; "it isn't nine o'clock yet—you've been in no time at all, man; what's the matter?"

"I'd better not speak say more in this house, for my word isn't believed."

"Sally," said the landlord of the "Three Fawns," turning a look of annoyance on his buxom partner behind the bar, "what have you been quarrelling with Mr. Hobson about?"

"Nothing, Mr. Hart; he's broken a glass and had to pay for it; that's all.

"I didn't break it," said Saul.

"Had to pay for it! Give him back the money this moment. Is this how you manage my business when my back is turned! Don't you know better, Sally, than to treat an old friend and a good customer in such a way! What's the price of a tumbler? Come back, Saul, and forget all about her folly," urged the landlord.

"No, thank you," said Saul, not smiling or yielding in the slightest degree to Mr. Hart's good nature and blandishments, "I shall keep my word and go home."

So saying he left the house.

"You are a beauty to quarrel with Saul Hobson," said the landlord, angrily, to his wife, and there ensued a war of words between the pair which we need not chronicle here.

"Now, there's no sense in your being so savage, Mr. Hart," said his wife, amongst her other speeches, "that man will be back in a few nights as furthest, as sure as my name is Sarah Hart.

But the landlady's prophecy was bound to be unfulfilled.

Saul Hobson took his way to the desolate, barely-furnished room he called his home. His wife looked up in surprise as she saw him enter. With dry humor, that she hardly appreciated, he set the broken tumbler on the table and said:

"There, Fan, what do you think of that as a bargain."

"Fourpence, Saul!" she answered in grave earnest, "it would be dear at a haypenny. What on earth did you buy a broken tumbler for! Surely, we have broken things enough about us," and she glanced around at the contents of the room, of which certainly quite a large proportion was unsound. Saul followed his wife's glance with a bitter smile upon his lips.

"Yes, Fanny; so the tumbler will satisfy."

Wondering alike at the comparative sobriety and the strangeness of his tone, the discreet wife ventured no further remark.

"Have you got no supper for your husband, Fan?" he asked.

"Not a bit of bread, Saul: there's nothing else in the house.

He laughed bitterly.

"And you didn't expect me!"

"No, I didn't."

"Well, I don't blame you for that. Is it too late to buy a pound of bread? There is fire enough to fry it, more's the wonder. There is a shilling, Fanny; perhaps, you wouldn't dislike a cup of tea."

"Oh, thank you, Saul!"

Fanny Hobson was hungry and tired, and the prospect was inviting. She slipped out readily, wondering and excited. She soon returned with the bacon and an ounce of tea. It was quite wonderful the alacrity with which, thus encouraged, the hustled about to make the place comfortable. The warm, savory smell, and the noise of the frying bacon as it fizzed and hissed in the pan, reached the children in their bed on the floor in a little recess of the room, and they called out:

"What is it, mother; who's frying?"

"Mother is," answered Saul Hobson; "and if you are good and quiet you shall have a taste."

A wee struck at their father's voice, the children were like mice for the next few minutes save a simpleminded comment or two on the prospect before them.

It was a sight to behold that family half an hour later—the poor little man, half-fed scantily-clothed, the children gathered around their parents' knees, and eating ravenously of bread and bacon, the mother, sipping of a warm tea from the basin which their father used, or the cracked tea-cup of their mother. When they went back to their bed, warm and contented, there was a whisper among them, and anyone in tremulous tones—a listener out of tune, perhaps, and yet sorely sore—how in tune with the angels' music—simple words of thanks.

Saul Hobson's eyes grew moist with blessed tears, and he was silent for some time. Then he sneaked out of the house, he had left the door open in his haste, and flung it over the fireplace, where it fell in a dozen pieces.

"There, Fanny," said he "there's my last glass at the 'Three Fawns'—that's the last glass of liquor I shall ever drink."

"Thank God!"

* * *

Eight years have passed away—eight happy years for Saul and Fanny Hobson. Slowly but surely the work of reformation has been carried on in that once miserable family. Almost the first act of its head, when he had recovered all his pledged articles from the pawnshop, was to remove into a tidier quarter of the town, and engage two rooms.

Being an able workman he soon received an advance in his wages, and then his master discovered he could depend on his punctual attendance; and Saul began to save. He had lidless of bettering his condition formed in his poor brain, which in his drink-loving days could not find room there. And, now with a small capital carefully and prudently accumulated year by year, he has just gone into business as a master tradesman with a light heart, a clear conscience and a happy home.

Saul Hobson never ceases to rejoice in the circumstances that led him to decide that he had taken his last glass.

Saved by Hearing Mass.

Three Italian merchants from Gubbio were once travelling together to the little town of Caterno. After finishing their business, they were talking about their return home, and determined to start very early next morning, in order that they might reach home in the evening. But one of the three opposed this, and insisted that they ought at least to wait for Mass, as it was Sunday. The two others, however, would not listen to him, and said that God would readily pardon them if for once they omitted to hear Mass in order to have a quicker and more pleasant journey.

Hardly had the days dawn broken on the following morning when the two merchants were riding out of the gate of Caterno, while their companion remained behind in order to assist at Mass. After journeying on for some hours they came to the river Curfione, across which was laid a long wooden bridge. There had been almost incessant rains for some time previous, and this, together with heavy floods, had rendered the bridge insecure. The riders knew nothing about this, and fearlessly allowed their spirited horses to dash over it; but when they had gone about half way, the bridge fell with a crash and was carried away by the swollen stream with horses and riders. Some country people heard the cry of distress that was uttered by the sinking men and hastened to the place, but they could not succeed in saving them, notwithstanding their courageous efforts: it was only after some hours and with great trouble that they managed to drag the corpses of the unfortunate travellers from the water. They laid the bodies down on the banks, and many people came running to the spot but no one could recognize the strangers.

At last the third merchant came riding into Caterno, where he had heard Mass; he saw and recognized the bodies of his two friends, and was told by the people the history of their sudden death. Hereupon the merchant threw himself upon his knees, raised his hands and eyes towards heaven in sincerest gratitude, and then told those that stood around how he had escaped sharing in the fate of his companions, declaring that he owed his life to the fact that he had assisted devoutly at Mass.

For Boys to Think of.

Richard Burke being found in a reverie shortly after an extraordinary display of power in the House of Commons by his brother Edmund, and questioned by Mr. Malone as to the cause, "I have been wondering how Neil has contrived to monopolize all the talents of the family. But, then again, I remember, when we were at play he was always at work." The force of the anecdote was increased by the fact that Richard Burke was not considered inferior in natural talents to his more distinguished brother. Yet the one rose to greatness, while the other died comparatively obscure. Had Neil been your genius, young man, if you would rise, but work! work! work!

* * *

— Lord Byron, in reference to a beautiful lady, wrote to a friend—"Lady—— has been dangerously ill, but now she is dangerously well again." American belles, when attacked by any of the ills that flesh is heir to, may be kept sitting, and avoid being killed by taking Dr. V. H. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," which banishes feminine weaknesses, and restores the bloom of health. By all druggists.

An American in Ireland.

How Redpath Converted "Nasby" on the Irish Question.

WHAT WAS SEEN AND HEARD IN THE GALTEE MOUNTAINS.

Some of the Horrible Results of Irish Landlordism.

D. N. Locke in Toledo Blade.

COOK (Ireland), October 4.—I went from Dublin to Cork the most prejudiced man against the Irish that lives between the earth and the sky. In fact, when Mr. Jas. Redpath found me in Dublin I was engaged in a disputation with Mr. Charles Stewart Parnell, the President of the Land League, in which I was endeavoring to convince him that he was a demagogue; that the Irish had no reason for agitation; that whatever of suffering there was in the country was attributable to some inherent weakness in the Irish character; that Ireland could only be properly ruled by the English, and that they ought to be thankful to the kind Providence that had given them a superior race to protect and care for them.

Mr. Redpath, who gave the best years of his life to the killing of slavery in America, and who is doing all that one large-souled, brainy man of more can do to kill another form of slavery in Ireland, and to me, "Come with me to the South of Ireland for just a day. I won't ask you to pay a cent, I will show you something that will astonish you, as it did me."

I went with Mr. Redpath to Cork, and the first day we took a carriage and went for Blarney Castle. Mr. Redpath was silent, which, with the purpose he had in view, was the highest wisdom. In five miles we had counted 500 women without shoes or stockings, walking in the cold mud.

This was Mr. Redpath's argument, and it was an argument better than any man could make from a platform.

SERMON AND BEYOND.

The next day we took a train for Fermoy, a distance of perhaps fifty miles. In Fermoy, a tolerably prosperous village for Ireland, the women did not only have no shoes or stockings, but they had scarcely anything else to wear.

"This is nothing," said the wise Mr. Redpath; "these people are fairly prosperous for Ireland. I shall show you something worth while before night."

It puzzled me somewhat to understand how anybody could be worse off than to be walking in cold mud without any protection whatever for the feet; but I found it at Mitchelstown, at the foot of the Galtee Mountains.

Boarding one of those most excitable of all vehicles, an Irish jaunting-car, we left Mitchelstown at nine o'clock in the morning in a soaking rain-storm, the cold, misty drizzle going through our heavy overcoats, and almost penetrating our very marrow.

Our driver was a loquacious fellow, who had at his tongue's end hundreds of instances of the grievous wrongs of his people, of the terrible sufferings of the poor evicted tenants. He talked fast, and, his whole heart being in the subject, he talked well, oftentimes emphasizing his stories by pointing to barefooted, lare-legged and bare-headed women who went trudging along the cold, wet road with no protection from the frightful inclemency of the weather but a light shawl thrown over the head and shoulders and scarcely covered their bodies. Those women, when he pointed out as evicted tenants, were not the rough, degraded-looking beggars that are commonly supposed to overrun Ireland and make the tourists his one of unmitigated annoyance. They were bright, intelligent and handsome, and, notwithstanding the horrors of their situation, they were comparatively cheerful. But it was an unnatural cheerfulness, for it was noticeable that there were tears about the mouth and around the eyes that told too plainly their story of want and suffering.

Even with these living evidences we could hardly believe the stories of cruelties committed by the landlords and their agents which our driver kept pouring into our ears. We could not realize that they could be true. They seemed so absolutely fiendish that we thought it refused to accept them, and did not, till having gone about nine miles from Mitchelstown we stopped at a miserable cabin, as they called it, although we would have more properly denominated it a hovel.

WHAT DUGGAN SAID.

On the return of Mr. Duggan from the fields we went with him up the Galtee mountains, he explaining on the way that he was very comfortably fixed compared with his neighbors. He said that his grandfather had taken the little holding he occupied when it was full of stones and rocks, and had made it productive. He paid a rent of three shillings an acre for it. During his lifetime the land was partially reclaimed; the rent was raised to four

THE MONITOR.
WEDNESDAY..... NOVEMBER 16.

THIS WEEK'S SUPPLEMENT.

We furnish our readers with a twelve-column Supplement this week in order to make room for a large variety of information on the Irish Question, and other affairs of interest to Catholic readers. We shall continue to furnish these Supplements to our patrons as often as the importance of the news of the week requires them, as we are determined that our readers shall be thoroughly posted upon all affairs of Religious or National importance in this eventful crisis in the history of the Church, as well as in the land whose children have been among the most faithful to the whole Christian flock.

Dr. Stebbins on St. Athanasius and His Creed.

Whenever a Protestant preacher undertakes to enlighten the public upon any point concerning the Catholic Church, he generally succeeds in exhibiting the poverty of his knowledge and the paucity of his intellect. Last week the well-known Unitarian preacher, Dr. Stebbins, lectured before his congregation on "St. Athanasius and His Creed," and he made a woeful mess of the whole business, his main points being merely transcripts from some Protestant encyclopedia—the general storehouse from which most Protestant preachers purloin their "splendid" discourses. We know from experience that Dr. Stebbins is—like the majority of puffed-up preachers—merely a drum, emitting a great deal of sound, but entirely hollow within and his so-called "lecture" on St. Athanasius proves him to be neither a student nor a scholar, but a mere adapter of the fiction published by encyclopedists as facts. This we shall prove before we close our criticism of the Doctor without divinity.

Dr. Stebbins told his hearers, in speaking of St. Athanasius, that "very little of his birth, lineage or race is known, except through tradition." This may do for Protestants as ignorant and as heedless of the edifying lives of Catholic saints as Dr. Stebbins and his hearers, but it will never do to tell Catholics that "very little is known" about one among the most eminent saints in the calendar. If Dr. Stebbins had learned something about St. Athanasius from Catholic authority, before he undertook to consign that saint to the realms of tradition, he would have been entitled to some credit for his candor; but no intelligent Protestant must imagine that because Dr. Stebbins says that nothing is known about a great Doctor of the Catholic Church that, therefore, such an assertion is true. It is Dr. Stebbins who is at fault in the matter and not the Catholic Church, because Catholics possess just as reliable knowledge concerning the parentage, birth, life and death of St. Athanasius as we do of any other saint in the calendar of the Church. Unitarians may not know anything about him, but, most assuredly, that charge cannot be left at the door of Catholic literature.

For the information, therefore, of Dr. Stebbins, we desire to tell him that St. Athanasius, Patriarch of Alexandria and Doctor of the Church, was a native of Alexandria, and was born of Christian parents about the year 296. After he had acquired an ordinary education, he acted as secretary to St. Alexander, under whom he became master of that methodical manner of com position which characterizes all his writings. In 313, when St. Alexander was called to succeed Bishop Achillas in the See of Alexandria, St. Athanasius accompanied him, but he subsequently spent some time with St. Antony, as an anchorite in the desert. The saint, in 325, accompanied St. Alexander to the Council of Nice, where he gained immortality by his able refutation of the Arian heresy concerning the Son of God. Five months after the Council St. Alexander died and St. Athanasius succeeded him in his See; this happened in the year 326, as St. Cyril testifies "that he held the See forty-six years," and, after a most eventful life, throughout which he frequently suffered persecution at the hands of schismatics and heretics, he died on Thursday, May 2d, in the year 373, and the Church has set apart that day as his feast in the calendar. Now we submit that there is no uncertainty in all this. We are neither dependent upon surmise or tradition for all these facts, because we procure them from a source that is just as available to Dr. Stebbins as it is to us; but then it may be that the Doctor desired to throw the veil of mystery around the character of a saint whose creed is a stumbling-block to the Unitarian fraternity.

Dr. Stebbins next misinformed his hearers that St. Athanasius was the author of the creed which bears his name. This is also untrue, the formulas of the profession of faith in question having been composed by Osius of Cordova, the legate of Pope St. Sylvester, at the Council of Nice, and Hermogenes, afterwards Bishop of Cesarea, in Cappadocia, wrote them at his dictation. It was the able refutation of Arius and his heresiarchs, by St. Athanasius, therefore, that gave his name to the creed, as he had no hand in writing it.

Dr. Stebbins next regaled the ears of his auditors with the following silly story—which no doubt they swallowed with as much gout as they would so much Unitarian gospel:

"He first came under the notice of Bishop Alexander in a singular manner. The Bishop was giving an entertainment to his deacons, when, upon looking out the window, he saw on the seashore a number of boys acting what he suspected to be a religious ceremony. They were sent for, and, though at first they denied it, finally owned up, and their leader, who took the part of a priest, knew the forms used in baptism so thoroughly, and had accordingly used them accurately in his play, that the Bishop decided the mock ceremony binding, and therewith ordained the whole crowd."

The Doctor copied this parody on "Pepish practices" from the pages of a quack, and he also changed its application to suit his own taste, not thinking that his ruse would ever be discovered. Rufinus, an unreliable writer, reports the story of Athanasius (and not St. Alexander) baptizing certain children at play, but Rufinus inserts it merely upon hearsay evidence. Hermant, Tillemont, Cellier, Orsi, and the Benedictine editors of the writings of St. Athanasius either repudiate the silly story altogether, or pass it by as an idle fable, which, no doubt it was, but Dr. Stebbins thought it was suitable meat wherewith to stuff his "lecture" on a subject about which he evidently knew very little and had much to learn.

How Protestant Preachers Propagate the Gospel.

We have frequently called attention in these columns to the fact that Protestant missionaries worked more for their own material benefit than for the advancement of the Christianity they were supposed to represent. This has been proved to be the rule in nearly every land into which Protestant missionaries have penetrated, under the plea of Christianizing pagans, but, in reality, for the purpose of filling up their own capacious pockets and living on the fat of the land. It was so in India, in Australia and Africa, and now we have recent developments which prove the Protestant missionaries on the Sandwich Islands to have been the most relentless, cruel and corrupt body that ever bellowed about the Bible. American Protestant missions have now been in existence in the Sandwich Islands for more than sixty years, and their continuance has entailed a heavier curse upon the people which is rapidly depopulating the Islands. As early as 1844 there were seventy-nine Protestant propagandists among the Kanakas, and what has been the result? Rich missionaries and a poor, oppressed people who have been robbed of their lands, robbed of their virtue, robbed of their liberties, and then left to die by the roadside or doomed to a lingering death as lepers. And all this has been the work of so-called Christian ministers who were reported to their respective societies to be "advancing the cause of Christ among the Sandwich Island savages." Let us see how these wretched whited sepulchres disgraced the names of Christian and American by their blasphemous use of the name of God and her which to work out their iniquity. Here is an extract from a city contemporary, based on information furnished by a gentleman who was for many years a resident of the Islands, and who knows whereof he speaks:

MISSIONARY SLAVE-OWNERS.

One sugar plantation where this slavery is now established is the most popular from all who are called Papals, in the Kau district of Hawaii. This is the plantation of the Hawaiian Agricultural Company, and the leading members of the company and of the owners of the plantation are the leading "missionaries" of the Islands. "Missionaries," as used on the Islands, means not only people whose exclusive business it is to carry the Bible and the cross of God to the pagan and the benighted, but also comprises lay members of the true church as established in Honolulu by the missionary, pure and simple, and whose principal mission it is to make money out of the pagan and the benighted. Among these owners are Father Damon, called Father, though a scrupulous Presbyterian, and P. C. Jones of the firm of Brewer & Co., one of the firms known as Doctor, Watchouse, and Bishop of the firm Bishop & Co. These are all distinguished members of the Honolulu Fort street church, which is the sugar kingdom of Kalakaua. To simple minded laborers coming from the uncivilized South Sea Islands, "where, every prospect pleases and only man is vile," to other islands where dwell kindly Christians like Damon, Jones, Carter, Waterhouse and Bishop, must, by a parity of reasoning, be a even more pleasant prospect than the topography of the country. Honolulu and Pilo ought to be heaven of rest. But they are not—not to any great extent.

ON THE STEPS OF SLAVERY.

At the Papala plantation the enlisted laborers are housed as at other plantations. Rude one-story houses fifty feet long by twelve wide have been erected and divided each into five rooms, each ten by twelve feet. If a laborer is accompanied by a wife and children, even of nearly grown sons and daughters, all are compelled to live by day and sleep by night promiscuously in this one room. Where laborers come unaccompanied, each room is filled with them. Each plantation has a manager, whose chief duty appears to be to do nothing except receive his wages. Under him is the head luna, or overseer, who has charge of the laborers as a mass. Next are the under luna, each having charge of a gang of about twenty men. The luna's overseeing very nearly in the duties discharged by them as well as in their characteristics to the whilom slave-drivers and the "Simon Legrees" of the Southern States. The laborers are compelled to work day in and day out, when not raining too hard to make the work unpardonable, from 6 o'clock in the morning till 8 at night, with exceptions at noon long enough to devour their rations sufficient to keep them in the yard. Only this work is accepted as a reason for remission. There is the sole judge of the sufficiency of the sickness, and at the eminently Christian plantation of Papala Mr. Jameson says he has seen sickness which was not considered by the luna sufficient excuse, but which was so severe that the sufferer had to be carried and laid in the sun by four-foot cell in which those who will not work are kept in solitary confinement. And he has seen these same unfortunates, after days of imprisonment have assisted them to the doors of death, again carried to their cells, to die in the dark like dogs in their cells, there to die or to convalesce into a worse fate, as chance might decree.

It makes us blush with shame when we reflect that the shocking slavery and cruelties described have been perpetrated by hollow-hearted wretches who went to those innocent people under the pretext of preaching the gospel of Christ! Yet this is the Protestant programme in nearly every land where it has representatives, and it serves to show what a sham the whole scheme of Protestantism is, because the iniquities are not confined to any particular sect, inasmuch as "they all do it," and religious ventures in foreign lands have long been looked upon as simply legitimate commercial enterprises to put money into the pockets of the preachers. That this has been the object of the Protestant missionaries in the Sandwich Islands is attested by numerous writers as well as by the facts furnished by a contemporary. In 1845 Mr. Melville visited the Islands of the Pacific, and, in his work subsequently published, he thus alludes to the cruelty of the Protestant missionaries over the enslaved people: "Not until I visited Honolulu," says this Protestant writer, "was I aware of the fact that the small remnant of the natives had been civilized into draught horses and evangelized into beasts of burden. But it is so." Sir George Simpson, Rev. Gustavus Hines, and numerous other writers allude to the debased state to which Protestant preachers had reduced the Sandwich Islanders in the same vein, and this latest development is only the sequel to the many chapters of cruelty that have hitherto been written concerning Protestant propagandism of slavery and sickness among the pagans, who, if not Christians, were at least purer and better in the sight of God than some of the sectarian scalawags who went there to rob them of their lands and their liberties, and to inflict upon them cruelties that would bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of the greatest barbarian that ever lived. Protestantism, therefore, is the great persecutor of poor helpless pagans in these modern days.

Latitudinarianism in the Episcopalian Sect.

Among all the sectarian schemes for the propagation of Protestantism, there is not one with more pretensions to Christianity and less real practice of the gospel injunctions than the Episcopalian. This is a fact admitted by their preachers themselves, one of whom said in a public address, delivered after his conversion to the Catholic faith, that "a man in her membership can hold almost any theological or other view. He can teach nearly all the doctrines of the Church of Rome, or can be next door to a Protestant, Presbyterian, Unitarian or Infidel, and yet maintain his position as a minister therein." This gentleman was the Rev. Thomas Jones, of Walkerville, near Windsor, Ontario, who was for many years a regularly ordained minister of the Episcopalian sect, yet he had never been baptized! We present this singular fact in order to show the Pacific Churchman how much it was in error last week when it said that its sect had a faith, and that the ancient creeds were her standards, both of which assertions are false in every particular. There can be no latitude allowed in matters of faith in the Catholic Church, for the reason that the Church is the representative of God, and in obeying her we obey Him. But in the man-made mongrel sects all this is different. There everybody is his own creed-maker; he believes just as much or as little as he likes, and so long as he pays his pew rent and wears good clothes, he is looked upon as an acceptable member of the sect he assings with, and no questions are asked as to what he does or does not believe. The Churchman thinks it makes a point against the Monitor when it advances this insane idea:

"If diversities of opinion are signs of unhealthiness in a religious body, the Roman Church is surely without claim. Not even Rome's most impulsive can stop man from thinking and expressing their thoughts. It has been agitated by internal controversies for hundreds of years. Jansenist and Jesuit have fought their battles within her fold."

For the enlightenment of the Churchman, it may be well to state that "diversities of opinion" which do not apply to dogma are fully permitted in the Catholic Church. Rome never tried to prevent men from thinking and expressing their thoughts on any topic, but when Rome speaks ex cathedra, then all Catholics acquiesce, and the other kind join the Episcopalians or some other side show with the stolen sign of Christianity hung out to catch the unwary. The Church of God has been witness to thousands of "internal controversies," not only between Jesuits and Jansenists, but between numerous other schismatics and the true pastors of the Church of Christ; but our contemporary evidently forgets that the Jesuits are still in the Church, while the Jansenists are all outside of it or gone to that bourne from whence no traveller returns. There is no deviation permitted on doctrinal affairs in the true Church, and those who are not with her must choose the other side and be against her.

The Churchman mentions another point which it may be well to notice just now, and that is where our church contemporary makes these false and splenic charges against the Church:

"As to the Roman Church, no one can tell what its faith may be to-morrow. Within our time two essential articles, belief in which is necessary to salvation, have been added—Immaculate Conception and Papal Infallibility. What has become of the millions who have died in the Romish Church, who were kept ignorant by a long succession of infallible Popes, of these essential articles of faith?"

These assertions are as untrue as they are uncourteous. Semper idem is the motto of the Church of God. She never departs from her declared dogma nor never infringes on her immutability. The dogmas of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary and also of the Infallibility of the Pope have neither been added nor altered within the Churchman's time nor for centuries preceding it. They always existed in the Church, but were never dogmatically declared to be articles of faith until within a comparatively recent date. The millions who died prior to the proclamation of these dogmas went to heaven, purgatory or hell, according to their lives and their light. It is the good we do, and not the knowledge we possess, that decides the fate of the souls of Catholics. With Protestants it may be different, as they generally consider that all the aristocracy of their sects go to heaven through newspaper mortuary puffs—and all the unfortunate poor go to the other place, so as not to offend the optics of their opulent brethren in the Paradise reserved specially for the Protestant plutocracy.

The Churchman, however, need not trouble its soul over the faith of Catholics. It will find sufficient employment in working out its own salvation rather than ruminating over the fate of what it calls "Romishers." The Church can take care of her own, and when they become rebellious children who seek to disgrace her, she pitches them over—like rank weeds—into the Episcopal garden-patch, where they are welcomed for their worthlessness into a sect well represented by the wavering nature of its quasi doctrines and the pomposity of its pretence to be the Church of Christ.

If the Churchman will study the Bible—which is the sole rule of faith it pretends to follow—it will learn that Almighty God Himself did not make known the Decalogue to the inhabitants of the world until twenty-five centuries of time had elapsed. The Churchman, therefore, in its blasphemous agotism, would also call in question the wisdom of God in thus delaying to reveal to mankind His Commandments, when it charges His Church with the crime of delaying the declaration of a dogma until the nineteenth century. Almighty God could have sent His Son to redeem mankind many thousands of years before that act of heaven was consummated, but it was His will to defer it, and Catholics bow thereto, believing that He doeth all things well. The Churchman's objection on this point, therefore, falls to the ground.

Irish Laudordism Defined by an American.

Until his recent visit to Ireland, Mr. Locke, editor of the Toledo Blade, better known as "Petroleum V. Nasby," was rather inclined to think that the charges against the landlords of Ireland for their cruelty were rather exaggerated, but having traveled through a portion of Ireland, he has seen enough to satisfy him that the real facts in the case deserve more insquity than he could imagine would ever be tolerated in a Christian land. Accordingly, he has written several articles for his well-known journal, in one of which he thus portrays Irish landlordism, in terms as concise and graphic as they are true:

MR. LOCKE SAYS:

Irish landlordism is confined to villages. It is the very top-and-summit of oppression, brutality and terror. It was conceived in lust and greed, born in fraud, and perpetuated in force. It is not economic manhood or childhood. In each land it is the same. In Ireland the tenants are the live millions of people in Ireland who believe just as much or as little as his lordship, and so long as he pays his pew rent and wears good clothes, he is looked upon as an acceptable member of the sect he assings with, and no questions are asked as to what he does or does not believe. The Churchman thinks it makes a point against the Monitor when it advances this insane idea.

"If diversities of opinion are signs of unhealthiness in a religious body, the Roman Church is surely without claim. Not even Rome's most impulsive can stop man from thinking and expressing their thoughts. It has been agitated by internal controversies for hundreds of years. Jansenist and Jesuit have fought their battles within her fold."

For the enlightenment of the Churchman, it may be well to state that "diversities of opinion" which do not apply to dogma are fully permitted in the Catholic Church. Rome never tried to prevent men from thinking and expressing their thoughts on any topic, but when Rome speaks ex cathedra, then all Catholics acquiesce, and the other kind join the Episcopalians or some other side show with the stolen sign of Christianity hung out to catch the unwary. The Church of God has been witness to thousands of "internal controversies," not only between Jesuits and Jansenists, but between numerous other schismatics and the true pastors of the Church of Christ; but our contemporary evidently forgets that the Jesuits are still in the Church, while the Jansenists are all outside of it or gone to that bourne from whence no traveller returns. There is no deviation permitted on doctrinal affairs in the true Church, and those who are not with her must choose the other side and be against her.

The Churchman mentions another point which it may be well to notice just now, and that is where our church contemporary makes these false and splenic charges against the Church:

"As to the Romish Church, no one can tell what its faith may be to-morrow. Within our time two essential articles, belief in which is necessary to salvation, have been added—Immaculate Conception and Papal Infallibility. What has become of the millions who have died in the Romish Church, who were kept ignorant by a long succession of infallible Popes, of these essential articles of faith?"

These assertions are as untrue as they are uncourteous. Semper idem is the motto of the Church of God. She never departs from her declared dogma nor never infringes on her immutability. The dogmas of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary and also of the Infallibility of the Pope have neither been added nor altered within the Churchman's time nor for centuries preceding it. They always existed in the Church, but were never dogmatically declared to be articles of faith until within a comparatively recent date. The millions who died prior to the proclamation of these dogmas went to heaven, purgatory or hell, according to their lives and their light. It is the good we do, and not the knowledge we possess, that decides the fate of the souls of Catholics. With Protestants it may be different, as they generally consider that all the aristocracy of their sects go to heaven through newspaper mortuary puffs—and all the unfortunate poor go to the other place, so as not to offend the optics of their opulent brethren in the Paradise reserved specially for the Protestant plutocracy.

The Churchman, however, need not trouble its soul over the faith of Catholics. It will find sufficient employment in working out its own salvation rather than ruminating over the fate of what it calls "Romishers." The Church can take care of her own, and when they become rebellious children who seek to disgrace her, she pitches them over—like rank weeds—into the Episcopal garden-patch, where they are welcomed for their worthlessness into a sect well represented by the wavering nature of its quasi doctrines and the pomposity of its pretence to be the Church of Christ.

If the Churchman will study the Bible—which is the sole rule of faith it pretends to follow—it will learn that Almighty God Himself did not make known the Decalogue to the inhabitants of the world until twenty-five centuries of time had elapsed. The Churchman, therefore, in its blasphemous agotism, would also call in question the wisdom of God in thus delaying to reveal to mankind His Commandments, when it charges His Church with the crime of delaying the declaration of a dogma until the nineteenth century. Almighty God could have sent His Son to redeem mankind many thousands of years before that act of heaven was consummated, but it was His will to defer it, and Catholics bow thereto, believing that He doeth all things well. The Churchman's objection on this point, therefore, falls to the ground.

MONITOR MENTION.

A new journal devoted to Irish interests, the Irish Times, has appeared in New York edited by John Tracey.

In accordance with the usual custom Gov. Perkins has appointed Thursday, 24th instant as Thanksgiving Day.

The remains of two Sisters of the Holy Family will take place to-morrow morning at their chapel, Hayes street.

—Telegrams from Washington intimate that George C. Gorham has been offered the position of First Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

—Sullivan's the leading cloak and suit house of the Pacific Coast, is the only place to purchase suit for the very lowest prices.

—For a fine and a stylish suit of clothes, the place to go is to John Kavanah's, 6 New Montgomery street. He can't be beat. His specialty is the making of cassocks for clergymen.

—Ladies desirous of keeping up with the fashions in dress should patronize Mrs. Carter, 224 Fifth street, between Howard and Tehama. Mrs. Carter has made dressmaking a life study.

—The October part of the Art Monthly is at hand and is a splendid specimen of Catholic literature. The poetry is also very fine, especially the Monitor without credit.

—Ammen's Cough Syrup, which is largely adverised by the proprietors in a really meritious article manufactured in this state and is far superior to Eastern nostrums of similar character. Give it one trial and you will be satisfied that we know whereof we speak.

—Colonel Sam. has addressed a letter to Jay Gould, informing him that if he wishes to employ the writer to kill him within six days, and that he has taken out his death insurance. Howard Weller has been arrested and admits the authorship of the letter.

—Revivalist Harrison is credited with the remark that "Sodom and Gomorrah are sometimes I think I shall not die, but when my time comes I shall go to a place where I can make my mother wipe off the tears from my face and lose my candy if I want to, and where angels want the angels to hurry up with their cream."

—O'Connor & McBride, proprietors of the Pioneer Oil Store, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of oils, oil stoves, lamps, chandeliers, etc., at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Wm. Vogelsang, the well-known Clothier, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of oils, oil stoves, lamps, chandeliers, etc., at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Wm. Vogelsang, the well-known Clothier, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of clothing, hats, caps and furnishing goods, which they are selling at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Lewis & Hamilton, the popular Clothiers, 1028 and 1030 Market street, are the only parties who can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply only one of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms-House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore import and purchase in such immense quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the second place, as Mr. Washington Lewis says, "I think I shall not die, but when my time comes I shall go to a place where I can make my mother wipe off the tears from my face and lose my candy if I want to, and where angels want the angels to hurry up with their cream."

—O'Connor & McBride, proprietors of the Pioneer Oil Store, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of oils, oil stoves, lamps, chandeliers, etc., at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Wm. Vogelsang, the well-known Clothier, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of clothing, hats, caps and furnishing goods, which they are selling at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Lewis & Hamilton, the popular Clothiers, 1028 and 1030 Market street, are the only parties who can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply only one of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms-House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore import and purchase in such immense quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the second place, as Mr. Washington Lewis says, "I think I shall not die, but when my time comes I shall go to a place where I can make my mother wipe off the tears from my face and lose my candy if I want to, and where angels want the angels to hurry up with their cream."

—O'Connor & McBride, proprietors of the Pioneer Oil Store, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of oils, oil stoves, lamps, chandeliers, etc., at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Wm. Vogelsang, the well-known Clothier, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of clothing, hats, caps and furnishing goods, which they are selling at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

—Lewis & Hamilton, the popular Clothiers, 1028 and 1030 Market street, are the only parties who can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply only one of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms-House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore import and purchase in such immense quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the second place, as Mr. Washington Lewis says, "I think I shall not die, but when my time comes I shall go to a place where I can make my mother wipe off the tears from my face and lose my candy if I want to, and where angels want the angels to hurry up with their cream."

Another Disgraceful Disturbance at a Land League Meeting.

We regret to be again compelled to chronicle the fact that a disgraceful attempt has again been made to destroy the unity of the Land League in this city and to degrade the character of the Irish people before the public. Thanks to the promptness and prudence of the Chairman of the meeting and the unswerving loyalty of the people, the attempt was a failure, and the Irish element in this city saved from a disgrace which would alienate from them the sympathy of every right-minded citizen irrespective of creed or nationality.

The stand taken by Father Ragan in defending the Hierarchy of Ireland from the malicious assaults of malcontents is to be commended by every man who desires to see Ireland's freedom secured by constitutional means and peaceable agitation. The Bishops of Ireland are in a position to know precisely the interests of the people and to advise them as to the safest course of action, and no cause in favor of Irish freedom and ever proper if its principles are to be founded upon denunciations of the Irish Bishops. If the Land League is to be used as a power to paralyze the influence of the Irish priesthood—either at home or abroad—the sooner it goes out of existence the better, and the sooner the masses of its Catholic members discover that such is the object aimed at, the disorganizing element will find itself without a following. Disunion has been the bane of Irishmen in the past, and we sincerely hope the demon of discord will not be permitted to obtrude its poisonous head into the Land League organization. It is a movement that should be sacredly intact, and the men who seek to use it for purposes of self-aggrandisement should be decried as dangerous disturbers of disunion. The scenes enacted at recent meetings in this city can only give sorrow and comfort to the common enemy; and we hope, for the sake of the grand cause in which Irishmen are engaged, that there will be no repetition of them permitted in future.

The Great Rank.

Among the stable dividend banks of the city, the Pacific Bank, corner of Pine and Sansome Streets, has long held a leading position. The last year's operations place it still more to the front, having been the most successful of its very extensive business. Its new starts onits nineteenth year with more brilliant prospects than ever before. Its success is the result of political and intelligent management, combining enterprise with a rigid adherence to sound business principles. Continuing under the same management, with ample resources and unsurpassed facilities for doing a general banking business its future is secure.

ENTHUSIASTIC CAPE ANNE GOLDS SELLING AT VALLEJO.

On Sunday evening last a very large audience assembled at Farragut Hall, Vallejo, for the purpose of listening to addresses by Mr. Ragan in the cause of Ireland's present struggle for Home Rule. The chair was taken by Mr. Father Louis Daniels, D. D., of the Order of St. Francis, in the absence of Father, in that city, who briefly addressed the meeting, and concluded by delivered one of the most eloquent addresses on Ireland's past and present, that we have yet heard on the Land question. Mr. Ragan's address established his address with numerous anecdotes and incidents which produced more than the laughter and cheers from their vociferous applause. At the conclusion of Father Dennis's address, Mr. N. J. McCormick spoke for nearly an hour on the Land question, and the Land League movement, and what it had accomplished for the Irish people, and the efforts were well received by the audience, who separated, cheering and giving vivats it. About 2 o'clock and the men who selling the Cape Anne goods made a big sale of the goods they want the angels to burry up with their cream.

O'Connor & McBride, proprietors of the Pioneer Oil Store, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of oils, oil stoves, lamps, chandeliers, etc., at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

Wm. Vogelsang, the well-known Clothier, 115 Sixth street, keep always on hand a fine assortment of clothing, hats, caps and furnishing goods, which they are selling at the lowest cash rates. Parties in need of any of the above articles will find it to their interest to call at the above place before purchasing elsewhere.

Lewis & Hamilton, the popular Clothiers, 1028 and 1030 Market street, are the only parties who can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply only one of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms-House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore import and purchase in such immense quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the second place, as Mr. Washington Lewis says, "I think I shall not die, but when my time comes I shall go to a place where I can make my mother wipe off the tears from my face and lose my candy if I want to, and where angels want the angels to hurry up with their cream."

New Advertisements.

READ! READ! READ!

The History of Sbarboro & Co.'s Grocery Firm, the Pioneers of the Business in San Francisco.

At the end of this article will be found the business card of Messrs. SBARBORO & CO., grocers, No. 531 Washington street. The firm is one of the oldest and most respectable in the city, having occupied their present premises over twenty years, and built up their immense business by scrupulous integrity and fair dealing with their customers. There are several obvious reasons why this old and popular firm can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply only one of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms-House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore import and purchase in such immense quantities that they can defy competition from having no intermediate profits to pay other importers. In the second place, as Mr. Washington Lewis says, "I think I shall not die, but when my time comes I shall go to a place where I can make my mother wipe off the tears from my face and lose my candy if I want to, and where angels want the angels to hurry up with their cream."

SBARBORO & CO.'S PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR NOVEMBER.

SUGARS.
All refined prices in quantities to suit all.

COFFEE.
Costa Rica Coffee, Green, No 1, lb 20 cents
Costa Rica Coffee, Green, No 2, lb 17 cents
Fresh Roasted Coffee, lb 25 cents
French Roasted Coffee, lb 25 cents

TEA.
Black Oolong Tea (choice), lb $1
Black English Breakfast Tea, lb $1
Mixed Green and Black Tea, lb $1
Japan Tea (choice), lb $1
Green Young Hyson Tea, lb $1
Green Gunpowder Tea, lb $1

CANNED GOODS.
Oysters (cans), lb doz $1 50@1 60
Lobsters, lb doz $1 50@1 60
Clams, lb doz $1 50@1 60
Assorted Ripe Fruit, lb doz $1 50@1 60
Assorted Table Fruit, lb doz $1 50@1 60
Tomatoes, lb doz $1 50@1 60
Salmon, lb doz $1 50@1 60
Cans and Jars, lb doz

EXTRACTS.
Assorted Flavoring Extracts, lb doz $1 50@2 00

MISCELLANEOUS.
Crackers, lb box
Soap, lb box
Starch, lb box
Sal Soda (bulk), lb 100 lbs
Salt (bulk), lb 100 lbs
Blue (assorted), lb box
Yeast Cakes, lb box
Cream Tartar, lb lb
Pickles, assorted, lb doz
Mustard, lb box
Sardines, lb box
Herrings, smoked, lb box

CANDLES.
Adamantine Candles, lb lb
Wax Candles, lb lb

COCOA AND CHOCOLATE.
Cocoa, lb lb
Cocoa, prepared, lb lb
Chocolate, lb lb
Vanilla Chocolate, lb lb

FRUITS.
German Prunes, lb lb
Bacon, lb box
Carolina Rice, lb lb
Cheese, lb lb
Walnuts, lb lb
Almonds, lb lb

PICKLES.
Worcestershire Sauce, lb bottle
Pickles, lb doz
Bottle Pickles, lb doz $1 50@2 00
Anchovies, lb doz $1 50@2 00
Stuffed Olives, lb doz $1 50@2 00

FLOUR AND MEAL.
Meals of all kinds, lb lb

Having laid in a large supply of Flour before the recent rise we can furnish our customers with First Class Flour at the lowest market price.

N. B. The MANAGER of our house having TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' EXPERIENCE in the grocery business in this city, and being an expert in buying large stocks of goods, is a guarantee that under his management we are able to sell first class GROCERIES CHEAPER than any other house on this Coast. Examine our goods and prices before purchasing your supplies, and judge for yourself. Economy is the result of trading with us. Wealth is the result of economy. Country orders promptly and carefully filled.

B. SBARBORO, Manager.

New Advertisements.

John Bergstrom, Organ Builder
29th and Mission Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Organs Built, Tuned and Repaired AT MODERATE RATES.

REFERENCES—Most Rev. Archbishop Alemany, Very Rev. Vicar-Gen. Prendergast, V. F. Rev. A. Varipatas, V. F. Hartnig, S. and others.

REFERENCES IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY—The organs at the Metropolitan Temple, Catholic Church, Catholic Union, San Leandro, Presbyterian, Oakland, Powell street, Methodist Church, Portland, and many others.

☞ A Good Second Hand Pipe Organ for sale cheap. Original cost, $2,500.

MILLINERY
Received per Express
AN EXTENSIVE LINE OF HATS, BONNETS, FEATHERS, TURBANS, AND AN ASSORTMENT OF Superior Millinery Goods,
AT MODERATE PRICES, AT THE
MILLINERY ESTABLISHMENT,
110 and 1112 Market st.
MRS. S. KIDMORE.

ROOFING.
KELLY & CO.,
Asphaltum Roofers,
ASPHALTUM AND GRAVEL ROOFS
Roofs repaired, cleaned and painted. All orders promptly attended to and warranted. All orders left at Asphaltum Works, 777 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. will receive prompt attention.
777 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC TEA CO.,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN STAPLE & FANCY GROCERIES
FARINACEOUS GOODS,
BUTTER AND EGGS, WOOD AND WILLOW WARE.
Good Goods & Low Prices!
995 MARKET STREET,
(Near Sixth, San Francisco.)

A GRAND
Combination Concert,
In aid of the Building Fund of the Christian Brothers Novitiate,
WILL BE GIVEN AT
THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE,
On Tuesday Evening, the 22nd inst.
☞ The attendants of the various Colleges of the Christian Brothers, the choirs of the various parishes, the Orphans' Institute and musical talent of the city has kindly volunteered to assist on this occasion.
TICKETS, ONE DOLLAR.
Children, Half Price.
☞ Tickets can be procured at the residence of all the pastors in the city and Oakland.

E. C. Taylor, M. D.
739 FOLSOM STREET.
OFFICE HOURS { 9 to 12 m / 2 to 4 p m / 7 to 8 p m } SAN FRANCISCO

MICHAEL SHEA,
—DEALER IN—
BOOKS, STATIONERY, NEWSPAPERS, &c.
805 MARKET STREET,
Just across Fourth Street. SAN FRANCISCO

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Cove Bay Coal at . . . . $ 9 00 a ton
Eastport Coal at . . . . . 8 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at . . . . . 8 50 a ton
Scotch Coal at . . . . . 12 00 a ton
West Hartpen Coal at . . . . . 10 00 a ton
and Wellington Coal at . . . . . 11 50 a ton
Coke at the Home Rate, Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1112 and 1114 Mission Street.

THE CHEAPEST PLACE
—TO BUY—
OILS, OIL STOVES, LAMPS, CHANDELIERS, ETC.
IS AT—
O'CONNOR & McBRIDE'S
Pioneer Oil Store,
115 Sixth street.
All kinds of Lubricating Oils constantly on hand.
☞ Goods delivered free to any part of the city.

HOPE FOR THE DEAF
Dr. Peck's Artificial Ear Drums
PERFECTLY RESTORE THE HEARING and perform the work of the Natural Drum. Are invisible to others and entirely comfortable to the wearer. We refer to those who have used them. Descriptive circular with testimonials free. Address, H. P. K. PECK & CO., 853 Broadway, New York.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CUT THIS OUT!

We predict the time will come when all our friends, enemies, subscribers, and every reasonable person will purchase their Household Furniture of TERRY & CO., 747 Market Street, opposite Dupont. They sell Carpets, Stoves, Crockery, Elegant Chamber Sets, Parlor Suits, Pianos, Pictures, Oil Paintings—in fact, everything you can ask for. They treat you liberally, give you what you buy, and never lose a customer.

Always remember TERRY & CO.'S Mammoth Furniture and Art Emporium, 747 Market Street, opposite Dupont.

NOTE.—The above bids a want the public have long felt. It has already grown into a large enterprise. Yet it is nothing compared to what it will be, as our readers find out whata nice place it is to visit, and to buy goods.

Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co.
OF CALIFORNIA.
GEO. A. MOORE, President; W. R. CLUNESS, Vice President and Medical Director; E. B. MOTT, Jr., Secretary.
Has removed its principal office from Sacramento to San Francisco. This is the only Life Insurance Company doing business and loaning money solely in the Pacific and Northwestern States and Territories. Active and Reliable Agents can have profitable fields opened to them on application. Resident or visiting policy holders and friends are cordially invited to call at

WHAT SHE SHOULD DO.

A Few Suggestions of Importance on a Subject of Interest to the Ladies.

And Certain Facts which Should be Known by all Women.

[Home Journal, New York.]

A short time since an article appeared in the columns of this paper, being a synopsis of a lecture delivered by a prominent woman before a well known New England society. This article dealt so directly with the needs of woman, and contained so many hints which were valuable that it naturally attracted no little attention, and has, we hear, been a subject of comment in social circles in nearly every part of the land. Realizing that no subject can be of more vital importance, as well as interest to all readers, than the condition of the women of America, we have collected and prepared with considerable care, additional facts bearing upon this same subject.

The ladies of this country have been more observed and talked about than those of any other land, and Europeans always notice their characteristics—usually with admiration. Sara Bernhardt, declared she did not see how any one could resist falling in love with "those pretty American ladies." She might have added, that even her far famed French nation would find it difficult to equal, much less excell, American women in quickness of perception and brilliancy of intellect. The minds and manners of American women are all that can be desired; but it is a lamentable fact that their physical frames are far inferior in comparison with their social and mental characteristics. The women of England are noted for their florid health; those of Germany for their strong constitutions, and the ladies of France for their exuberance of spirits; but American women possess no one of these qualities in any prominence, and all of them only in slight degree. The reason for this must be plain to every careful observer. Sedentary ways, devotion to fashion—but aberrant and more than all, carelessness and indifference to daily habits and duties, have rendered the women of this land far less strong and healthy than it is either their duty or privilege to be. This irregular and indifferent manner of living, brings about the most serious results and is both directly and indirectly of untold injury to the race. The cause, therefore, being manifestly under the control of women themselves, the power to remove it must naturally be under their control also. American women can possess just as charmed lives as though they lived in Europe or any foreign land, if they only desire and determine to do so.

The primary cause of suffering from disease is impure blood. The performance of the natural functions of womanhood and motherhood is not a disease, nor should it be treated as such, and to maintain one's health the organs which make and purify the blood must be preserved in, or restored to their normal condition. These organs are the kidneys and liver.

It is the office of the kidneys to take from the blood the poisonous matter which has been collected from all parts of the body and pass it off from the system. If they are impaired in their action, they cannot do this work, the poison accumulates, and the organs in the body, which are sustained by the blood, are weakened and rive way and finally the kidneys and contiguous organs become the source of great pain, and, without prompt relief, death is certain.

It is the office of the liver to extract other impurities from the blood, and utilize a portion of them for digestion. If the liver is disordered, all forms of dyspepsia occur, the bowels cannot expel the waste matter, and the most distressing inconvenience follows. This is especially true in the case of women. And if the bowels are thus inactive and overloaded, the neighboring organs, which are particularly dependent for their right action upon the state of the liver, bowels and kidneys, become displaced, and the consequences which ensue are too well known to require repetition in a suggestive article of this kind. The secret, however, of preventing these manifold disorders, is to keep the kidneys and liver in perfect working condition. This is reason; this is science, and it appeals with force to the suffering women of America.

When the body is in a healthy condition, then come beauty of complexion, elasticity of step, hopefulness of disposition, and comfort and happiness in the duties and responsibilities of a family. There is, therefore, every incentive to secure and preserve perfect health.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy described in the lecture to which reference has already been made, is receiving, as it certainly merits, the most careful attention and the trial of the women of the land. It is a pure and simple vegetable remedy which is now doing more to bring health and strength to the American women than any one thing which has ever been discovered. It acts directly upon the liver, kidneys and adjacent organs, restores any inflammation, allays all pain, and places these organs in a condition to bring health to the body and happiness to the life. The manufacturers of this great remedy, as we learn from the lecture, have the written thanks of thousands of women—many of them of great prominence—but these letters are very properly regarded as too sacred for publication. No true woman is pleased to have her physical troubles fanned in the eye of the world.

The unquestionable value of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is all the more manifest from the fact that heretofore no adequate remedy for the ills of women has ever been discovered; or have the medical profession ever been able to assist women in her troubles as she deserves. This is, perhaps, largely due to the presence of so much bigotry and intolerance in that profession. The history of medicine is a history which illustrates to the fullest the blighting effect of bigotry and intolerance. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, was driven out of England. Jenner, the father of vaccination, was opposed and scoffed at. Thompson, the founder of the Thompsonian theory, was the victim of a baneful conspiracy. Morton, in Massachusetts, who introduced the use of ether in surgical operations, was charged with witchcraft, and yet the discoveries of these men are to-day recognized as of infinite benefit to the race. It is the solemn duty of every physician in the land to take advantage of every opportunity which is within his reach; not to promote the interests of this or that school, but to heal the people of their infirmities. All have witnessed death bed scenes, and felt that if skill were equal to disease death might have been postponed many years—that science (if we were made of all the agents in the heavens), was equal to a cure.

How many a time in the experience of all has this been illustrated! A cold is contracted, it refuses to yield to a fixed form of treatment, the physician may not be candid enough to call into aid of other schools, or of independent agencies, and the dear one dies because the doctor will not exhaust every expedient known to the world for relief. If he have the courage of his convictions and employs outside agencies, he is visited with expulsion from the society of his fellows, and forsooth, becomes what they choose to call a "quack." When they have exhausted all the agencies approved by their schools, they "shirk the responsibility" of the death of their patient by advising a trip to Colorado or Florida, or a voyage to Europe. Such treatment may be in accordance with the "code of ethics," but in the view of the unprejudiced public it is downright cruelty. (It may not be even more strongly characterized.

There is no reason, however, why the women in this land should not possess the best of health and spirits. The character of the climate, the activity of her surroundings and the opportunities affording for recovering lost health and retaining the same are greater than those of any other land on the face of the globe. By a careful observance of the plain and simple laws of health; by a watchful care over daily habits and duties; and by a regulation of the life with the remedy above mentioned, which has become so prominent and valuable, there is no reason why all the desirable things we have mentioned may not be attained in the highest degree. It is therefore a matter of importance that all women give this subject the attention, which it deserves, and the care which they are able to bestow, conscious that their efforts are certain to bring them perfect health and long and happy lives.

New Advertisements.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Special attention given to the manufacture of Goods of all kinds for horses. Call refer to all the principal Dealers and Horsemen in the Pacific Coast.
Having had a practical experience in this branch of business is largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "turfmen" in the United States. The benefits of which properties the public in the shape of a useful, well fitting article. Sole Agent for the A. S. Hay saddle, Hodgson and McKinney's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Tree Weights. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English ladies and gentlemen's saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, robes and full race saddles. JOHN O'KANE.

COAL. COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.
☞ Telephone number, 1152.

CHURCH MUSIC.
For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ: No. 1, Amerique, 25 cts; 2, Kyrie, 30 cts; 3 Gloria, 40 cts; 4, Veni Creator, 40 cts; 5, Credo, 75 cts; 6, In ie, Louisa, 75 cts; Solo and Chorus, 50 cts; and 8, Sanctus and Benedictus, 40 cts; 9, Agnus, 25 cts; 10, Hymn, 30 cts—Numbers 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12 for the price of 4 Sheet Music. Sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Address, A. WEBER, Sole Agent for Pacific Coast, 1 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

PAPAL MASS
—BY—
Rev. Father Di Marzo, O.P.
ENDORSED BY ALL THE LEADING PAPERS AND Musicians, as being the finest modern composition of its kind.
The organists of all the Catholic Churches in the United States, who then try it and sing it, will make the best judges.
Price, retail, $1.50. To the Clergy and Teachers, $1.25.
J. B. O'CONNOR & CO,
AGENTS.
33 Dupont Street, S. F.

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
ALSO
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

FIRE!! FIRE!!
JNO. R. SIMS & SON,
Manufacturers of all kinds of
Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.
SHUTTERS, BURGLAR-PROOF FAKE VAULTS AND Safes, wrought iron girders and beams, wrought and cast iron Railings, Balconies, Stairs, Gratings, Tie Stands, Anchor and other architectural iron work, at the Old Stand, established in 1849, by the present Proprietor.
All orders from the interior, Oregon and Washington Territory, or any place on the Pacific coast, attended to with promptness and dispatch.
Refer by permission to any of the past liberal patronage of our friends, and great the pay continue to merit in the future. For the information of strangers, they would say that they feel confident that their experience in this particular calling is surpassed by none on this coast, which their superior Iron Work can't to amply every town in California, Oregon, Victoria and Nevada, and to be seen at some of the best buildings in San Francisco, fully attest.
ALSO—A very large lot of second hand Shutters, of various dimensions, all at very low rates.
Nos. 132 and 136 Beale street.

FOREIGN STAMPS,
5 cts. per 100.
CERONO CARDS, 5 cts. per doz.
STAMP ALBUMS, 25 cts. upwards.
AMERICAN BOY'S THEATERS, 15 cts. upwards.
Richardson's Curiosity Shop,
314 Dupont Street, near Butter.
☞ Old stamps, coins and books taken in exchange.

SAVE YOUR MONEY
—UNTIL YOU SEE THE—BARGAINS
—OFFERED AT THE—
X L N T AUCTION HOUSE,
530 and 532 Kearny Street,
San California and Sacramento Sts. . . San Francisco
MIERSON, JEWELL & CO.,
Proprietors.
Our Superb Stock Comprises
Clothing, Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats and Caps, TRUNKS, VALISES, AND SATCHELS, Rubber and Oil Clothes, Etc.
All of which we offer remarkably
CHEAP FOR CASH.
Remember the X L N T, 530 and 532 Kearny Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OUR $25 and $30
BUSINESS SUITS
Are First-Class in Every Respect.
Fit Guaranteed or Money Refunded.
T. G. PARKER & CO.,
MERCHANT TAILORS,
418 Montgomery Street,
☞ Bet. California and Sacramento Sts.'93

SWAIN'S
Family Bakery and Dining Saloon,
No. 634 Market Street.
Wedding Cakes, Ice Cream, Oysters, Jellies, etc. Constantly on hand and made to order.
FAMILIES SUPPLIED.

C. E. PEARSON, Manager.
SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC R. R.
Commencing Monday, November 7, 1881, and until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco as follows:
9:30 A. M., Daily (Sundays excepted,) from Sausalito Ferry, foot of Market street, for Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Fulton, and way points. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 4 P. M.
9:30 P. M. Daily (Sundays included) Steamer Reliance, from Pier 2, Union street wharf, connecting at Sausalito landing with train for Sonoma, and all points with train for Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Fulton, Windsor, Healdsburg, Lytton, Cloverdale, and Way Stations. Stages connect at Cloverdale for Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Soda Bay, Lakeport, Lower Lake, Middletown, Calistoga, and the Geysers. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 10:50 A. M. Week Days and 11:00 A. M. Sundays.
A. HUGHES, General Manager.
PETER J. MCGLYNN, General Passenger & Ticket Agent.

The Golden Palace
TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street,
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.
THE CHOICEST GROCERIES ONLY SEE FIRST INSPECTION and will so prove that only competition (familiar can positively save money by trading in this store. Fine Teas, Coffees, Canned Fruits, Vegetables, Jellies, Preserves, and Jams. The celebrated Rockaway Flour sold at mill prices, and never fails to give satisfaction. Sugar retailed at refinery prices. Give this Temperance Store a trial, order and be convinced of the advantages offered. Goods delivered free as part of the city free, for data can be sent Sparkling and Amber Cisterns promptly attended to and SHIPPING PARTS OF CITY FREE.
CHARLES MONTGOMERY, Proprietor.

GRAY & CO'S GALVANIC GIRDLE
CURES ASTHMA, DROPSIES, PARALYSIS, PILES, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney complaints, Insomnia, Nervous Debility, Loss of Male or Female Weakness or Irregularity, and restores Failing Health and Energy. Over 10 million persons cured in last ten years. Price $5 each. Sent free on receipt of price. Circulars free. Address, GRAY & CO., No. 3 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

EXCELSIOR STRAW WORKS,
120 Fourth Street.
Ladies' Old Hats and Bonnets done over to look like new. Hats and Bonnets Pressed on hand.
J. H. RABBITT . . . . . Proprietor

RED HOUSE
BOOT and SHOE STORE,
129 Sixth Street,
Bet. Mission and Howard Sts. . . San Francisco
REAUME BROS., Proprietors.
Mens' French Calf Boots (sewed) to order, from $6 50.
MENS' HAND-SEWED FRENCH CALF BOOTS, TO order, from $6 50. Mens' Congo Gaiters, Tennis Shoes, from $2 50. Ladies' French Kid Button Shoes sewed, to order, from $5 00. Misses' Kip Boots and Shoes, Kip and Calf Boots, to order, at reasonable prices.

CHEAPEST PLACE
To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.
All kinds; rented $2 per month; needles for all machines, 24 cents per dozen.
F. McCANN, 27 Sixth street, Stager Office.

A CARD.
VIRGINIA, NEVADA, June 1st, 1879.
During the Winter of 1878-9, while serving in the army, I contracted, through exposure, Rheumatism and for nearly fifteen years suffered all the agonies attendant upon that disease. Hearing of your Electric Belt recently I tried it, and, to my great surprise, I received immediate relief. Before I had worn it two days I was able to walk without crutches in comfort, whereas before I was confined to my room, and, at times, to my bed, through continued suffering from this Neuralgia, combined with the rheumatism, and the almost intolerable pain in my extremities (giving me the appearance of having been tortured on the rack) became numb-cold, and in the winter of 1877 I discovered that I was attacked by Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, in addition to my previous sufferings. My feet became swollen, my sight failed, and I was astonished at the rapid manner in which I became emaciated. Your Belt was adopted and I did not expect to live to see the more than six months—an opinion fully shared by all the physicians who saw me at that time. After trying in vain the customary remedies for this dangerous disease, I was told to try Dashtell Kidney Cure. I did so, and after drinking here in Iowa less than two gallons, the disease effected in my limbs had disappeared completely. Shortly afterwards I had recovered sufficiently to bear a journey, and I came to Virginia City to complete the cure so happily commenced. I was so weak that I could not walk a mile, or carrying three, I was so weak that I could not walk a mile, or carrying three, I was so weak that I could not walk a mile, or carrying three,

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MONITOR OFFICE, Nov. 16, 1881.

FLOUR—Ship Extras are selling at $5 62½@$6 75; City Superfine, $4 75@$5 25; interior brands, $5 37½@$5 50 for extra, and $4 50@$5 for superfine.

WHEAT—There was very little business today, and there was no disposition to buy, although the foreign markets were reported firmer. Still, business is generally dull at Collection Day. The sales reported to-day were 100 sacks Choice Nov. 1, $1 79½; 250 and 150 tons do, $1 75, and 2,000 ctls Nov. 2, $1 70. Nov. 1 is quotable at $1 79@$1 79½ and Nov. 2 at $1 70@$1 72½ ⅌ ctl.

BARLEY—Was exceedingly languid to day, no sales being reported. Feed $1 45@$1 47½; Brewing is quotable at $1 50@$1 52½ for light and $1 60@$1 62½ for bright heavy; standard Chevalier, $1 55@$1 57½; coast do, $1 62½@$1 67½ ⅌ ctl.

OATS—The market continues steady and the demand is fair. Sales to-day of 167 ctls Surprise, $1 60; 220 sks feed, $4 50, and 275 sks do, $1 47½. Good and choice, $1 47½@$1 55½; common $1 40@$1 47½; Surprise, $1 60@$1 75 ⅌ ctl.

CORN—Nominal, at $1 36@$1 37½ ⅌ ctl. Offerings are not large, but there is very little demand.

HAY—Wheat, old, $12@$15; wild oats, $12@$14; volunteer and stable, $11@$12; stock, $9@$11 ⅌ ton.

RYE—Market is firmer. Sale of 200 sks at $1 12 ⅌ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Is more or less neglected at $1 50 ⅌ ctl.

STRAW—Quotable at 65@75c ⅌ bale.

POTATOES—Are still coming in heavily, arrivals to-day were 8,880 sks. Buyers are holding off for better. Dafey Ocres $1 30; Jersey Blues, $1 25; Petalumas, $1 00@$1 20; Tomatoes $1 00@$1 20; River Reds, 90c@$1; Early Rose, 75c@$c; Humboldt Reds, $1@$1 20; Sweets, $2@$2 ⅌ ctl.

ONIONS—Market is weak at 50c@70c ⅌ ctl.

CORNMEAL, ETC—Table Meal, $3 ⅌ ℔. Feed Corn, $30@$31 ⅌ ton; Hominy $4@$5.

BREWERS' RICE—$3@$3 ⅌ ℔.

BUTTER—Opens very weak with free supplies. Good and Choice California roll, 35@40c; fair and prime, 30@32½c; mixed lots from country stores 27½@30c; brain, 32½@35c; Pickled roll, 30@35c; Eastern, 30@35c ⅌ ℔.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 18@20c; California, 14@15c ⅌ ℔.

POULTRY—Was weaker to-day. Live Turkeys ⅌ ℔ 12½@14c for Hens, and 14@16c for Gobblers; dressed do, 15@18c; Geese, ⅌ pair $1@$2; Ducks ⅌ doz, $5@$6; Hens, $6@$6 50; Roosters, young, $4 50@$5 50; do, old, $4@$5; Broilers, $3 25@$4.

EGGS—There are very few Eastern here, but more are expected within a day or two. Choice California are still very scarce at 50c; Eastern 40c ⅌ doz.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Only one chest of Strawberries came in to-day, and it sold for $14. Wisconsin Cranberries, $14@$16 ⅌ bbl; Grapes 75c@$1 50 per box; Pears, 75c@$1 50 ⅌ box; Apples, 50c@$1 25 ⅌ box.

VEGETABLES—Marrowfat Squash, $14@$15 ⅌ ton; Okra 50c ⅌ ℔; Tomatoes, 15c@20c ⅌ box; Cabbage 75c@$1 ⅌ ctl; Cauliflower, 50c@$1 ⅌ dozen; Carrots, 30c@50c; Turnips, 50c; Beets, 60c; Parsnips, 75c@$1 ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 20@25c; Artichokes, 25c ⅌ dozen; Dry Chile Peppers, 15@20c ⅌ ℔.

MARRIED.

McDONALD-SULLIVAN—In Portland, Oregon, Nov. 6, by Rev. Father Fefrena, Mr. McDonald of Ellensburg, Washington Ter., to Mollie Sullivan of Sacramento.

DIED.

O'REGAN—In Sacramento, Nov. 13, Daniel O'Regan, a native of the County Cork, ireland, aged 44 years.

SHERIHAN—In this city, at St. Mary's Hospital, Patrick, beloved brother of Thomas Sheridan, a native of Ballyee, County Meath, Ireland, aged 47 years.

CARROL—In this city, Nov. 13, Mrs. Ann Carroll, a native of Mallow, County Cork, Ireland, aged 80 years.

CROWLEY—In this city, Nov. 13, Ellen, beloved wife of James P. Crowley, a native of Galbally, County Limerick, Ireland, aged 27 years.

DEATH OF A MODEL BOY.

Martin Edward Cassidy, a pupil of the Christian Brothers, died on Thursday last, after a long and painful illness, during which he edified all by his fortitude and pious resignation. He was a member of the Sacred Heart Altar Society and every Sunday morning received the sacrament. He was always punctual to their final resting place on Saturday, and completely covered the grave with their tribute to Eddie's youth and purity. The following young gentlemen were pall bearers: Francis Hart, Jas. Tormey, John O'Brien, Wm. Brown, James Conlan and J. Monge. The society called a meeting and drew up the appending resolutions.

WHEREAS, our dear companion, Edward Cassidy, has been called from this world on a better life; and as we have lost in him a most amiable companion and all others, and as he was in all a signal example, in duty, love and humility.

Resolved, that we, the members of the S. H. A. S. are deeply grieved at the loss of our dear companion, that we do tender his remains to the grave, that we shall always consider him a member of the society praying for us in heaven; and that we tender a copy of these resolutions to the bereaved parents.

—Readers of the MONITOR who may require furniture of a first-class kind of any description will find the firm of A. A. Cronett & Co., 110 Kearny street, well prepared to supply their wants at very reasonable rates. This firm makes a specialty of manufacturing Suites and in material, style and fit warrant entire satisfaction to all customers. Their store is between Post and Sutter streets and it will pay to call on them.

—Tourists and the traveling public in general, will find it to their interest to call at the Arcade Photo. Studio, 914 Market Street, for first class work at lowest prices. All work warranted and equal to any competitor. Mrs. S. Fletcher (formerly of Stockton), proprietress. E. R. Higgins, operator.

Have Winter's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption, and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle.

Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Sore Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Tickling in Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Whooping Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Croup—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Bronchitis—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Hoarseness—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumption—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Pains in Chest—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Try 15 cent bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Buy 50 cent bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Large bottle, $1.00—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Tell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Sure Cure—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask to see large bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

All druggists sell Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Great Discovery—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumptives use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Why should the proprietor of Ammen's Cough Syrup publish testimonials from those who have been cured or relieved by his medicine? The answer is, the greater the healing the more testimonials they publish. Ammen's Cough Syrup is no humbug, and to prove that and let it stand on its own merits, a 15-cent sample bottle is prepared, which is certainly more convincing than testimonial from a stranger. Large bottles, $1. Ask your druggist for it.

THE LAND LEAGUE.

Judge Toohy asks to Resign—A Clergyman Interrupted.

Branch No. 1 of the Irish National Land League held a very largely attended meeting in Irish-American Hall last evening, D. J. Toohy in the chair. Hugh J. Minan, of the committee to examine the books of the Secretary and Treasurer, reported that they had examined the books and found them to be correct, and that every cent of money was faithfully accounted for. The following report was received and adopted:

San Francisco, November 14, 1881.

To the officers and members of Branch No. 1, Irish American Land League of San Francisco, California.

Ladies and Gentlemen: We the Committee appointed by your honorable body to examine the Books, Vouchers, etc., now in the hands of your presiding officers, after careful investigation have arrived at the following conclusion.

First—That the accounts have been honestly and faithfully kept by the Secretary and Treasurer, and every dollar ever contributed towards encouraging the noble ladies and gentlemen who have so heroically fought and still continue to battle for Irish liberty and proprietary possession of the land of their forefathers has been properly and conscientiously appropriated for the furtherance of these holy principles.

Second—That we found upon proper examination, that the report submitted by your worthy officers accurately corresponds with the vouchers in their possession, which is the natural evidence of an honest distribution of the funds herein before referred to.

Third—We find receipts and acknowledgements from both Ireland and France duly signed and properly attested by the powers constituted by the Irish National Land League for the reception of such assistance.

Fourth—We find, and without using any flattery, that the books have been kept by Secretary Fleming and Treasurer Minan in an orderly, systematic, honest and businesslike manner, and reflect much credit on those gentlemen for the interest they have taken in the good cause and the care they have exercised in preserving the records of one of the most efficient and popular movements ever inaugurated for the amelioration of the suffering people so long subjected to the persecutions of an embittered and tyrannical task-master.

Fifth—We cannot but add our meed of praise to the extraordinary embracing in part of your presiding and self sacrificing officer, Hon. D. J. Toohy, to build up this great organization and to induce his generous and sympathetic fellow-countrymen in California liberally to aid in bringing to a successful issue the struggle now going on for Irish independence.

We agree unanimously in regretting the organization is not only pass a vote of thanks to the honest officials who have done so much in this cause, but that you unanimously request that they still continue to guide the good ship on her successful journey and thereby save us from the intervention of the scandal-monger; the enemies of our race and our country and the slanderers of our character, of intermeddling, would be leaders of this glorious undertaking.

Respectfully submitted with our strongest and unhesitating approbation.

HUGH J. MINAN, Chairman.
J. O'GORMAN,
PETER LYONS,
JAMES WREN.

After a piano solo by Mrs. Gunther, Mr. Toohy made a few remarks, reviewing the Irish events of the past week, and called for Father Kenny, who made a short speech and told of the success of the Valley Branch, which he recently visited, when $300 was raised.

At the conclusion of Father Kenny's remarks, Mr. Toohy again addressed the meeting, and after reviewing the history of the Branch since he had been its presiding officer, stated that, owing to sickness in his family and business matters which would occupy the greater part of his time, he would be compelled to resign his position as President of the Branch, but would still retain a membership and take an interest in all its affairs. The announcement fell like a clap of the meeting, and cries of "No, no," arose from all parts of the hall.

Judge Cooney claimed the floor, and in a neat speech, during which he eulogized Judge Toohy, said that he hoped the Branch would not accept the resignation.

Rev. Hugh Lagan of St. Mary's Cathedral followed Judge Cooney, and also expressed a hope that the resignation would not be accepted, and Judge Toohy would recall it. "Now is the time, continued the speaker, "when the League can ill afford to lose a member, and especially such an active and zealous one as your Chairman. The League is now passing through a most important trial, and to weather the storm which threatens it every member must stand by the ship. We must stand by the League and by the priests of Ireland—

Irish Sympathy of O'Brien arose interruptingly, but was cried down by the audience.

"Stand by the League and by the priests of Ireland," resumed Rev. Father Lagan. "I care not whether I offend or please you. I speak the honest sentiments of my heart. I am not a prophet but she is not a prophet, but I predict if you allow Judge Toohy to resign the League in this city and State will go into the ground.

At the conclusion of Father Lagan's remarks O'Brien again claimed the floor, but was cried down, and the Secretary, Mr. Flanagan, moved that the resignation of Judge Toohy be not accepted. The motion was carried unanimously.

O'Brien again claimed the floor. This time he appealed to the house, and said he wanted to speak on what he called a question of privilege to vindicate his character. The question as to whether O'Brien should be heard or not was put to a vote and decided against him, when he advanced toward the stage, and, in a threatening manner, applied opprobrious epithets to Father Lagan, even essaying to follow him into the anteroom, and threatening to assault him. He was, however, prevented from carrying his menace into execution, and the meeting adjourned.—Chronicle.

New Advertisements.

LUNDY'S!

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

HAS JUST RECEIVED

Forty Cases of Rogers Bros' Triple plateware, in latest designs of Salad, Butter, Berry, Cakes, Butter Knives, Cake Baskets, Cheesekeys, Card Receivers, Card Cases, Carters, Dessertsets, Goblets, Ice Pitchers, Ice Picks, Tilting Ice Pitchers, Toilet Sets, Tureens, Coffee Urns, Vegetable Dishes, Water Coolers, Waiters, Wine Stands.

Rogers Bros' Triple plated Teaspoons, per doz	$2 50
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Forks, per doz	4 25
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Tablespoons, per doz	5 25
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Carters, 1 cut glass Bottle	3 50
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Carters, 2 cut glass Bottles	4 50
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Carters, 3 cut glass Bottles	5 50
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Carters, 4 cut glass Bottles	6 00
Rogers Bros' Triple plated Knives, per doz	3 75
Rogers Bros. Fine Carvers, Forks and steel, in all styles, at prices as low as the lowest. I have just the best assortment of Solid Silver and Silver plated Ware in the city. Call and get one of our Waterbury Watches, Sam Winders, warranted one year, $7 75.

Goods sent to any part of the country C. O. D. All orders promptly attended to.

LUNDY'S,

Nos. 7 and 9 Third Street.

EX-SOLDIERS and their HEIRS are entitled to all need for wonderful paper The World a Soldier published at Washington, D. C. It contains Stories of the War, Camp Life, Bounties, Pensions, Decisions, Decorations, Items of interest to our comrades. Directories of Posts, Department Officers, Laws, Forms, Statistics, Questions relating to Pensions and Bounties treated exhaustively in their pages. Every ex-soldier should enroll his name under the World a Soldier banner. Only Eighty-cents. Sixty cents in stamps. $1 a year. Sample free. Address, World a Soldier, Box 503 Washington, D. C.

Information Wanted.

Any person knowing anything concerning the fate or whereabouts of Jesse Gleason who left Nevada County in 1858 for the Frazier River mines, will confer a favor by writing to his brother, Address,

THOMAS GLENNIN,
North Bloomfield, Nevada Co., Cal.

New Advertisements.

SULLIVAN'S.

The above engraving represents a very pretty Black Cashmere Walking Suit, with full satin shirred skirt; handsome drapery, trimmed with single fringe; side pleating around the skirt; basque trimmed with satin lapels and collerette.

PRICE, - - - $25 00

—AT—

SULLIVAN'S,

The Leading Cloak and Suit House,

120 KEARNY STREET.

Illustrated Catalogue and Price List for fall and winter, 1881-2 now ready; mail free to any address.

THE KIDNEY-WORT

THE ONLY MEDICINE

IN EITHER LIQUID OR DRY FORM

That Acts at the same time on

THE LIVER, THE BOWELS, AND THE KIDNEYS.

Because we allow these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

KIDNEY-WORT

WILL SURELY CURE

KIDNEY DISEASES,

LIVER COMPLAINTS,

PILES, CONSTIPATION, URINARY DISEASES, FEMALE WEAKNESSES, AND NERVOUS DISORDERS, by causing healthy action to take place and restoring their power to throw off disease

Why suffer Bilious pains and aches? Why tormented with Piles? Why constipated? Why frightened over disordered kidneys? Why endure nervous or sick headaches?

Use KIDNEY-WORT and rejoice in health.

It is put up in Dry Vegetable Form, in tin cans to packed for convenience, to make a quart of medicine. Also in Liquid Form, very concentrated, for those that cannot readily prepare it.

It acts with equal efficiency in either form.

GET IT OF YOUR DRUGGIST. PRICE, $1.00

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Prop'rs,
BURLINGTON, VT. Wait until the dry (or pack) is REDUCED, VT.

ESTABLISHED 1863.

OH! AH!

MULLER

—The Leading Optician,—

135 MONTGOMERY ST.,

Near Pacific, opposite the Occidental Hotel.

THE MOST COMPLICATED CASES OF DEFECTIVE VISION thoroughly diagnosed, free of charge, and all kinds of lenses made to order.

SPECTACLES. Their adaptation to the various conditions of sight have been my specialty for 32 YEARS.

Compound Astigmatic Lenses Mounted to Order at Two Hours Notice.

C. MULLER, Optician.

Order by mail or express promptly attended to.

New Advertisements.

ADAMS & WESTLAKE

Wire Gauze

NON-EXPLOSIVE

OIL STOVE.

BEST AND MOST DURABLE IN USE FOR HEAT Like and making CAKE and exercise it saves at the Fastest. JNO. F. MYERS, 152 Fourth St., S.F.

HODGES

CLOAK

AND

SUIT ROOMS,

10 Fifth St., near Market St, S. F.

Had large variety of the Latest Styles Cloak and Dolmans at very low prices.

Ladies' Suits from $20 up. Cloaks, Full Line of Misses, Misses' Wraps, Cloaks and Gents' Trimmings. Special attention to Orders by Mail. Lady Agents Wanted.

CATHOLIC BOOKS,

ARTICLES OF DEVOTION,

PIANOS AND ORGANS,

—AT—

J. B. O'Connor & Co.s,

23 DUPONT ST., S. F.

P. T. FLINN & SON,

—WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN—

HAY, GRAIN,

GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,

Wines and Liquors.

Orders from the country attended and promptly attended to.

GRAIN, FRUIT and VINE LANDS.

VERY DESIRABLE IMPROVED FARMS LANDS to suit purchasers. Low Prices.

ALBERT E. Chase, 418 Montgomery street.

Agent for Country Property

S. F. STOCK BREWERY.

Ale, Porter, and Lager Beer in Bulk or Bottle, Superior to any on the Pacific Coast.

S. E. cor. Powell and Francisco streets.

Orders received by Telephone No. 3012.

PARISIAN DYEING & CLEANING WORKS

TENTH STREET.

CITY OFFICES:

714 Washington street, opposite the Plaza.
213 Post street, and 20 Fourth street.

F. THOMAS & CO.

Orders by mail promptly attended to. Goods can be forwarded by mail or express, if lightly and when dyed can be returned by the same means.

REMOVAL.

WM. J. MALLADY,

General Undertaker and Coffin Furnisher,

—HAS REMOVED TO—

733 MISSION STREET. 733

Bodies embalmed and prepared for interment in no part of the world. The only supplier with all kinds of Undertaking Goods at the Lowest Prices.

Orders attended to at all hours, day or night.

Fabulous Farmer's Opera $65

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL,

Cor. Sansome and Pacific Streets.

The Best Hotel in San Francisco

At the price

Hot and Cold Water Baths. Free.

Proprietor.

THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY location and offers good accommodation to families and the traveling public, and is the largest Hotel in the whole of the Oregon elements.

Rates of board and lodging, $1 to $1 Board and room per week, $4 to $6. Single Meals, 20c. Rooms per night, 25c and upwards. Baths free.

NB. Most Delicious Bar, stocked only for the use of Families. None but the most obliging White help employed. Free Omnibus to and from the Hotel.

WALL PAPER! WALL PAPER!!

Just receiving, Large Stock Art Paper Hangings, Newest Productions of French, English and American Manufactures.

INTERIOR DECORATIONS IN FRESCO AND PAPER HANGINGS.

GEO. W. CLARK, 645 MARKET STREET.

IMPROVEMENTS—NEW STYLES—NEW CATALOGUE.

Mason & Hamlin Organ Company

Whose unrivaled organs have been the standard of excellence for the great world's industrial events of the last twelve years, have received at the Paris Exposition, 1878, the highest and only decoration given to organs, the highest and only medal given to reed instruments, and the highest and only medal given to pianos, the last year they have in competition with the best makers in all these departments, received the highest and only medal given to organs of higher excellence and enlarged capacity; also, popular medium and smaller styles of improved quality. Lower prices for the year, and upwards of 500 different styles. Catalogues free. Fifty thousand and illustrating more than one hundred styles, sent free and postpaid. Address MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO CO., 154 Tremont St., Boston; 46 East 14th St., New York; 149 Wabash Av., Chicago.

R. W. THEOBALD,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF COAL.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS,

35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 3207.

CALIFORNIA BEDDING HOUSE.

JAS. CONNELLY & CO.

—DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF—

FURNITURE AND BEDDING,

Wholesale and Retail at very Low Prices.

532 and 534 MARKET STREET, OPPOSITE SECOND, S. F.

Having a large stock on hand, we offer goods EXTENSIVELY ON THE INSTALMENT PLAN, for less than it can be bought for cash in any other house in this city.

JONAS J. MORRISON,

LUMBER DEALER,

Corner Mission and Spear Streets, SAN FRANCISCO

P. P. CASSIN & CO.,

433 Battery street, cor. Washington.

Cassin and attorney-at-law.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,

And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

—OF THE—

Veuve Xavier Jouvin Kid Gloves

Bush and Sansome Sts., San Francisco.

10 TONS

New Perennial Rye Grass Seed,

Received by the last Australian steamer.

Note. Those who have tried this variety of ryegrass in superior pasture over other kinds, otherwise they or their sons or grandsons have purchased the ryegrass and continued it. This is a superior kind of ryegrass, and is sold at the lowest price. Sacks and Guaranteed at the old price.

F. WELLINGTON

Importer and Dealer in Seeds, Tenth Street, Near Market, Opposite Market, San Francisco.

Send for Catalogue, free.

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvelous cures, or maintained a wide reputation as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the sovereign remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent, ready to relieve ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, if not promptly and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The confidence thus inspired by its timely use in threat and chest diseases, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every house. No person can afford to suffer with a cough, when a single dose will ease and relieve. From their knowledge of its compositions and effects, physicians have supplied it to their patients, extensively in their practice, and cheerfully recommend it as the absolutely certain to prove relief, and will always cure where there are possible.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

New Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumption—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Will cure your cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

It cured my cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

ATTRACTIONS!

Having for the past four months employed the full force of our FACTORY in the preparation of a stock of goods for the fall and HOLIDAY trade that should surpass all exhibits heretofore made by us, we now offer an assortment of DIAMOND WORK, FINE JEWELRY, and NOVELTIES that will stand the test of the closest criticisms as to STYLE, QUALITY, and PRICE.

In imported goods, our facilities enable us to offer the best manufactures of WATCHES, JEWELRY, SILVERWARE, CLOCKS, etc., on the most favorable terms.

Our assortment is beyond question the LARGEST, the FINEST, and the CHEAPEST on this coast.

All goods marked in plain figures, and no deviation in price.

Orders by mail will be as promptly and cheerfully answered, and on the same terms, as though selections were made in person.

GEO. C. SHREVE & CO.,

110 MONTGOMERY STREET.

THE MONITOR,

A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL

Devoted to the Preservation and Defense of Faith and Fatherland.

Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., 622½ street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Per Year in Advance	$2 00
Per Year if Not Paid in advance	2 50
Six Months if paid in advance	1 00
Six Months if not paid in advance	1 25
Three Months if paid in advance	50
Three Months if not paid in advance	75
In Instalments at the rate of	25 per week
Years $4.00 cash in advance	3 00

Address all communications, subscriptions, checks, and postal orders to

J. J. MORRISSON,
P. O. Box 2300.

Business Office, Rm 1553 P. O. Sq. San Francisco, Cal.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR

is now in the twenty-fifth year of publicity, and its well-established reputation as a fearless, honest and Religious Newspaper, has placed it in a wide circulation and an influence which makes it an unusual valuable medium for advertisers.

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

To Correspondents.

Communications to secure insertion, should be handed in the Friday Evenings of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the writer's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the subjects treated in this Journal. Their brevity and clearness should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We do not hold ourselves responsible for the return of MSS. of rejected articles.

All communications and remittances, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth..... Strive for Justice for thy Soul; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiasticus iv. 26)

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1882. No. 14.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR

DYSPEPSIA.

TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.

Made By

H. B. SLAVEN,

The Baldwin Building.

FURLONG & MANSEAU,

Silver Walnut Show-Cases

24 Market Street bet. 4th & 5th, up stairs

J. J. DYER,

DENTIST,

S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,

Entrance, 37 Post St.

E. S. BONELLI,

821 Market street.

NEW PIANOS

From $200 Upward.

KNABE

PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALLED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
Nos. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CAVE A LIQUEURS.

A HANDSOME CABINET CASE, CONTAINING Assorted Cordials, Brandies, Whiskies, Port and Sherry, Tuttle Gin and Old Tom Gin, Schnapps, Rhine Wine and Ale.

P. P. CASSIN & CO.,

433 Battery street, cor. Washington.

Cassin and attorney-at-law.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,

And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

—OF THE—

Veuve Xavier Jouvin Kid Gloves

Bush and Sansome Sts., San Francisco.

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND

Meeting of Patriots.

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The Parnellite leaders have called a meeting of the Irish party in Dublin for a week preceding the meeting of Parliament, when they are sanguine of securing the adhesion of hesitating members to their policy.

The Dublin Corporation to resign priests in Parliament.

DUBLIN, January 3.—A copy of the Dublin Corporation resolution, which was adopted yesterday, says Parnell and Dillon will be asked to resign their seats in Parliament, and if they do so, Irish Land Leaguers will be requested to nominate their successors. The resolution passed by the Corporation yesterday, which was carried by a vote of 40 to 15, declares that the Irish Parliamentary party, by their conduct, have forfeited the confidence of the Irish people, and that the Irish people are now determined that no more Members of Parliament shall be returned to Parliament, who, when they are called upon to do so, refuse to resign their seats, or who, having and have found and proved themselves unworthy of the trust reposed in them by the people, refuse to resign their seats when requested to do so by their constituents.

Another Seizure of Arms.

The Irish Land League has received information of another seizure of Parliament Martin's arms, which, it is said, were intended for distribution among members of Parliament. The arms were seized at the Dublin Parliament House. The meeting yesterday was very large and very enthusiastic.

More Evictions.

Dublin, January 3.—The entire tenantry on the estate of Lord Lecale, in Down, have received notices to quit.

Parnell and Dillon.

The Land Lieutenant refused the request of a Dublin deputation that he grant permission to Parnell and Dillon to be allowed to visit Kilmainham prisoners.

Soldiers Sent For.

The Land Leaguers are now at Ballinrobe and Limerick, on the question of the Manchester Guardians refusing to pay the proportion of the charge for the outlay in the expedition of the Land Leagues, and will submit some important documents relative to Irish affairs.

Land League Hunts.

LONDON, January 3.—Special dispatches from points in Ireland, to the Standard, give the latest form of land leaguers, namely, Land League hunts. The dispatch says: "Land League hunts are the fashion now and not bad sport, except that the fences are broken and generally damaged. In other instances, the hunters are followed by land leagues, who force the participants to take leaves of troops to the place nominated. The agitators are generally left to shift for themselves. The necessity for moving, frame, and thus weakening the force, has hitherto prevented the most serious consequences.

More Arrests.

DUBLIN, January 3.—Three more of public meetings proceeded to Mitchelstown last evening, it is said, to arrest the leaders. Two of the original persons have already been arrested, causes great excitement.

It is said that the authorities are acting on the hypothesis that Dublin Castle is virtually arrested for hearing aims in possession of the people.

DUBLIN, January 3.—The agent of Lord Dillon, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Dillon, and his bailiffs, in attempt to serve ejectments on arbitrator's fair rents.

MUST A CATHOLIC TAKE PART IN PROTESTANT WORSHIP?

There is trouble in Stonington, Conn., public school between Protestants and Catholics. A few days ago a Catholic pupil, a girl, was ordered by the Protestant teacher, a lady, called Protestant religious exercises, to leave the school room or look after the services and whipped him. The Protestants claim that it is a mere compulsory meaningless, and the teacher called in a Protestant minister to read a few verses. The Huguenots withdrew their child from the school, and are prepared to sue for damages against the teacher and committeeman. The Catholics claim that it is a violation of the observance of Protestant religious rites in the public school, and that, if such is the case, they demand the legal services of the Hon. T. M. Waterman, of Norwich, and Mr. Hall, and other solicitors to retain eminent counsel, and the case will be tried in the Supreme Court of Stonington have taken sides.

EDUCATIONAL "CRANKS."

The Alameda Argus very aptly remarks: "The Sun-lot people have run school mad, in the way of dividing up the school funds among the common schools. The utter folly of this movement is shown by the fact that it is proposed by those who have a knowledge of the printing business, but it ought to be sufficiently apparent to anybody who has any claims to common sense. The job of doing a school report, one would think, is so plain that almost any one ought to be able to follow it, yet it seems that it is often very difficult for those officers to perform their simple duties in a satisfactory way. They are too clumsy and after the unattainable, striving tooth-something and nail, grasping blindly in the insets of a theory that the light of common sense ought to be sufficient to show, predicted yesterday because to the failure of the abuses of their school system that they will continue to blunder along, and will go from one shape to the other extreme, and so on, quickly and forever, and the Sun-lot people will always have some of the Sun-lot Directors to have been guilty of attempting to run our lives.

If the Bishop and many other Catholic papers had talked this about "our" common schools, it would be set down to "Bi-mish opposition." It will not be long, however, before the School Ma will become so expensive that the people will be glad to change the entire system.—Ex. MONITOR.

Effects of German Persecution.

The rivality of the Falck laws (as they are usually called) of Germany, have supplied with the effects upon the Archbishop of Cologne. There are now in Germany, 1,000 parishes, in which there are 2,000 priests (two hundred and twenty-five, more than one-fourth), are without priests through the operation of those laws. In other words in those parishes the people are deprived of the consolations of their religion. Twenty-eight of the priests are now remaining in other places of six and thirty are eighty years. But all of these aged priests are not unfathomable the weight of years, because the Falck laws render it impossible for younger priests to come to the aid of those who are now in the diocese.

Gladstone Gloriously Gored!

ENGLAND INDICTED.

BISHOP NULTY OF MEATH

ENGLAND'S PRIME MINISTER,

Magnificent Letter from the Patriotic Prelate of Meath.

PARNELL AND GLADSTONE COMPARED.

The Downfall of Landlordism in Ireland Predicted.

The Legal Rev. Dr. Nulty in a letter to Mr. Parnell, which appears in a number of the Freeman's newspaper, thus expresses the state of affairs in Ireland at the present time:

"Ireland is now in a state of war, and in times like this, when the people are in danger of a sudden, which could be prevented by a few words, which could be spoken by a few men, and which, if spoken, would at least prevent the loss of many lives, and the loss of many valuable lives, and the loss of many valuable lives, and the loss of many valuable

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

ST. DOMINIC.

When the dreams of hygone ages rise before me in their glory,
Painting in undying colors names of honor and renown,
And the shifting vision allows me rulers of long buried empires,
Kings whose sway is now no longer bear the sceptre or the crown.

Warriors once the shield of nations, Statesmen, Scholars, brave and bold and earnest,
Orators whose words as golden thrilled and held the hearts of men,
Artists who will live forever in the pictures they have left us,
Poets, Authors who have moulded all the future with the pen.

Valiant Knights who lived devoted to their ladies' love and honor,
Wearing upon wrist and helmet favors given by snowy hands,
Daring, for their sake the dangers of the battle and the tourney,
Journeying at the lowest once bedding into wild and distant lands.

Then amid the many figures passing upon fancy's canvase
I do see robed in white enthusiasm mid the lofty rank of our race
Leader of a noble army, fearless in earth's fiercest battles,
Dauntless champion of a Lady hated by Angels full of Grace.

Heavely went he forth to conquer in the armor of her choosing,
With the shield of spotless innocence, the shining sword of prayer,
And he bore his Lady's colors unsullied in their beauty
Till the long fierce conflict over he resigned them to her care.

DEAR ST. DOMINIC, one fair legend of his life is slumbering before me,
And I see his wondrous writing by the red flame unpromptured,
Firm and lasting as the Order that his love called into being,
And whose labors have the darkness of so many years illumed.

Saint whose miracles are countless as the graces which Heaven gave him,
And whose name is linked forever with our Lady's love and fame,
When we tell our humble Aves on the beads she gave unto him
Then we feel the sweet charm dwelling in Saint Dominic's honored name.

Saint who toiled from dawn till twilight for the hearts of error darkened,
Never pausing, never faltering at the dangers in the way,
Saint whose rest was ever sweetest when his daily labors over,
He might kneel before the altar all the long night hours and pray.

Saint whose actions shine so brightly on the page time has written
As the stars that burn and glitter in the deep blue sea above,
Model of all noble virtues, pure in hand and heart and spirit,
His great genius ever glowing with the fervent fires of love.

DEAR SAINT DOMINIC! mid the glory of thy home in realms celestial,
Basking in the light and beauty of our tender Mother's smile,
With the happy souls around thee whom thy labors rescued,
Oh! we bee thee to remember us who dwell in sin and guile.

Lo! the dark and gloomy shadows cast from evil hours surround us,
And with bitterness and heartache press upon us day by day,
While a countless troop of tempters who would drag us down to hell.

Let the dark and gloomy shadows cast from evil hours surround us,
Oh! we bee thee to remember us who dwell in sin and guile.
Let the dark and gloomy shadows cast from evil hours surround us,
And tell's bitterness and heartache press upon us day by day.
While a countless troop of tempters who would drag us down to hell.
Nothing is Lost.

MARCELLA A. FITZGERALD.
Mossy Woodland, Dec. 1881.

The Devil Has no Happy Old Men.

I met a man one day on his way to church. He had just passed the mile-stone of life labeled "Seventy years." His back was bent, his clothes were old, his voice was husky, his hair was white, his eye was dim, and his face was furrowed. Withal, he seemed still fond of life and full of gladness, not at all put out with his lot. He hummed the lines of a familiar hymn as his legs and cane carried him along.

"Aged friend," said I, "why should an old man be merry?"

"All are not," said he.

"Well, why then should you be merry?"

"Because I try to serve God, who is a good Master.

"Are none others happy at your time of life."

"No, not one, my friendly questioner," said he, and he said more, his form straightened into the stature of his younger days, and something of inspiration set a beautiful glow across his countenance.

"Listen, jir," he said, to the truth from one who knows; than wing it round the world, and no man of my three score years and ten shall be found to gainsay my words The devil has no happy old man."

Sad Result of an Eviction.

The several evictions which recently took place in Listowell, Ireland, on the property of the Hurley Minors, have been attended with at least one sad and fatal result. A tenant named Michael Ahern, aged 45, having ten children, was some weeks ago evicted on this property. His yearly rent was £19, was the valuation was only £3 15s. On being evicted, Ahern was accommodated with shelter by a neighbor who had himself eleven in family, so that in a small house of limited accommodation upwards of 21 souls were lodged. Ahern, who was previously a man of robust health, felt so affected by the eviction from the home of his family for generations before that he took ill immediately and never rallied until he encumbed from what is generally considered the effects of a broken heart.

KATIE KEPPLE,

OR

The Banished Child.

A NEW YEAR'S STORY WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY JULIA HOLBAND

(Continued from our last.)

A few days after the above conversation took place, Katie was able to go to Mrs. Greenwood's room and read for her, but Mrs. Greenwood said that she must not do anything else until her ankle became entirely well, and continued "I hope you will not get frightened at me again Katie."

"O no ma'am," said Katie, "if see you some morning when I have a head I will not be frightened."

"Why Katie, you do not suppose that I am all artifical do you?"

"O no ma'am," Katie replied, looking at the old lady with a half suspicious look.

In a few more days Katie's ankle was entirely well and she was able to perform her duties with satisfaction, and admiration of the old lady.

Now we will pass over a period of six years and see how it has fared with the Leaster family.

Mr. Leaster thought he could make a fortune in speculating in cattle, so he bought a considerable number, intending to ship them to England in the winter, but an epidemic spread among them and carried off the greater part of them. Then two bad harvests followed one after the other; death took four of his children, only Henry and Gertrude being left, and he added to his sorrows Gertrude eloped with a worthless fellow, and his wife, who was not very strong, died before much of her grief for her children, after months of illness, died. Henry, true to his promise, never married, so there was no one left in the old homestead but old Mr. Leaster and his son Henry, and a dreary desolate home it was for the two men. Many times did Mr. Leaster grieve that he let Katie Kepple leave his house, and many times he was heard saying: "If why did I let her go?. The blessing that came into the house with her also went with her."

Mr. Leaster did not know what became of Katie, for it was her wish that she should not write.

"Henry," said Mr. Leaster to his son, one day, the only thing left for us to do is to go to America if we can get money enough to pay our passage. I never thought the day would come when I would want to leave Ireland, but now everything is sadly changed."

It long had been Henry's wish to go to America, but he did not care to express it to his father for he tried to shield him from all pain.

"Well, Father," replied Henry, "I think it is the best thing we can do, for there I will have an opportunity to work, but here I have none."

A few weeks later Henry and his father were among the crowds of passengers bound for New York. As the steamer sped away to sea, Mr. Leaster sat upon the deck with a heavy heart, and as the great expanse of water became wider and wider, he sad one long lingering glance shoreward, then clasped his trembling hands and moaned "O my country will I ever see you again! Ah! Henry, I am punished now! I banished a dear girl from her native land, and I had no thought of how her loving heart would break; moreover, I robbed you, my dear, of a precious treasure, for the sole reason than that she was poor, but now that prospects have I before me. Ah, me! My cup of bitterness is full to overflowing."

From that day he lost all courage, and Henry was afraid he would die ere land was reached.

When Henry saw Staten Island, like a mere speck in the ocean distance, he went to his father and said: "Cheer up, Father, we are nearing New York."

Mr. Leaster announced up all his strength, dressed with great care and went on deck, for he was afraid he would be put in quarantine.

The morning that Mr. Leaster and his son arrived at Castle Garden, Katie, who was still with Mrs. Greenwood, was reading the morning paper for the old lady, and her eye fell upon a notice about a great many emigrants arriving at Castle Garden, that day, three hundred being from Ireland. An indescribable longing, a feeling which she could not account for, and an intense desire to see some familiar face from her native land, took possession of her and she could not shake it off, so she asked Mrs. Greenwood if she might go in the afternoon to see the immigrants.

"Why, Katie, said Mrs. Greenwood, "what a queer notion you have taken into your head; you have never been to Castle Garden since you came to this house you may go, but you had better not go alone."

"I think I can get Mrs. O'Neal to accompany me," said Katie.

That afternoon Katie went to Mrs. O'Neal and she readily consented to go. They were standing at a convenient distance watching the passengers as they came out, when Katie saw Mr. Leaster leaning heavily upon his son's arm. Every feeling except that of compassion was banished from her heart. Mr. Leaster, a strong man when she had seen him six years before, was now bowed down with grief and sorrow. She also noticed the deep band of crape upon his hat.

Katie, forgetting Mr. Leaster's parting injunction never to let Henry know where she was, stepped before them and reached a hand to each saying: "Welcome to America."

Henry was the first to recognize her, for her image was ever in his mind; he took her extended hand and held it as though he never intended to let go of it again, saying "Katie this is indeed a surprise."

William Leaster was like one in a dream. He stared at the beautiful woman before him, far more beautiful than he had seen her last six years ago, for her well-fitting and becoming garments added greatly to her beauty. At length Mr. Leaster found voice to speak and said: "Is it real, or am I dreaming? Do I see Katie Kepple or is it the fancy of my troubled brain?"

"It is real, Mr. Leaster," replied the girl. "I am Katie Kepple."

"How good of you, Katie. Dear child, do you forgive me?"

"I have nothing to forgive, Mr. Leaster."

"O Katie, I have a sad, and tale to tell."

"Dear Mr. Leaster do not tell me anything now for you look tired, and I do not want to keep you here any longer. She then introduced Mrs. O'Neal and that good lady kindly invited them to her home. Katie hired a carriage, and many questions were asked and answered during the drive to Mrs. O'Neal's house. After Mr. Leaster related all the misfortunes that befell him, he said "Now Katie tell me about yourself."

"I have obtained a good home and kind friends, thanks to Mrs. O'Neal and her noble son," Katie replied.

By this time they had reached Mrs. O'Neal's cottage, and Katie, after accompanying Mr. Leaster and his son into the house, said: "I will have to leave you now for Mrs. Greenwood will be fretting for me, as I have remained away longer than I expected to, and it I can I will come to-morrow."

She was just leaving when great, big-hearted Tim O'Neal made his appearance, having just returned from his day's labor. Katie and Tim were glad to see each other, she admired and respected the great honest fellow since the day he befriended her when she was a poor friendless stranger, and he respected her modest and ladylike manner.

She returned into the house with Tim and introduced the Leasters to him.

Mr. Leaster said he must leave the cottage and go to a hotel, but Tim and his mother declared that they should not do anything of the kind until Mr. Leaster became stronger, so they had to accept the kind hospitality.

When Katie returned to Mrs. Greenwood she found her anxiously waiting for her, and the old lady demanded an explanation for Katie's long absence.

"Dear Madam," said Katie, "you must forgive me, for I met friends who just arrived from Ireland, friends who took me to their home when I was left a helpless orphan, and she went on and related all about the Leaster family.

"In that case, Katie, I can forgive you. To-morrow as we go to the park we will call upon Mrs. O'Neal and see your friends."

Next day Mrs. Greenwood fulfilled her promise by calling upon Mrs. O'Neal, but, however, not until a servant had filled a large basket with bottles of wine, jellies, and other dainties for Mr. Leaster. The old lady was much pleased by Henry's frank and noble countenance and left Mr Leaster and his son more cheerfully by promising that Henry would bye a situation before many days; and in a few days he obtained one in a wholesale grocery store.

The next morning Katie was informed Katie that she wished her to accompany her to Long Island, continuing "I have a farm there which I have not seen in eight years. I would like to see in what condition the buildings are, as the lease will soon run out and I will have to let it to somebody."

When the morrow came the coachman was ordered to drive to Long Island instead of to Central Park. As the carriage stopped the old lady said "Here is where I was born. I have seen it but once in twenty years and the present occupant I have never seen."

"Oh! Would not this be a splendid place to live in summer, instead of wasting off to Newport and Saratoga," said Katie.

"Do you like the place, Katie?"

"Indeed, ma am, it is just splendid!"

"Well I am glad you like it."

The old lady round the house, barn and fences all in good repair. The place had been occupied for the last five years by a thrifty Dutchman, who made considerable money by raising vegetables for the market. After looking over the farm they drove back to New York again.

A few days later Mrs. Greenwood deeded the farm to Katie, and as she handed her the deed she said "Here, Katie, you are mistress of that farm."

When Katie fully realized the meaning of Mrs. Greenwood's words she exclaimed: "O Mrs. Greenwood! I cannot take such a valuable gift."

"But it is my desire that you should accept it."

"O Mrs. Greenwood How can I ever thank you?"

"Dear child, I owe you more than this; you came to me as a guardian angel, you rescued me from a fate worse than death, you taught me lessons that I never knew, you worshiped the true God, but what did I worship? I worshiped my gold and the fleeting vanities of the world. I am a lone woman, but never a thought of the heretofore cast aside my mind, all my thoughts and affections were centered in this world. You came to me a friendless orphan, from your own green home thousands of miles, I am not ashamed to own that you taught me to humble myself before God."

Katie kept the secret of her newly found wealth from everybody, she did not even tell her friend Mrs. O'Neal.

Mrs. Greenwood and Katie spent that Summer in Newport.

It is now September and they are back in New York again.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Girls and Home.

Almost all the girls who read this will one day love and marry. It is well, it is right, but do not be in such a hurry to be grown up and away from home. Home will never give you anything sweeter, better, happier, than you have now. No love purer than your mother's; no care more kindly than father's; no companionship like that of your brothers and sisters. Even to the man who loves you will not be little Lily who was a baby once who learned to walk and prattle, who was petted when she was fretful and was; nor the little girl who was so wonderful a genius when she played her first tune on the piano or worked her first book-mark. He who falls in love with you will have known twenty girls and may have been in love with half of them. In some things you will fall short of some one he has known. Your eyes will not be so fine as those of Miss Lavinia, and you will not make cake as his mother does. Here, you have been perfection; even if prudence kept your parents from saying so, they cannot believe anyone quite so nice as "our Lily." Then linger a little here, where some one else shoulders the burdens and shields you from life's worry, where the love is a love that does not change because of a new face, where the innocent days of childhood have been passed, your first and best home.

Topnody and His Wife.

Mr. Topnody was sitting by the kitchen stove the other night meditatively gazing upon his wife, who was busy thinking up the work for the day.

"Mrs. Topnody, how old are you?" he said at last in an abstract kind of way.

"How old am I, Topnody? That's a pretty question to ask your own wife."

"Yes, how old are you?" he repeated, without noticing the interruption.

"What do you want to know that for?"

"Oh, I was just wanting to know for fun."

"For fun, eh Topnody? Well I can tell you in years exactly, but I'm just that old that if I had been as old as I am now when you asked me to marry you, I think I have been five hundred thousand years old before you would have got me. Now do you know how old I am?"

Topnody resumed his meditation and began to whistle softly. "Darling I am growing old."

Did Bishop McQuaid Condemn the Land League?

This question is best answered by the full text of the sermon preached by the Bishop of Rochester, and we ask any one who reads the following carefully to show wherein Bishop McQuaid uttered one word of condemnation against the principles of the Land league. The denunciation was directed against crauks, dynamiters, and blatherskites of the blood-and bullet order, but in the very last paragraph which we quote he avows himself in favor of "peaceful agitation, avoiding bloodshed and secret societies," and this is precisely the programme laid down by the Land League, but sometimes mistated by some speakers who permit their enthusiasm to run away with their senses.

Here are Bishop McQuaid's words and they are plain enough so that even a child can understand them

"There are some things which I wish plainly to say to this congregation, and to that matter, to my Diocese. The subject is a delicate one, and I ask your careful standing and imcpatation, I have taken great pains to prepare myself for a clear and exact exposition. Those who have attended for those only who do not deny the authority of the Church in teaching upon tions of faith and morals. Where a man denies this authority he ceases to be a Catholic. To him I have nothing to say.

"First, then, it is Catholic teaching that the end does not always justify the means. Some are excellent, while the means proposed for its attainment may be wicked and execrable. Enemies of the Church charge her with this false doctrine. She repels the calumny

BY ORDER OF THE RT. REV. JOHN IMMACULATE WOLF, O. S. B.
St Benedict's College Atchison, Kansas.

SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, State of California. JAQUES PAYNE, plaintiff, vs. MARIE E. PAYNE, defendant. Action filed Sept. 17th, 1881. The people of the State of California send greeting to Marie E. Payne, defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days after the day of service, after the service of this summons, if served within this city, or within thirty days if served elsewhere, and to appear and answer the complaint of said plaintiff, in the office of the Clerk of said Court, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the fifth day of the term for which this summons is issued, or judgment will be taken against you according to the demand of said complaint, which is briefly stated as follows: To dissolve the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of adultery, and that the custody of the children of the marriage, namely, Frank Payne, aged about 7 years, and Lottie Payne, aged about 5 years, be awarded to the said plaintiff, as more fully appears in said complaint. Witness the Hon. Ward Hunt, Judge of said Court, and the seal of said Court, this 17th day of September, A. D. 1881.
DAVID WILDER, Clerk.
By H. F. Tarlor, Deputy Clerk.
Lyon & Hoskins, Plaintiff's Attorneys.

Information Wanted.

Any information about Patrick Fitzgerald who left Waterford, County Kilkenny, county Mayo, Ireland, some twenty-five years ago. Which last found from who in Ireland he came from. Any information regarding his wife Margaret Lyons. Any information regarding him, or his family will be rewarded by the undersigned. Address P. FITZGERALD, Box 1, Lyons, Rice County, Minn. Irish papers please copy.

SAVE MONEY.

SEND YOUR ADDRESS TO H. A. SMITH, 626 Post Street, San Francisco, Cal., for "Home Circle" one year. Only 25 cents. Best family paper. Contains 40 columns of interest to all. Eight engravings daily. Contains the Sunday School Lesson. Agents wanted. Sample copy free. Only 25 cents. Address as above. Agents wanted for the Pacific Coast for the best Family Bible. Address as above.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC R. R.

Commencing Monday, November 7, 1881, and until further notice, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco as follows:

9:30 A. M., Daily (Sundays excepted.) from San Quentin Ferry, foot of Market street, for Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Healdsburg and intermediate points. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 4:25 P. M.

5:30 P. M., Daily (Sundays included) Stages leave Santa Rosa for Sonoma, Glen Ellen, Kenwood, Oakville, Rutherford, Yountville, Napa, Calistoga, Lakeport, Lower Lake, Middletown, Cobb, Napa Springs, Harbin Springs, Aetna Springs, and Soda Springs. Leave San Francisco at 10:00 A. M. Week Days and 11:00 A. M. Sundays.

A. HUGHES, General Manager.
PETER J. MCGLYNN, General Ticket Agent.

INFORMATION WANTED.

WILLIAM SMITH, aged 54 years, died at Deadwood City, August 6th. He was a native of Parkfield, County Cavan, Ireland, and came to America in 1848. He lived in Pittsburgh, Pa., and afterwards in Meadville, Pennsylvania. He married Miss Jane Hamilton, of Pittsburgh, and left her and family in Meadville, Pennsylvania, in 1864. Any information relative to his family or relatives will be rewarded by the undersigned. Address, Deadwood, Dakota Territory, or this paper.

THE BEST TEA.

There is no more bargain than half tea, nor can we give you the strongest tea for the money. We can give you a good article for 50c, a better article for 60c, and a choice article for 75c, and we do not think you will be looking for good tea, and those who have tried our teas, continue to buy them. Our teas are imported direct from the Great American Importing Tea Company, Nos. 148 and 150 Fulton street, and 152 and 154 Ferry street.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION

Was death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was expecting every moment to see her breathe her last, when a friend recommended from which cured his child of Consumption and she is now in good health. Mr. Wm. Cook, 1 Ward Place, Newark, N. J. Regular bottles sold that Consumption Lung Balsam, 25 cents and 75 cents and $1 per bottle. Agents, Kirk, 1107 Mission st; Frederick's, corner Dupont.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

The German Savings and Loan Society.

For the half year ending December 31st, 1881, a Dividend of FIVE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY will be paid on all sums of $5 and upwards of the full of twenty dollars, for the period of six months, at the rate of five per cent per annum, on deposits, payable on and after Tuesday, January 3rd, 1882, to parties entitled thereto. Dividends remaining unclaimed will be added to the principal and bear the same rate of interest from and after January 1st, 1882.
GEO. LETTE, Secretary.

GRAIN, FRUIT and VINE LANDS

VERY DESIRABLE IMPROVED FARMS, 5, 10 and upwards. Low Prices.

Apply for Country Land Circular.

Did Bishop McQuaid Condemn the Land League?

This question is best answered by the full text of the sermon preached by the Bishop of Rochester, and we ask any one who reads the following carefully to show wherein Bishop McQuaid uttered one word of condemnation against the principles of the Land league. The denunciation was directed against cranks, dynamiters, and blatherskites of the blood-and bullet order, but in the very last paragraph which we quote he avows himself in favor of "peaceful agitation, avoiding bloodshed and secret societies," and this is precisely the programme laid down by the Land League, but sometimes mistated by some speakers who permit their enthusiasm to run away with their senses.

Here are Bishop McQuaid's words and they are plain enough so that even a child can understand them

"There are some things which I wish plainly to say to this congregation, and to that matter, to my Diocese. The subject is a delicate one, and I ask your careful standing and imcpatation, I have taken great pains to prepare myself for a clear and exact exposition. Those who have attended for those only who do not deny the authority of the Church in teaching upon tions of faith and morals. Where a man denies this authority he ceases to be a Catholic. To him I have nothing to say.

"First, then, it is Catholic teaching that the end does not always justify the means. Some are excellent, while the means proposed for its attainment may be wicked and execrable. Enemies of the Church charge her with this false doctrine. She repels the calumny

What a Catholic Servant Girl Did.

Hardly more than twenty five years ago, in New York, says the author of "Irish Fairies" there was no public employment for servants great care was taken to exclude Catholics. One day an advertisement of this kind appeared in one of the principal papers of that city. A poor young Irish girl presented herself at the Bureau indicated, furnished with the customary references. As she was exhibiting her papers, one after another, to the mistress of the house, the latter suddenly said

"Tut, first of all, are you or are you not a Catholic?"

"Certainly, ma am, I'm a Catholic, thank God" was the young girl's reply.

"Then you could not have read the advertisement I put in the paper," replied the lady, "I absolutely will not have a Catholic in my house.

"Yes, I read your advertisement," humbly answered the young girl, "but what difference does it make, ma am, whether I am a Catholic or not, if I am a good and honest servant, and give you faithfully my time, ma am, and if you are not satisfied with me you can send me away."

The lady made no reply to this wise and modest answer, but fixed her eyes on the young girl. Something in her simple and modest exterior attracted her, and she said

"Well, you may come, and I will make the experiment."

For many weeks the poor girl was subjected to a great deal of persecution on the part of the family and the numerous servants of the house, her religious practices were mocked and ridiculed in every way. But the young Christian's faith was invulnerable. Her patience was equal to her trials. Some months passed in this way, when an epidemic of scarlet fever broke out in the city, and two of the children were taken with it. This was the signal for a general flight among all the other servants. The Irish girl alone remained, and her poor, with generous, courageous fidelity, she watched by the sick bedside of her mistress, lavished every attention upon them, with the tenderness of a mother, until they were completely cured

A few years later a new misfortune fell upon the family a sudden failure carried off their fortune, and everything had to be sold.

Quite was a small piece of old family furniture in the house which tender associations made very dear to the mother's heart. The young girl knew this fact and understood what it cost her mistress to part with it, therefore, though it brought a high price she bought it out of her savings and placed it in the room of the mother of the family. In fact, Dennis that was the only piece which met her eyes within the four naked walls was the cherished piece of furniture, which she had bought for her mistress the last time.

"It is possible this is still here" she exclaimed, quite pale, and trembling with emotion.

"Yes, ma am, replied the young girl, "it will never leave here, it is yours. I bought it for the pleasure of giving it to you."

The heart of a woman, particularly of a mother, is moved with even less eloquence than this. Her eyes filled with tears, and she fell upon the neck of her servant, saying "Oh, what a beautiful religion a poor lowly girl has shown herself to be!"

Your devotion to my children over-came me, but to day has finished your work, and I am ready to be reconciled to your religion. I will be a Catholic.

Another Dennis dressed a laurel crown for the Christian girl who was the first to be a Roman citizen. Think you God will not reward in Heaven a more durable crown, since it is eternal, for one who at the price of similar sacrifices shall have saved, not the mortal life of her child, but the soul of a human creature, which perhaps, but for her, would be crowned to-morrow with a poor servant girl!

Don't Make Angels of Yourselves.

Drain' seek to make angels of yourselves, quietly began Brother Gardner as the meeting opened, but I do think we can be more sort o' lenity for angels, an' in the next place you would be roughly lonesome. He that was born with his wings on an sweet an' soft an' good day dat yaper ebery minut to rise up an' fly doan' hab as much comfort as a man who has to be coaxed into dat sheve ter get inter heaven. A bottle wuk-ches jackin a man an' makes him kaspil the better. When I trade mules wid a man I prefer dat he should suspect me wid an intention to make an cheat $25 by de operahun. When I deal wid a butcher I like to feel dat he will work info' ounces of bone for bery right and proper pay. I like to feel dat he is bound to hab de boottmaker tell me dat American cowskin an French calf, an' I am pleased when the sto clerk warrants fo-cent calicoer to wash like sheet-iron. De man who am not a bad feller, but he forgets to fan sorry, no use for prayer, no need of churches He cannot say to a fellow man: 'I wronged you, I'm sorry, let us shake.'

"De man who neber sins makes a poor neb' dough neighbor. De woman who keeps de ole tabby cat from de kitten for fear de wings have started makes a poor mother an' a mean house keeper. If you hab made an jured a man an' gone to him an' asked his pardon an' make up, you doan' know what real happiness am. If your conscience has neber driven you to prayer you can't feel de goodness of de Lawd. My advice to you an to be a leetle wicked, not 'nuff to make you fear or hate you, but just 'nuff to keep you convinced dat you need hab no hope of salvation an pay cash wherever dat de preacherses say or you will be left behin' when de pureesh starts."

Keep it to Yourself.

You have trouble, your feelings are injured, your business is ruined, your wife has run away with your mother-in-law, your children do not treat you just right, and things in general move unpleasantly. Well, what of it? Keep it to yourself. A smothering fire can be found and extinguished; but when the coals are scattered, who can put them up? Fire-brands, when together, can be trodden under foot, but when used to the tails of Samson's foxes it is hard to tell where they will burn. Bury your sorrow. The place for sad and disgusting things is in the ground. A sore finger is not improved by pulling off the rag, and sticking it on everybody's face; treat up, and let it alone. Let it get well as fast as it can, and you can cure it. Charity covereth a multitude of sins. Things thus covered are other, and which she had left behind, for the last time.

"Is it possible this is still here" she exclaimed, quite pale, and trembling with emotion.

"Yes, ma am, replied the young girl, "it will never leave here, it is yours. I bought it for the pleasure of giving it to you."

The heart of a woman, particularly of a mother, is moved with even less eloquence than this. Her eyes filled with tears, and she fell upon the neck of her servant, saying "Oh, what a beautiful religion a poor lowly girl has shown herself to be!"

Your devotion to my children over-came me, but to day has finished your work, and I am ready to be reconciled to your religion. I will be a Catholic.

Another Dennis dressed a laurel crown for the Christian girl who was the first to be a Roman citizen. Think you God will not reward in Heaven a more durable crown, since it is eternal, for one who at the price of similar sacrifices shall have saved, not the mortal life of her child, but the soul of a human creature, which perhaps, but for her, would be crowned to-morrow with a poor servant girl!

Nothing is Lost for Heaven.

Emile de Girardin, one of the writers who contributed most extensively towards spreading a revolution in public opinion in the French, was vouchsafed the wonderful grace of a double conversion. He was thus his confession in the most edifying manner to l'Abbe Salaclier, a Paris priest. Oscar de Vili now relates an incident in the life of M. de Girardin, which probably obtained for him such great mercy at the last hour

Several years ago a Parisian lady and correspondent for some Italian newspapers was hiding in Paris, and all his life he had been struggling for the unification of Italy against the Pope; yet, notwithstanding his errors, he was scrupulously careful in the game of receiving all the consolations of religion before death. With fearful respect to the last wish of her husband, the lady was most anxious to give him suitable religious obsequies, but he was so poor that he exhausted their modest resources, and she had not even enough to bury him In her dire distress she wrote to a friend, a Jesuit famous who had rapidly accumulated a very large fortune, and told her trouble with the greatest confidence. The Jesuit been her husband's companion in arms, and had proven himself a friend to the last hour.

But the millionaire belonged to an unbelieving Masonic lodge. The Jesuit had received the unhappy widow's request, and turned towards his secretary, purposing to write her word, when a thought struck him, and he hungrily asked "Are you going to take him to the church?" "Certainly," answered the weeping widow, "he was his dying request." "Madam, either no church or no money for the funeral of a man, in a rough voice. "What" exclaimed the poor woman, "you the friend of thirty years—you are rich, you could easily—" "Take your choice," he interrupted. "Is this your final answer?" she asked. He answered only by a contemptuous shrug. The sarcastic smile on a heart which was cruelly hurt, has also crept into the heart of the Jesuit. "He whom you call your friend will have the funeral of the poor, but the funeral will go to the church."

The same day funeral de Girardin learned through a third party the particulars of this awful distress, and the shameful behavior of the wealthy Italian.

"It is abominable, he cried, "it makes humanity blush for shame! There should be an agonizing pillory for such actions."

Right away he sent to the poor woman fifty Louis d'Or anonymously, and thanks to his liberal generosity, she had the sad satisfaction of giving the remains of her lamented husband suitable burial.

A long time afterwards she succeeded in ascertaining the name of her discreet benefactor. We may easily believe she offered many a fervent prayer for his conversion, and her prayers were heard in heaven

In the crowd which followed the bier of M. Girardin to its last resting place was noticed the white haired woman, weeping bitterly and praying earnestly for the repose of his soul.

Dere Dolan, the Dominican curative who was wan in attendance in Canada to study the work of Thomas Aquinas as a punishment for the liberal character of his sermons, has returned to the United States; Sir Patrick McDougall, Acting Governor of the Dominion of Canada, and Hon. Premier Chapleau, Premier of Ottawa, Hon. Chas. Langevin, Bishop of Rimouski, Archbishop Lynch, Bishop Pinsoneault, Bishop Duhamel, Bishop Fabre, Bishop Lafleche, Bishop Cameron, Bishop Walsh, Bishop Jamot, B

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1882

A Spanking for Doctor Horatio Stebbins.

We have often wondered if Protestants ever reflect upon the fact that infidelity is the child of Protestantism, and also if conscientious non-Catholics ever dwell upon the consideration that a system of religion which leads to infidelity can never have been designed by Almighty God. Yet this is the inevitable outcome of Protestantism, and we see society to-day abounding with men and women who a few years ago were members of some Protestant sect, but who have finally drifted into the broad ocean of religious doubt in consequence of never having known the true religion of Christ. Moreover, there are tens of thousands of Protestants today who are regular attendants at some fashionable churches, who, in the course of the next five or ten years, will not possess a single particle of religious doctrine, yet they may continue to frequent their church, simply because it gives them a certain standing in society and affords them a business patronage not to be dispised. There are thousands—nay, millions of infidels to-day who were made such by listening to just such sermons as that preached recently in the Unitarian church in this city by Dr. Horatio Stebbins, a sermon which is calculated to do more injury to religion than the most infidel book ever published. People who read such sermons do not reflect upon the source from whence they emanate; they do not consider that between infidelity and Unitarianism there exists but the difference between pronounced denial of God and a pretended reverence for a Deity whose divinity is denied every Sunday in the year.

We doubt if there exists in the whole rank of Unitarian preachers a single one that does not consider himself nearer a saint than our Blessed Saviour. Dr. Stebbins feels assured that he is greater than the Son of God, else how could he have the audacity to publicly proclaim the detestable falsehood that "the idea of the Trinity was the creation of man." Does Dr. Stebbins believe in the Bible? Does he believe it to have been divinely inspired, or does he rather believe it to be a compilation of ideas generated by maniacs and palmed off upon the world as the wisdom of God? If Dr. Stebbins does not believe in the Bible, we have nothing further to say to him save that he should stop disgracing the pulpit and join the ranks of Ingersoll, as all Christians prefer an outspoken infidel to a preacher who pretends to a religion he has no faith in. If Dr. Stebbins believes in the Bible we desire to direct his attention to the scene that transpired when our Blessed Redeemer was baptized in the Jordan, and which is thus set forth in the Sacred Scriptures:

"And Jesus, being baptized, went up presently out of the water: and behold, the heavens were opened to him: and he saw the spirit of God descending as a dove, and coming upon him. And behold, a voice from heaven, saying: This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

Here we have God the Father speaking from heaven, God the Son visible on earth, and God the Holy Ghost descending from heaven in the form of a dove. The Trinity, therefore, originated with God, and is God, and it never was ordained for man to invent a dogma partaking so much of mystery and which has evidently scared Dr. Stebbins.

The proof of the celestial origin of the Blessed Trinity does not, however, rest upon this text of Scripture alone. As if to confound the skeptical Stebbinses of every age, the Son of God Himself declared this dogma of Christian belief when He sent to His Apostles as he sent them out to propagate Christianity among the nations of the earth:

"Go, ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Here the existence of the Trinity is proclaimed from the lips of our Blessed Redeemer Himself, and Dr. Stebbins stands convicted of calumniating the sacred character of the triune Godhead by his false assertion.

The next nonsensical declaration made by Dr. Stebbins consisted in his assertion that "Humanity had advanced while religion remained at a stand-still. Well, admitting Dr. Stebbins's theory to be correct, so much the worse for humanity if it has advanced without religion—as is too evidently the case in the world to-day. To assert that Religion has not advanced is equivalent to saying that truth has not advanced, because the dogmas declared by our Blessed Redeemer during his sojourn on earth nineteen centuries ago, were as potent the moment they fell from the lips of the Son of God as they will be in a thousand years to come. What fully, therefore, to expect Religion—the handmaid of God and the perfection of Deity—to "advance" according to the ideas of infidelic man, in the same ratio as if it was a mere scientific scheme which might approach nearer to perfection as the world advanced in science the development. God made the sun, the moon and the stars in the first week of creation, yet the sun shines no more brightly fully now than it did when the spark of its vitality was formed by the hand of God. The lustre of the moon has not increased, nor have the stars experienced a change. They are all to-day performing the functions for which God made them, and so it is with true religion, which, being formulated by Almighty God, is immutable in its laws a changeless creed in a changing world. If, therefore, every work of God in the natural world bears the stamp of perfection, although they are all doomed to perish, how much more perfect must not the scheme of salvation be which our Blessed Redeemer left to the world as the legacy by which mankind can gain eternal happiness. Neither time nor elements can annihilate the supernatural work of God, it partook of His divine perfection when He established it, and Dr. Stebbins might, with equal sense, complain that Almighty God had not changed his laws to suit the "enlightened" ideas of this Ingersollian age, as to charge religion with not "advancing" in the groove of godless thought which permeates society at this day. From all we have said on this point, Dr. Stebbins may realize the wisdom of Shakespeare when he wrote the lines which are admirably adapted to our present subject:

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

It was the false and free-thinking notion that the Catholic Church was behind the age which gave birth to the broad of scats that now distract the world. The Catholic Church refused to advance beyond the lines laid down for her by her Divine Founder; she refused to be made subservient to money or to become the tool of tyranny; hence kings and emperors, petty princes and proud priests refused to follow in the show train of religious truth, but preferred rather to rush headlong on the wrong track. It was thus that error was multiplied itself, while God's truth continues to plod its way constantly over the same gospel course which the Son of God declared should never be changed.

Dr. Stebbins, and others of his ilk, may think they can create a religious—or rather irreligious—theory which will be abreast of this boasted intellectual age, but such a religion, though could never partake of the attributes of truth; it would be only a sectarian salmagundi concocted by the two Sa—Satan and Stebbins.

The Doctor without Divinity next told his patient hearers that "Jesus Christ was not a member of the Church," which was very true, inasmuch as He was the parent, the founder, the Alpha and Omega of the Church of which Catholics are members—the only Church ever planted on earth by the Son of God. But when Dr. Stebbins added to the above assertion that our Blessed Redeemer was "a man of the world," he evidently forgot that little episode in the gospel where the devil offered our Saviour the whole world if he would fall down and adore him, but our Saviour rebuked the rebellious imp of darkness by proclaiming His Divinity. Here is a beautiful example of the difference between the true and the false in religion. Even in our own day the devil tempts the Catholic to worship him, and promises him the whole world if he will turn traitor to God, but the valiant hero says, "Get thee behind me, Satan," whilst the worldly-minded skeptic accepts the offer of Satan and serves the devil through the pantheistic preaching of just such sermonizers as Dr. Stebbins.

Protestant preachers of the Stebbins' class aim to be clerical clowns or cranks in order to attract attention. They envy Talmage, Beecher, and other eccentric preachers of fashionable foolishness, so they sometimes strive to attract equal attention by means of similar eccentricity. This motive, no doubt, induced Dr. Stebbins to use this phrase in his sermon

"Jesus Christ was not even a religious man, I speak theologically."

Whatever Dr. Stebbins may mean by speaking theologically regarding religion, we cannot surmise but assuredly, he did not speak truthfully, in the ordinary acceptance of the term. If the Doctor had qualified his expression by saying that our Blessed Redeemer was not "a religious man" as represented by the canting, hypocritical, Popery-hating preachers of Protestantism the Doctor would, indeed, have been eminently correct, as there was no class upon whom God threatened direr vengeance than the Pharisees, whose type still exists in the hide-bound hypocrites whose hearts are a volcano of selfpride and of hate against their fellowmen, while they pretend to be meek and humble followers of a God whose cause they disgrace both in and out of their pulpits, just as Dr. Stebbins disgraced his profession when he declared that "Jesus Christ abhorred professional Christianity and eliminated a priestly class."

As a preacher, even of Unitarianism, Dr. Stebbins should know that hatred of mankind had no dwelling-place in the sacred Heart of our Blessed Redeemer. His words, His counsel, His example and His Sacred Book—all proclaim the precise contrary to the false idea advanced by the Doctor with little respect for the divinity of God, and less respect for the blasphemy which he perpetrates when he seeks to degrade His sacred humanity.

And so, Doctor, Christ "abhorred professional Christianity!" Strange, indeed, that for nineteen centuries the world has not discovered this before! There is the Catholic Church will not canonize a Stebbins unless he or she has charged the Scriptural injunction which commands us to confess God before men, or in other words, to proclaim ourselves Christians—that is members of the body of Christ. All the martyrs and confessors, and virgins and saints of every sphere, were raised to celestial dignity because they had the courage to proclaim themselves professing Christians, and lived and suffered for the service of Almighty God. Dr. Stebbins, therefore, was wrong when he made this assertion, and was equally in error when he declared that our Blessed Saviour "abominated a priestly class," concerning whom there are innumerable tests of Scripture, in which is set forth the dignity of the priestly office, the reverence which should be shown to those who fill it, and the celestial distinction which shall be conferred upon them. The priests of this Church of God "instruct many to justice" and the Lord has declared, through the Prophet Daniel, that they "shall shine as stars for all eternity. If, therefore, Dr. Stebbins would study the Bible, even a little, he would save himself the humiliation of having to be publicly spanked, because his sacrilegious Scriptural truth and proclaims ideas that seem to be imbibed from Ingersoll and are worse than rankest infidelity, because they are given to the world with the stamp of a preacher on them.

The ends the synopsis of Dr. Stebbins' sermon, but before we part with the distinguished and extinguished preacher, it may be interesting to cast the horoscope of Unitarians and other degraders of God's dignity in the other world. Where will they go? Not to heaven, because our Blessed Redeemer has said that only those who take up their cross and follow Him, who confess Him before the world—shall be with Him in Paradise. Nor will they go to Purgatory, because they do not believe in the half-way house to heaven. There is only one place left, and in spirit we behold a Unitarian soul approach the portals of Paradise, where the angel of God keep guard, and, as he offers to enter, he is motioned aside and thus addressed:

Hence, way and soul, now in the place of fire
Save those who in the Christian faith expire.
Who loved the Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
Shall never be numbered among the host.
For these and thine there is no place for you
Go down and seek the place of fallen souls
You'll see the sign, the farthest down below,
To those it reaches "Stebbins, Unitarian."

T. M. Healy, M. P., on the "No Rent" Ultimatum.

It the course of his lecture delivered last week in St. Louis, T. M. Healy thus outlined the causes which led to the adoption of the "no rent" programme in Ireland, and as Mr. Healy's expressions have official significance we lay them before our readers so that they can plainly discern the reasons which led to the adoption of this plan to punish the enemies of the Irish people—and such times as the innocent men incarcerated shall be set at liberty On this point Mr. Healy said:

"All liberty is at an end in Ireland. A meeting like this would be dispersed by the police, and I for allthe world know, and your committee arrangements would be arrested "reasonable suspected of treasonable designs." My friend and newspaper critic on the Government side, Mr. Gladstone, I have read his speeches, after the arrest of his officers and the prisoners, and continues publication, for ability by empowering women to do his work, and the other sex, and the other sex to do his work. With the right of free speech and action suppressed with no liberty, no rights, no meetings, no press, what were we to do? We referred the matter to the constitutional rights of free speech, of public meeting, to demand redress, and, if redress appear and defend constitutional rights in the courts, and until every suspect, who, in fact, shall be unconditionally released, we shall pay you no rent.

This policy has been severely criticised and condemned as Communism and robbery, as an encroachment on the sacred rights of property, and that it will never meet with the approval of the Irish people. Have the American people forgotten, or do they denounce the sentiment proclaimed from Faneuil Hall, Boston, a little more than one hundred years ago, when their forefathers declared that "taxation without representation," and for the maintenance of which principle they subsequently pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor? We are simply doing the same thing, we are fighting for constitutional rights as restored. Ireland, strictly speaking, is a peopled and ought to be peopled, and we intend to live and to remain in Ireland. Mr. Healy briefly reviewed the history of the robbery of lands in Ireland from the people by military force. The rent system in Ireland is a fraud and robbery by which the people only have been compelled to subsist in misery and can only be justified on the plea that England has the right to rule Ireland a right the Irish people have never recognized, and never recognize. The right of the landlords to the land of Ireland is identical with the right of the London Parliament to make laws for the Irish people—the right of force.

But let us assume that the rent is a just debt; yet it is lawful at times to withhold that payment of even just debts. If you owed a man five dollars and he came to you for the money and demanded his money, you would certainly be justified in refusing to pay till he released his grip. That is exactly what we are the Irish people to do. Pay no rent till the Government releases the iron grip of military force on our throats.

Some of the New York papers avail the "no rent" manifesto because they assert it attacks the rights of private property, and state that there for it will be received with a loathing and indignation by the American people. Yes, when a few years ago, Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States, by a stroke of the pen emancipated 4,000,000 of slaves, private property so vaunted to be worth $200,000,000, for which the owners received no recompense, those same papers lauded the act as one demanded by humanity, and said well done; that it were better the Southern people should lose the sum than that a single creature should be held in bondage in this free land; yet slavery in this country is not to be compared with the wretchedness of the people of Ireland under the landlords. The slaves in the South were not compelled to live in uncovered hovels, with no sufficient clothing and food, they were not dominated by periodical famine and pestilence. More suffering is caused by landlordism in Ireland in one year, than was caused by slavery in the whole history of this country.

Condemning the Scripture.

The revised New Testament which our separated brethren published with such zeal in about to be kicked out of sectarian society as not suitable for the nineteenth century and our enlightened age. Right here in California the Methodist organ plays a tune of disapproval, and candidly makes a point against the revised version:

"We cannot say that the new revised edition of the good New Testament, the book of Christ, is in some respects, not exactly, clearly, unmistakably and infallibly the inspired word of God. We cannot, also, in conscience, say that the revised version is equal to the old version, or even equal to the original. The dissatisfaction with the revised version is not confined to the Catholics, but is shared by many of the Protestant sects, who have adopted it."

Thus satisfies the hands of the body back in the way of a sermon we ask are the Methodists to use a Bible of division, that will be able to carry out the Protestant idea of everybody judging himself as to the good, bad and indifferent interpretation of the texts of Scripture. It is only a question of time when each sect in the Protestant world will have a special Bible, and then Babel will be re-enacted.

O'CONNOR AND HEALY.

Preparations completed for their Reception

A meeting was held last Tuesday evening in K. of H. Hall, No. 804 Market street, of delegations from numerous Societies to complete arrangements for the reception of Messrs. O'Connor and Healy, who, Heralds and Orators of the National cause of the Irish National League. The Committee in Hall at 8 o'clock, and everything in House had been arranged for the reception exercises.

Minor special Committees met last week and had to the end that the reception of the distinguished Tribunes in Dublin and Boston, and the enthusiastic affiliated them in the United States. Invitations have been sent for the reception to the prominent citizens and officials, Judge Fahey, Chairman of the meeting, announced the following as the Reception Committee

Judge Robt. J. Tobin, E. W. McCarthy, Cornelius O'Connor, R. Tr. Kenna, S. J. Hayes, Richard A. Rooney, J. D. O'Brien, Thos. Brannan, Charles Walker, Chas. O'Sullivan, Rev. John Kenney, Mrs. J. Dupuy, Rev. J. Prendergast, By Charles A. Clinton, Rev. J. O'Connor, John Sweeney, A. J. Hinchey, Patrick Sheerin, Dr. J. Rodgers, Philip A. Roche, Rev. J. J. Harrington, Robert Shelby, J. H. Gibbs, Mrs. M. J. Center, Patrick Mahoney, Patrick Harrington, Mary H. Hammond, Charles F. Hanlon, Dr. John F. Gibbon, Rev. Father Cullen, Rev. Andrew Cullen, Wm. Walsh, Mrs. Lizzie Bottters, Michael Ryan, James E. Reilly, Dr. F. F. Hackley, Miss Mary A. Judge.

It was decided that the Committee on arrangements will issue and circulate an appeal to Irishmen in behalf of the cause of Ireland, which should state, in like manner to that issued on the occasion of Irish affairs. The Committee are to report at a meeting to be held on Tuesday evening next, at O'Connor's, Sacramento, Marysville, Nevada City, Grass Valley, Santa Cruz, Hollister, Gilroy and Merced.

RECEPTION CEREMONIES.

At the reception to be given to Messrs. O'Connor and Healy at the Grand Opera House on this coming Sunday evening, it is expected that ex-mayor Pelton will preside, and that all the distinguished dignitaries of the city except the English Consul will be present. Several hundred seats have been provided, and Miss Ellen Gaynor, the popular Irish Songstress, will sing the Irish National exercises Messrs. O'Connor and Healy. Mr. Patrick Ford will read the letter of Parnell, addresses of Messrs. O'Connor and Healy. Mr. O'Connor will open the ball, and will speak especially for this occasion, and the other gentlemen will follow in the order named. The Band of the 'Sixty-ninth Regiment' occupy prominent place in the arrangements for the occasion. At the date the tickets are being issued, and it is expected that the Opera House will be crowded to its full capacity on that occasion, and the enthusiasm will be in the last degree worthy of the cause and of the men.

BISHOP NULTY ON THE STATE OF IRELAND.

We hope every reader of the Monitor will observe to learn the true state of tyranny which exists in Ireland today will read the startling philippic which we publish from the pen of Bishop Nulty against the cruel and unpatriotic slave and his satellites in Ireland. No language is adequate to the denunciation of Warren Hastings oppresses the country, nor of the just invective in which the valorous Bishop of Meath expose Gladstone to the detestation of his fellow men. Read it and pass it to your neighbor; that he may learn the true state of Ireland as presented by its bold and honest champion—modern "resources of civilization."

A NEW BOOK ON IRELAND.

IRELAND in Travel. The Canons and Aims of Irish Agitation. By M. F. Cummins, M. D. Introduction by Thos. Power O'Connor, M. P.; Sense of the New York Press on the Work.

The title of this work, the name of the writer and the name of the gentleman by whom the introduction was written, sufficiently indicate the scope and object of the work itself. The book contains quite a number of illustrations of prominent Irishmen and scenes in Ireland, as well as historical and statistical information. The work is not wonderful that the Catholic press in America has been timid and weak. Even from the starting point, so that island, which we have looked on as our home, Ireland, we have found a celebration and hum of truth, and we have found a welcome, and we have found a welcome of Ireland, our dear country, with the sacred blood, and we have found a welcome in glorious future. I recognize in the words the great expression of the feelings with which I have been ever animated and shall be animated while life remains to me. I have been, I am, I shall be, an Irish Nationalist, and, from Ireland, I have received a welcome which I shall ever cherish. Ireland is a land of poetry, of romance, of song, of music, of dance, of wit, of humor, of fun, of frolic, of pathos, of tears, of sorrow, of suffering, of martyrdom, of glory, of hope, of faith, of love, of charity, of all that is good, of all that is bad, of all that is great, of all that is mean, of all that is noble, of all that is ignoble, of all that is pure, of all that is impure, of all that is holy, of all that is unholy, of all that is good, of all that is evil, of all that is true, of all that is false, of all that is beautiful, of all that is ugly, of all that is loving, of all that is hateful, of all that is generous

Cardinal Manning on Pope Leo XIII.

In a recent address in England, Cardinal Manning thus sketched the three years Pontificate of Leo XIII.

Although his Pontificate had only extended for some three years, it had been marked already by a character which would render it historical. The long Pontificate of the Holy Father Pius IX., of blessed memory, was marked by a supernatural virtue and indexibility, by which he bore and repelled the shock of a revolution. It broke upon him, and it passed him by. It occupied the city of Rome, but the spiritual power of the Church remained firm in its place, vindicating its own rights, though they were violated by the superior force of arms. Such was the Pontificate of Pius IX. —an inflexible resistance—and it was necessary at that day; the slightest indication of a willingness to make terms would have been misconstrued as fear and as a readiness to compromise. There was no duty before him but the duty of remaining immotable until the full violence of the rebellion should have spent itself in vain. That the duty and the office of Leo XIII is altogether unlike that of his predecessor. He took that great name, not only out of special devotion to Leo XII., whom he had loved, and with whom he had stood in special relations, but out of a much higher devotion to those who bore the name of Leo of old—Leo the Great and St. Leo III., who may be said to be the founder and creator of Christendom of which we are part. It was St. Leo III., who, by consecrating the Emperor Charlemagne, laid the foundations of the great empire of the West, out of which the whole European civilization has sprung, and to which the unity of Christendom for one thousand years may be ascribed. Leo III. knew that the two great powers—the spiritual and the civil—were, by the will of God, founded to be in unity and in closest relations, and the Christendom that sprang from that act was maintained for one thousand years—mutilated here and there, indeed, but, as a whole, retaining its integrity—the union of these two powers which governed the world, of which the temporal power of the Sovereign Pontiff was the keystone. He made these remarks in order that he might say that the revolution in the time of Pius IX. wrecked that great fabric of Christian civilization, disintegrated the unity of Christian Europe, and the civil powers of the world withdrew themselves one by one and stood in an attitude of hostility to the supreme power of the Holy See. It was a time of scattering and disorder and chaos. The Pontificate of Leo XIII. already has been marked by the reconstruction of that which St. Leo III. began, and which the revolution had shattered. He has begun by entering into relations with all the civil powers of the world, be they what they may—be they Catholic or non-Catholic, be they Christian or not Christian—even with the sublime Porte, knowing that the civilized powers of the world, be they what they may, are ordained by God as the great instruments for the government and the civilization of mankind.

A Faithful Dog.

Not long ago a certain Father Nicholas, a monk of the Grande-Chartreuse, once side-de-camp to the Czar, was returning from Fourvieres to his monastery, followed by a fine St. Bernard dog, to whichhe was greatly attached. Instead of keeping to the highroad, he took to the footpath that runs along the left bank of the river Guiers, which is thereabouts very precipitous. As he walked, he read his breviary, and being more intent on his devotions than on the direction he was taking, he made a false step, and fell. Long was the precipice, his course was not arrested until he reached—unconscious and terribly bruised—the edge of the stream. The dog followed, and, as is supposed, tried to rouse him. Not succeeding in this attempt, he returned to the footpath, and did his best to attract the attention of two shepherds who happened to be passing; but alarmed by the mastiff's manner, they ran away as fast as their legs could carry them. The next day the dog presented himself at the monastery, and, the monks, thinking from his appearance that he was hungry, fed him food. But the animal refused to eat, and by his plaintive barking and gestures did his best to tell the monks that something ere wrong. In the end, some of them decided to follow him; and the dog, with many manifestations of delight, led the way to the place where he had left his master. When he reached the part of the river bank whence Father Nicholas had fallen, he began to bark, and the monk, who had by this time recovered consciousness, was able to utter a feeble shout. When his rescuers, preceeded by the mastiff, reached him, they found him lying with his feet in the stream, and quite unable to move. With the help of the shepherds, whom the barkings and shoutings had drawn to the spot, they contrived to drag him to the top of the precipice and carry him to the monastery, where he is now in a fair way for recovery. The mastiff has ever since remained by the bedside of his master, whom his intelligence and devotion saved from a frightful death.

John of Tuam and Judge Keogh.

The most memorable event in Dr. Moffatt's later years was the celebrated Galway election trial. He and his priests were arraigned on an election petition for exercising "undue influence" in behalf of Captain Nolan, the national candidate for the County Galway in the contest of February 1872. Curiously enough late decisions this case should be tried by Mr. Justice Keogh. William Keogh is Roscommon man; he has been one of Archbishop Machale's most ardent admirers. When he and the famous Sadlier of the Tipperary Bank led the "Pope's brass band" in the Commons he was never tired of praising the Archbishop. At the Athlone banquet where he made his famous "Do help-me-God" speech he compared Dr. MacHale to that lofty tower which overhangs the yellow Tiber," and extolled to the skies his course in politics. The trial was held in the old Court House in Galway. The Grand Jury box was thronged with fashionable ladies and the galleries with priests and landlords, who hung on every word uttered by the prime contel witnesses as they detailed what the priests had said to them and "threats had been made against them if they dared to vote for the anti-clerical candidate." Dr. MacHale had given no personal offence to Keogh after his election at his Irish house, but the Judge was an Irishman among the Irish Catholics, and he seized the opportunity to give the Irish gentlemen had a scathing rebuke. Undoubtedly Archbishop MacHale and his clergy had violated the new "election act" and Keogh's judgment was in that sense quite justifiable, but his display of temper and the violence with which he assailed the venerable prelate was unseemly to a degree. Captain Nolan was unseated; Keogh was hurled in disgrace out of Irish politics and cross roads in Connaught; But moved his degradation from the bench in the House of Commons, and the bad feeling engendered between the landlords and the clergy by the trial had not been wholly effaced when Keogh, drivin mad by drink in which he sought to forget his perfidy to his countrymen, took his own life.

— Prof. Bonnet of Yale says that the present college fashion is "teach a bit of Latin, a bit of Greek, a bit of biology and a bit of something else, so that in the result you hardly know any thing."

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the statements, as well as the power and value of the article of which they speak, we publish herewith the "facsimile" signatures of parties whose veracity is beyond question. The importance of testimonials is absolute, but can the facts they announce be falsified.

CHARLES HOUSE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the years with complete attacks of Liver Complaint, which I should describe themselves by intense pains and bowel attacks followed by a long period of weakness. I was induced to try your Kidney Cure, and I must confess that I spared dozens ranging in size from the head of a pin to a good-sized pea. When the stones passed from the kidneys into the bladder, I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys inside the hip bone, down to front and along the course of the ureter. The discharge of the stone was usually attended with stranguary of the neck of the bladder. The pains were very severe, coming on by paroxysms, and relieving from time to time until the stones were discharged. I have also used your Liver Cure, and find it to be a most thorough cleanser. Being very in practice, and the leading physicians of this city, two of which make kidney diseases a specialty, and they told me that I could never be cured. Learning through a friend the good effects attending the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney diseases, I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking about four bottles, I passed five stones without any pain, since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

C. B. Lillie

1141 A Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal. Nov. 5, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My business was of a character to cause me much fatigue, and all such symptoms my affection of the kidneys, as all who know me will testify, I was at times so lame I was obliged to lay off for some time. Hearing of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I never felt better in my life than I now do. I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

H. M. Van Winkle

AUBURN, Cal., April 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians both allopathic and homeopathic, and never was relieved as I have been by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Hon. A. C. Finley

SANTA ROSA, Dec. 4, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and find it all you claim for it in kidney trouble.

C. T. Hamner

President Santa Rosa Bank.

ALAMEDA, Cal., Nov. 27, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and your kidneys troubles and pains all left me, and I have had no returns of pain since.

Chas. L. Prince

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 21, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with pain in my back and kidneys for the past two years, the effects of a severe strain and cold contracted at the same time, browning of friends, in the east, that had been cured by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, was induced to try it and I can prove it to be a most decidedly beneficial one.

Geo. H. Gropp

Twenty-fifth and Peralta Streets.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 26, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My complaint were pains in the back, also a scalding sensation in the passages directly over the kidneys. This was more so when I had taken cold, as the cold always settled in my kidneys. I was treated by a physician who prescribed for me without benefit. I then tried other remedies. I have tried several remedies, but failed to obtain relief until a friend, whose father had been cured by your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, advised me to try it. I have been taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for the past three months, and have been greatly benefited.

I remain, very truly yours,

M. C. Lucesby

504 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. Have having taken several bottles never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was enabled to rest and sleep well.

Very truly yours,

Austin Allen

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 16, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered from a very severe form of kidney disease, and was induced to try Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, which has done more good than any other medicine I have taken during the past two years, and I have suffered for several years from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials, many of them in cases where hope was abandoned, have been voluntarily given, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any one who read this has any lingering doubt, he should remember the great danger of delay.

THE BEST REMEDY

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

Indorsed by the profession and by people from all reliable remedy is introduced. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is a specific for all the ailments of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles for which it is famous the lung diseases, universally attended with more or less severe cases of Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Whooping-cough, and other pulmonary diseases, which, if neglected, lead to fatal results. Its wonderful cures are the result of its peculiar curative properties, which are unknown to any other medicine

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MONTHLY OFFICE, Jan. 11, 1882.

FLOUR—City Extras are jobbing at $6@6½; City Superfine, $6@6 25; Interior Brands, $5@5 50; Corn Meal, $2 25 for extra, and $1 50@3 for superfine.

WHEAT—The weather is at present the chief topic of conversation in grain circles, exceeding in interest even the forthcoming estimate of the Produce Exchange, as to the stock on hand Jan. 1st. Reports from the lower counties and the San Joaquin district are unfavorable, as thus far insufficient rain has fallen to insure a good crop. Although it is yet too early in the season to feel alarmed about a dry year, still, holders are less inclined to meet the market and freights are weakening. The northern part of the State is sick troubled about dry weather, as up to date there has been enough rain. The Wheat market is unchanged. Sales of 75 tons No. 2, $1 65; 200 and 300 tons do, $1 62½; and 6,000 ctls coast, $1 60. No. 1 inquirable at $1 65@1 68, and No. 2, at $1 60@$1 65 per ctl.

BARLEY—There is a temporary lull in the movement, owing to the uncertain weather, as it is generally believed that the future of the market will be pretty definitely settled by the rainfall. Sales to-day of 100 ctls light brewing at $1 67; 1,60,700, and 1,0 ctls feed, $1 65, and 200 ctls mixed Chevalier, $1 65; brewing, $1 62½@$1 72½; Chevalier, $1 60@$1 70 ⅌ ctl.

OATS—Show no change. The market is firm and continued receipts from Oregon and Washington keep stocks up. Holders make no concessions. The only sale to day was 840 ctls feed at $1 27½. Good and choice $1 80@$1 85; common, $1 75@$1 77½; Surprise, $1 75@$1 90 ⅌ ctl.

CORN—No sales are reported, as buyers refuse to bite over $1 60 and holders decline to sell at less than $1 75 ⅌ ctl.

HAY—Wheat, $12@$14; wild oat, $10@$13; volunteer and stable, $9@$10; stack, $9@$10 ⅌ ton.

RYE—Market is weak at $1@$1 12½ ⅌ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 60@$1 65 ⅌ ctl.

STRAW—Quotations are 60@65c ⅌ bale.

POTATOES—Prices are still higher, as receipts are not heavy and the demand is good. Humboldt Reds, $1 50; do Peachblows, $1 62½; $1 70; do Kidneys, $1 50; Petaluman, $1 60@1 65; Tomatoes $1 60@1 80; Oregon Burbank Seedlings, $1 65; do Garnet Chiles, $1 20@$1 25; do Peerless, $1 50; River Reds, 55@$1 10; Early Rose, $1 10@$1 25 ⅌ ctl.

ONIONS—Sales of 50 sks choice at 8c and 100 sks common at 60c ⅌ ctl.

CORNMEAL, ETC—Table Meal, 3½c ⅌ lb. Feed Corn, $36 ⅌ ton; Hominy 4½c ⅌ lb.

BEESWAX—35@37c ⅌ lb.

BUTTER—Is declining daily and receipts are increasing. Good and choice California roll, 32@35c; fair do, 30@32c; mixed lots from country stores 25@27½c; firkin, 30@32c; Pickled roll, 30c; Eastern, 30@35c ⅌ lb.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 16@22c; California, 12@13c ⅌ lb.

POULTRY—Turkeys were demoralized today, while Roosters and Broilers are scarce and high. Live Turkeys ⅌ lb 16@18½c; dressed do, 18@21c; Geese, ⅌ pair $1 75@2; Ducks ⅌ doz, $9 50@$7; Hens, $6@$7 50; Roosters, young, $6@$7; do, old, $5@$5 50; Broilers, $4@$6 ⅌ doz.

EGGS—Weak. Arrival of 28 bbls Oregon, which are quotable at 30@32½c. California, 35@36c; Eastern lots, 29@32½c ⅌ doz.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Business is quiet. Cranberries, $14@16 ⅌ bbl; Pears, $10@$7 ⅌ box; Apples, 75c@$2 ⅌ box.

VEGETABLES—Marrowfat Squash, $10@12 ⅌ ton; Okra 20@25c ⅌ lb; Tomatoes, 50@75c ⅌ box; Cabbage 75c@$1 ⅌ ctl; Cauliflower, 60@75c ⅌ dozen; Carrots, 35@40c; Turnips, 75c; Beets, 60c; Parsnips, 75c@$1 ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 10@12c; Artichokes, 50c ⅌ dozen; Dry Chilis Peppers, 16@20c ⅌ lb. Mushrooms 15c ⅌ lb.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY.

When Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., announced that his "Favorite Prescription would positively cure the many diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, some doubted, and continued to employ the harsh and painful local treatment. But the mighty truth gradually became acknowledged, thousands of ladies employed the "Favorite Prescription," and were speedily cured. By druggists.

Decidedly Popular.

Unless it had great merit Parker's Ginger Tonic could not be so popular. It sale has spread remarkably all over this country, because invalids find it gives them new life and vigor when other medicines fail entirely.—Ohio Farmer.

"And the Leaves were for the Healing of the Nations."

Dr. Pierce's Extract of Smart-weed breaks up colds, fevers and inflammatory attacks, and is specific for colic, cramps, diarrhœ, and dysentery. By druggists.

A Varied Performance.

Many wonder how Parker's Ginger tonic can perform such varied cures, thinking it simply an acre of digest, when in fact it is made from many valuable medicines which act beneficially on every diseased organ. See circular.

DEAT RUSSET PATCH, Buffalo, N. Y., Gentlemen—I have had rheumatism since I was a boy and your 2 bot has cured me entirely.

WM. MONTGOMERY, Acker, Unn.

These Pads cure all diseases of kidney and urinary organs. $2, by druggists or by mail.

In the cure of severe coughs, weak lungs, spitting of blood, and the early stages of Consumption, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has astonished the medical faculty. While it cures the severest coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By druggists.

Women that have been pronounced incurable by the best physicians in the country, have been completely cured of female weakness by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Sold by all druggists. Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass., for pamphlets.

—Save $150. Buy your pianos direct from the manufacturers. Wholesale & Co., New York. Lave opened an agency at 532 Sutter street, F. R. Girard, manager. Instruments sold on fashion.

—There is a great comfort in purchasing goods of any kind when you feel that you will get full weight and correct measure. I've suffered which are unfortunately but slight of in many instances in our day. In the a little of Cole; few people are prepared to weigh it; hence they have to trust entirely to the honesty of the dealer. and here we are reminded that Mr. John Lamble, south-east corner of Sutter and Powell streets, has established a reputation for fair dealing and full weight that he prides himself upon retaining. His prices are low, and one trial will satisfy all that it is just the man to purchase coal from.

Do not delay using Ammen's Cough Syrup. We had a friend say to us a few days ago: "I never do anything for a cold; just wear it off. That is exceedingly dangerous; one might die that 19 times and the 20th time the cold would settle in the lungs and lead to consumption, and then yet one's life short enough. Is it not better, and more sensible, to go to your druggist and get a bottle of Ammen's Cough Syrup than run any risk at all.

☞ No excuse now for not supporting the Monitor. It is fresh, newy, interesting and cheap. Only $3 a year.

Lawyers use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Do not delay using Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ministers use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumptives use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

COMPOUND OXYGEN.

A NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION. Includes Compound Oxygen, Rhoades Inhaler, Medicated Inhalants, Medicated Vapors, Rhoades Improved Cane, Pocket Inhaler, Pocket Vaporizer. Treatment by Mail. Dr. STARKEY & PALEN, 1109 Girard St., Philadelphia. Compound Oxygen, Manufactured only by Dr. STARKEY & PALEN, Dispensing Agent, 609 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. ☞ Send for Free Pamphlet.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Kast's

What's the Matter with THE SHOE BUSINESS?

☞ BOTTOM DROPPED OUT. ☜

PRICES DOWN------DOWN-----DOWN.

Previous to our REMOVAL to OUR ELEGANT STORES---

738 AND 740 MARKET STREET,

which are to be ENLARGED and RE-MODELED to meet the wants of our daily-increasing Business. we offer Our ENTIRE Stock at the Following

☞ Unprecedented LOW PRICES !!! ☜

Gent's Wear.

Fine French calf Button Shoes reduced from $6 to $5.
Russia cross Pedestrian Shoes reduced from $6 to $5.
Oversoles shooting Boots, reduced from $7 to $5.
High cut English Hunting Shoes reduced from $6 to $5.
Fine Calf Shoes Two French soles reduced from $6 to $5.
Fine Welt Shoes, Hand sewed, the best that made reduced from $7 to $5.

Children's Wear.

Boys Broad Toe and Button Boots reduced from $1 to $1 50.
Fine kid and Polish Button Spring Heel Boots, RIGHT CHEAP at $2.
Grained kid Heeled Button Boots, reduced from $2 to $1 75.

Ladies' Wear.

French Kid Button Boots the cheapest in the trade reduced from $5 to $4.
Cashmere top kid French Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.
White Satin Dress Slippers, reduced from $1 to $1.
Polish Goat Button Boots, Double Sole, reduced from $4 to $3.
Fine Kid Polish Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.
Fine Kid Sandal Slippers, reduced from $1 50 to $1.
French Kid Button Boots, reduced from $5 to $4.
High cut Imp Kid Button Boots, reduced from $5 to $4.
Misses' Wear.
The Largest Imp Broad French Kid Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.
Sandal Slippers Plenty, reduced from $1 50 to $1.
Fine Calf Button Boots reduced from $4 to $3.
Fine Calf Shoes, Spring Heel, the best that made, reduced from $4 to $3.

Buy Your SHOES NOW and SAVE MONEY. Our ENTIRE STOCK MUST BE SOLD, as we have IMMENSE SHIPMENTS on the way for OUR NEW STORES.

☞ KAST'S ☜

Cor. Market and Dupont streets.

FRANCIS X. KAST. LOUIS S. KAST.

WOOD AND COAL. WOOD AND COAL.

COAL. COAL. COAL.

2,240 LBS. TO THE TON.

Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.

Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.

T. L. SMITH,
Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.

☞ A Trial Order Solicited.

REDUCTION IN COAL.

I AM NOW SELLING

Southport Coos Bay Coal at	$9 00 a ton
Southport Coal at	9 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at	10 00 a ton
Scotch Coal at	10 00 a ton
Wheat Harlley Coal at	10 50 a ton
and Wellington Coal at	11 00 a ton

Coke at the House Rates. Delivery Free.

J. FLYNN,
1113 and 1115 Mission treet.

COAL AND COAL OIL!

At Lowest Market Rates.
245 Stevenson Street,
Between Third and Fourth Sts.
HARRY JONES. Proprietor

COAL. COAL. COAL.

Lowest Rates,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.

☞ Telephone number, 1151.

COAL! COAL!

At Very Lowest Prices.

All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.

MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

DANIEL GIOVANNINI.
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in all kinds

CHARCOAL, WOOD & COAL,
916 Pacific Street, San Francisco.

Great Discovery—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

COAL. COAL. COAL.

LOW PRICES.

2,240 Lbs. to the Ton. Full Weight and Quality guaranteed. Long Ton required in cash from ship. Take at time of delivery.

C. F. WYER & CO.,
Pacific Coal & Feed Yard.
826 Mission bet. 4th and 5th.

☞ All Postal orders will receive prompt attention.

HARRY LINCOLN,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

WOOD AND COAL,
Cor. Hayes and Gough Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO

Orders Filled and Delivered promptly in all parts of the City free of Charge. ☞ At the Very Lowest Rates. ☜

P. McCLOSKEY,
405 Fourth Street,
(Near Harrison.)

WOOD & COAL,
At Bedrock Prices.
GIVE ME A TRIAL

J. M. JOHNSON,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Wood, Coal & Charcoal

YARD AT 25 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
(Formerly Tyler street.)

Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny.
SAN FRANCISCO.

Orders left at "Baldwin" stables, No. 11 Powell street, will receive prompt attention. Telephone connection.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE
610 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Dock, and a few doors above Montgomery street,

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. mr10-3m

OLIVER . GILSON & CO.,
33½ O'Farrell Street,
(Near Stockton street, San Francisco,)

HAS A NEAT AND RESPECTABLE CHINESE HELP Office, managed by white men, who speak his language and are Thoroughly experienced.

ASKY THAT AND NOT SOLD BY PEDDLERS OR ANY BODY ELSE WITHOUT PROOF OF WHAT IT IS. WAR OUT. Prepaid by mail, $1 50 U.S. or Can. Sold by all Druggists. Address, DR. J. BOSANKO, Philadelphia, Pa.

New Advertisements.

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!!

AT

A. JOSEPH'S

Cheap Cash Crockery store,

929 Market street,

Bet. 5th and 6th, SAN FRANCISCO

☞ I am selling 25 per cent. Cheaper than anyone in San Francisco. Bargains with all. Goods delivered free.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

MOORE & MURPHY,

Importers Manufacturers and Dealers in Ladies' and Gent's

BOOTS AND SHOES,

☞ Will Manufacture Best Ladies' Made Shoes to order. Fine Assortment of Ready Made Shoes always on hand.

Remember the Number

138 SIXTH STREET. 138

Bet. Mission and Howard

JONAS J. MORRISON,

LUMBER DEALER,

Corner Mission and Spear Streets, SAN FRANCISCO

ADAMS & WESTLAKE
Wire Gauze
NON-EXPLOSIVE
OIL STOVE.

BEST AND MOST DURABLE IN USE FOR HEAT, Cooking and Ironing. Sold by all Dealers. Manufactory: JNO. F. MYERS, 77 Fourth St., S.F.

PARISIAN DYING & CLEANING WORKS, TENTH STREET.
CITY OFFICES:
714 Washington street, opposite the Plaza.
213 Post street, and 33 Fourth street.

C. THOMAS & CO.

☞ Orders in mail promptly attended to. Goods to be forwarded to and fro by express and when dyed are to be returned by the same mode.

ESTABLISHED 1866.

J. COONEY,
PRACTICAL
Painter and Whitener.
SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED
NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

☞ Jobbing, in all its branches promptly attended to.

NEW DRUG STORE.
STODDART BROS.,
Practical Chemists and Druggists.
NEW YORK AND SAN FRANCISCO
CORNER OF GEARY AND POWELL STS.
UNION SQUARE PHARMACY,
400 Geary Street,
(Corner Mason Street) SAN FRANCISCO

WITH A NEW STOCK OF PURE DRUGS, FAIRY Chemicals, Perfumery, Fancy Articles, Choice Confections, and everything usually found in a first-class Drug Store.

Families will also receive a purifying Drugs and Medicines, Pure Wines and Liquors for Medicinal purposes prepared from pure material at the Drug Store, at the Wholesale Rates to Druggists. Physicians supplied with Pure Drugs. Chemicals and Medicines, Pure Wines and Liquors for Medicinal purposes. Physicians' Prescriptions carefully compounded by Experienced Druggists. Family Medicines, Pure Drugs and Chemicals.

Stoddart's Peerless Liquid

Beautifies the Complexion and leaves the skin looking soft and healthy. Kills spots, freckles, pimples and all the blotches and eruptions which disfigure the face and skin. Prepared only by the Proprietors, Stoddart Bros., San Francisco. Agents for the Liquid will receive Pure Drugs per bottle. Agents for the Liquid will receive terms and prices. The Liquid is a panacea for the cure of nervous debility, sick headache, dyspepsia, constipation and disorders of the stomach, upon body and mind. Suffering from the effects of over work and mental anxiety, should refer to the Proprietors' Price $2 per bottle or 6 bottles $10. By Express Prepaid. Remit by money order or in postage stamps. Address, Stoddart Bros., San Francisco.

☞ Physicians and Druggists will find it to their interest, with 15 years practical experience, and a first class name stock which will be sold at the top of New York prices.

STODDART BROS.

Ask for a share of public patronage at the Union Square Pharmacy,

400 Geary street, San Francisco

☞ Prescription department open all night.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Tickling in Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

"POINT COMFORT" SETTEE.

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture.
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.
Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

THE ROYAL ST. JOHN.

The Royal St. John is the only sewing machine in the world which runs either

Forward or Backward

Without stopping or changing direction of work. It removes the roughness of excellence, the most new and valuable improvements and is positively

The Simplest, Lightest Running and most Durable Sewing Machine Made.

We Know it is Wanted where

IT IS NOT KNOWN

C. SHAWL, 30 Second street, San Francisco.

R. W. THEOBALD

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS,
35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Connected with the Bush Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this media will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 2167.

WINTHROP PORTABLE RANGE!
(ALL SIZES.)

Chas. Brown & Son, Agents,
NO 18 DUPONT STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

These New Improved Ranges combine all Modern Improvements, are Beautiful in Design and Have 100 PER CENT. extra heavy Fire Plates, Ventilated Ovens, Reservoirs, Etc. For Economy, Durability, Cleanliness and Convenience, the New Improved WINTHROP RANGES excel all others, are the Cheapest in the Market, and pay for themselves in a few weeks by the saving of Fuel usually wasted in other Cooking Stoves and Ranges.

We Now Display in Parlor and Office Stoves at the lowest prices.

False Grates for the Saving of Other Fuel, fitted to any Range or Heater Grate. Sole Agents for Hot and Cold Water Connections made by Experienced Workmen, and work warranted to give Entire Satisfaction. A large stock of Tinware, Woodenware, and Kitchen Utensils always kept on hand, made to order if desired, and sold at very low prices.

Orders filled from all parts of the country.

CHAS. BROWN & SON, SAN FRANCISCO CAL.

Will Remove January 1st to No. 38 Geary street.

Twenty Numbers in All. Every Number Different.

Readings: Recitations: 100 CHOICE SELECTIONS.

No 42 is just ready. This number is entitled "Sunshine and Shadow," and contains Dialogues, Recitations, and Readings, suitable for Exhibitions, Schools, Social Gatherings, Parlor Entertainments, etc. Price 20 cts. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address, THE DRAMA, Chicago, Ill. Make Out Your Order Now. Ask your Newsdealer for it. Full List of Contents Free. T. S. DENISON & CO., 163 Lake Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
Devoted to the Promulgation and Defense of Catholic Principles.
Published by Tom Maguire, Jr., at Monitor Building, 127 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Per Year (in Advance)	$3 00
Per Year (if Not Paid in Advance)	4 00
Six Months (in Advance)	2 00
Six Months (if Not Paid in Advance)	2 50
Three Months (in Advance)	1 00
Three Months (if Not Paid in Advance)	1 50
To Subscribers out of the Delivery, per Year	3 00
Single Copies, and in advance	5 cts

☞ Address all communications and business and postal orders to

T. MAGUIRE,
Monitor Office, Box 2231 P. O., San Francisco, Cal.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as the "Class Matter."

MISCELLANEOUS.

POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made by
H. B. SLAVEN.
The Baldwin Building.

FURLONG & MANSEAU.
SAN FRANCISCO.

Silver Walnut Show-Cases
619 Market Street bet. 4th & 5th, up stairs

J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,
☞ Entrance, 77 Post St. ☜

E. S. BONELLI,
821 Market street.
NEW PIANOS
From $200 Upward.
☞ I HAVE SOLD SEVENTY-FIVE PIANOS IN SAN FRANCISCO IN THREE MONTHS. ☜

KNABE
PIANOFORTES.
WAREROOMS, 112 UNION SQUARE.
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

KANE & HEANEY,
Choice Butter, Cheese,
EGGS, ETC.,
11 and 40 Centre Market,
Between Hayes and Fulton Streets, Opposite Market, Jail, and adjoining Market.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,
And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast
of the
Veuve Xavier Jouin Kid Gloves
Bush and Sansome Sts., San Francisco, and 12

COAL. COAL. COAL.

LOW PRICES.

2,240 Lbs. to the Ton. Full Weight and Quality guaranteed. Long Ton required in cash from ship. Take at time of delivery.

C. F. WYER & CO.,
Pacific Coal & Feed Yard.
826 Mission bet. 4th and 5th.

☞ All Postal orders will receive prompt attention.

DIPHTHERIA.

REMEMBER THIS NO SCARLET FEVER OR DIPHTHERIA (Croup) WHERE HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA HAS BEEN GIVEN FREELY. It is a positive preventative and cure. Sore throat, Quinsy, Swelling of the Glands, and all kindred complaints disappear after a few doses. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the great blood purifier, and is the best medicine we can recommend to our patrons. Sold by druggists, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

The Monitor.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth ..... Strive for Justice for thy Soul, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiasticus iv. 64.)

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1882. NO. 16.

THE WEEK'S NEWS FROM IRELAND

Hopes of Parnell's Release.

LONDON, Jan. 20. A Dublin correspondent telegraphs that the question of liberating Mr. Parnell and the other members of Parliament will be debated at the forthcoming Cabinet Council of Privy Council. There is some confusion as to the subject upon proposed to be submitted to the Cabinet. Some say Mr. Dalton's release may be considered, while others say the release of Mr. Parnell, and the other imprisoned members of Parliament, will be considered, and that, in order to nullify the Land League agitation, for a certain time, it is probable that the prisoners will be released by national Parliament.

Parnell and O'Kelly Remanded.

DUBLIN, Jan. 20. Parnell and O'Kelly, members of Parliament, and O'Brien, late editor of United Ireland, were brought up from the prison of Kilmainham and that they have been remanded for another period of two months.

Speaking of the Labor Law Amendment Act, Mr. Gladstone has been and to present a bill to Parliament providing for her real relief. Judges have issued an injunction against Irish Land League, and have issued a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of the Land League prisoners, and also in the Land Court, to obtain a rehearing.

Coercion to be Continued.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—Chaplin, the Secretary of State for Ireland, in a speech at Sheffield, yesterday, said, coercion in Ireland would be continued, and that the Irish people must be taught a lesson.

Dillon Remanded.

It is stated that Dillon has received a month's imprisonment for his speech at Carlow, and has been remanded for a further period of three months.

Tenant Farmers Convention.

DUBLIN, Jan. 21.—The Tenant Farmers' Convention, the conference of the Tenant Farmers' Association, which is composed of delegates from 1,000 Land Leagues, assembled this morning. It was resolved to continue the agitation against landlords, asserting their claims to a reduction of rents, and declared that rents should be fixed at the reduction of rent made by the Commissioners, or be reduced, and repudiation of any concession to landlords. Thomas Sexton, Thomas A. Gilsey and Charles Dennehy, Members of Parliament, supported the resolutions.

About Liberating the Suspects.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—A dispatch from the London of January 20th says: Your Dublin correspondent telegraphs that the question of liberating Mr. Parnell and the other members of Parliament will be debated at the forthcoming Cabinet Council in Dublin Castle. There is some difference of opinion on the subject, some persons argue for a general release, others for release. Again, Assistant Secretary Burke, who is hated by the Land Leaguers, is out of the League, and two or three clerks of the Dublin Castle have resigned, and it is said Mr. Dalton's release may be looked for at any moment.

General Notes.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—Gladstone in a letter admits his opponents to attend the opening of Parliament on the 24th instant, and the question of opening street will be considered at a subsequent date.

Result of an Outlawed Confession Dynamite.

DUBLIN, January 23. Arthur Andrew Mulleny, who was convicted of the murder of Thomas Clinton, and sentenced to death, was arraigned on a charge of having attempted to murder the Lieutenant and accuser of a band of men who had murdered Thomas Clinton. The Captain was shot in Brooklyn, a Lieutenant was shot in the leg, and a Sergeant received a ball in his thigh, causing the following only of the 3 men who fired the shots, and of the 3 who aided in the murder, and the incendiary who fired the house in which the victim was living at the time of the murder, and the incendiary who fired the house in which the victim was living at the time of the murder.

Mulleny said, in his defense, that he did not know, and had never heard of, the murder of Clinton, and that he had never seen the man whom he was accused of having attempted to murder. He said he was forced to join the band of men, and was forced to take the oath of secrecy, and was forced to join in the murder of Clinton, which was done by the other members of the band. He said he was forced to join in the attempt to murder the Lieutenant, and was forced to join in the attempt to murder the Sergeant. He said he was forced to join in the attempt to murder the Sergeant. He said he was forced to join in the attempt to murder the Sergeant. He said he

Poetry.

IDLE WORDS.

"My God!" the beauty oft exclaimed
With deep impressioned tone;
But not in humble prayer she named
The High and Holy One.

Was not upon the bended knee,
With contrite heart and brow,
Pleading with heartfelt agony,
That she spoke the fervent vow.

Was not in heavenly strains to raise
To the great source of good
Her daily offering of praise,
Her sense of gratitude.

But in the gay and thoughtless crowd,
And in festive hall,
Mid scenes of mirth and mockery loud
She named the Lord of All.

She called upon that awful name,
When lamplight loudest rang!
Oh when the flesh of trembling frame,
By disappointment's pang

The fillest thing that flattery knew
The most unmeaning jest,
Even those sweet lips profanely drew
Names of the Holiest.

I thought—how sweet that voice should be Breathing this prayer to heaven
"My God, I worship only thee;
Oh, may sins forgiven!"

Literary Miscellany.

BIDDY BRIAN:

OR

How the Bailiffs were Ousted.

BY JUSTIN F. BYRNEDA.

Biddy Brian for years was the ruling power in the pleasant and prettily situated village of Ballystrabroot, and to respect of village force and general news body, evoked the purpose of that highly-authentic and long-memoried personage—"the oldest inhabitant." Not that Biddy was merging in any way into the sere and yellow leaf; oh, no, but she made it at all times her business and special privilege to be thoroughly conversant with everybody's affairs for miles round, from the raising of a cow to the establishing of a local branch of the Land League.

No farmer's daughter ever sported a new bonnet at the village chapel on Sunday but Biddy knew to a fraction its cost at the last cheap sale; no match was ever in the townland but was first submitted to Biddy's opinion, until Biddy Brian's grocery and spirit store became the chief establishment in the village, and herself the most important personage therein.

Her husband Paddy held altogether a secondary position in popular estimation, but Biddy's increasing powers amongst her neighbors and her gossiping propensities making such a large encroachment on her time, she was unable to attend in a very marked degree to her little business, but let the entire onus of the establishment rest on the broad shoulders of her husband. Paddy being a quiet, easy-going individual, liked nothing better than being seated on a little barrel of sugar, spinning out the stale news of any paper which came into his possession, and occasionally dispensing a "quarter cuttin' of tay," or "a noggin of spirits," which some sporting visitor to the village told Paddy to guarantee to kill at a hundred yards.

Ballystrabroot was a neat little seaside hamlet in the south-west coast of Ireland, and still holds its own as a watering-place and summer resort for the well-to-do folk in the neighboring city, whose income would not enable them to face the labors of Cork.

It was the glorious golden autumn, proud stacks of ripe corn reared their heads high in the fields, the hedges were adhine with bright wild flowers, and the balmy air laden with sweet perfume. Ripe, rosy-cheeked apples hung temptingly over the garden wall, and busy bees hummed their airy flight joyfully in the warm glow of scarcely-departed summer. It was a lovely evening in a lovelier autumn; the sun setting behind the trees and casting tall shadows over the land; the sea simmering in its golden light; the glamour of a heavenly peace hung over all as Biddy Brian was sealing fish within the shadow of her own door.

"Biddy, agra-gal, come hither to me," said Paddy in a weak voice from inside, "oh! dear, oh my, oh-o-o."

"An what's the matter wid ye, avick?" asked Biddy, giving an extra scrape to the fish.

"Oh, come in here, Biddy asthore, the heart is across in me."

"Oughry, tis a queare man ye are entirely," said Biddy, laying down her knife and wiping her hands in the corner of her apron as she stood up. After gathering up the fish she entered a small room at the back to find Paddy seated on a low rush bottomed chair, looking very pale and ill.

"Arrah, what ails ye, avickyo, you're not ookin' yereself at all at all," she ejaculated.

"I get a queare turn here," said Paddy, laying his hand on his waistcoat, "just after eating my dinner."

"An what did ye ate that same agen ye like that?"

"Masha nothin' at all but the last taste of the tail of a mackerel an' a handful o' sprats," Paddy answered with another groan.

"An' they weren't salt ayther."

"Not the last taste in life, Biddy. I don't know what in the world is the matter with me."

"Arrah now drop off yer naushaulin' an' say with ye, sure ye are nothin' to go agen ye, 'tis the drop o' best spirits ye want to cense at, I'm thinkin'."

"Oh! too, Biddy agra, said Paddy, in a tone of reproach, "I'm dead bate entirely this minnit, with the pain that's across in me."

"Take a draw of the pipe, acushla, perhaps 'twould soother ye," said Biddy in a tender tone, going to the side of the bed where Paddy a pipe lay.

"Masha not a bit of it," groaned poor Paddy, "I'm thinkin' I'll go an' have a stretch on the bed."

"Do, agra," assented Biddy, "an I'll go an' see Mrs. Duggan an' she may be able to say what's the matter with ye."

"Do, Biddy, tell her I'm bad entirely; oh! oh, foh, there isn't a graveyard in the country would refuse my corpse, ochone, ochone!"

The Franciscan Friars were holding a mission in the village, and the gain among worse every day, Biddy determined one fine morning to go and ask one of the Fathers to pay him a visit. Attired in her best, and with a dozen of eggs tied up in a handkerchief under her cloak as a present for the priest, Biddy started for the chapel which was at the end of the village. Now Biddy was sore's perplexed. Attending one evening at the lectures one of the missionaries preached, which made a very deep impression on her that she determined it was he who should visit her husband. During the lecture the missionary was of course attired in his habit and skull cap, and the appearance of the latter pleased her not a little, as she had never seen a friar before. She did not know his name, but was sure that on descending him to the chapel clerk he would readily know whom she wanted.

"Well, ma'am!" said the brother who had come with the missionaries, as he opened the door in response to her knock.

"Is Mr Fogerty inside, for reverence," asked Biddy with a curtsey, mistaking him for a priest.

"No, ma'am, the clerk will not be here to-day."

"I want to see one of the priests, thin, sir, your reverence."

"Which of them. Is it the parish priest? Is it Father Mah-on you want?"

"Arrah, no, yer reverency, sure I know him."

"Perhaps its the curate you require."

"Oh, not at all," answered Biddy, "'tis one of thim—thim—"

"Well?"

"Arrah, one of the travelling missionaries that's here."

"Oh! I see, one of the missionaries," said the sacristan smiling, "but which of the missionaries do you want?"

"Arrah, how do I know, your reverence, its the man with the brown bag on him an' the rope."

"That's his habit."

"A mighty queare habit thin, said Biddy shaking her head.

"But they are all dressed that way," he explained.

"Faix, then, I don't know which of 'em," answered Biddy, at a great loss to find the missionary she heard preaching.

"Do you know the priest's name?" asked he, trying to help her out of the difficulty.

A bright idea struck Biddy, she remembered the skull cap. "Arrah, how could I know his name, but I'll tell you who he is, he's the priest with the sore heel."

The brother fairly roared with laughter at Biddy's ludicrous mistake, and the missionary whom she wanted, coming on the scene just at the moment, put an end to her dilemma.

Two weeks passed and poor Brian was given over by the doctor, and he was dying. All the neighbors gathered in to be with Paddy and to help him on his sad journey to another world. He had arranged all his spiritual affairs with the good missionary with the "queare habit," and he now turned his attention to put mundane things to right before he died.

"He was always a decent honest man," muttered Mrs. Duly, the next door neighbor, just above her breath.

"You must say that, ma'am, he mixir wronged woman or child," responded an uncle.

There was silence for a few moments and the sick man nodded to his wife, and asaying by the bed he feebly muttered—

"Biddy, agra, shin I an gone—

"Oh! ochone, ochone" echoed through the room from several voices.

"When I am gone, acushla, you'll carry on the little shop."

"Oh, that I will thin," cried Biddy, rocking herself to and fro and wiping away a tear with the corner of her apron, "that I will indeed."

"An', Biddy, said the poor old man, "I'm goin' away from ye now an' the little children—"

"Oh, daddy, daddy," cried little Patsey the eldest, "won't ye take me wid ye?"

"Hush, Patsey, agra, said one of the neighbors taking the little child on his knee, "daddy will take ye neat time."

"Biddy," continued the sick man, "thou numerer, I always tried to put a little saving by in the stocking not to lave ye destitute."

"Oh, ochone, ochone!"

"An', Biddy, I've something saved for ye, and he raised his voice in order that all might hear him.

"Ye were always a good husband to me, darlin'," sobbed Biddy.

And he continued: "Ye won't be depend'in on any one for the bit or the sup—

"Oh! she's welcome to it, she's welcome to it," broke in a chorus of voices.

"The stockin' is under my head here

"Oh, ye were always amaidle, Paddy," cried Biddy.

"You'll find thirty pounds odd in it, and twill help ye, Biddy, to rear the little children—

"Oh, amaidle, simple to the last, Paddy. Look at that for you, Mrs. Daly," cried Biddy; "Oh, weirsathru, weirsathru! God help the lonely widdy and the orphans."

The evening light was waning, the dull gloom of twilight stole into the room, and all was silent, save the dull tick, tick, tick of the clock and the short quick breathing of the dying man. After a short time he spoke again "Biddy," he said, "when I'm gone there's a few pounds I owe, and I want you to pay 'em, and not lave em' on my poor soul."

Biddy made no reply, and he continued, his voice growing gradually weaker—"There's fourteen pound ten due to Patsey Murphy for bread, and nineteen shillin's borrowed from his wife when Maggie there had the measles.

Biddy didn't speak.

"And there's £14 1 owe the Chir'a'an pay for a chest of tea, and there's £11 due to the distillery for whisky."

Still Biddy was silent.

"You'll pay 'em all, Biddy darlin'?"

Biddy turned round and faced the neighbors, and as she lifted her hands she cried with a sorrowful voice: "Oh, glory be to God, listen how he raves"

All that was mortal of poor Paddy Brian was laid in the neighboring churchyard, and the humble wooden cross is still to be seen there, though the few letters rudely traced by the village painter have long since been effaced, and Biddy and the "children" are far away from that lonely spot and Ballystrabroot.

Biddy Brian carried on the little business for some time, but being a woman who was suffering from a chronic indisposition to pay her debts, her little bills became heavy ones, and the bailiffs were soon in possession of her little premises. Biddy was as firm discomfiture, and it took her utmost to calm the fears of little Patsey for the suspicious-looking intruders. But she was always quick witted, and before nightfall she could chat pleasantly with the bailiffs, and even offered them a "threa-sum" of "spirits" as the night was cold and wet. It was just dusk and the rain coming down in torrents when Biddy, closely wrapped up, emerged from her house and proceeded up the village and a long way along a quiet country road; and it was some hours before she returned, accompanied by two men, who, however left her before she reached home.

At eleven o'clock she closed the door and invited the two bailiffs to draw near the fire which she had made down, and helped them plentifully to whisky punch. After a short time—by of the men himself fell with stertorian voice into a song, and had just proceeded far when a loud rap came to the door.

"Oh, the Lord be good to us, what's that—cross Biddy in well feigned terror at such another rap and opened the door

Two men in policemen's uniform entered

"Now so sudint, Miss Brian," said one, in a civil voice, "sthang drink after hours we must prosecute you for breaking the law

We are here on business, constable," explained one of the bailiffs—"me and my mate here are two men in possession."

"Come, now, that isn't of game wan of us, my man, we must put you out

"I'll have the law on ye," cried the bailiff, drawing a paper from his pocket, "I'ye put us out of this house to night."

But before they could remonstrate further the two brawny policemen thrust the bailiff's men outside the door in the blinding rain, and soon were seated comfortably in the place they had just vacated, enjoying a quiet smoke.

"My blessin' on ye, Jerry," cried Biddy, "an tis you exportunated thim two spalpeens. Drink up, for 'tis a long road we have to thravel before mornin."

Next day Biddy Brian's door remained closed, and her shutters up, and it was some days before the bailiffs regained possession to find every room empty and the birds flown. Biddy and the "children" were in that time sailing out from Cork Harbor on board one of the Transatlantic steamers, and Biddy's two friends, who played "policeman" for a night, had many a quiz laugh over the way in which they outwitted the bailiffs.

Captain Jack's Story.

We clip the following story from the Leeds Mercury as told by a sea captain, the son of an Irish landlord. Though the whole story is evidently a concert gotten up by some sensational Bohemian, still it has its moral as showing how retribution has come upon the Irish landlords who in the past had no mercy for the old or young, the infirm and the starving, but flung them out on the roadside to perish of cold and hunger. Captain Jack writes

"When I got home last August I found things in a fearful state. My father, more than eighty and bedridden, was crying all day long, saying that he was ruined and that his children would be killed; and my sister, who was nursing him, was broken down with grief. They could not pay the doctor's bills, they had hardly money enough to find food or medicine for the poor old man; and this where there had always been nearly two thousand a year coming in. Not a penny of rent had they touched for eighteen months. Now I knew that the chief tenant could pay without difficulty, so I cupped a revolver into my pocket and walked down to the public house. I found my man there. I ordered my glass and sat down, none of them knowing me. After a while I said—'Its any of you boys know what's the state of things up at the house?' They stared, but said nothing, so then I up and told them the truth. 'Faith, it's Captain Jack,' said one, who I recognized me then—the very man that I was after. 'Yes, Tim, my boy, it's Captain Jack, and he's come for the rent I gave his father.' They looked as though they thought I was clean mad, and some of them laughed. I wheeled round upon him and said 'And it's because your master is a coward and a villain that I've come for the rent. Where money I should like to know does your master live? Tell him I want the rent, and I will wait for it.' Then one of them spoke up and said 'And it's because your master is a coward and a villain that we have kept the money from him. Tim is the man to take it.' Tim looked as though he would like to knock them down, but he turned to me and said 'Come along, sir, and I'll give you the money.' We walked down the street, and I noticed that the public house was empty. Then we went into a house and Tim gave me a bag of gold. I said 'Is there any other arrears?' Tim said 'Not a penny, sir.' I said 'Then I'll take your receipt.' Tim said 'I can't write, sir.' I said 'Then I'll write it, and you can put your mark to it.' I wrote the receipt, and Tim put his mark to it, and I said 'Now, Tim, I'm going to my father's house, and I want you to come with me.' We went together, and I said to the old man, 'Father, I've brought you the rent.' The old man sat up in his bed and looked at us as though he thought we were robbers, and he said 'Jack, I'm ruined.' I said 'Father, I've brought you the rent.' He said 'Jack, I'm ruined.' I said 'Father, I've brought you the rent.' He fell back on his pillow and groaned, 'Jack, I'm ruined.' I said 'Father, I've brought you the rent.' He said

THE MONITOR.

PAPER DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF THE CATHOLIC RELIGION.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1882.

Cowardly Catholics who Give up their Religion.

There is scarcely a reader of the MONITOR who has not within the circle of his acquaintance some unfortunate Catholic who has fallen away from his religious duties. This class of Catholics are not apostates they are merely indulging in the sloth of soul which places them on the very verge of perdition. God's mercy may save them, but their danger is appreciable, and a word of friendly warning should be whispered into their ears so that the spark of faith in their hearts may be rekindled into the reviving flames which burned there in bygone days.

Do Catholic deserters ever stop to consider what it is they do when they give up their religion? That religion which the Omnipotent God Himself implanted in their hearts. That religion for which the parents of the very ingrate who gives it up, suffered continually and privation. That religion which a dead mother left as the last legacy to her orphan child. That religion which is the golden link that binds together the souls of the dead parents and their living children. That religion which is the only talisman that can unlock the portals of heaven for the soul of the sinner. And yet, what there are Catholics who wantonly give up God, forget father and mother, absolve themselves from the admonition of parents, and drift into the devil's whirlpool of indifference! A man who forgets to honor the memory of his mother is looked upon as an unnatural son and an ungrateful wretch of the deepest dye. How much more depraved is not that Catholic who dishonors the deposit of faith which God has given him as the key of heaven!

And why do Catholics give up the practice of their religion? Does the loss of faith make them happier in mind, more moral in life, or better citizens? Alas! No! The Catholic who loses Mass, spurns the Sacraments, and forgets God from morning to night, is the most miserable miscreant in existence. There is a skeleton in his closet at home, a phantom which follows him wherever he goes, a silent monitor which whispers in his ear the awful words, "What shall it profit a man to gain the world if he lose his own soul." Even in the midst of his moments of pleasure, when the world wonders at his vivacity, there is a voice within which tortures him with agony as he ponders on the price he has paid for his typical apostacy.

To such Catholics as these, the Church says: Return ere it is too late, and—like the prodigal of old—you will be received with open arms. Almighty God blesses the humility of heart which marks the contrite Catholic, as He has told us that "there is more joy in heaven over one repentant sinner than over the ninety-nine just," and thus will he restored to purity and peace the serried soul of one for whom a father's or a mother's prayers have been offered not in vain.

No Catholic should be ashamed of his grand religion. What! You a Christian and ashamed of the Church founded by Christ! You, aspiring for heaven, and yet denying God before men! Go, coward, and hide yourself from the gaze of mortals, you have sold not only your birthright but your dearly-bought heavenly inheritance for a paltry mess of pottage, and you are an unworthy child of that dead father and mother who loved you, those dead relatives who admired you; but, alas! all, you have made yourself an ingrate to God, who has said—"He that is not with Me is against Me."

England Appealing to Rome.

It is now evident that the English Prime Minister has come to the conclusion that the only means left him whereby he can cool off upon the troubled waters of the political state of Ireland is by appealing to the Pope to use the power of the Church to crush the Land League out of existence. The Sovereign Pontiff, however, is not inclined to be cajoled by Gladstone's desire for more intimate union between the Vatican and the English throne. No doubt Pope Leo is thoroughly conversant with the expressions of disrespect used by Mr. Gladstone, in his Vatican Decrees, towards his predecessors, and although Mr. Gladstone should discern grave reasons why England and Rome should be more closely allied, yet the same reasons have no potency with the Sovereign Pontiff.

The fact that England has been seeking secretly for an alliance with Rome for several months, has already been both affirmed and denied by the English press, but the truth of the matter can no longer be questioned, inasmuch as the Pope himself declared last month—during an interview with four Archbishops who went to thank his Holiness for having appointed Cardinal Howard to be Archpriest of the Vatican Basilica—that "notwithstanding what the Liberal press says to the contrary, England desires to have intimate relations with the Holy See." This authoritative declaration, coming from such a source, proves that England is in a predicament with regard to Ireland, from which it sees no escape except through the influence which the Sovereign Pontiff can wield over the Irish Hierarchy. But the Pope, by the above declaration, has turned the cold shoulder to Gladstone's persistent importunity, and thus England will have to face the Irish difficulty without any hope of counsel or influence from Rome.

Are Catholic Fairs Demoralizing?

We are led to ask this question in consequence of the numerous complaints which we notice coming from priests and laymen in the columns of our Eastern contemporaries. That fairs are a most convenient means for raising money is admitted by everyone, but it is claimed that great damage is done to morals in consequence of the contaminating influences which virtuous Catholics are brought in contact with. If such is the case the signal alarm should be sounded so that some other means may be tried through which to raise money for charity, as a single soul is more precious in the sight of God than all the gold, if it were ever contributed through such a source of revenue.

Among the many writers on this very important matter relating to morals we find the following from the pen of a priest who sends a communication to the Cincinnati Telegraph, and if there is even an atom of truth in what this clergyman says, it should have deep and earnest consideration at the hands of those upon whose shoulders has fallen the responsibility of the souls of the flock of Christ. We hope, too, for the sake of Catholic morality, that the words of warning uttered by this priest are at least exaggerated, yet not knowing the facts it is difficult to contradict them and still more difficult to realize the horrid result he predicts if Fairs are continued. The reverend gentleman says:

"Church bells and fairs not only kill true charity inch by inch, they also kill true modesty and virtue. It may be said that the loss of modesty, God bless the Catholic maiden that refuses absolutely, to have anything to do with them.

Ask the Catholic mother whose daughter owing to acquaintances formed by occasional church festivals, and also fairs that years after she had kept up, has come to shame and sorrow, what she thinks of such amusements, and she will tell you with tears in her eyes "The entertainment or whatever it was, was for the church and my daughter said, sure, mother the priest will be there, then it is all right, your child, she did not think that the devil also would be there in human shape, and all the more surely for the priest being there—as I could not keep her at home, and the result my broken heart knows. Now or never the shepherds of the watch towers of the church should cry out "Watchman, what of the night, watchman, what of the night?" And the voice of the watchman if not asleep, will ring out clear and distinct, on the brink night air, now as of old "Safety and innocence flee with the light; temptation and danger stalk forth with the night."

But it may be asked, how are we to support the orphans without fairs? It is not my place to answer this question, but if it were, I would say let there be a collection every Christmas throughout the Diocese for these orphans, as that occasion let each priest be a veritable Cicero not for abuse for the house of the orphans, and the result will not be doubtful. And surely our reverence or eloquence will not fail even the children in a cause, which should more resemble that the lips of the golden tongued Chrysostom. This is the way of supporting the orphans in many dioceses, together with orphan asylums, contributions. If necessary I would request the collection on Easter Sunday, and thus would I support God's own little ones in God's own way. It might be a failure the first time, and if so, I would proclaim in thunder tones "I will sell what belongs to the church for the support of the orphans, as canon law says I may, if necessary I will sell even the sacred vessels, and then have recourse to means that are in them selves, to say the least, doubtful, if not sinful, by resource to many souls. And this, as it were by an electric shock, will unite them, as, recalled to a sense of their duty, and new blood and life infused into the veins of Christian charity now sick—well nigh unto death."

Pleading for Parnell.

As time advances, and as the land question in Ireland increases in popular agitation, the English masses are rapidly becoming convinced that Gladstone made a grand mistake in imprisoning Parnell and the other leaders of constitutional agitation in Ireland. The English press is now beginning to admit as much, and the following extract from, from a letter written by an influential English Protestant minister—Rev. J. Page Hoppa—shows how far even that element has adopted the theory that fair play for Ireland in England's best policy. In his letter Rev. Hoppa says

"We do not wish to see the Government harassed in dealing with violence and crime. It is to a large extent thought, I think that the present policy of the Government is in some degree culpable of violence and crime that we deprecate it. We have arrested and imprisoned the leaders it may be the misguided—but still the trusted leaders of, in fact, the very persons whose wrongs we admitted, but whose proclaims we admitted and proposed to redress, did we know. The answer no one seems able to give, unless it is an answer to say that because some men have been criminal, therefore there must be vindictive sacrifices, or that it is to be endured that men should hold absurd opinions about the value of land. The "no rent" cry was only raised by those leaders from their cells. In plain English, we have simply kicked powerful opponents out of the path. We opened the doors of the Land Court for tenants with one hand—the doors of a jail for their leaders with the other. The very worst thing we could do we did—we struck them down, and by so doing half killed the Land Act, and pushed agitation into secret and criminal courses. We have gone too far, or not far enough, with the weapons of the mere conqueror. It is too late to take to the path we were treading not many months ago, and to trust to the weapons of justice and right reason, to disarm disaffection and conquer folly." This we can do, while at the same time we increase tenfold on the determination to put down violence and punish crime.

Types at Irish Life.

An Englishman, visiting Ireland for the first time, has communicated his impressions to the Liverpool Catholic Times, after seeing Dublin. He was greatly surprised, he says, at finding the people there very different from what they are represented in English newspapers. He was greatly struck with the marked contrast between the deportment of the servant girls and waiting maids in the Dublin hotels and those of England. "Of course I expected," he says, "to find the same sort of deference and servantliness as in English hotels amongst the females. There was nothing of the sort; the contrast was great. I found them manageable, paying me every attention yet without forcing themselves upon me and starving my face. Another thing that forcibly impressed him was that respectful demeanor of people of all classes towards the Catholic clergy. His brother, a priest, accompanied him in a walk through the streets of Dublin, and "every step he took," he says, "filled him with shame for his (English) nationality."

Here is a part of his account:

"A group of little children were playing at a shop door, directly they saw the priest, their joy was forgotten, their little caps taken off and running after and placing themselves directly in front of the opposite group, with a graceful bow from the hips and a pretty curtsey from the girls, they paid his reverence a homage which, due to a true minister of God. The men followed in was a less working manner, but with as much dignity from his smooth, and, doubtless, exaggerated reverence. Here we meet a lady, her ever-kind deep, and the recognition is beautifully made, and, as we make progress along, the manifested respect paid to the clergy is exhibited throughout the walk.

Another thing that impressed him deeply was the absence of swearing, ribaldry, quarreling and drunkenness in Dublin, in comparison with England.

"I could hear no bad talking, no shouting, no swearing, or quarreling, no [illegible] about at one another. Where was drunkenness? The night I was in Dublin, I did not meet a man in the streets of Dublin. I do not mean to infer that there is not an Irishman here who is not fine drunk, but I did not see him as I have seen drunken Englishmen in every street of English cities."

DEATH OF A CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

On Sunday last was buried in Lone Mountain Cemetery the remains of Brother Ferdinand, a native of Prince Edward's Island, a school master of the most affectionate and intellectual families. Being called to the Religious state he left home and family, with the brilliant prospects, and came to California to devote his life, talent and energies to impart to our youth, as far even, his life, to educate Christian education. For the purpose, he entered the novitiate of the Christian Brothers at Martinez, and, having fulfilled the severe duties of a novice in an edifying manner, received the habit and was sent to learn the art of teaching at the Sacred Heart College, corner of Eddy and Larkin streets, in this city. His talent, and gentle bearing won for him the love and esteem of both brothers and pupils. The beautiful manners which robbed the community of this most promising subject was manifested, and then consumption which in a few short weeks cut him off in the flower of his life. Every effort of the best medical skill, the tender and continuous care of his companions were, alas, unavailing, death claimed its victim. Young as he was, his good conduct, earnestness and intelligence, led to an eternal crown. He ended up his prize sent to God on Saturday morning. The body lay in the chapel of the Community, where Requiem Masses were celebrated by Father Brady, Director, and Office of the Dead was chanted. On Sunday quite a large number of the seven hundred pupils of the College of the Sacred Heart College, gave a last look at the young Religious. Large deputations from St. Mary's College, and Christian Academy, Oakland, swelled the funeral cortege which took him from the Sacred Heart College to Lone Mountain Cemetery. He was laid to rest with his brethren, there to sleep in peace after their toils for the education of youth.

Thank God such generous souls are waiting in this money loving and money worshiping age to do the work of God. Let the Catholic people of this city, the descendants of the Vernadoes de la Salle, Christian hopes and beliefs, and become fathers and heroes, with only food and raiment, to feed children in truth and love, to become Catholic citizens, and Catholic and intelligent citizens. The order was indeed impressive at Lone Mountain. The boys and men were marshaled by the Priests and Brothers as as the coffin was lowered into the narrow house, and the deep sorrow regretted the many sympathizing and admiring friends of these Knights and Knightly Brothers, both the Christian Brothers, May young Brother Luke have many followers in his brief but noble career. May vocations increase, according to our great needs, the number of those who used and will such money for the sake of the Cross, and God's Christ's glory.

FRIGHTFUL OUTRAGE ON A CRUCIFIX.

The Bishop of Grenoble has written a letter to the Catholic papers in his diocese, in which he criticises on a recent pastoral recommending Catholic schools. He states that the Mayor of Lavera, a neighboring village, issued an order by so-ring, with some friends from a winshop, went to the school, took down a crucifix from the wall, and threw it into a cesspool. Where still remains, lady visitors, obtained permission to have the cesspool emptied at her own expense and the crucifix being found the Mayor was afterwards suspended for the month by the Prefect. The Bishop concludes by asking ministers to condemn this disgraceful act, and in particular this criminal.

We feel that such an outrage demands more than words of condemnation. Blood, that blood demands and will have. May it be rather only, blood, blood, blood, and not tears, and prayers, but the crimes of treason against God create for the nation committing them a debt payable only with blood. Without the shedding of blood there is no remission.

The Bishop complains that the Republican papers have detoxicated this outrage slight on to suppressing the Jesuit orders which he called it forth, and he insists that he did not thereby invoke an invasion, but simply to show the reputation of Jerusalem for its profanation of the cross, and the fact that Christ was crucified afresh in Jerusalem, and that the Jews were crucified afresh in Lavera, and that the blood of Christ was shed afresh in Lavera, and that the blood of Christ was shed afresh in Jerusalem. He does not invoke war, but as a man who has more than once organized his life for France, he dreads that his ancient desire is to see France happy and in possession of her old traditional glory.

ENGLISH OPINION OF T. P. O'CONNOR.

The Manchester Guardian says. "The announcement that Mr. T. P. O'Connor is coming from America to take the lead of the remnant of the Land League is one which, if it be not a mere rumor, it is observed, no one so much as Mr. Justin McCarthy, should be glad of. His position as second in command under Mr. Parnell is unquestionably one of a kind that we deprecate. We have arrested and imprisoned the leaders it may be the misguided—but still the trusted leaders of, in fact, the very persons whose wrongs we admitted, but whose proclaims we admitted and proposed to redress, did we know. The answer no one seems able to give, unless it is an answer to say that because some men have been criminal, therefore there must be vindictive sacrifices, or that it is to be endured that men should hold absurd opinions about the value of land. The "no rent" cry was only raised by those leaders from their cells. In plain English, we have simply kicked powerful opponents out of the path. We opened the doors of the Land Court for tenants with one hand—the doors of a jail for their leaders with the other. The very worst thing we could do we did—we struck them down, and by so doing half killed the Land Act, and pushed agitation into secret and criminal courses. We have gone too far, or not far enough, with the weapons of the mere conqueror. It is too late to take to the path we were treading not many months ago, and to trust to the weapons of justice and right reason, to disarm disaffection and conquer folly." This we can do, while at the same time we increase tenfold on the determination to put down violence and punish crime.

NEW CHURCH IN WALLA WALLA.

We are always grateful to friends of the MONITOR in any portion of the Union, who send us accounts of the progress of the Church in their respective territories. This week we have to thank a correspondent in Walla Walla, Washington Territory, that a new brick church has just been completed in Walla Walla, which was used for the first time at Christmas. The new edifice has long been contemplated by Father Thomas Hully, the energetic pastor, and we heartily congratulate him upon the consummation of his long-cherished desires. The number of the church is 120 feet, the height of the ceiling being 28 feet. Twenty feet of the length of the room is occupied by the altar and the sanctuary, and the windows are ornamented with twenty-four panes of ground glass, each of the panes being 12x15 feet in size. On each side of the building there are six stained glass windows, each six feet high. Over the altar there will be a stained glass window, 8 feet wide and 10 feet high. In the front of the church there are two stained glass windows, each 20 feet high, and there is to be one 8 feet wide and 10 feet high filled with stained glass. There are six doors, each opening outward. The building is warmed by a hot air furnace in the cellar, and will comfortably seat 400 persons. The Irish residents of the town and vicinity have contributed liberally towards the erection of the edifice, and the Protestant citizens have manifested the liberality of their minds by contributing to the church, which, proud by brick buttresses. The exterior of the building is well finished, and without unharmonious in its proportions that it does not appear as large as it really is.

The Pope and the Italian Governments.

The Standard's Vienna correspondent reports a conversation with the Papal Nuncio, in that capital, in which the latter stated that the Papacy might be removed by contrariety to the Papal Guarantees, with a strip of territory as far as Civita Vecchia, the territory however to remain still under the administration of the Italian Government.

THE CHURCH IN THE NORTHWEST.

Interesting Letter from Olympia How the Church Progresses in the region of Puget Sound.

Olympia, W. T., January 18, 1882.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

DEAR SIR—Press of business crowded out a letter which I had written a couple of weeks ago. The holidays have been passed off with quite good times and, and there is general, I think, a feeling of hopefulness for the future, and the latest and adornments of the occasion. Hyson—we had been in Bellingham and had Sunday service with serious improvements by way of new benches. Mr. Hyson is a Scotch Presbyterian and has the sisters school their apostles based and the Sisters school their apostles based and the Sisters school their apostles based and the Making Her Will.

"I have been referred to you, sir," said a middle-aged lady, entering the office of a Brooklyn lawyer. "I have some important business I wish attended to, and at once."

"Take a seat, madame," said the lawyer, rising and offering his visitor a chair. "You say your business is of an urgent nature?"

"Yes," said the lady, taking from a satchel a bundle of papers. "I have come to the conclusion that it should be done at once."

"You will please be kind enough to give me the facts in the case," said the young lawyer, visions of a good fee crossing his mind as he glanced over the lady's rich attire.

"Well, you see, I am getting on in life, and I have made up my mind to make my will," said the lady, fumbling nervously at the papers in her lap. "I don't care to have people fighting over me after—after I'm dead, you know," and she gave a surprisingly hollow little laugh.

"No, of course not. It is always better to have such things settled in time," said the lawyer, taking up his pen; "now, whom do you wish to make executor of your property?"

"Make what?" asked the lady.

"Whom do you wish to take charge of the division of your property?"

"Oh, yes," said the lady, "I understand. You see, you professional people have such queer ways of talking. Do you know, I have a brother who is studying to be an engineer, or surveyor, or something, and I really believes he delights in bringing out the most outlandish names when talking to me. The other evening I happened to mention the building of the bridge, and he got off the greatest lingo about trusses, girders, elevations and a lot more that I was really all mixed up. Speaking of the bridge, do you know that I had an invitation to cross on that little footpath, but I wouldn't do it for worlds. No, I am sure I should jump off, or do something horrible of that sort. I don't see how ladies can be so bold, but nowadays they will do almost anything daring. I really believe they will hire themselves out as sailors before long. I know I should never make a good sailor. I crossed last summer, and had a terrible time. Do you know I was seasick the whole time! Yes, and everything I tried to prevent it only made me more ill and—

"You will excuse me, madame," said the lawyer, "for interrupting you, but you were about to say in relation to your will—

"Oh, yes," said the lady, laughing. "Do you know, I had quite forgotten it! One gets interested you know, very often in that way. I have a cousin who is the most absent-minded creature you ever saw. I actually believe that girl will forget to be on hand at her own wedding. She isn't engaged yet, though, and I hope she won't be in some time, poor soul! It really makes me sad to see girls become engaged nowadays. The men are growing to be so unreliable. I heard of a very sad case only the other day. A couple had not been married over—

"Madame," said the lawyer, the "don't you think it would be well to come to the will?"

"Oh, yes, of course," said the lady; "I'm so glad you reminded me. I have the reputation of being such a talker. I'm not a bit like my sister, either. She never says a word from morning till night. I am sure it is better to say something now and then. They say we women outtalk your side of the house, but I do not believe it. I am acquainted with a gentleman who can beat me all to pieces in talking, and he never says anything, either. Now, I can stand a good talker if they will only throw out some ideas."

"Madame," said the lawyer, rising and glancing at his watch, "I find I have five minutes in which to reach the court-room and be in time for the calling of a case. We will attend to your will another day, when I have five or six hours or so on my hands, and be bowed the astonished lady out before she had time to open a fresh battery of words upon him.

A Careful of Kings.

An amusing incident occurred during a recent German imperial hunt at Huberstock. Emperor William, feeling slightly unwell, proposed to return to the castle on foot. The King of Savony and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg accompanied him. About half way, a peasant driving a cart in their direction, happening to pass by, they asked him to give them a lift, which he willingly did. On the way the good man's curiosity was excited about his passengers, and he said turning to one of them: "And who may you be?" "The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg." "O, indeed," returned the peasant with a wink. "And who may you be?" he inquired of the next. "I am the King of Saxony." "Better and better," cried the carter. "And you?" accosting the third. "I am the Emperor of Germany." "Well," said the countryman, in high humor, "I will tell you who I am. I am the Shah of Persia, and can hoax people as well as any of you."

Advantages of Education.

"Now, Jimmy," said a poor old broken-down burglar to his eldest son, "mind what I'm telling yer. There's nothing like eddication. Look at yer dad. Toiling along all these years States Prison three terms, my boy—all to give you a set o' tools and a good start in life; poor as when I began, Jimmy. Now, if I had only gone to school and got a bit o' book learning, and a knowledge o' figures, Jimmy, I might to-day have been one of them are defaulting cashiers. Get an eddication, my boy, there ain't nothing like it."

— An urchin of seven years went into a barber's shop a little while back and ordered the barber to cut his hair as short as shears could do it. He was asked if his mother ordered it in that way. "No," replied he, "school begins next week, and we have got a school-mistress that pulls hair."

— There was a great parade of soldiers, and little Mary, aged eight years, went to the door with her pet dog, Gyp, to see the procession move by. Like all little pet dogs, Gyp was saucy and began to bark. Mary ran up stairs to her mother, exclaiming: "Oh, mamma, come down stairs; I'm afraid Gyp will bite the army."

— If a girl wishes to make a fellow feel uncomfortable, she has more than twenty thousand ways of accomplishing her purpose.

— A new danger in connection with the growth of a criminal monopoly in the United States, is coming more prominently into view. It is the purchase of powerful newspapers by our millionaires. They already have entire control of our important railroads, and telegraph lines. In the northwestern States they are monopolizing the land, and now some of them have been purchasing newspapers. Jay Gould owns two New York dailies, and Cyrus W. Field the same number.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may judge for themselves of the value of the statements which they speak, we publish from time to time some of the letters we receive, which are sincerely in favorable questions. The truth of these facts, as we have ascertained, for ourselves in the manner we have stated.

CHARLES HOWARD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which incapacitated myself for business, and at times I was confined and bedfast. The frequency of these attacks lessened in severity and duration from the time I began using your Kidney and Liver Cure. Since then I have taken two bottles of your Safe Cure, which have done me more good than all the medicine I ever took for the kidneys. The pain in the region of the kidneys made the big bone down to feel sickening the moment it thawed. The discharge of the urine was usually attended with strangury of the neck of the bladder. The pains would come, coming on in paroxysms, and frequently lasted for days at a time, and would then cease for a time, the pains were so severe that they absorbed almost my consciousness. I consulted a number of physicians of this city, one of whom said he was the best in the country, and I could see that I could be cured, knowing nothing, I was a friend the good effects of your Kidney and Liver Cure, I commenced using it about three months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I was free from the pains, and I am free from them, and have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

C. Howard

Sold by Druggists.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past two years with a very severe kidney and bladder complaint. I had pains in my back and some kidney and urinary trouble, which I attribute to my being attended with severe pains and burning sensations. I was in doubt about commencing to take your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, as I had taken so much medicine without obtaining any relief, but I thought I would do no more harm by trying it. I am thoroughly satisfied that it has been of great benefit to me. I have not a trace of my former trouble, and I believe it to be a thorough cure for kidney and bladder troubles.

C. B. Lillie

Sold by Druggists.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which prevented from accomplishing anything for days at a time. Because that of rheumatism, as one that often endures and at times aggravates my affliction, I was induced to purchase of my friend, Mr. Wm. Ward, a bottle of your Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I have felt better in my life than I now do. I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and shall be pleased to give all persons inquiring, with full confidence.

H. W. Tom Winkle

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last two years, and have used all the different medicines advertised for said disease, as well as the medicine prescribed by physicians, but nothing ever reached my case. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am happy to inform you that I feel that it has done all you advertise it will cause for it.

H. W. Tom Winkle

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after taking two bottles the pain well left me and I have had no return of my complaint.

Chas. L. Miley

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with rheumatism in my back and kidneys for the past three years, the effects of a severe strain received at the time I was in the army. I have taken medicine for my complaint, that had been cured by using Kidney and Liver Cure, I am happy to inform you that I also proved to my case decidedly beneficial.

Geo. H. Gregg

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the last two years. My complaint was attended with pain in the back, also a burning sensation in my water passage, and at times I could scarcely pass water. I was cured by using Kidney and Liver Cure, and I feel free from my former complaint.

M. C. Lumby

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. After having taken several bottles never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was enabled to rest and sleep well.

Austin Allen

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I take much pleasure in saying that after using two bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, I have been freed from pain in the back from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials from all parts of the country, which space does not admit of their insertion here, have been published, but which have been voluntarily given, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If at any time you think you have symptoms of Bright's Disease, remember the great danger of delay.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron and powerful blood medicines. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative and blood purifier known, and invaluable to young people. Those unused medicine and to females have never produced so satisfactory a remedy. It is specially potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Eruptions, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Scaldhead, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and healing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and disease. It stimulates and invigorates the vital functions, restores vigor and strength, restores and preserves health and vigorous life. Its use is widely disseminated throughout the whole section. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial.

It is pleasing to experiment with the numerous less-tried preparations, which are offered and without medical virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, when the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known, Hydrobates know its compounding and properties. It has been widely used, and for years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE 619 CLAY STREET, Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few doors above Montgomery street.

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST-class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands, Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. m10-3m

OLIVER C. GILSON & CO., 35½ O'Farrell Street, Near Stockton street, San Francisco, HAS A NEAT AND RESPECTABLE EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, managed by male men, who speak the language and are thoroughly experienced.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

D. C. PRESTON. DEALER IN STOVES, RANGES AND TIN WARE. PLUMBING, METAL ROOFING AND GENERAL JOBBING. CONNECTING RANGES AND WATER-BACKS A SPECIALTY. 1241 Mission street.

J. M. BRYAN, DEALER IN Stoves and Ranges AND KITCHEN UTENSILS. Manufacturer of Hydraulic and Artesian Well Pipe. Metal Roofing, Plumbing and General Jobbing. 130 Third St., San Francisco. ☞ Particular attention paid to connecting Ranges with Hot Water Boilers.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER CAN BE CURED By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal. IN FRONT OF WHICH HE REGS LEAVE TO REFER to the following named persons, who have been cured by him:

James Lavin, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
A. Gnatly, Petaluma, cancer of the neck.
James J. McCaffrey, San Rafael, cancer of the lip.
Mrs. O'Connor, 1415 Turk street, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Frank Kohll, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer on the side of the face.
Mrs. Chas. Bailey, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer on her breast.
Manley Warner, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
Ralph Walsh, Milpitas, cancer of the face.
Martin Murphy, San Jose county of the neck.
Wm. Boyd, Fulbrook Ranch, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
J. J. McReynolds, Sulphur Creek, Sonoma county, cancer on the face.
Mrs. Foley, No. 3 Market street, Room 34, San Francisco, cancer of the lip.
Mrs. Cornwell, East Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
Stephen Daniels, Santa Rosa, cancer of the nose.
Ben Russell, Eagleville, Modoc county, cancer of the face.
Stanton Moore, Freeport, Sacramento county, cancer of the lip, and two orders of Charity, one of San Francisco and the other of Los Angeles, and others not herein mentioned.

The means by which these cures are performed cannot be explained in a paper, the recipe for which was left me by my father at his decease, he being a celebrated practising physician in Both Ireland, England, and the United States. Persons who have the cancer should send themselves or their friends to me at the Revenue Hotel, Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 Outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Me.

BEATTY'S Organs 13 stops, 10 set reeds only $90. Pianos $125. Beatty's Illustrated Catalogue free. Address BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE, MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc. 767 MARKET ST. SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MRS. C. V. TURNER, Inventor and Manufacturer of the Excelsior Perfect Fitting CORSET, IS NOW PREPARED TO MANUFACTURE to Order, Corsets of every description, from $3 to $10. Turk Street.

A. S. & C. W. IREDALE, Plumbers, Gas Fitters and Roofers, 862 MISSION STREET, Near 5th St., San Francisco. HOUSE, STEAMBOAT AND SHIP WORK. ☞ Job Work of all kinds done to order.

ROOFING. KELLY & CO., Asphaltum Roofers. ASPHALTUM WORKS AND PAVEMENTS. Roofs on the old plan renewed with gravel and pitch. Roofs repaired, coated and painted. Asphaltum, Gravel and Pitch for sale. 777 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal.

LITHOGRAPHERS. LOOK HERE!! P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO., STEAM BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS, 412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St. Between Sansome and Battery.

JNO. F. SNOW & CO. CLEANSING AND DYEING. G. T. Stout & Co. CHAS. J. HOLMES, Proprietor. OFFICES: 653 Market Street, Under Palace Hotel. BRANCH: 1065 Broadway, Oakland. Goods can be sent by mail from any part of the country, not weighing over 4 pounds. Orders by post promptly attended to.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the writing of one letter, making one remittance, keeping an account, having one freight or express charge, one may get any kind of goods asked, and select from more (generally less than a block) retailing direct from the dealer. It also has offices for transacting any private or public business matters, sending personal and prompt attention. The advantages it offers to strangers in your agent are more valuable than ever. Address

THOMAS B. EGAN, New York Catholic Agency, 51 Barclay street, and 28 Park Place.

Seeds ☞ We send our Illustrated Catalogue of "Everything for the Garden," on application FREE. PETER HENDERSON & CO., 35 Cortlandt Street, New York. Plants

CALIFORNIA BEDDING HOUSE. JAS. CONNELLY & CO. DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF FURNITURE AND BEDDING Wholesale and Retail at very Low Prices. 532 and 534 MARKET STREET, OPPOSITE SECOND, S. F. Having a large stock on hand, we now offer to sell FURNITURE, on the INSTALMENT PLAN, for less than it can be bought for cash in any other house in this city.

INSTALMENT PLAN! INSTALMENT PLAN! WE SELL Household FURNITURE and Carpets UPON EASY TERMS. We Manufacture First-class FURNITURE for our Own trade, and Deal Exclusively in NEW GOODS. GILBERT & MOORE, 18 & 20 Sutter St.

PURE OLD CALIFORNIA DRY PORT, Equal to the Best Imported. $3 per Gallon. BONANZA WINE VAULTS, PUTZMAN & DUNKER, Dealers in CALIFORNIA WINES AND BRANDIES, 310 PINE STREET, N. E. cor. Montgomery, San Francisco.

Ireland The CAUSES and AIMS of IRISH AGITATION. of To-Day.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL. The Best Hotel in San Francisco. Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets. H. CURRAN, Proprietor. THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY LOCATION, and has been recently refitted and refurnished throughout. Rooms to suit parties desiring them, at reasonable rates. Board and Rooms per week, $5 to $7. Single Meals, 25c. Rooms by the night, 25 to 50c. Large parlors, $1 per day. Attentive Servants in every department. Omnibus to and from the House free of charge. When in the city, call and see us. We will do all we can to make you comfortable. Yours truly, H. CURRAN. Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

Sanotta picking DAMIANA LEAVES for manufacturing the Bitters. LEWIS LEON, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 12 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco. FOR SALE BY Druggists, Liquor Dealers, and Grocers.

Gives Health and Strength! Cures Dyspepsia! Gives Appetite! The Mexican Remedy for Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder! DAMIANA BITTERS!

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh, MERCHANT TAILOR, 6 New Montgomery Street, PALACE HOTEL, S. F. The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty.

FITZPATRICK & KELLY ARE The BOSS Tailors, 36 1-2 FOURTH STREET, Corner of Jessie. San Francisco. Clothes for every Clothes. Not so cheap as the rest.

D. LETER, Merchant Tailor, 69 Fourth Street, S. F. GREAT BARGAINS FOR NEXT SIXTY DAYS.

Business Suits to Order, from	$25 00
Pants " "	5 00
Fine Dress Suits " "	35 00
Black Doeskin Pants "	7 00

Perfect Fit Guaranteed Or No Sale.

N. SWEENY, MERCHANT TAILOR 41 Second Street, Opposite Jesse Street. San Francisco. Cassocks and Clerical Clothing a Specialty.

JOE POHEIM, The Tailor. IMPORTANT NOTICE! I WILL SELL FOR THE NEXT 60 DAYS THE Finest line of Worsted Suits (not pure wool) that I make ready for New Goods. Suits made to order at immense reductions. Fit guaranteed or no sale. Rules for self measurement and samples of the new goods by every mail.

No 724 Market Street, AND 203 Montgomery Street, S. F. ☞ Entrances for every one to each.

JOHN HICKEY, Merchant Tailor, 933 Market street, between Fifth and Sixth streets. SAN FRANCISCO.

Business Suits to order from	$20
Pants " "	5
Fine Dress Suits " "	35
Black Doeskin Pants "	7

INSURANCE.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY OF SAN FRANCISCO, THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS, ESTABLISHED IN 1861. Nos. 416 and 418 California Street. CASH CAPITAL $250,000 GOLD. FAIR RATES, PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES, SOLID SECURITY. DIRECTORS: SAN FRANCISCO. B. Brewster, R. S. Floyd, Rufus Heller, S. G. Kittle, M. J. O'Connor, I. Steinhart, Daniel Meyer, Adam Grant, Antoine Rodgers, Charles Kohler, Joseph Seller, Barthell Dow, T. Lawrence Ford, A. A. Smith, N. B. Stone, Nicholas Luning, John Parrott, James A. Moffit, J. Bacon, M. D. Sweeny, Joseph Brandenstein, Gustave Touchard, J. G. Kittle, Geo. C. Bickes, J. H. Baird, Charles Bacon, W. M. Hoag, C. Schelhile, John Conly, O. Eldridge, A. B. Phipps. GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, President. S. G. KITTLE, Vice-President. JAS. D. BAILEY, Secretary. HEO. H. OHLEN, Surveyor. F. J. Walter Tuck, Jas. Phelan, Vice-Pres't. R. G. Brown, Sec'y. WESTERN Fire and Marine Insurance Co. OF CALIFORNIA. 409 California St., San Francisco. CAPITAL STOCK - - $200,000. Losses Promptly Paid. Rooms Daniels and Drew are not responsible companies.

The Boston and California DRESS REFORM, LATE OF SUTTER STREET, HAS REMOVED TO No. 326 SUTTER STREET. When I will be pleased to see my patrons.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HALLETT, DAVIS & CO., AHEAD OF THE WORLD. THE LARGEST STOCK OF FIRST-CLASS PIANOS. Sole Agents for the HALLETT, DAVIS & CO. Celebrated Pianos, N. Y. Organs and Melodeons. Parlor Organs, $65. Piano Bargains. WM. H. DALEY, Agent for the Pacific Coast, 638 Market St., S. F.

ANTI SELL PIANOS LARGEST Most Patents, Fairest Dealers, Best Pianos. Durability. 1,000 Pianos $125 to $10 Stamps, or cent. 27 M. ANTHONY & Co., Corner Market and Ponsi streets, San Francisco, Cal.

LOW RENT FOR REASONS FOR LOW PRICES. Pianos Below Factory Prices. A Magnificent new STATHAM PIANO for $250. Worth $350. A FINE PIANO FOR $100 with Stool and Cover. LATEST SHEET MUSIC. TUNING, $2.00. Send for Circulars. DUNN & McMILLAN, 1216 Market Street, and 17 Tyler St., S. F. Open Evenings.

John Bergstrom, Organ Builder, 29th and Mission Sts., SAN FRANCISCO.

Organs Built, Tuned and Repaired AT MODERATE RATES. Repairing of Music Boxes, Melodeons, Accordeons, Harps, Violins, Guitars, Flutes, Clarionets, Fifes, Drums, Cornets, Trombones, Flageolets, Flutes, Fifes, Bugles, Bass Drums, Cymbals, Tambourines, Bass Viols, Violoncellos, Bass Viols, Violoncellos, Bass Viols, Violoncellos

Market Report.

Domestic Produce Market.

MONITOR OFFICE, Jan. 25, 1882.

FLOUR—City Extras are jobbing at $5 75; City Superfine, $5@5 25; Superior brands, $5@5 50; 2s $5 25; for extra, and $4 50@4 75 for superfine.

WHEAT—The rain storm, which at present exists in spots all over the State, has unsettled both the Wheat and freight markets, although its effect on freights is more marked, having a tendency to harden them slightly and to enhance the views of tonnage holders, who gain additional confidence from a further advance in the foreign Wheat markets. Taking advantage of the rain storm, shippers made a pronounced bear movement on Change this morning, offering all around about 3c. under the rates which have ruled for some time. Holders, however, did not become frightened and steadily adhered to the previous quotations. Sales were reported of 500, 550 and 60 tons No. 1, and 1,000 ctls Sonora at $1 [illegible]. N. 1 is quotable at $1 [illegible] 72½ and No. 2, at $1 62½@1 67½ per ctl.

BARLEY—The market has been dull for some days as buyers have been holding off, in hope that a rain-storm would enable them to buy at a decline from the present high prices. Holders are firm. The only sale reported to day was 300 ctls poor feed at $1 [illegible]. Feed is quotable at $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible]; brewing, $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible]; Chevalier, $1 [illegible]@1 70 ⅌ ctl.

OATS—Continue well held and quiet. The only sales reported to-day were 200 sks, $1 [illegible], and 400 sks, $1 [illegible]. Good and choice $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible]; common, $1 75@$1 77½; Surprise, $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible] ⅌ ctl.

CORN—Is higher, $1 [illegible] for Yellow and $1 [illegible] ⅌ ctl. for White.

RYE—Wheat, $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible]; wild oat, $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible]; volunteer and stalk, $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible]; stock, $1 [illegible]@1 [illegible] ⅌ ton.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 50 ⅌ ctl.

STRAW—Quotable at 65@67½ ⅌ bale.

POTATOES—Oregon Garnet Chiles sold to-day at $1 65@$1 75. Early Rose, $1 75@$2; Peluluma, $1 75@2; River Reds, $1 50@1 60; Tomales, $1 75@$1 90 ⅌ ctl.

ONIONS—Steady, at 50@55c. ⅌ ctl.

CORNMEAL ETC.—Table Meal, 3c ⅌ lb. Feed Corn, 85c ⅌ ton; Hominy 3c ⅌ lb.

BEESWAX—25@28c ⅌ lb.

BUTTER—Stocks are free and the market is very shaky. Good and choice California roll, 27@28c; fair do, 25@26c; mixed lots from country stores, 22@23c; brining, 20@22c; packed roll, 20@22c; Eastern, 30@35c ⅌ lb.

CHEESE—Eastern Creamery, 18@20c; California, 16@20 ⅌ lb.

POULTRY—Prices show some improvement. Live Turkeys ⅌ lb 16@18c; dressed do, 18@21c; Geese, ⅌ pair $1 50@$1 75; Ducks ⅌ doz, $6 50@6 50; Hens, $6@6 50; Roosters, young, $6 50@7 50; do, old, $5@5 50; Broilers, $5@7; EGGS—Arrivals are free and the market is lower still, at 25@26c for California and 21@22c ⅌ doz for Oregon.

DOMESTIC FRUIT—Business is quiet. Cranberries, $12 50@$14 ⅌ bbl; Pears, $3@$7 ⅌ box; Apples, 75c@$1 50 ⅌ box.

VEGETABLES—Marrowfat Squash, $10@$12 ⅌ ton; Okra 60c ⅌ lb; Tomatoes, 60@75c ⅌ box; Cabbage 75c@$1 ⅌ ctl; Cauliflower, 60@75c ⅌ doz; Turnips, 75c; Beets, $1; Carrots, 75c; Parsnips, 75c@$1 ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 10@12c; Artichokes, 50c ⅌ dozen; Dry Chile Peppers, 15@20c ⅌ lb. Mushrooms 15c ⅌ lb.

The Veterans' Home.

Archbishop Alemany sent a circular last week to all the Rev. Clergy authorizing a collection in every church in the Archdiocese on Sunday last for the benefit of the fund for the Veterans' Home.

—The relapse was set outside a Protestant church at Winslow, Texas, in order to give room for a stage on which to perform "Pinafore," and when again needed for use it was missing. Several weeks thereafter stopped before it was found in a gambling house, where it had been altered into a faro table.

—Now is the time to put on the spring paint on your houses, and we know of no one who can do it more properly or more judiciously than J. Cooney, 113 Fourth street.

"In a Decline."

Ira R. V. Pierce: Dear Sir—Just fall my daughter was in a decline and every only thought she was going into consumption. I got her a bottle of your "Favorite Prescription," and it cured her. MRS. MARY HINSON.

Of all druggists.

—Rev. Eugene H. Brady, S.J., is of the opinion that "A Total Abstinence Society depends upon the vigilance and activity and earnestness of one of its officers and members. The sacrifices demanded render its life at time precarious. It will frequently rise and fall, and it rises more vigorous after each decline, it is due to the determination and united energy of its constituents. Every member must be a watchman of the tower."

Elegance and Purity.

Ladies who appreciate elegance and purity are using Parker's Hair Balsam. It is the best article sold for restoring gray hair to its original color, beauty and luster.

—When a Texas couple agreed up to the marriage, the minister saw the handle of a pistol protruding from the bridegroom's pocket, and suggested that, out of respect for the solemn ceremony, it be laid aside. The advice was heeded. Then the bride demurely drew a dagger from her bosom and tossed it beside the other weapon.

A Varied Performance.

Many wonder how Parker's Tonic can perform such varied cures, thinking it simply a nerve stimulant, when in fact it is made from many blood purifiers, which act beneficially on every diseased organ. See another column.

—The Rev. C. W. Hamilton, in a sermon at Salem, New Brunswick, expressed the belief that the assassination of Garfield was ordered by God as a punishment of the nation, because of the popular and semi-official reception of Farrell in this country. From which it is evident that all the crazy cranks are not in insane asylums.

—Nothing contributes more towards health than good breath. It is truly called "the staff of life," and people should be more particular than they are in preserving it pure. We can vouch for the fact that Weston's home made bread is the best in the city, and you will find it at 9 Stockton street, fresh every day.

—Ammen's Cough Syrup never fails to cure if used in time and according to directions.

We heard a prominent physician say a few days ago that he thought it was the duty of the proprietary of Ammen's Cough Syrup to give the formula to the medical faculty, so they could prescribe and use it without violating the rules of the profession; for, said he, "so many of my patients praise it to the skies, and the cases have come under my observation where it has been remarkably beneficial, that I know it must indeed be a wonderful discovery in medical science. This medicine is for sale by respectable druggists and dealers in medicine everywhere.

—A preventative for malarial disorders. A few doses will break up the worst cold. Smith's Ginger Tonic, 1021 Market street.

—Large number of new and second-hand Pianos of different makes, at all prices. See us before purchasing. Spencer & Co., 23 and 25 Fifth street. Open evenings.

—Save one-third of fashionable city tailors' charges, without sacrificing quality or style of goods, or workmanship. Secure elegance, comfort and satisfaction by patronizing J. Sullan, 1019 Howard street.

—Save $150. Buy your pianos direct from the manufacturers. Wheelock & Co., New York have opened a warerooms at 16 Dutter street, F. E. Girard, manager. Instruments sold on instalments.

—C. F. Wyer & Co., Pacific Coal and Feed Yard, 809 Mission street, are prepared to supply all customers with coal, wood and feed at the lowest market rates. In all cases full measure guaranteed.

Agricultural Depression in England.

At a meeting of the Berwick Town Council on yesterday it was agreed to grant the tenants of the Corporation farms an abatement of 15 per cent. in consequence of the agricultural depression. A letter from the Lord Mayor of London asking for subscriptions for the Property Defense Fund was laid upon the table.

The Day Kidney Pad is a certain remedy for diseases of the kidney and urinary system. Send stamp for book. Day Kidney Pad Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

—Mr James J. H. Gregory of Marblehead, Mass., appears on our pages with announcement of seeds for 1882. Mr. Gregory is among the first whose well-earned reputation for care, and his immense seed department, has inspired confidence among the thousands of buyers all over the United States.

MARRIED.

DONNELLY—MALLOY—In the city, Jan. 3, at St. Mary's Cathedral, by the Rev. Father Prendergast, Bernard Donnelly to Hannah Malloy, both of San Francisco.

TITUS—PETERSON—In this city, at St. Mary's Cathedral, Sunday, Jan. 15, by Rev. Father Prendergast, Albert F. Titus to Celia A. Peterson.

PIERCE—NEEDHAM—In Petaluma, Jan. 15, at St. Vincent's Church, by Rev. Father Obnez, John C. Pierce of San Francisco and Miss Mary A. Needham of Petaluma.

MARTIN—MCNAMEE—In this city, Jan. 22, by the Rev. Father Lagier, Patrick Martin to Sarah A. McNamee.

DIED

MCINTOSH—In this city, Jan. 19, Mrs. Mary E., wife of the late Wells B. McIntosh, a native of Michigan aged 36 years.

MCCORMICK—In this city, Jan. 19, John beloved husband of Mary Ann McCormick, a native of the Parish of Navan, County Meath, Ireland, aged 65 years.

CURRY—In this city, Jan. 20, Edward Curry, a native of the Parish of Quinn, County Clare, Ireland, aged 35 years.

O'LEARY—In this city, Jan. 20, Annie beloved wife of Jeremiah O'Leary, a native of Tuam, County Galway, Ireland, aged 35 years.

O'SULLIVAN—In this city, Jan. 20, Michael O'Sullivan, a native of Temple Brien, Parish of Donaghmore, County Cork, Ireland, aged 30 years.

In Detroit Michigan, Jan. 11, Daniel Ryan, a native of Laught, County Limerick, Ireland, aged 21 years, beloved brother of Miss Hanely Ryan, Mrs. D. McCarty, Mrs. Thomas and Mrs. Timothy Ryan.

RILEY—In this city, Jan. 19, Peter, beloved husband of Catherine Riely, a native of the County Meath, Ireland, aged 47 years.

FLORIST.

Funeral Emblems of Late Design Tastefully Arranged.

Also Choice Cut Flowers.

MRS. HEINS' 103 Stockton street.

Late of Geary street

Lawyers use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Do not delay using Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ministers use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumptives use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Sore Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Consumption—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Twill cure your cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

It cured my cold—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Tickling in Throat—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Great Discovery—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Coughs—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Colds—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Pains in Chest—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Croup—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Try 25 cent bottle—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Whooping Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Hoarseness—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

All druggists sell Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Women that have been given up by their dearest friends as beyond help, have been (personally cured) by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is a positive cure for all female complaints. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. for pamphlets.

—There is a great comfort in purchasing of a house and lot when you feel that you will get full weight and correct measure. Such is the rule which our thoroughly honest firm of furniture stores is our day. In the article of Crockery, people are particularly sensitive, they have to trust entirely to the honesty of the dealer, and there we are reminded that the Messrs. Landis, southwest corner of Sutter and Powell streets, has established a reputation for fair dealing and full weight that he prides himself upon retaining. His prices are low, and one trial will satisfy all that it is just the man to purchase coal from.

—Get your large format leaves at R. Stein's 533 Fourth street, near Freelon.

—For $3 you can now secure a year's reading for yourself and family. Subscribe for the Monitor.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION, for consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Neuralgia, Headache, Debility, Diseases of the Skin, and all Chronic and Nervous Disorders. Pamphlets free. DR. STANKE & PETTIT, Philadelphia, Pa. Professionally to physicians. Sent on trial. Address DR. STANKE & PETTIT, Drexel Building, Agent, 606 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. ☞ Refund for Free Pamphlets.

New Advertisements.

J. L. CAHILL,

Painting, Whitening and Paper Hanging.

209 POST STREET,

Between Dupont and Stockton streets. San Francisco.

☞ Decorative Paper Hanging and Wall Tinting a specialty.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-11 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor.

(Late Broadway Hotel)

PACIFIC Business College, 320 POST ST. SAN FRANCISCO.

Life Scholarships, $70

Paid in Installments, 75

SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

REDUCTION IN COAL.

I AM NOW SELLING

Southport Coal per Ton	$ 9 00 a ton
Eastport Coal at	9 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at	10 00 a ton
Scotch Coal at	10 00 a ton
West Hartley Coals	11 00 a ton
and Wellington Coal at	11 50 a ton

Cake or Gas House Coke Delivered Free

J. FLYNN,

1113 and 1115 Mission Street.

ESTABLISHED 1864.

J. COONEY,

PRACTICAL

Painter and Whitener.

SIGNS NEATLY EXECUTED.

NO. 113 FOURTH STREET,

San Francisco, Cal.

☞ Jobbing, in all its branches, promptly attended to.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

$5 to $20 Per day at home. Samples worth $5, Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Me.

THE MONITOR, NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Kast's

What's the Matter with THE SHOE BUSINESS?

BOTTOM DROPPED OUT.

PRICES DOWN.....DOWN.....DOWN.

Previous to our REMOVAL to OUR ELEGANT STORES---

738 AND 740 MARKET STREET,

which are to be ENLARGED and RE-MODELED to meet the wants of our daily-increasing Business, we offer Our ENTIRE Stock at the Following

Unprecedented LOW PRICES !!!

Cent's Wear.

Fine French Calf Button Shoes, reduced from $6 50 to $4.

Russian Calfskin Button Shoes, reduced from $5 to $3.

Choice of Sewing Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Calf Sewed Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Calf Kersey Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Calf Wax Shoes, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Calf Brogans, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Calf French Calf Congress Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Calf Congress Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Ladies' Wear.

French Kid Button Boots, Opera Last Pointed Toes, reduced from $5 to $3.

Cushion Tip Kid Front Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Black Satin Front Slippers, reduced from $1 to 75c.

Black Satin Front Slippers, reduced from $1 to 75c.

Fine Kid Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

French Kid Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

High or French Kid Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

White Kid Slippers, reduced from $1 to 75c.

Satin Front Kid Slippers, reduced from $1 to 75c.

Misses' Wear.

Fine Button Boots (French Calf), reduced from $4 to $3.

Spring Heel Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Button Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Children's Wear.

Fine Sewed Patent Leather Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kersey Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Fine Sewed Kid Boots, reduced from $4 to $3.

Buy Your SHOES NOW and SAVE MONEY. Our ENTIRE STOCK MUST BE SOLD, as we have IMMENSE SHIPMENTS on the way for NEW STORES.

KAST'S

Cor. Market and Dupont Streets.

FRANCIS X. KAST. 1341 to 1345 MARKET ST. KAST

S. IRVING & CO.,

206 Kearny Street, Near Sutter, S.F.

KEEP THE BEST STOCK IN THE CITY.

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

COMPRISING

EVERY ARTICLE OF GENTLEMENS' WEAR.

Which they Sell at Very Reasonable Rates, and Give a SPECIAL DISCOUNT

to Clergymen.

☞ Call and examine Stock and Prices if you desire to procure Holiday Presents.

MUSICAL BOXES.

M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 23 Dupont Street, San Francisco, Manufacturers and Importers. A. E. JUILLERAT, Exclusive Agent.

MUSIC BOXES REPAIRED.

New Advertisements.

WOOD AND COAL.

HARRY LINCOLN,

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

WOOD AND COAL,

Cor. Hayes and Gough Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO

Orders Filled and Delivered promptly in all parts of the City free of Cartage. ☞ Give me the Very Lowest Rates. ☜

J. M. JOHNSON,

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Wood, Coal & Charcoal

YARD AT GOLDEN GATE AVE.

(Formerly Tyler street)

Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny,

San Francisco.

Orders left at Pfeifer's Stables, No. 11 Powell street, will receive prompt attention. Telephone connection.

COAL. COAL. COAL.

2,240 LBS. TO THE TON.

Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.

Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.

T. L. SMITH,

Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.

☞ Trial Order Solicited.

ARLEY THAT AND NOT WHAT OUT SOLD PRICE. 1510 Market St. Dr. Dog 25, ACT.

GEO. H. FULLER,

MANUFACTURER OF

Settees, School and Office Furniture.

CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.

Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JONAS J. MORRISON,

LUMBER DEALER,

Corner Mission and Spear Streets. SAN FRANCISCO

LUMBER YARD

A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand. Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

THE ROYAL ST. JOHN.

The Simplest, Lightest Running and most Durable Sewing Machine Made.

Forward or Backward

Without stopping or changing direction of work. It makes the short stitch of sewing machines, and is positively

Noiseless, Reversible, Self-Adjusting, Self-Tension, Self-Threading, Self-Winding, Self-Stitching, Self-Tucking, Self-Hemming, Self-Feeding, Self-Shuttling

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE WELCOME RAIN.

It rains, and the poor man's heart grows light,
For his coming prospects now look bright,
As his care worn face has lost its frown
For the price of food is coming down.

His coat is soaked and his feet are wet,
But he plods his way contented yet;
He does not shrink from rain nor cold
For the welcome shower to him is gold.

And "Thanks" he returns at close of day,
When he bows his head to meekly pray
That the God who watches over the poor
Will keep starvation from his door.

W. J. A.

NOBODY'S BOY.

Yes, he is dirty, and ragged and poor,
Velvet and satin must shrink from his touch,
Thrust him away or he reaches the door
Of your fine carriage his fingers would smutch.
Yet there are two sides to all things, my friend;
Fifty should quicken where sin would destroy,
Wretched, and going to wretcheder end,
This wicked gamin is Nobody's boy.

True, if your lackey should press him too hard,
Some naughty word would slip out I dare say,
Fine parlor language is not the mode
Of such rough training and fighting one's way.
Sad, is it not, a blasphemer so young?
Dreadful, our delicate ears to annoy?
Yet, while his language is still on your tongue,
Pause—and remember he's Nobody's boy.

Nobody's boy? Yes, a sinner's, no doubt;
Born to a heritage only of shame,
He and his mother despised and cast out,
That no dishonor may sully a name.
Just retribution on one side, is true;
Yet, is it not known what is motherless's joy
Might understand how a hope could pierce through Her sin, to a mother of Nobody's boy.

Say she is dead, and her child is a waif,
Swept by the wind at Society's feet;
Yes who have children and shuttered and safe,
Is it a crime embodied you meet?
Does the face haunt you? Why, what can you,
To banish from pleasure this grain of alloy?
What if God stooped to the sharing with you
Of His great thoughts toward Nobody's boy?

Literary Miscellany.

Dolly's Deliverance.

A WESTERN DROVER'S STORY.

My name is Anthony Hunt. I am a drover, and live miles and miles away upon the western prairies. There wasn't a house within sight when I moved there, my wife and I, and now we haven't many neighbors, but those we have are good ones.

One winter's day, about ten years ago, I went away from home to sell some 50 head of cattle—fine creatures as I ever saw; I was very some proud of them, and good before I came back and, above all, a doll for our youngest Dolly; she had never had as show doll of her own—only by the bye she her mother had made her.

Dolly could talk of nothing else, and went down to the very gate to call after me to buy her a big one. Nobody but a parent can understand how full my mind was of that toy, and how, when the cattle were sold, the first thing I hurried off to buy Dolly's doll. I found a large one, with eyes that would open and shut when you pulled a wire, and had it wrapped up in paper, and tucked it under my arm, while I had the parcel of calico and delaineand tea and sugar put up. Then, late as it was, I started for home. It might have been more prudent to stay until morning, but I felt anxious to get home, and eager to hear Dolly's praises about her doll.

I was mounted on a steady-going old horse of mine, and pretty well loaded.

Night set in before I was a mile from town, and settled down as dark as pitch while I was in the middle of the wildest bit of road I know of. I could have felt my way, though, I remembered it so well; and when the storm had been brewing broke and pelted the rain in torrents I was five miles, or may be six, from home yet, too.

I rode fast as I could, but all of a sudden I heard a little cry like a child's voice I stopped short and listened—I heard it again. I called and it answered me. Couldn't see a thing; all was dark as pitch.

I got down and felt around in the grass called again and again was answered. Then I began to wonder. I'm not timid, but I was known to be a drover and to have money about me. It might be a trap to catch me unawares and rob and murder me.

—I am not superstitious—not very; but how could a fairy child be out in the prairies in such a night, at such an hour? It might be more than human. The bit of a coward that hides itself in most men showed itself to me then, but once more I heard the cry, and I.

"If any man's child is hereabouts, Anthony Hunt is no more than tolerable."

I searched again. At last I bethought me of a hollow under the hill, and groped that way. Sure enough I found a little dripping thing, that moaned and sobbed as I took it in my arms. I called my horse, and the beast came to me, and I mounted and tucked the little soaked thing under my coat as well as I could, promising to take it home to mammy. It seemed tired to death, and pretty soon cried itself to sleep against my bosom.

It had slept there over an hour when I saw my own windows. There were lights in them, and I supposed my wife had lit them for my sake; but when I got into the door-yard I saw something was the matter, and stood still with a dead fear of it for five minutes before I could lift the latch.

At last I did it; and saw the room full of neighbors, and my wife sitting amid them weeping.

When she saw me she hid her face, "Oh don't tell him," she said. "It will kill him."

"What is it neighbors?" I cried.

"Nothing new, I hope—what's that in your arms?"

"A poor, lost child," said I. "I found it in the road. Take it, girls; tell you I've turned faint." And I lifted the sleeping thing and saw the face of my own child, my Dolly.

It was my darling, and none other, that I had picked up on the drenched road.

A very little child who had wandered out to meet "daddy" and the doll, while her mother was at work, and when they were lamenting over one dead, I thanked Heaven on my knees before them all. It is not much of a story, perhaps, but it has made of us often in the nights and wonder how I could bear to live now if I had not stopped when I heard the cry for my child—the little baby—hardly louder than a squirrel's chirp.

That's Dolly, yonder with her mother in the meadow, a girl worth saving—I think—but then I'm her father, and partial may be; the prettiest and the sweetest thing this side of the Mississippi.

A Convert's Story.

What Led to His Conversion A Convent, Catholic Newspapers and Catechetic Books The Old Story, Knowing and then Loving the Truth.

The following letter is from the pen of a gentleman now resident in Tasmania, but for many years occupying an important position in India. He had two nieces educated in the Presentation Convent, St. Louis. One of them after the instruction became a pious and firm Catholic, and died a holy death; receiving all the last sacraments, though she died of disease of the heart. The gentleman writes to a nun of the same convent in a kindly manner and prayers he attributes much of the grace of his conversion.

INDIA, Malmat, 15th; 1881.

MY DEAR MISS. ——When you see the date of this letter I need scarcely tell you that this day is observed as a great day in the Catholic Church here. To me this is a great day of importance. It marks a new and important event in my life. To-day for the first time in my whole life, I received Holy Communion, and I trust in God that I have not received it in vain. Having lived my whole lifetime without the pale of the Holy Catholic Church, without any religion or hope of salvation until now, I must say that this day is of great importance to me and I cannot let it pass without writing and thanking you for all you have done in bringing me to this happy state of mind. I feel very grateful to you, for you have been instrumental in bringing about the conversion. Had I never known you I might have lived to the end of my days without becoming a Catholic; so you see what good reason I have to be thankful to you to-day. Had I never seen nor heard of you I might lived and died as I was without a thought or a hope for the future. When I see how I have been snatched as it were from the brink of destruction, I must feel thankful to God for his mercies and to you for the part you have had in my conversion.

HOW I BECAME A ROMAN CATHOLIC BROUGHT UP A PROTESTANT.

I learned in my young days to believe that Roman Catholics were superstitious and idolatrous, but in this country I had soon a great deal of good work done by the Nuns and Jesuits in the training of the young and protecting the orphans, and I began to think the Catholics well-meaning people, but still I considered them idolaters. These were my feelings towards Catholics when I arrived in Hobart five years ago. There I found dear N. and S. were attending your school. I had no objections to their doing so, particularly as dear N. was so much pleased with what she saw there. When I was about to leave town, N. said to me, "Uncle, come and see the Convent before you leave here." I said I did not, why should I go to see the Convent," she said, "Do come and see Sister J., she is so good." She had a great deal of talking me for anything she wanted, and I never could refuse her anything she asked for.

I WENT WITH HER TO THE CONVENT, and on that simple incident hung events of great importance to my future life. After we left Hobart, N.'s pleading "to go back to Sister J." had the desired effect. I sent S. and her to the Convent; in doing so I knew I would gratify her wish, and I knew that they would get a good education, and I did not think any religion they would see there would do them any harm; but N.'s frequent and respectful reference to religion and your occasional letters, filled me with holy feelings, and soon taught me to have

SOME RESPECT FOR A RELIGION WHICH I DID NOT UNDERSTAND.

After N.'s death I began to think more about the religion which she loved so well. I was to some extent free from my early prejudices, thanks to your pious letters; I had also become familiar with some of the cermonies of the Catholic religion from reading your letters, as well as N.'s, and a Catholic newspaper which I used to send her. Then commenced to compare the Catechetic religion with the one I had learned in my youth and abandoned years ago. I learned that Christ himself left behind on earth one, and no more true Church and that—that Church was the Roman Catholic Church. But my early teachings told me that the Roman Church had fallen into error, and was not the true Church now. With this thought I continued for about a time, but the thought of further enquiry still frequently occurred to my mind, and I found it was no use trying, I failed to find any proof of the time or place when the Roman Church had fallen into error.

I WAS THEREFORE DRIVEN BACK and there I saw that Christ had promised his Church that the gates of Hell should not prevail against her. That he had died to make her a glorious Church, without spot or wrinkle, that she should teach all truth for ever, that he would be with her all days even to the consummation of the world. All this and much more on the same subject I saw in my Protestant Bible. I was therefore obliged to believe this promise of Christ that the Church could not teach error, or to accept the assertion of religious reformers that the Church had fallen into error. I preferred to accept the promise of Christ made in the Scripture, and having accepted this portion of the Scripture as true, I was obliged to accept all the teaching of the Church. I have accepted it; and, thank God!

I AM TO-DAY A ROMAN CATHOLIC

And will continue one as long as I live, come what may. It is no easy matter for a person who has been brought up a Protestant to become a Roman Catholic. It takes a long time to overcome the prejudices of early teaching. Then there is the confessional which so much deters people outside the pale of Church from entering it. Of course for a person brought up in the Church that is nothing, but for a person accustomed to it it requires a great effort to overcome the difidence of going to confession. It is very humiliating to the proud heart of a man, and that is the reason it is so valuable. I can now see that the confessional was instituted by God Himself, and is the most powerful aid a sinner has to keep from temptation. I had great difficulties to contend with before I could enter the Catholic Church. I had belonged for upwards of 20 years and of course I had to give up all connection with Masonry before I become a Catholic. It requires a struggle to break off with the old friends and acquaintances of a lifetime at once. I have got over all the difficulties now, and I value your prayers more than the friendship of all my acquaintances of my lifetime, and I must ask you to still continue your prayers for me. I expect to leave here in the middle of October next, so you need not write to me after you get this, as my reply to this will be my last letter here before I leave. Kindly give my best respects to the Rev. Mother and Mrs. S. Accept my sincere gratitude for all your kindness, and permit me to remain, as ever,

TO THE HIGHEST DEGREE FREE-MASONRY

Your very sincere friend

T. M.

Why Catholics Respect Their Clergy.

It is a frequent matter of remark, and indeed sometimes of reproach, that Catholics think a great deal of their clergy—follow their advice, and respect their opinions. As there is no effect without a cause, a few of the reasons for this may not be out of place.

In the first place, then, the clergy, by virtue of their sacred office, hold a very high place. They are the heralds and ministers of God, expressly authorized to teach His Law and administer His Sacraments. They have not taken to themselves this dignity and honor, but are called of God, "as was Aaron." (Heb v 4).

Their high prerogatives are many, but chief among them are the power of sacrifice by the consecration and offering of the Holy and Blood of our Lord and the power of remitting sin, both of which are done by every duly authorized priest, the last when he celebrates Mass, and the second in the Sacrament of Penance or Confession.

Every priest represents, in a particular manner, Jesus Christ himself, especially when celebrating Mass. Now, besides these reasons for respect there exist others.

For every priest has passed through a special training for years before being admitted to the Sacred Orders, and consequently may be supposed to be and really is, fully experienced and qualified to train souls. For this reason they are called "Fathers" to express their gravity of manner, learning and prudence, as it is written, "Honorable old age is not that which standeth in length of time nor that which is reckoned by number of years." (Wisdom iv. 8.)

In addition to all these reasons for respect, it should also be remembered that the clergy of Ireland—and most Catholics here are of Irish birth or descent—have always been identified with the Irish people.

When the people were oppressed so were the clergy; but in the hour of direst persecution the people clung to them with invincible fidelity. As they shared the trials of the people so they share their prosperity. They are one with them in fact—for what is an Irish priest but the son of some Irish mother, cradled in the same arms and nursed at the same breast with brothers who have chosen other professions, schoolmates and neighbours to a whole country side.

These are the reasons why Catholics, and especially Catholics of Irish blood, respect and venerate the clergy.

Cut this out and Save It.

A correspondent writes to an exchange as follows, about the flowers of a well, known plant: "I have discovered a remedy for consumption. It has cured a number of cases after they had commenced bleeding at the lungs and the hectic flush was already on the cheek. After trying this remedy to my own satisfaction, I have thought that humanity demanded that I should let it be known to the world. It is common mullen, steeped strongly, and sweetened with coffee sugar and drunk freely. Young or old plants are good, dried in the shade, and kept in clean bags. The medicine must be drunk warm, three to six months according to the nature of the disease. It is very good for the bowels also. It strengthens and builds up the system instead of taking away the strength. It makes good blood, and allays inflammation away from the lungs." It is the wish of the writer that every periodical in America, Canada and Europe should publish this recipe for the benefit of the human family. Lay this up and keep it in the house ready for use.

What is a Lady?

An old work of the date of 1762 has the following account of the origin of the term Lady: "I will easily show how it came to pass that women of fortune were called ladies, even before their husbands had any title to confer the mark of distinction on them. It was generally the fashion for a lady of affluence, once a week, or oftener, to distribute a certain quantity of bread to the poor neighbors with her own hands, and she was called by them 'lad-day, that is, bread-giver, or, as it is sometimes explained, the bread-giver.' Wonder how many so-called ladies practice the original signification of the term!

Her Baby in a Bathtub.

We do not know how true it is, but a neighbor vouches for it, and it is as good as any one of the adventures of the Spoopendyke family. A young mother who is rich in her hubby's affections and pocket-book, is the owner of a three-months old sunbeam. The young mother, to have the offspring receive proper nourishment, relied upon a competent person of his principal duty here below, that of adoring her. Nobody ever saw the baby but each knew care and earnestness; sometimes it has hurried over or shortened; occasionally it is quite forgotten. But the whole family are accustomed to join regularly in this devotion, such faults are in a great measure, if not altogether removed. There is in this union of the members of a family at the foot of a crowin or a picture, a persuasive eloquence which speaks to each one of his duties and this gathering together for a common purpose each evening is calculated to have the most happy effects on the family itself. When the father and mother are the exercising a species of priesthood in the midst of their children, does it not inspire reverence for parents? If some have been grieved and vexed during the day by any of those thousand-and-one little vexations that may disturb peace and harmony anywhere, will they not be disposed to forgive and forget, when at the trials of the people so they share their prosperity. They are one with them in fact—for what is an Irish priest but the son of some Irish mother, cradled in the same arms and nursed at the same breast with brothers who have chosen other professions, schoolmates and neighbours to a whole country side.

TO WARDROBE, HIS NEIGHBOR, AND HIMSELF

These are the reasons why Catholics, and especially Catholics of Irish blood, respect and venerate the clergy.

FAMILY PRAYERS.

A Pious Custom which should become general among Catholics

Formerly the pious custom of saying the daily prayers together was very generally observed in families. But in proportion as people are growing worldly-minded, these good old Catholic customs are disappearing, which is to be regretted. It should be made to keep up the practice of family prayers, for it is really one of the most efficacious means of preserving the spirit of piety, to keep alive faith, and even to preserve the spirit of union in the home circle. The labors and cares of the day are at an end; the shades of night surround the earth, and invite to repose; the hour is favorable for the christian family to join in prayer. What a charming spectacle to behold the whole family united in this action! We can see them in imagination, kneeling before the crucifix and an image of our Lady the father and mother, the venerable grandparents, the children and servants.

THE FATHER OR MOTHER SAYS THE PRAYERS ALOUD,

the others answer, thus imitating the choirs of blessed spirits; and their prayers are scarcely inferior to the angels as a sweet incense to the Lord. Then, having made a commemoration of all the faithful departed, especially those of their own family circle, all retire in silence to take that repose which is sweetened and made sweet by the peaceful conscience. This simple and brief outline of what family prayers mean will suggest to the pious reader some of the beneficial results that are calculated to flow from the practice. Prayers in common reminds a person of his principal duty here below, that of adoring God. Solitary prayer is good and holy, each one care and earnestness; sometimes it is hurried over or shortened; occasionally it is quite forgotten. But the whole family are accustomed to join regularly in this devotion, such faults are in a great measure, if not altogether removed. There is in this union of the members of a family at the foot of a crucifix or a picture, a persuasive eloquence which speaks to each one of his duties and this gathering together for a common purpose each evening is calculated to have the most happy effects on the family itself. When the father and mother are the exercising a species of priesthood in the midst of their children, does it not inspire reverence for parents? If some have been grieved and vexed during the day by any of those thousand-and-one little vexations that may disturb peace and harmony anywhere, will they not be disposed to forgive and forget, when at the trials of the people so they share their prosperity. They are one with them in fact—for what is an Irish priest but the son of some Irish mother, cradled in the same arms and nursed at the same breast with brothers who have chosen other professions, schoolmates and neighbours to a whole country side.

TO WARDROBE, HIS NEIGHBOR, AND HIMSELF

These are the reasons why Catholics, and especially Catholics of Irish blood, respect and venerate the clergy.

OUR GIRLS.

There must be girls in this world. Dear you please it cannot be helped. They will come. Twas ever so, and so shall it be. Time, they are sometimes very provoking. But we can stand that as we do a disagreeable day. We know the clouds will pass and the rays come even perhaps at the day's close, and the sunlight will fall on us again. If we look today, we may find in our theme, or whatever other name it ought to have?

First, a little bit of humanity called a baby-girl in a cradle—with the very poor, on a pallet. It has voice enough to cry and for enough to kick. The mother, rich or poor, from cradle or pallet will take the babe girl and inflict a huge amount of kissing and fondling on the tiny thing.

If you would take the mother at her word you would, with horror imagine that she was going to become a downright cannibal. "I'll eat you up," "I'll devour you," and such like phrases they pour into the ears of the babes, they hang happily unconscious of the awful threat made against their lives on the very threshold of their existence. The mothers, however, do not execute their awful threats.

And so the babe grows. At two years of age the baby girl has the everlasting doll. From that to six the doll holds a very considerable part of her time in eating and drinking. Then the girl begins to play at housekeeping, etc. She seldom sees her father—a little while in the day, and at night to have him a kiss. If the father be poor, he works hard all day. If rich, he has more comfortable work, though none less exacting, so the whole care, physical and moral, of the girl rests on the mother.

AT FIVE OR SIX YEARS OF AGE

it is, at farthest, time to teach the girl some prayers! but many, very many are said over prayers, the saying of which will not try her patience. Meanwhile the girl goes to school and begins to have companions. In all schools, Catholic as well as public, there are bad companions. Now is the mother's anxiety to show itself, else her child may be ruined. It is an awful responsibility for mothers. Perhaps one half of them realize it. The sister or Priest can take the mother's place.

No Catechism class or Sunday school can ever supersede the maternal influence.

Comes the time for First Communion and Confirmation, which for most is a time unequaled in life. Unfortunately the outward garb, and not the inward grace, in too many instances, claims first attention.

Was in the Church, in those days of a girl's life, to advise societies, solicitine where the Virgin's life is made the first possession of land, that is God's gift to the people of the country and is not paid for. Men pay for the improvements men have made in the land, and for the protection of life and property given by the government, but not for the land. Man cannot sell what man does not own, and man neither owns nor has he created the land. God has

THE LAND OF THE COUNTRY

Being then the common inheritance of the people of a country—each member of the community who is willing to work—has a right to a share in the common inheritance, whereby he may earn a living for himself and family, or if he is willing to work in the land, and be a good and peaceable and useful for the general welfare of the country, then he has to require that the land should be so distributed and managed that those who till the soil shall be secure in the possession of the soil so as to well fairly balance his labor against their labor. Thus the balance and equalization of labor is the great object that the country has reasonable natural resources, the people are happy and comfortable. On the other hand, when the great productive elements of society is unequally distributed, one class owning the latter of the other, or one class overreaching the other, or capital unduly accumulating in the hands of a few, the balance favoring one class at the expense of another, then you have social upturnings, and national contests. The possession of the soil and its products underlies every contest, private or public, national or international. The land and its products are the great bone of contention, and the source of all the evil. The land belongs to the people of the world force and injustice have distributed it unfairly. Hence the land laws in terms with till the burden becomes too great, when pent-up injustice finds vent in outrage, and the oppressor and oppressed, vengeance the innocent are often involved with the guilty. This can hardly be avoided—it is the law of human nature.

POLITICAL CONFLICTS, CLASS ANTAGONISMS,

In America, where a man buys land and forever is master of it, it is hard to realize the land question. Here, if one has purchase land and forever own it, there a man rents land and forever has to pay rent. Here, there is every incentive to improve the land; there there is no inducement; on the contrary, there is every incentive against improvement of rent, systematically graded up under rack rent to the starvation point, so closely approaching the point that the poor man's life is a lingering death. Beggary and starvation is the present normal state of Ireland.

Why! will be naturally asked, is Ireland barren? No. Are the Irish lazy? No. Are the people incapable of commerce? She has. Why then do the Irish starve? Why is Ireland in a state of chronic rebellion? Let me explain.

LANDLORDISM.

The area of Ireland is 20,000,000 acres of which 6,000,000 are bog and mountain, leaving 14,000,000 acres of arable land, that is, Ireland is less than half by 6,000,000 acres of Scotland, and 1,000,000 acres of arable land. The present population of Ireland is 5,500,000, thus giving to each inhabitant two and a half acres of land, which is sufficient to raise food and clothing. The land is almost wholly held by a class known as landlords. Ireland is not a country peopled by the English, who have invaded Ireland.... These landlords just nothing for the land; the majority of them have not lived on the land, they have made no improvements, they make no improvements or even the land. They never spend a penny to enhance the value of the land, nor do they labor upon the land. The naked condition of the Irish landlord is simply this—the English subdued Ireland, killed or banished the native chieftains, seized land lands, distributed them amongst successful soldiers or kindly favorites, who in turn rented the land to the native people. From the beginning the landlord was a conqueror, without sympathy with his tenants either in religion or race. The land landlord, reduced to his native dexterity, is simply a leech, that has sucked out the life and energy of Ireland to such a point that it has fed the Irish people but potatoes for food and mud hovels for homes.

To add to this!

COMMERCE OF IRELAND.

Ireland has no commerce; no home industries; no manufactories; no exports not a single channel by which trade or money is brought into the country. Not that Ireland could have nothing to sell or could not have manufactures, nor trade, nor commerce. All these she could have. She has most fertile soil; coal, water power, rivers, harbors, magnificent grazing country, and is capable of one of the finest linen and woolen fabrics in the world.

Every one of these have been tried and found a success; but Ireland's success was so much taken from England's profits, so trade and manufactures are by law forbidden. Even the fish caught in Irish waters needs go to English and Scottish ports to be branded ere they could get into the markets of the world. It is but yesterday that an Irishman could get out of his native land unless he went to England, from whence he shipped. Everything must go through English ports, though Ireland is a seaboard island with some of the best harbors in the world. Trade, in Ireland has early been, nor under present or past laws can there be any manufactures or commerce. Add to this that the greater part of the rental of the land is drawn out of the country and spent in England or on the continent by an absentee landlordism, and you have in full the true cause of Ireland's permanent

BEGGARY AND CHRONIC REBELLION.

After a brief allusion to the Irish land issue in Europe, and the advantages possessed by the landlord classes in England and Scotland over those of Ireland, Bishop Gilmour alludes to LANDLORD AND TENANT IN IRELAND.

Ireland has all the disadvantages of feudalism without a single advantage. The Irish landlord is totally alien in race and religion; generally a non-resident, without a single thought of sympathy with the people, seldom visits his estate, and, if he does, the tenants; see not their condition; spends his rents in England or on the continent, and is represented by an agent who finds favor with his employer in proportion to the amount of rent he succeeds in extracting.

Again, tenants in Ireland have no rights in the land, neither fixity of tenure nor right of improvements. They build, drain, they clear, they fence, they manure, they reclaim bog, or mountain, or barren land, only to have their rent raised or turned out. The landlord makes no improvements on the land. The cabin of the tenant becomes tidy the rent is raised; if the fences and fields look clean the rent is raised; if the tenant succeeds in look comfortable, and his wife and children begin to dress well, his rent is raised. In Ireland industry is taxed; economy is taxed; thriftiness is taxed; every endeavor to improve the land is taxed. Turkey and Ireland are blighted under the curse of land levied by the government, in the latter by the landlord.

In Ireland there is absolutely no encouragement for industry, because there is no reward for labor. The Irish tenant is without motive or incentive to labor beyond raising a bare sufficiency to keep from starvation. The tenant knows that every motive to be idle, because he knows the moment his place begins to look neat his rent will be raised. The Irish peasant's cottage schools were forbidden and a price put on the schoolmaster's head. The Irish legislation Ireland has been reduced to a state of slavery worse than ever was our Southern slavery. The Southern slave master had invested his money in his slaves, and had consequently to the extent of the money invested, an interest to keep the slave in condition to work for him, but the Irish landlord has no interest, but the Irish tenant may live or die, but the rent must be paid.

Add to this, the Irish landlord is a conqueror, the tenant the conquered; the landlord is hereditary foe and oppressor, identified with every oppressive law and act that has befallen Ireland and the Irish people, sits in Parliament to legislate against the tenant, is backed by soldiers and police to evict; is both landlord and land-assessor. Every power is in his hand to the tenant is a penny-less to the landlord. His interest is to keep the tenant poor and oppressed, and he has succeeded admirably, he succeeded. There are, of course, exceptions, but they are against both law and custom. Ireland, of all the nations of Europe, is the only one where it is the interest of the ruler to keep the people poor and ignorant. In Irish, English rule has effectually succeeded.

IRISH DISCONTENT,

in the light of the foregoing of things is it any wonder that Ireland is poor, its people ignorant, commerce and trade dead, the country, and the people in rebellion? The wonder is not that the Irish grumble, or occasionally rise in open rebellion, the wonder is they do not shoot every agent and landlord in Ireland. Were it not for the Catholic religion they would. This Catholic religion says "thou shall not kill." "Thou shalt not steal." The Irish people have preferred famine and death rather than robbery and murder. Woe be to the Irish people if the Church land forgets her Catholic conscience and slays the robe of France, maddened by oppression and reaping in blood. If ever a people were justified in rebelling against oppression the Irish are. On the question of the right of Ireland to rebel, I say the Ireland there is no question. Ireland has the right to rebel against England.

THE RIGHT OF REBELLION.

England holds Ireland by the right of conquest. England has oppressed and crushed Ireland as no nation has ever been; destroyed her laws and language; destroyed her commerce and industry; crushed out the energies of her people and reduced them to a state of poverty; forbidden her education, and by the most atrocious cruelty would, if they could, have robbed them of their faith. The Irish people are the only things England has not taken from Ireland. Ireland's right to rebel against England is not a question of law, but of right to rebel, and of to-morrow Ireland could throw off the yoke of England, Ireland would be justified in so doing, no would there be a bishop or priest who would say nay. But Ireland cannot successfully rise against England. She has neither arms, nor money, nor men, nor war supplies. To rebel merely to be slaughtered is folly, is a crime.

IT IS NOT THE RIGHT OF REBELLION

That is in question, but the probability of success. The Irish people are justified in rebellion a just cause and a reasonable prospect of success. The first Ireland has, the second she has not. Therefore the folly and criminal madness of those who would counsel rebellion and drive an unarmed people to certain slaughter, and reduce them to a condition worse than at present. In this you have the answer to the folly and criminal madness of the Fenians and Skirmishers who seek to goad on the people to rebellion and certain slaughter. In this you have the answer to the American bishops and priests, and sensible men, to any attempt at rebellion, or any measure that would bring Ireland into armed conflict with England. The Irish people are tired of the blustering braggadocio of the dynamites or the ridiculous invasion of Canada.

REBELLIOUS MEANS—SENSIBLE WORK,

And wiser heads, and more honest hands than are have presented themselves as the representatives of the dynamite folly, or "no rent absolutes." If Ireland is to succeed she must resort to other forces than armed rebellion or French Communism. Ireland's cause is altogether too sacred and Ireland's present struggle altogether too important to be endangered, as it at present greatly seems to be, by the infusion of any unlawful principle or dishonest warfare. If Ireland is to succeed, she must succeed on the justice of her cause, and God knows she has cause enough, and justice enough to carry her to victory, if not free her from the tyranny of landlordism. But Ireland must be calm and sober in her struggle; and in patience and unity agitate and discuss.

IRELAND'S HOPE.

I ask, then, has Ireland no hope? Is there no means of uniting her people and enlisting the solid co-operation of her laborers, lay and clerical, bishops and priests, and presenting an unbroken front to the enemy? Is there no means and feasible way by which Ireland can fight and with success? I say, yes, I say, yes, with every fibre of my being I say, yes, there is. Ireland has a battle-cry, a legitimate battle cry, that is properly used will carry her victory; it will give her people land, food, clothing and make her as she ought to be, a land free, men, and slaves.

What, then, is your battle cry? you will naturally ask. I answer, the Land League now, and HOME RULE AFTER.

I order these two battle-cries—Land League first, Home Rule next. Ireland will and must come to Home Rule, but it is impractable. No sane man disputes either, and no sane man will say God speed to both, and by money and talents, and all permissible ways, do his best for their success. The Irish have a right to the land, and property; they have a right to self-government. The former, however, they must buy at a fair price, the latter they must be able to maintain. Let us calmly and dispassionately discuss both subjects, more particularly the former.

THE LAND LEAGUE.

No movement since the Repeal under O'Connell has so excited Ireland as the Land League agitation. Congress and parliament have been busy. The Land League is more than a name, it rings at every man's door. The Land League has unified Ireland, it has excited the sympathy of the world.—Two years ago the cross failed, and Ireland was a beggar before the world. The cause was gave the Irish leaders an opportunity to bring the condition of Ireland before the world. Public opinion forced England to look the matter in the face, the press discussed it and English statesmen were forced to consider it. The Land League would not down. Ireland had gained the ear of the world, and for the first time in years Ireland forced England to listen to her, and the ear of the world was attentive to the Irish question, and in the face of the bitter opposition pass a land bill, that if passed would be a great boon to the Irish land wait with joy, but to-day has but added to appetite for more.

Now whence this recent power to stir up England to her centre and fit the eyes of the world on Ireland? It is not for her independence, that was raised in the Repeal movement; not famine, that raged in '46 and '47; not the sympathy of the world expressed, no new oppression has been manifested to them, in what, in what consists this new power? Why it consists in the Home Rule for Land League! Names are powerful, more than names invisible principles.

THE LAND LEAGUE EXPLAINED.

There are two forms of the "no rent policy one "no rent absolute," and the other "no rent relative." The first is "robbery absolute," the second "no rent conditional. The first cannot be adopted, the second may or may not according to circumstances.

Catholic theology teaches that where a person has been robbed of a robber, he has the right to recover to the extent of the injury done—by force if necessary. If the robber cannot be reached, or privately. Now no one doubts there are Irish landlord tenants in Ireland who have been robbed by their landlords, and it would be justified publicly or privately in withholding the rent as a just compensation for the injury done. Where such cases are clearly established the tenant is certainly justified in refusing rent till such time as he has taken measure repaid himself for the injuries done him by his landlord. If the compensation can not extend beyond the injury done to himself; it cannot extend back to the injuries done his forefathers. Nor can the fact that landlords as a class have done injury to a people as a whole be made a ground of withholding rent to hold the rent. The injury must be done by the individual landlord to the individual tenant ere the individual tenant would be justified in holding the rent.

GENERAL INJUSTICE WILL NOT JUSTIFY PRIVATE INJUSTICE.

Compensation must be from the particular individual injured to the identical person injured. That the Irish landlords as a body have done injury to the Irish people as a whole, will not justify Irish tenants in withhold the rent where the landlords have not been injured. Individuals may withhold rent to the extent to which they have been injured. But to proclaim "no rent" as a general principle is not tenable, and if persevered in will bring failure on one of the most sacred movements ever inaugurated in Ireland. This must not be, shall not be, and every man and woman here or elsewhere who has a particle of love for Ireland and her tenants' cause, should rise in his might and cry out "it shall not be." The fair name of Ireland must not now be tainted with robbery. Heretofore Ireland has been honest, even if poor.

THE MAN PREFERRED DEATH TO DISHONOR.

Nor will she now write dishonor on her flag or place herself before the world as a robber, and thief. Pray that the Land League may stand, that the principles it advocates may stand, and that folly may not destroy so much that is commendable. Resist the present system of land tenure, keep it up if you will, but recognize the rights of the landlord. Cease in your efforts till the people own their land and each man can put his foot upon a piece of ground and say "mind and rain may enter here but the landlord may not." And I believe the Land League is capable of doing this.

THINGS PROMPTLY.

To accomplish this you will naturally ask what I propose. Well, then, I propose First, for the present the tenant shall pay a fair rent, but no more. Second, the landlord shall give the tenant fixity of tenure. Third, the improvements made by the tenant during his occupancy shall be the tenant's property. Fourth, in time the landlord shall be forced to sell the land to the tenant for which the tenant shall pay a fair price. Fifth, Ireland shall have Home Rule, and thus be enabled to develop her own resources, establish manufactures, and open her own way of commerce with the world.

I believe all this can be ultimately accomplished if the Land League movement is not destroyed by the folly that has started this unfathomed "no rent" cry. By persistant agitation all this can be accomplished; not in a day, but in time it can.

SIXTY YEARS STEADY AGITATION have given to Ireland emancipation, enfranchisement of freeholds, schools, a Catholic University, Maynooth, disestablishment, the encumbered estates, and the late land act—a clear, marked, decided advance since 1829, when O'Connell was the first Catholic member of the English Parliament since the Reformation. What has been accomplished in the next sixty years Ireland can do, if she plays her game with honor, her tenants her proprietors and her Parliament in Dublin. But rebellion or robbery will bring another. The former will end in defeat, the latter in disgrace. England is not to be frightened by the threat of rebellion, nor will she yield a jot at the cry of "No rent." The cry will but increase her stronger and Ireland weaker. Let the tenant fair rent, fixity of tenure; give him in the tenant right of Ulster, and in twenty years Ireland will be changed from a land of death and desolation to a land of comfortable comfort, and in forty years the tenant will be able to purchase the land. Then force the landlord by proper legislation—recognizing his rights while enforcing the tenant's—to sell at a fair price such portions of his land as he will not till. Let the landlord work as well as the peasant. This is not a world for drones. Let all men eat their bread by the sweat of their brow. If the landlord will not work let him starve. He is no better than his neighbor. To king and peasant God has said, work. When the land is taken from the landlord, let him be paid for it, and with this cash capital let him start manufactures. There is no reason why an English or Irish landlord shall sit in idleness or eat the bread of oppression. God has given him no such privilege. The Irish people have a right to live, and if a right to live, they have a better than potatoes and a mud hovel, often not fit for a pig.

IRELAND, MUNSTER AND CONNAUGHT

THE HAVE A RIGHT TO THE LAND.

They have a right to education. They have a right to self-government. But for these rights they must work, for the land they must pay, and the self-government they must agitate. By these means they will succeed, but they will never succeed by robbery or rebellion.

"No rent" will kill the Land League, strength and prosperity to Ireland, England back for years to come. "Fair rent, fixity of tenure, right in improvements, obtainable ownership, and Home Rule," will unite Ireland, honor her use, and bring victory. Which will you choose?

THE LAND LEAGUE REVIVED.

The condition of the tenant in Ulster is nearly better than in any other part of Ireland, and because the Protestantcare mostly in Ulster it is claimed they are indifferent to the cause. This is a mistake. The religion of the tenants in Ulster has absolutely nothing to do with their prosperity as the Emperor of China had to do with the last eclipse. The cause of Ulster prosperity is in the tenures of the land there, not in the religion of the tenants. Let me explain.

During the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., Charles I., and Cromwell, the Irish chieftains were defeated, murdered or banished, their lands confiscated, and the people driven to "Connaught or hell," as was said. Then English and Scotch adventurers, already or queenly favorites were brought in, the land divided, and Protestants imported from Bedgeland and Scotland, the descendants that they be planted; that is, that they be rooted in the soil, and that they would remain. The Protestant tenant was placed right in the improvement of the lands were parceled out. The tenant had motives to work, for his savings were his own. He had fixity, hence had a home.

AS LONG AS HE PAID HIS RENT

He was practically secure. If the landlord wished to dispossess he must compensate him for his improvements, and often the improvements were more value than the land. To this was, and is due, the prosperity of Ulster, not to the religion of the people.

In the other provinces of Ireland there is no such protection. There the tenant is absolutely at the mercy of the landlord. He has neither fixity of tenure nor right in his improvements, no incentive to industry, nor motive to cleanliness; on the contrary, shiftlessness, dirt, squalor, are all at a premium, for the simple reason that the least sign of improvement means a rise in rent. Hence the houses of the Irish peasants are hovels, their clothing rags, their food potatoes, and their condition beggary.

MONOPOLIES.

In America monopolies are becoming grave cause of fear, monopolies of manufactures, monopolies in railroads, oil, coal, iron, lead, but the most dangerous of all monopolies is that of land. But in Ireland the land is the one grand and all absorbing monopoly. Land among a class of men foreign in race and religion without sympathy or interest in the people; absentees spending their money in England or on the continent. Most of these landlords hold thousands, and many of them tens of thousands of acres, and that in counties where there are but two and half acres to each inhabitant, and that taxed to the starvation point, and the tenant liable to be turned out at a moment's notice. Nay, many of them have the power to raise rent to quit, as was the case with the late Lord Leitrim, who regularly served his tenants with notices to quit on the last quarter's payment of rents, and at whose death, it said, no comely woman was safe. No wonder he was shot, yet his death was murder.

AIMS OF THE LAND LEAGUE.

To remedy these evils was the Land League started, and in honesty seeking their remedy is the strength of the movement. The object of the Land League is to do what has been done in France and

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEWMAN & FREUD,
1025 & 1027 Stockton St.,
HAVE JUST RECEIVED A COMPLETE ASSORTMENT OF
GERMAN KNITTING YARNS, AND COTTONS.
POMPEDOURE, Berl

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1882.

The Catholic Church in the United States.

Every Catholic is supposed to be interested in the progress of the Church in the United States, yet we must confess that there is a great want of interest among Catholics on this very point. How few Catholics know anything of the Church outside their own immediate vicinity; they could scarcely tell the name of the adjoining See, much less evince any knowledge of the general advancement of the Church in those United States. It is for the instruction of such Catholics that we take up Sadlier's Catholic Directory for 1882, wherein we find statistics which will both interest and instruct every reader of the MONITOR who feels himself part of that Church whose progress in this land it is his duty to promote.

In the work before us we have correct statistics from seventy-one archdioceses, dioceses, and vicariates apostolic in the United States, these ecclesiastical divisions containing 13 archbishops and 62 bishops; 6,366 priests, 1,532 ecclesiastical students, 5,975 churches, 1,145 chapels, and 1,568 stations. In the matter of educational institutions we have 32 ecclesiastical seminaries, 79 colleges, 513 academies, and 2,476 parochial schools, attended by 399,188 pupils. In the nature of charitable institutions there are returned 248 asylums and 126 hospitals. The total Catholic population is set down at 6,370,858.

This is a summary of the strength of the Church in these United States where—only a short century since—a Catholic bishop was entirely unknown! In 1785, when Dr. Carroll submitted to the Propaganda a statement of the condition of the Church in the United States, the number of Catholics was computed to be about 25,000, viz.: In Maryland, 16,000; in Pennsylvania, 5,000; the number of Catholics in other sections was too insignificant to enumerate. How changed is all this! Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, now reports 210,000 Catholics under his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and Bishop Wood, of Philadelphia, returns 300,000 Catholics as the number of his flock alone, not counting the other See in the State.

In point of Catholic population the Archdiocese of New York returns the largest number, 600,000. Boston returns 320,000; Chicago, 230,000; Milwaukee, 200,000; New Orleans, 250,000; Brooklyn, 200,000; San Francisco, 185,000. The smallest number of Catholics is in the Vicariate Apostolic of North Carolina, there being but 2,300 therein. Oregon (returned last year as containing 20,000 Catholics) is reported this year as containing 10,000 which is about correct, as there never was 20,000 Catholics in that State.

In point of Catholic education the Diocese of Vincennes, with only 90,000 Catholics, returns 150 parochial schools and 20,000 pupils, while Boston, with 320,000 Catholics, has but 28 parochial schools. New York has 33,847 children attending 109 parochial schools; St. Louis, with 145,873 Catholics, has 17,564 children attending 106 parochial schools. Covington, Ky., has only 52 churches, yet it supports 61 schools; Louisville has 107 churches and 132 schools. The greatest number of churches in any one diocese is returned from Milwaukee, there being 258 against 211 in Cleveland and 216 in St. Louis. The Diocese of Leavenworth, of comparative recent organization, returns 80,000 Catholics and 148 churches, being a larger number of edifices than reported by old Dioceses like Louisville, Buffalo, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh.

In this Archdiocese the returns indicate the strength of the Catholic Church to be represented by 154 priests, 116 churches, and 22 chapels or stations; 6 colleges, 12 academies, 5 asylums, and 4 hospitals. During the past year there have been six churches built in the Archdiocese.

In the Diocese of Grass Valley the statistics return 31 priests, 35 churches, and 70 stations; 4 female religious institutions, 4 literary institutions, 3 orphan asylums, and a Catholic population of 14,000.

In the Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles there are 30,000 churches complete and 4 building; 16 chapels, 36 stations, 29 secular priests in parishes, and 12 regular priests; 2 literary institutions, 4 female and 1 male orphan asylum; 7 convent schools; and 1 hospital. Catholic population about 21,000.

In the Archdiocese of Oregon there are 25 priests, 24 churches and chapels, 71 Sisters who conduct 9 academies, 1 orphan asylum and 3 hospitals.

Such are the figures which represent the status of the Church in sections of the country where less than half a century ago the name of a Catholic was never heard of, but which is now the richest and most promising portion of the vineyard of Christ.

A CHRISTIAN GENERAL.

One of the most regular attendants and frequent communicants at the humble church of St. Joseph, Washington, is a fine-looking elderly gentleman, always so devotionally intent as to attract attention, even though he were not a stranger. This is General William S. Rosecrans, brother of Bishop Rosecrans, of Ohio, and now a member of Congress from California. His high command in major-generals, and active participation in the Western campaigns of the late civil war, are fresh in the minds of all. After shedding his sword, he removed to California, where he has since been actively engaged in business pursuits.—Baltimore Catholic Mirror.

—Father Drumgoole's Home for homeless children is finished and will be blessed in April.

Bishop Gilmour's Great Lecture.

We commend to the careful perusal of all our readers the magnificent lecture delivered recently by Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, which we publish on the second and third pages of the present issue. The Bishop presents one of the strongest incidentals against England that has so far emanated from any dignitary of the Church in America, and, from the general tone of his discourse, it is very evident that Bishop Gilmour takes precisely the same view of the Irish Land question as that participated in by all the prominent Prelates of the Church in Ireland. Like them, Bishop Gilmour re-echoes the plea that the land of a country belongs to the inhabitants thereof for their use and benefit; he proclaims the doctrine that every man—no matter under what code of laws he may live—is entitled to life, liberty and happiness—three factors that have never been ingredients in the daily life of the Irish tenant-farmer since the time when the curse of Cromwell's presence fell upon the fair land.

On the important point of "no rent" Bishop Gilmour expresses his conviction very plainly that he is opposed to such a doctrine if it means that rent shall not be paid under any circumstances. But, according to the definition given of the manifesto in question by those qualified to speak, the measure is merely intended as a temporary resource of a crushed people against the injustice of a class who have kept them in the most abject poverty and the most degraded slavery for centuries. Thus it becomes a war measure, the stringent application of which ceases the moment landlord and tenant have agreed upon a rental whereby the latter can live upon the product of the land he tills, just as well as the landlord, who neither enclosses, enriches or cultivates a food of the land from which he reaps an exorbitant rent at the sacrifice of the health, the comfort, the happiness, and—alas! too often—the very lives of the poor tenantry who have been driven to death through despair.

We quote this lecture of the Bishop of Cleveland as one of the most important expressions of opinion from an ecclesiastical source yet given in America, and we hope it will receive that attentive reading which the source from which it emanates entitles it.

Mormonism and Mongolian Slavery.

Readers of the MONITOR will be glad to learn that Congress has at length arrived at the conclusion that legislative enactments must be leveled at Polygamy in order to blot out that dark spot from the national escutcheon. We ardently hope that when Polygamy has had a Congressional knock-down it will be allowed to lie quietly, and put upon it the law-makers of the land will turn their attention to the bill introduced by Senator Miller, on Chinese immigration, which seems to us the best bill on that subject yet offered. We are glad, in this connection, to notice that a change for the better has come over the journals in the East—where the weight of public opinion on the Chinese question has been felt most against California's best interests. It is comforting, therefore, to read even in the New York Herald such sentiments as these, bearing, as they do, a radical change in the hitherto expressed opinions of that influential journal. Alluding to the Chinese evil, the Herald says:

"But, while the Chinese have been of service to America in many ways, the fact that they represent a teeming vast empire; that it is within the power of China to throw into the American ports and millions of these laborers, and that, if not checked, they could swarm over the Pacific coast and practically occupy it, is the real point to be considered. We are not hunting up a Mandarin or an African or a Tartar Republic, but a nation of white Christian men and women. We do not desire to have in America small classes of rich, prosperous men living at the expense of myriads of poorly paid, industrious people. It is of more consequence to have a large, thrifty, intelligent, well-paid, working class of our people, than if this class come the best citizens. If the influence of the immigrants, from Pacific to Atlantic States is to weaken or diminish or lower the moral force of our working classes, then it should be restricted. A great deal is due to China as a friendly nation, and on its wise future we have a crowing interest, but a great deal is due to the laboring classes of our country, and especially those living on the Pacific coast.

Another paper which has a great influence on public opinion throughout the Western States is the Cincinnati Enquirer, and we are glad to see that it so gallantly champions the cause of California after this fashion:

"Bad as Mormonism is, Mongolian slavery is worse. The presence of the Chinaman is now damaging than the Mormon influence. The Pacific States have been praying for release from the Chinese thraldom. It is already overcrowded with a population which makes beggars of honest American workingmen; which encourages capital to oppress labor; which practically makes the results of the war of 1861-65, because it establishes a system of semi slavery. The people of the Pacific Coast have a right to demand legislation which will arrest the immigration of the worst Oriental elements. Sentiment about the hospitality of the American Government to all the nations of the earth is just as impertinent as the long-afflicted Californians. There is nothing American about the Chinese. They are incapable of becoming American citizens. They are brought over in vessels that deserve to be called nasty slave-ships. They stay till they make what to them are fortunes, and return home with money which ought to have circulated to the comfort and happiness of Americans. Then fresh loads of coolies are sent over to continue the degradation of American labor. Congress has the opportunity, but fails to take effective action. The Chinese question stands in front of Mormonism as a subject demanding restrictive legislation. It ought to be placed in advance of any question now before Congress.

Such expressions of public opinion prove that the people of the Eastern, Middle and Western States understand the nature of the Chinese question much better now than they did a few years ago, when, by arts and arguments, selected from two prominent political organs, gives us at least a little assurance that one of the most vital questions affecting the prosperity of the whole coast will soon be successfully solved.

—The American College of the Immaculate Conception, at Lovvain, will celebrate its Silver Jubilee on the 19th of next month.

The Eagle of the Rock of Cashel.

The commanding attitude assumed by Archbishop Croke at the very first organization of the Land League has been well maintained in all his subsequent addresses, especially in the brief but brilliant speech we published in the MONITOR last week and which has been received with deserved commendation by all who read it. We know that his Grace of Cashel holds a place in the hearts of his countrymen from whence his memory can never be effaced.

It has well been said that the great events of the world have ushered into fame the men who grasped the current idea, molded it, and gave it a successful issue. In the same way Archbishop Croke was the first Prelate to blow the banner of the Land League and to sanctify the cause which—please Providence—will yet result in restoring Ireland to the Irish people and of restoring the Irish people to the soil from which they sprung. And when that auspicious time arrives the name and fame of him whom his neighbors delight to call "the Eagle of the Rock of Cashel," will resound throughout the length and breadth of both hemispheres amidst the hosannas of a happy Irish people.

In order that the readers of the MONITOR may understand the love which is cherished for Archbishop Croke, not only by the Irish people in Ireland, but also by those in alien lands, we extract the following from a leading editorial in one of the most influential Catholic papers in Great Britain, a paper that has ever boldly upheld the cause of Ireland in England, and thus virtually boarded the English lion in his den. The paper in question is the London Universe, wherein we read this well-deserved eulogy of as pure a patriot as Ireland ever produced among the long litany of her martyred prelates and priests

"The patriotic Archbishop of Cashel is already and faithfully keeping up the glorious traditions of the See of Cormac. Bold, wise, and eloquent saying the right word at the right time, carrying on back-stairs favor in Castle ante chambers, and stooping to no mean device to win popularity, Thomas W. Croke is as great, stainless, and single-minded a Prelate as ever sat enthroned in the city of the Synod. There is a saying that the crisis creates the man and he, undoubtedly and before all, is the man for this crisis in the history of his country. By his learning and judgment, by the influence of his personal character, and the dignity of his ecclesiastical position, he stands forth conspicuous, towering a head in moral stature over his fellows, as the free-born and and freely-accepted Guide, philosopher and friend of the Irish people—the successor of the Laurence O'Toles and the Oliver Plunkets, the Dochertys and the MacHales; the heir of their loving fidelity to their mother land, and the rival of their patriotic renown.

"When he speaks, all Ireland—not merely the Ireland at home, but the greater Ireland beyond the sea—hearkens, for he speaks with an inspired voice—the voice of Prophet and Tribune.

"Since the elected leaders of the Irish, who are in the throes of a death struggle with a system, so powerful as it is odious, have been shelved and immured in the felon's dungeon, Thurles is the point to which expectant Ireland has turned for counsel. Thomas W. Croke is the man for the Hour, on every utterance of whose lips millions of his countrymen have hung.

"And he has proved a good and watchful sentinel. He has sounded the tocsin of danger, and, if need be, he will be the first to mount the breach and to die in the defense of his country. He has shown himself a true patriot, and as fearless in his protestations on behalf of the oppressed tenantry as when Parliament was omnipotent was free, he was among the earliest to denounce unwarranted outrage, and to urge the people to be steadfast to the principles of non-committal to prison, and to set the fashion of contributing to the fund for their maintenance in lieu of a pecuniary subscription under his name. It is no wonder, therefore, that he is now loved and listened to with pleasure, and that the people, in politics as in religion, should place weight at times with a willing compliance.

"His time made one of his earnest addresses this week—a pithy one, but one nevertheless that will go straight over the continents where the Irish exiles are scattered—and where are they not—like the echo of an avenging trumpet. The Archbishop was on a visit to his brother Prelate of Waterford, the Most Rev. Dr. Power, and the citizens of the Fair City eagerly availed themselves of the opportunity of giving him a serenade and doing him every honor in their power. In answer to their compliment, he stood on the threshold of the palace of his host and addressed a brief harangue, full of the truth and fruitfulness. After thanking the thousands of his fellow-citizens who had met him, he took occasion to refer to the recent land agitation, and he did so in this words assume their broad significance and the emphasis that achieves. 'A word of it, I, the threshold oblonta, as his Grace amicably informed them, never spoke of it, but the Prelate rack resists to an equitable level, secondly, to end the Irish people in the Irish soil; and lastly, to prevent emigration. Why—with any pretence of reason, hold that these objects are reprehensible in the sight of God or man, or in the opinion of one of God's Bishops?' It is an axiom of Holy Writ that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and by a parity of argument those who till the earth should have the right of enjoying such a fair proportion of its fruits as would enable them to thrive. There is no Communism here. It is the simplest of fair play—the business doctrine of Christ and the Church. Time. Then, who has a better claim to live on Irish soil than those who were born there—whose ancestors are buried there—whose affections are interwoven with its history—who are as truly Irish as the bog-oak and the round towers? If the natives are to be rejected from the salubrious climate, what shall we say of the alien colonists who have swarmed and settled upon the land, like a cloud of hungry locusts, and fattened on the patience? If Ireland is over-populated and some must emigrate, then we say—and the Archbishop of Cashel will agree with us—let the landlords and the Crown-allies emigrate, and that speedily. Grace is not partial to emigration. He thinks there is room enough for all. Emigration is good in its result sometimes, but it is never an unmixed good, and it is always a painful process to the rending of family ties and the precious of home associations. That the Irishman dearly loves his home none will deny who has ever seen him abroad tenderly kissing the shamrock sent from the old sod by some fair friend in time for St. Patrick's Day, or who has watched his plastic face as some dear ballad and melody was being played, or who has read the accounts of those enthusiastic meetings of exiles in Great Britain, America or Australia, where every allusion to Green Erin of the distance is cheered to the echo, and money is freely extracted from the hard-earned savings of the hundreds who are assembled in help of any cause at all—provided it be an Irish cause.

"Grant the day may come when the aspiration of the Sentinel on the Rock may be realized, and Irishmen shall remain in Ireland because they can live there in peace and comfort and honor."

We have commenced a regular canvass among the Catholics of this city in the interest of the MONITOR, and we hope to swell our subscription list several thousand. This week two gentlemen will canvass St. Patrick's parish, and as soon as that portion of the city is completed they will attend to St. Joseph's and this continue on until the city has been thoroughly worked. In this work we ask the co-operation of the Rev. Clergy and the friends of the Catholic cause in our efforts to place the MONITOR in the homes of every Catholic family in California. At $3.00 a year none are so poor as to refuse to receive it.

A New American Cardinal.

The rumor is again revived that America is about to be accorded the honor of having a native-born citizen wear the Scarlet of Cardinals, and it is also publicly reported that Rt. Rev. Bishop Elder is to be elevated to the dignity.

Our information comes through the Rome correspondent of the London Tablet, who would not likely give currency to such a rumor unless there was some foundation for it. The cause assigned for the increase of another American member of the College is that set forth by the correspondent in question:

"It is reported that in consequence of the growing importance of the work of the Catholic Church in the United States, a special Propaganda Congregation for American Affairs will be created by Leo XIII., just as a special Congregation for Oriental Affairs was created with high happy results by Pius IX. In fact, the American business at the Propaganda yearly assumes larger proportions and leaves to the ordinary capabilities of the present staff of officials. Some say that the American Department will be entrusted to the supervision of American officials resident in Rome, but this is hardly possible, for no simple ecclesiastics could be placed in a position to override the decisions of America's Bishops. It seems more feasible that a separate Congregation of Propaganda for American Affairs should be appointed, with an American Cardinal Prefect, and an American Monsignor as Secretary. If Cardinal McCloskey could not be summoned to reside in Rome, there are Dr. Corrigan, Coadjutor Archbishop of New York, and Dr. Elder, Coadjutor Archbishop of Cincinnati, both of them well known in Rome, and of unquestioned fitness for the purpose, whose advice in American matters would carry weight in the Vatican. They, who be the Prefect of the North American Congregation of Propaganda, Cardinal, the late Rector, are also well-known in Rome, and would be most favorably received in all official conferences on American Church Affairs. It was unfortunate that the death of Father Hecker, the learned and beloved Bishop of Arbiaca, prevented his being called to Rome on the occasion of Holy See, which were to send him as Apostolic Delegate to the United States."

Was the Duke of Wellington an Irishman?

Quite a controversy has sprung up between the Gaill and the Chronicle on this question, the former journal maintaining that he was, and the latter journal asserting that he was not a native of Erin. In this respect the Gaill is right and the Chronicle wrong, but, inasmuch as the question one which presents many points of interest to the readers of the MONITOR, we intend next week to devote some editorial space on the birth and life of one who, though a son of the Celtic soil, was more English than the Englishmen themselves. Wellington's attitude on the question of Catholic emancipation shall also be explained, but not in the sense alluded to editorially by the Chronicle.

DEATH OF REV. JOSEPH LEROY, OF VINCENNES, IND.

The Diocese of Vincennes lost two its most over the loss of as good and as faithful a priest as ever lived, in the death of the late Father Leroy. Rev. Joseph Leroy, whom we knew in Vincennes, departed this life in Washington, in sweet resignation to the will of God, in the month of December last. Father Leroy had been an invalid for many months, his disease being that of the heart, which finally terminated in a dropsical condition of the system. At the arts of medical skill. A few months ago he came to Washington City, and, by the advice of his medical friends, we visited him in St. Mary's Hospital, and found him sick into death, but resigned to the will of God. Father Leroy was a native of Ireland, and, from his early years, devoted his talents to the service of God. He was ordained in the Diocese of Vincennes, Ind., and for the profundity of his dispositions and the amiability of his character, he was beloved by all who knew him. He was a man of great learning, and, in the life of the dear deceased is familiar to all who knew him, and, in the hearts of his people, he

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1882.

The Catholic Church in the United States.

Every Catholic is supposed to be interested in the progress of the Church in the United States, yet we must confess that there is a great want of interest among Catholics on this very point. How few Catholics know anything of the Church outside their own immediate vicinity; they could scarcely tell the name of the adjoining See, much less a since any knowledge of the general advancement of the Church in those United States. It is for the instruction of such Catholics that we take up Sadlier's Catholic Directory for 1882, wherein we find statistics which will both interest and instruct every reader of the MONITOR who feels himself part of that Church whose progress in this land it is his duty to promote.

In the work before us we have correct statistics from seventy-one archdioceses, dioceses, and vicariates apostolic in the United States, these ecclesiastical divisions containing 13 archbishops and 62 bishops; 6,366 priests, 1,532 ecclesiastical students, 5,975 churches, 1,145 chapels, and 1,568 stations. In the matter of educational institutions we have 32 ecclesiastical seminaries, 79 colleges, 513 academies, and 2,476 parochial schools, attended by 399,188 pupils. In the nature of charitable institutions there are returned 248 asylums and 126 hospitals. The total Catholic population is set down at 6,370,886.

This is a summary of the strength of the Church in these United States where—only a short century since—a Catholic bishop was entirely unknown! In 1785, when Dr. Carroll submitted to the Propaganda a statement of the condition of the Church in the United States, the number of Catholics was computed to be about 25,000, viz.: In Maryland, 16,000; in Pennsylvania, 5,000; the number of Catholics in other sections was too insignificant to enumerate. How changed is all this! Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, now reports 210,000 Catholics under his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and Bishop Wood, of Philadelphia, returns 300,000 Catholics as the number of his flock alone, not counting the other Sees in the State.

In point of Catholic population the Archdiocese of New York returns the largest number, 600,000. Boston returns 320,000; Chicago, 250,000; Milwaukee, 200,000; New Orleans, 250,000; Brooklyn, 200,000; San Francisco, 185,000. The smallest number of Catholics is in the Vicariate Apostolic of North Carolina, there being but 2,300 therein. Oregon (returned last year as containing 20,000 Catholics) is reported this year as containing 10,000 which is about correct, as there never was 20,000 Catholics in that State.

In point of Catholic education the Diocese of Vincennes, with only 90,000 Catholics, returns 150 parochial schools and 20,000 pupils, while Boston, with 320,000 Catholics, has but 28 parochial schools; New York has 33,847 children attending 109 parochial schools; St. Louis, with 145,872 Catholics, has 17,584 children attending 106 parochial schools. Covington, Ky., has only 52 churches, yet it supports 61 schools; Louisville has 107 churches and 132 schools. The greatest number of churches in any one diocese is returned from Milwaukee, there being 250 against 211 in Cleveland and 216 in St. Louis. The Diocese of Leavenworth, of comparative recent organization, returns 80,000 Catholics and 148 churches, being a larger number of edifices than reported by Old Dioceses like Louisville, Buffalo, Philadelphia or Pittsburgh.

In this Archdiocese the returns indicate the strength of the Catholic Church to be represented by 154 priests, 148 churches, 22 chapels or stations; 6 colleges, 15 academies, 5 asylums, and 4 hospitals. During the past year there have been six churches built in the Archdiocese.

In the Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles there are 30,000 churches complete and 4 building; 16 chapels, 36 stations, 29 secular priests in parishes, and 12 regular priests; 2 literary institutions, 4 female and 1 male orphan asylum; 7 convent schools and 1 hospital. Catholic population about 21,000.

In the Archdiocese of Oregon there are 25 priests, 24 churches and chapels, 71 Sisters who conduct 9 academies, 1 orphan asylum, and 2 hospitals.

Such are the figures which represent the status of the Church in sections of the country where less than half a century ago the name of a Catholic was never heard of, but which at present is the richest and most promising portion of the vineyard of Christ.

A CHRISTIAN GENERAL.

One of the most regular attendants and frequent communicants at the humble church of St. Joseph, Washington, is a fine-looking elderly gentleman, always so devotionally intent as to attract attention, even though he wore not a stranger. This is General William S. Rosecrans, brother of Bishop Rosecrans, of Ohio, and now member of Congress from California. His bible is thumbed as major-general, and active participations in the Western campaigns of the late civil war, are fresh in the minds of all. After shedding his sword, he removed to California, where he has since been actively engaged in business pursuits.—Baltimore Catholic Review.

—Father Ivo—sole's Home for homeless children in Leslie and will be blessed in April.

Bishop Gilmour's Great Lecture.

We commend to the careful perusal of all our readers the magnificent lecture delivered recently by Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, which we publish on the second and third pages of the present issue. The Bishop presents one of the strongest indictments against England that has so far emanated from any dignitary of the Church in America, and, from the general tone of his discourse, it is very evident that Bishop Gilmour takes precisely the same view of the Irish Land question as that participated in by all the prominent Prelates of the Church in Ireland. Like them, Bishop Gilmour re-echoes the plea that the land of a country belongs to the inhabitants thereof for their use and benefit; he proclaims the doctrine that every man—no matter under what code of laws he may live—is entitled to life, liberty and happiness—three factors that have never been ingredients in the daily life of the Irish tenant-farmer since the time when the curse of Cromwell's presence fell upon the fair land.

On the important point of "no rent" Bishop Gilmour expresses his convictions very plainly that he is opposed to such a doctrine if it means that rent shall not be paid under any circumstances. But, according to the definition given of the manifesto in question by those qualified to speak, the measure is merely intended as a temporary resource of a crushed people against the injustice of a class who have kept them in the most abject poverty and the most degraded slavery for centuries. Thus it becomes a war measure, the stringent application of which ceases the moment landlord and tenant have agreed upon a rental whereby the latter can live upon the product of the land he tills, just as well as the landlord, who neither enriches nor cultivates a food of the land from which he reaps an exorbitant rent at the sacrifice of the health, the comfort, the happiness, and—alas! too often—the very lives of the poor tenantry who have been driven to death through despair.

We look upon this lecture of the Bishop of Cleveland as one of the most important expressions of opinion from an ecclesiastical source yet given in America, and we hope it will receive that attentive reading which the source from which it emanates entitles it.

Mormonism and Mongolian Slavery

Readers of the MONITOR will be glad to learn that Congress has at length arrived at the conclusion that legislative enactments must be leveled at Polygamy in order to blot out that dark spot from the national escutcheon. We ardently hope that when Polygamy has had a Congressional quietus put upon it the law-makers of the land will turn their attention to the bill introduced by Senator Miller, on Chinese immigration, which seems to us the best bill on that subject yet offered. We are glad, in this connection, to notice that a change for the better has come over the journals in the East—where the weight of public opinion on the Chinese question has been greatly against California's best interests. It is comforting, therefore, to read even in the New York Herald such sentiments as these, betokening, as they do, a radical change in the hitherto expressed opinions of that influential journal. Alluding to the Chinese evil, the Herald says:

"But, while the Chinese have been of service to America in many ways, the fact that they represent a heathen yet superior race, that is with the power of China to throw into American cities and millions of these laborers, and that, if not checked, they could swarm over the Pacific coast and practically occupy it, is the real point to be considered. We are not building a Mongolian or an African or a Turkish Republic, but a nation of white Christian men and women. We do not desire to have in America small classes of rich, prosperous men living as the princes of myriads of poorly paid, industrious coolies. It would be a misfortune to have a large, thrifty, contented, well-paid, working class of our own people, but of this class only can our country live. It the influence of the immigration of the Chinese to the United States is to succeed in diminish or lessen the moral force of our working classes then it should be restricted. A great deal is due to China as a friendly nation, and one in whose future we have a growing interest, but a great deal is also due to the laboring people of our States, and especially those living on the Pacific coast."

Another paper which has a great influence on public opinion throughout the Western States is the Cincinnati Enquirer, and we are glad to see that it so gallantly champions the cause of California after this fashion:

"Bad as Mormonism is, Mongolian slavery is worse. The presence of the Chinaman is more damaging than the Mormon infliction. The Mormon State has been peopled at expense of its Chinese bondsman. It is already over-stocked with a population which makes beyond a thousand American workingmen; which encourages capital to oppress labor; which practically marks the results of the war of 1861-65, lessens the value of a system of semi-slavery. The people of the Pacific Coast have a right to demand legislation which will arrest the immigration of the worst Oriental elements. Sentiment about the hospitality of the American Government to all the nations of the earth is lost on the practical and long-afflicted Californians. There is nothing American about the Chinese. They are incapable of becoming American citizens. They are brought over in vessels that deserve to better name than slave-ships. They stay till they make what to them are fortunes, and return home with the money which ought to have circulated to the comfort and happiness of Americans. Then fresh leads of coolies are sent over to continue the degradation of American labor. Congress has the opportunity to take effective action now. The Chinese question stands in front of Mormonism as a subject demanding restrictive legislation. It ought to be placed in advance of any question now before Congress."

Such expressions of public opinion prove that the people of the Eastern, Middle and Western States understand the nature of the Chinese question much better now than they did a few years ago, and these sentiments, selected from two prominent political organs, gives us at least a little assurance that one of the most vital questions affecting the prosperity of the whole coast will soon be successfully solved.

—The American College of the Immaculate Conception at Lovanio, will celebrate its Silver Jubilee on the 19th of next month.

The Eagle of the Rock of Cashel.

The commanding attitude assumed by Archbishop Croke at the very first organization of the Land League has been well maintained in all his subsequent addresses, especially in the brief but brilliant speech we published in the MONITOR last week and which has been received with deserved complimentary notice by the press, showing that his Grace of Cashel holds a place in the hearts of his countrymen from whence his memory can never be effaced.

It has well been said that the great events of the world have usherd into fame the men who grasped the current idea, molded it, and gave it a successful issue. In the same way Archbishop Croke was the first Prelate to bless the banner of the Land League and to sanctify the cause which—please Providence—will yet result in restoring Ireland to the Irish people and of restoring the Irish people to the soil from which they spring. And when that auspicious time arrives the name and fame of him whom his neighbors delight to call "the Eagle of the Rock of Cashel," will resound throughout the length and breadth of both hemispheres amidst the hosannas of a happy Irish people.

In order that the readers of the MONITOR may understand the love which is cherished for Archbishop Croke, not only by the Irish people in Ireland, but also by those in alien lands, we extract the following from a leading editorial in one of the most influential Catholic papers in Great Britain, a paper that has ever boldly upheld the cause of Ireland in England, and has virtually boarded the English lion in his den. The paper in question is the London Universe, wherein we read this well-deserved eulogy of as pure a patriot as Ireland ever produced among the long litany of her martyred prelates and priests

"The patriotic Archbishop of Cashel is bravely and faithfully keeping up the glorious traditions of the See of Cormac, Bold, wise, and eloquent saying the right word at the right time, carrying no back stairs' favor in Castle ante-chambers, and stooping to no mean device to win popularity, Thomas W. Croke is as great, stainless, and single-minded a Prelate as ever sat enthroned in the city of the Synod. There is a saying that the crisis creates the man; and he, undoubtedly and before all, is the man for this crisis in the history of his country. By his learning and judgment, by the influence of his personal character, and the dignity of his ecclesiastical position, he stands forth conspicuous, towering a head in mental stature over his fellows, as the fore-ordained and freely-accepted 'guide, philosopher and friend' of the Irish people—the successor of the Laurence O'Toles and the Oliver Plunketts, the Dowlings and the MacHales—the heir of their living fidelity to their motherland, and the rival of their instrious renown.

"When he speaks, all Ireland—not merely the Ireland at home, but the greater Ireland, beyond the sea—hearkens, for he speaks with an inspired voice—the voice of Prophet and Tribune.

"Since the elected leaders of the hosts who are in the throes of a death struggle with a system, as powerful as it is odious, have been arrested and immured in the felon's durance, Thurles is the point to which eyes of Irishmen have turned for counsel. Thomas W. Croke is the sentinel on the Rock, on every utterance of whose lips millions of his countrymen have hung.

"And he has proved a good and watchful sentinel. His utterances have not been merely those of a Bishop, but they have been those of a patriot; and he has followed up his sympathy and attested the sincerity by substantial aid to the good cause from his purse. He has not been guilty of defection because of apparent disaster to the cause; he has not been cowed by the frown and so forward in his protestations on behalf of the oppressed tenantry when Parnell and his companions were free; he was among the earliest to denounce the unwarranted arrests of the people to be steadfast to the principles of those committed to prison, and he set the laudable example of contributing to the fund for their maintenance in jail by a generous subscription under his hand. It is no wonder, therefore, that he should be loved and listened to with pleasure, and that his precepts, in politics as in religion, should carry weight and meet with a willing compliance.

"His Grace made use of his earnest address this week—a pithy one, but one nevertheless that will go ringing over the continents of the Irish exiles are scattered—and where are they not?—like the notes of an awakened trumpet. The Archbishop was on a visit to his brother Prelate of Waterford, the Most Rev. Dr. Power, and the citizens of the City asserted eagerly availed themselves of the opportunity of giving him a welcome and doing him every honor in their power. In order to their compliment, he came down to the threshold of the palace of his host and delivered a brief harangue, full of the old fire and intrepidity. After thanking the musicians for the tribute they had paid him, he took occasion to refer to the present land agitation, and in a few but his words became their broad significance. He did not conceal that, while he was for all in the three-fold objects, as his Grace succinctly epitomized them, were good, namely, firstly, to reduce rack-rents to an equitable level; secondly, to crush the Irish people in the Irish soil; and, lastly, to prevent emigration. Who, can, with any pretence of reason, say that these objects are not righteous in the sight of God, and desery of the approval of one of God's Bishops? He is an admirer of Holy Writ that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and by a parity of argument he who tills the earth should have the chance of enjoying such a fair proportion of the fruits as would enable them to thrive. They are plain commonsense. It is the simplest of fair play, the business doctrine of live and let live in action. Then, who has a better claim to live on Irish soil than those who were born there—whose ancestors are buried there—whose affections are interwoven with its history—who are as truly Irish as the bog oak and the round towers? If the native are to be expected from the aliened, then what shall we say of the alien colonists who have swarmed into settle on the land, like a cloud of hungry locusts, and fattened on its produce? If Ireland is over-populated and semi-miserable, then we say—and the Bishop of Cashel will agree with us—let the landlords and the Commission supervise sent first. But Dr. Croke is not partial to emigration. He thinks there is room enough for all. Emigration is good in its result sometimes, but it is never an unmixed good, and it is always a painful process, in the rending of family ties and the severance of home associations. That the Irishman dearly loves his home none will deny who has ever seen him abroad tenderly kissing the shamrock from the old sod by some friends in time for St. Patrick's Day, or who has watched his pinched face as some clear said rail melody was played, or who has read the accounts of those enthusiastic meetings of exiles in Great Britain, America or Australia, where every allusion to 'green Erin of the stream' is cheered to the echo, and money is freely extracted from the hard-earned savings of the banished, to be expended in help of any cause at all—provided it be a bright Irish cause.

"Grant the day may come when the aspiration of the Scottish on the floors can be realized, and Irishmen shall remain in Ireland because they can live there in peace and comfort and holiness."

• • •

We have commenced a regular canvass among the Catholics of this city in the interests of the Monitor. Rev. Father Prendergast, Bishop Mc Mahon, of Hartford, and the eminent author of "Green Erin of the stream" is chosen to lend his aid, and money is freely extracted from the hard-earned savings of the banished, to be expended in help of any cause at all—provided it be a bright Irish cause.

• • •

The Rev. Father Prendergast, Bishop Mc Mahon, of Hartford, and the eminent author of "Green Erin of the stream" is chosen to lend his aid, and money is freely extracted from the hard-earned savings of the banished, to be expended in help of any cause at all—provided it be a bright Irish cause.

• • •

Grant the day may come when the aspiration of the Scottish on the floors can be realized, and Irishmen shall remain in Ireland because they can live there in peace and comfort and holiness."

• • •

We have commenced a regular canvass among the Catholics of this city in the interests of the Monitor.

CALIFORNIA.

Home for the Homeless - A Land of Promise.

If ever a country merited the description given of the promised land by the Jewish spies in the land of Israel, that country is California. It is a "good land; a land of wheat and barley and vines and fig trees and pomegranates; a land of oil, and olive, and a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack anything in it." Even the extravagant description of the mineral resources of Canaan given by the spies are more than realized by actual facts in California. Its mountains are charged with minerals, its streams wash golden sands; its rivers teem with fish, its forest glades are alive with game. The conditions of existence are more favorable in this state than elsewhere to men of the Caucasian race. The climate is mild and agreeable. California is never devastated by tornado or decimated by disease. The soil is fruitful and rewards the industrious.

Here, indeed "the hand of the diligent maketh rich."

IT LACKS ONE THING ONLY—POPULATION.

California contains 100,992,640 acres of land, the great proportion of which is capable of cultivation, either in raising cereals, grass for pasture, or fruit. In extent it is nearly as large as Old Spain, which has a population of 16,000,000, and has ten times the productive capacity of that country. Yet, in 1880 California only had a population of 865,556 souls. Belgium with 11,373 square miles of territory, supports in comfort a population nearly seven times as numerous as California, with its 158,361 square miles. If California were as densely populated as Belgium, it would contain ninety-two millions of inhabitants; and furthermore, it could sustain that population very easily if the soil were fully cultivated by a thrifty, law-abiding, economical people. The want of California therefore, is people. It has no other want.

It has abundance of capital waiting investment. It has vast regions of virgin land waiting cultivation. It has a perfect system of land and sea transportation; but it lacks people. This fact will be better understood when it is stated that of the present inhabitants of the state, two thirds of them are engaged in commercial, manufacturing and kindred pursuits, and live in cities and towns. The producing population engaged in agriculture is very small. Therefore California holds out unusual inducements to Eastern farmers who find themselves crowded by Western competition while being forced to contend against the adverse annual influence of long and severe winters. There need be no interruption to farm work the year round in California, even in the most northerly counties. The little snow that falls does not lie long; it melts and supplies never failing springs with water. In the large valleys in some places, the heat is great in summer; but it is never oppressive, and the death of man or beast by sunstroke is rarely if ever recorded.

LAND IS CHEAP IN CALIFORNIA.

There is abundance of Government land for pre-emption and homestanding in accessible places. The railroad grants are open for selection and settlement at rates ordinarily varying from $2.50 to $5 an acre. Large landowners are segregating their estates and selling upon easy terms to settlers. The government land is generally more remote than land held by private owners for speculation, but this is not so much of a drawback as might be supposed, because railroads are being built in various directions. In a very few years every part of the State will be covered with a network of railroads, making transportation easy. But the more remote districts may be cultivated profitably now. The foothills raise the best fruit in the world, and the demand is practically limitless. California pears, peaches and plums are sold in New York and London with the bloom of the Pacific Coast upon them. What might be done in fruit raising may be inferred from the fact that a working man was paid this season $2,200 for his grape crop of 2½ acres in Santa Clara county, the buyer gathering the fruit. Grapes sell in bulk at from $20 to $30 per ton, and much higher prices are paid for fine table grapes. Grapes realize to the grower from $60 to $200 per acre, according to variety and age of vineyard.

Apricots, plums and peaches are equally, if not even more profitable. Hundreds of families are living in comfortable independence and growing rich upon the products of their orchards and fruit patches in California, who arrived poor. Fruit raising is not confined to one locality. Peaches, figs and grapes ripen, and yield large crops, under the snow shadows of Mount Shasta in the north, as well as in Los Angeles and San Bernardino in the south.

SHEEP RAISING AND WOOL GROWING

Has become a settled industry. Nothing pays better than a well-graded flock of sheep. California will soon become the banner wool State of the Union. Three crops of alfalfa hay may be cut in many sections, and two crops without irrigation in all parts of the State. In some of the southern and middle counties irrigation is necessary, but the tendency is to overdo. In northern California, even on so-called "desert land," water everywhere is so near the surface that deep cultivation is all that is needed to insure a crop. Hog raising is also profitable in California, either with dairying or grain farming. Bee keeping a special industry, and may be profitably followed without other occupation in many counties in the State. Instances of rare success might be given in each of these branches in farming.

It will suffice to state, however, that steady, hard working men hardly ever fail in California. There have been failures, but usually the whisky saloon, or politics, or gambling, or all three combined, were more to blame than a failure of crop. Industry, skill, frugality and perseverance are as necessary to success in California as elsewhere, but, with these given, the reward is greater.

Men must work in California as they must work to be successful. If they do not work, or want to do so, this is no place for them. California would much rather do without immigration than have it of the lazy, loafing class.

Consumptives use Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Why does not the proprietor of Ammen's Cough Syrup publish testimonials from those who have been cured or relieved by his medicine? The answer is, the greater the humbug the more testimonials they publish. Ammen's Cough Syrup is no humbug, and to prove that and let it stand on its own merits, a 15 cent sample bottle is prepared, which is certainly more convincing than a testimonial from a stranger. Large bottles, $1.00. Ask your druggist for it.

Needless Misery.

Many people miserably drag themselves about with failing strength feeling that they are sinking into their grave when Parker's Ginger Tonic would begin with the first dose, to bring vitality and strength back to them.—Sun.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the extraordinary cures of Kidney Disease as well as the power and virtues of the articles of which they speak, we publish extracts from the sworn testimonials of persons whose veracity is beyond question. The truth of these testimonials is absolute, and can on the ban be by anyone be ignored.

OAKVIEW HOTEL,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., OCT. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves by intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks decreased so as to make me think that gradually I was cured. I passed stones varying in size from the head of a pin to a good sized pea. When the stones passed from the kidneys into the bladder, I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys down inside the hip bone, down in front and along the course of the urinary passages. At the time this was usually attended with discharges of the neck of the bladder. The pains were very severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning very often. At times, when the stones were discharged, at times, the pains were so severe that they succeeded almost in convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which, each claimed to have a specialty, and they gave me to understand that I could never be cured. Learning about your Kidney and Liver Cure in advertising columns, I commenced taking it about two months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I was passed a stone without any pain, since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

S. O. Lewis

OAKLAND, CAL., NOV. 11, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and loins. At times these pains scarcely intrude; but when I did, it was attended with severe pains and burning sensations. I was doubt almost commencing to take your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, as I had taken so much medicine without obtaining any relief, but I concluded that it would do me no harm to try it. I am cheerfully willing that nothing has given me so much relief. I believe it to be a thorough cure for kidney and bladder troubles.

E. B. Lollie
314 A Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., NOV. 25, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My friends insisted that of refreshing, is one that often induces and allayed inflammation, and I found it to be a very aggressive and effective medicine. I was induced to use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, immediately taking it, and before returning one of your bottles, found my health and strength returning. I never felt better in my life than I now do. I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

J. Austin Gilley

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., MARCH 19, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last two years, and have tried all the different medicines advertised for that disease, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I have also tried many of the medicines prescribed by physicians, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I have now been using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now perfectly well. I can cheerfully testify that it does all you advertise and claim for it.

A. W. Van Winkle

AUBURN, CAL., April 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for three years, and have been treated by physicians, both allopathic and homoeopathic, and never was relieved until I commenced using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Geo. H. Crosby

RAVEN, ROSS, Dec. 4, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and find it all you claim for it in kidney troubles.

E. T. Farmer
President Santa Rosa Bank

ALAMEDA, CAL., Nov. 22, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after taking two bottles the pains all left me, and I have had no return of pains since.

Chas. L. Milcox

OAKLAND, CAL., NOV. 11, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with pains in my back and kidneys for the past four years, the effects of a severe strain received in the performance of my duties. Knowing of friends in the east, that had been cured by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, was induced to try it, and it has proved in my case decidedly beneficial.

Geo. H. Hogge
Twenty-fifth and New Broadway.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Oct. 26, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My symptoms were pain in the back, also a burning sensation in two places directly over the kidneys. This was more severe when I had taken cold, as the cold always settled in my kidneys. I was treated by a physician who pronounced my case complicated, and the doctors failed to cure me. I have tried several remedies, but failed to obtain relief until a friend recommended your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I have taken several bottles of it, and feel like a new man. I have no pain in my kidneys, and have greatly benefited in health.

M. C. Crumby
504 Stockton Street

San Jose, Cal., Nov. 6, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure effected. Am feeling better than for years, never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was enabled to resume my business.

Very truly yours,
Austin Gilley

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the glossy and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most, if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white candies. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.
Practical and Analytical Chemists,
Lowell, Mass.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE
610 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Dock, and a few doors above Montgomery street.
HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands, Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. m16-3m

OLIVER C. GILSON & CO.,
25½ O'Farrell Street,
(Near Stockton street, San Francisco.)
HAS A NEAT AND RESPECTABLE CHINESE HELP Office, managed by Mrs. Gilson, who speaks the language and are thoroughly experienced.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

D. C. PRESTON,
—DEALER IN—
STOVES, RANGES AND TIN WARE.
PLUMBING, METAL ROOFING, AND GENERAL JOBBING.
CONNECTING RANGES AND WATER-BACKS A SPECIALTY.
1241 Mission street.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER
CAN BE CURED
By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.
IN PROOF OF WHICH HE BEGS LEAVE TO REfer to the following named persons, who have been cured by him:
James Lakin, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
A. Grady, Petaluma, cancer of the neck.
James J. McKelvey, Santa Barbara, cancer of the lip.
Mrs. O'Connor, 1416 Tyler street, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Sarah Kloll, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the nose.
Mrs. Chas. Blackburn, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the nose.
Master Warner, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
Bode, Walsh, Milpitas, cancer of the face.
Martin Murphy, San Francisco, cancer of the neck.
Mrs. Lloyd, Fisherman's Bay, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
J. C. McKinnon, Sulphur Creek, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
Mrs. Fogg, No. 1 Market street, Room 34, San Francisco, cancer of the neck.
My Cornwall, East Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
Stephen Hamlin, Santa Rosa, cancer of the nose.
Rem Hamlin, Eagleville, Modoc county, cancer of the face.
Stanton Myers, Freeport, Sacramento county, cancer of the lip; and two additional cures of Charity, one of San Francisco and the other of Los Angeles, and others too numerous to mention.
Treatise by which these cures are performed mailed free. Cancer in a plaster, the recipe for which was left me by my father at his death, is being used with astonishing results in Ireland, England and the United States. Persons who know themselves to be laboring under this form of disease who may wish to avail themselves of this cure will find me at the Brook Inn Hotel, Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

CHICKERING PIANOS.
B. CURTAZ, AGENT,
No. 20 O'Farrell Street.

WESTERN HOTEL,
212-14 Broadway Street,
JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor.
(Late Broadway Hotel.)
$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit Free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.
$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Use refer to all the principal trainers and horsemen on the Pacific Coast.
N. B. Mr. O'Kane is indebted to his friends and business acquaintances for their kind patronage during the past year, and hopes by strict attention to business and a desire to please, to merit a share of the same.

JOHN J. DONOVAN,
Painter and Kalsominer,
No. 6 Potter (Twelfth st.)
Bet. Mission and Market . . . San Francisco.

Sewing Machine Agency,
NO. 151 FOURTH ST.
Bet. Mission and Howard . . . San Francisco.
ALL KINDS OF SEWING MACHINES CHEAP. AN Iron Frame Machine rented for $2 a month. Repairing done. Needles and Oil.

Assortment
Beautiful Lamps
Suitable for Presents
Bronzes, Vases, Statuettes, Fine Clocks, Fancy Goods, Bronze Statuettes, Lamps, Bronze Fountains, Bronze Statuettes, Lamps, Bronze Fountains, Bronze Statuettes, Lamps, Bronze Fountains

Market Report.

CORRECTED WEEKLY BY F. J. DALY, 305 AND 307 SANSOME STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE,
622 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Feb. 23, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The Produce Market has been rather inactive the past week. Wheat promises lively sales at good figures. Potatoes stand firm. Butter is active at good prices. Eggs are weak. Sugar is better demand and stronger. Coffee sells freely at quoted rates.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receivers prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@$5 62½; City Superfine, $4 75@$5; Interior brands, $4@$4 25 for extra, and $4 50@$4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 40@$1 42; No. 2, $1 36@$1 37½ per cental.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 90@$1 95; Standard Chevalier, $1 75@$1 85; Feed, $1 80@$1 85 ⅌ ctl.

Oats—
Quotable at $1 72½@$1 77½ for common and $1 90@$2 10 ⅌ ctl for goods to choice; Surprise, $1 90@$1 95 ⅌ ctl.

Corn—
Quotable at $2 05@$2 25 for Yellow; White, $2 20 ⅌ ctl.

Hay
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $15@$16; wild oats, $13@$14; volunteer and stable, $9 50@$12; clock, $9 50@$11 ⅌ ton.

Rye—
Quotable at $2 25@$2 30 ⅌ cental for choice.

Buckwheat—
Quotable at $1 50@$1 55 ⅌ ctl.

Straw—
Quotable at 60@70c ⅌ bale.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 16@16½c; California, 13@13½c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@15½; Extra Clear Sides, 14@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c ⅌ lb.
PORK—Extra Clear, ⅌ bbl, $24 50; do in half bbls, $12 50; Clear, ⅌ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12 00; Mess ⅌ bbl, $22@22½; do half bbl, $11 50@$12; Prime Mess, ⅌ bbl, $19@$19 50; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ⅌ bbl, $16@$16 50; Choice Pig, ⅌ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12; do ⅌ kegs, $3 25@$3 50.
BEEF—Mess Beef, ⅌ bbl, $10@$10 50; Extra Mess do, $10 50@$11; Mess Beef, half bbl, $5 50@$6; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $6@$6 50; Family do, ⅌ bbl, $13@$13 50; Family do, half bbl, $6@$6 75.
LARD—Eastern Refined, tcs, 16c; do in fancy pails, 15@15½c; do in 10-lb. tins, 14½c; do in 5-lb. tins, 14½c; do in 20-lb. wooden buckets, 15c; California, in tcs, 13@14c; half bbls, 14@14½c; in 10-lb tins, 13½@14c; 5-lb do, 13@13½c; in 20-lb wooden buckets, 15c; do in 3-lb do, 13@13½c; Royal 5-lb pails, 15½c ⅌ lb.

Potatoes—
Quotations are: Early Rose, $1 75@$1 90; Garnet Chili, $1 75@$1 90; River Red, $1 65@$1 75; Tomales, $1 75@$1 90; Oregon Peerless, $1 90@2 00; Burbank Seedlings, $1 80@2 00; Coffey Cows, $1 90@$2 00; Petaluma, $1 75@$1 90; Peach Blows, $1 90@$2 00; Sweet, $3 00@$4 00 ⅌ ctl.

Onions—
Quotations are: White, 65@75c ⅌ ctl.

Cornmeal—
Quotable at $42 00@$43 00 ⅌ ton; table meal, 3c ⅌ lb.

Beeswax
Quotable at 23@25c ⅌ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 26@30c; Fancy, 24@25c; Medium do, 20@22c; Pickle, 22@24c; Bulk Bed, 22@26c; Eastern Butter, 20@22c ⅌ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 13@14c; Eastern, 16@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 12@13c ⅌ lb.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 10@11c; Dressed, 13@14c; Ducks, $3 00@$6 00; Broilers, $1 50@$4 50; Hens, $3 50@$6 00; Young Roosters, $6 50@$7 50; Old, $4 50@$5 00 ⅌ dozen. Geese, $1 75@$2 00 ⅌ pair; Pigeons, $1 50; Squab, $2 50 ⅌ doz.

Eggs
Quotable at 21@22c for choice; 19@21c for Medium (California); Lime, 25c; Eastern, —@—; Salt Lake, —@—; Oregon, 20@22c ⅌ doz.

Domestic Fruit—
Quotations are: California Oranges, $1 75@$2 ⅌ box; California Lemons, $1 50@$2 00; Malaga, $6 00@$7 00 ⅌ case; Mexican Oranges, $3 00@$4 00 ⅌ hundred; Mexican Limes, $10 00@$12 00; California Limes, 50c@$1 25 ⅌ small box, and $3 00@$4 00 ⅌ large box; Bananas, $2 50@$3 00 ⅌ bunch; Pine Apples, $4 00@$10 ⅌ dozen; Apples, $1 25@$2 25; Oranges, do, $1 75@$4; Pears, 75c@$1 00 ⅌ box; Cranberries, $13@$16 ⅌ bbl.

Vegetables
Quotations are: Cabbage, 60@75c ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 10@15c ⅌ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@$12 00 ⅌ ton; Cauliflower, 75 ⅌ doz; Chile Peppers, 20@25c ⅌ lb; Dry Okra, 20c ⅌ lb; Turnips, 50c ⅌ box; Carrots, 60@75 ⅌ sack; Beets, 65@90c ⅌ sack; Green Peas, 12½@15c ⅌ lb.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 7c; second do, 5½c; third do, 3@3½ ⅌ lb.
VEAL—Dressed, 6@6½c ⅌ lb for large, and 8@9c for small; $6 for dressed calf.
MUTTON—Wethers, 4½@5c; Ewes, 4@4½c ⅌ lb.
LAMB—6@7c.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain Fed, on the hoof, 6@6½c; shoulders, 8½ ⅌ lb; soft, 5@6½c; Dressed, do, 8@8½; Roasting Pigs, alive, $3 00@$3 50.

MARRIED.

QUINN—THOMPSON—In this city on the 12th inst., by Rev. Father Larkin, of St. Patrick's Church, Thomas M. Quinn to Mary A. Thompson, both of this city. [No cards.]
MAY—COLEMAN—At St. Mary's Cathedral, by Most Rev. Archbishop Alemany assisted by Rev. J. Prendergast, V. G., Dr. Frederick May of Baltimore to Miss Cecelia Coleman, of this city.
LEONARD—MOONEY—In this city, February 16, by Rev. Father Larkin, Patrick Leonard to Mary Mooney, both of this city.
SMITH—CASEY—In this city, February 16, by Rev. Father Gallagher, Bartley F. Smith to Minnie J. Casey, both of this city.

DIED.

BURKE—In this city on the 14th inst. after a long and painful illness, Mrs. Mary Burke, beloved mother of Wm. J. Burke, a native of Tipperary, Ireland, aged 66 years.
COLEMAN—In this city on the 14th inst., J. Coleman, a native of Carnavar, County Cork, Ireland, aged 75 years.
FLYNN—In this city on the 15th inst., beloved wife of James Flynn, a native of the parish of Templemore, County Tipperary, Ireland, aged 42 years.
MURRAY—In this city on the 15th inst. Ellen, relict of the late John Murray, a native of the parish of Dromcrilly, County Leitrim, Ireland, aged 40 years.
CARRIGAN—In this city, February 20, Jane, beloved wife of Teddy Carrigan, a native of the parish of Killimogh, county Cavan, Ireland, aged 30 years.
COUHIG—In this city, February 19, John H. Couhig, a native of county Cork, Ireland, aged 33 years.
MALONE—In Sacramento, February 16, Mary, wife of Edward Malone, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years, 9 months and 7 days.
SLATTERY—In Petaluma, February 15, Rev. William Slattery, brother of Rev. Maurice and the late Rev. Daniel Slattery, aged 40 yrs.
ROONEY—In Brighton, February 8, John Jr., eldest son of John and Mary Rooney, aged 25 years, 1 month and 24 days.

Bishop Gilmour

— OR —

THE IRISH QUESTION.

[CONCLUDED FROM SECOND PAGE.]

Germany—divide the land among the people.

Half the population of France live by agriculture. Five million farms there are less than six acres; half a million average sixty acres; there are only fifty thousand that average one hundred acres. The peasants of France in great measure own their own farms. Hence their wonderful industry and extraordinary wealth, that enabled the French people to pay off so promptly the frightful indemnity exacted by Prussia at the end of the late Franco-Prussia war. The like is unknown in the history of the world. Even we, with all our wealth and wonderful expansion, could not have done what France did. The indemnity was the savings of the French farmers, and the strength of Prussia was her peasant yeomanry, nearly every one of whom was a freehold farmer.

As in France, nearly half the population of Prussia live by farming. In both countries the land is divided into small compact farms, that in their clean and neat appearance gives both countries the appearance of a highly cultivated garden. The same is both countries in the same. The people own the soil, hence have a motive for industry. The same is in Italy and Spain.

In 1851, Prussia, following in the line of France, abrogated medieval serfdom, brought up the land from the landowners, divided it into small farms and sold them on easy terms to the people. The same is now being done in Russia, and though not yet accomplished, Russia is on the right road. In a few years Russia will have transformed her boors into independent landowners. In this will be her strength, and with the grace of God the end of her Nihilism.

THE SAME MUST IN TIME COME TO IRELAND. England and Scotland—to Ireland first, because there the land tenure is worst. The great manufactures of England and Scotland have, so far, saved those countries from a land revolution, but with the prospective decadence of trade in England and the rapid development of our trade in America, the land question cannot long be delayed in either country. People will not starve while landlords riot in wealth. The land League is the entering wedge for land reform in England and Scotland. The movement has already begun in Scotland and promises to be one of the questions in the coming Parliament. In the face of these facts it behooves every lover of Ireland to see that the Land League movement in Ireland be not outlawed by the insane and dishonest cry of "no rent." Let honesty give strength to the struggle and union give courage to the timid, then there will be hope for the tenant, hope for the landlord, and hope for Ireland. If the cause of Ireland is entrusted to the madmen who form the radical wing of the Irish party, then her cause is done for, and the Land League will be ruined by the usual enemy of Ireland—disunion.

BOYCOTTERS.

As ever in such movements, there is in the Land League agitation a class of mad, irresponsible men, without means or position, with nothing to lose and all to gain. Adventurers—who under the plea of patriotism are constantly pushing themselves forward and assuming that they are the voice of Ireland, and are the only and true exponents of the Irish cause. They are ever crying blood and thunder, and to hear them talk one would suppose the British lion would be torn to pieces in a week. Dynamite and blunder is their stock-in-trade. They have a wonderful itching to handle money, are constantly crying for more, and when asked to give an account for moneys received they have no account to give. If any one questions their doctrines or doubts their motives, such a person is covered with abuse, denounced as a traitor to Ireland, anti-Irish, and in league with England to crush Ireland. As a class these men never will accomplish anything, but will damage any cause in which they are engaged. Their doctrines are untenable, their actions dubious, and they and in ridiculous Trout River expeditions.

THEY BRING RIDICULE ON IRELAND and the Irish cause, make men disgusted with their dynamic farce, play upon the honest patriotism of the people, waste their money, make Ireland ridiculous and invariably end in defeat or in farce. Witness the late proceedings here in the rule attack made on Archbishop Gross and Mathews because they condemned the "no rent" policy. No man doubts Archbishop Gross's or Archbishop Mathews's earnest, honest efforts in behalf of his country. No man in Ireland has laid more or more than he in behalf of the people, but because he would not accept what can not be accepted—"no rent" as a battle cry, then he is a traitor to Ireland. Those men are a scandal to Ireland, a weakness to her cause, and will bring disunion and defeat wherever they are. Their maxim is "rule or ruin" and for self they would sacrifice the most sacred cause. If the Land League fails, they, and they alone, will be the cause.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, let me present in condensed form the results of all I have said. First. I hold the land of a country belongs to the people of the country, not to a class. Second. All man must work, and thus be a factor of wealth in the country. Third. Where man hold large tracts of land to the great detriment of society and will neither till it themselves, nor at a fair price rent to others who will till it, it is right in such case society is self-defense has a right to take from such landlords the land they hold and give it to those who will till it but society in such case must pay the landlords a fair price for their interest in it. Fourth. Where the land is rented as a permanent form of land tillage, then must be fixity of tenure, and a fair rent guaranteed the tenant. Fifth. The rent of land must accrue to the laborer, else there is no incentive to work; hence the improvements made by the tenant belong to the tenant. Sixth. No man should be permitted to acquire wealth at the expense of another, nor is it safe for society that any one man, or class of men, should, by legislation or otherwise, be allowed to monopolize a monopoly in either land or trade. Seventh. The people of a country have a right to self-government.

Guided by these principles, I hold First. The people of Ireland have a right to the land of their country, but they must pay a rent for the use of it, the improvements made by the tenant being guaranteed to the tenant. Second. The Irish landlords, having abused their trust, oppressed this people and refused to cultivate their lands, shall be forced by proper legislation to sell their lands, for which the people shall pay a fair price. Third. Ireland shall have Home Rule.

All this, I believe, can be obtained by steady, judicious agitation, and is sanctioned in the principles of the Land League.

Hence, I hold by the Land League in its original form, which means "The Land for the people and Home Rule for Ireland, but I refuse to fight under the battle cry of "No Rent."

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—For many months I was a great sufferer. Physicians could afford me no relief. In my despair I commenced the use of your "Favorite Prescription." It speedily effected my entire and permanent cure. Yours thankfully, MRS. PAUL R. BANTER, Iowa City, Ia.

—The Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England, engages to find the money to establish a new Catholic See in England. His three wishes the Bishoprics have the title of Arundel, Hexham and Leeds.

Piles Cured.

Call at Dispensary of the Good Samaritan, 605 Kearny street, room 2, and get cured of Piles. No knife, caustic or other surgical appliances employed. Consultation free. A cure guaranteed or money refunded.

—Prof. Max Muller says of Darwinian evolution: "There is between the whole animal kingdom on the one side, and man, even on his lowest state, on the other, a barrier which no animal has ever passed, and that is—language. By no effort of understanding, by no stretch of imagination can I explain to myself how language could have grown out of anything, animals possess, even if we granted them millions of years for that purpose.

PIGEON COTCOTE is grateful to invalids, it is refreshing without the sickening effect of most perfumes.

—HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RESTORER is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to the original color. It makes hair soft, white and clean. It cures dandruff and humors and falling-out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes hair mold, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recognized and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assayer of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Restorer has increased with the test of many years, both in this country and foreign lands, and is now known and used in all the civilized countries in the world.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

—The National Surgical Institute, 319 Bush street, is the Western Branch of the N. Y. Institute of Philadelphia and Philadelphia, which is so celebrated for the cure of deformities and lameness, diseases of the spine, hip, knee, and all joints crooked limbs, club feet, feet, parapsis, ptosis and fistula. Call and see patients, and our facilities for curing them. References given and circulars sent if desired.

Is Catarrh, Bronchitis or Consumption Curable?

Dr. Fowler says it is, and he has grown gray in the practice of his profession, has held the "Chair of Heart, Throat and Lungs" in one of the best medical colleges of the East. The increase of practice gave him letters patent on an apparatus for changing the air of a low atmosphere into one of a high and vine vera. Said apparatus has been a great help to him in the treatment of lung difficulties. He gives no medicine in the stomach in the treatment of lung diseases. Send for his treatise on diseases of the lungs, write to him also for his opinion of your case; it will cost you nothing. He can furnish you hundreds of testimonials of cures given up by their friends before they came into his hands that are well to-day. Direct to 127 Kearny street, Room 7, San Francisco, California. — H. H. FOWLER, M. D.

$1,500 a year can be easily made at home working for E. C. Ridout & Co., 10 Park Place, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

—Save one-third of fashionable city tailor charges, without sacrificing quality or style of goods, or workmanship. Secure elegance, comfort and satisfaction, by patronizing J. Geilan, 1123 Howard street.

—A preventative for malarial disorders. A few doses will break up the worst chills—Simon's Ginger Tonic, 1023 Market street. It will give more ease and pains than any known remedy.

—Large number of new and second-hand Pianos of different makes, at all prices. See us before purchasing. Pierce & Co., 25 and 27 Fifth street. Open evenings.

—Save $150. Buy your pianos direct from the manufacturers. Wheelock & Co., New York, have opened an agency at 337 Sutter street. I. K. Gerard, manager. Instruments sold on installments.

—Nothing contributes more towards health than good bread. It is truly called "the staff of life," and people should be very particular that they are in procuring it pure. We can vouch for the fact that Weber's Saratoga Yeast is the best in the city, and you will find it at 5 Stockton street, fresh every day.

—C. T. Wyer & Co., proprietors of the Pacific Coal and Feed Yard, 849 Mission street, (between 4th and 5th) make it a rule to give their customers 2,240 lbs. to the ton of Coal, and yet they charge less than dealers who practice disreputable tricks of short weight and slaty coal. This firm prides itself upon the quickness and the goodness of the Coal they furnish their customers, and if you send them a trial order you will be convinced that it pays to deal with a firm who practice thorough honesty in all their dealings.

☞ Use nothing else but Mission Soap.

New Advertisements.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM PRICE 50 CTS

AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, INFLUENZA, CATARRH, LOSS OF VOICE, Incipient Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Ask for the California Pulmonary Balsam, and take no other.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. K. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome Street, S. F.

A Trial Will Convince You that
DR. J. D. MITCHELL'S
Eureka Cough Syrup
— IS THE —
MOST RELIABLE REMEDY FOR THROAT AND Lung Diseases, and all Pulmonary complaints. For sale by all druggists.
MANUFACTORY:
1211 Broadway, - - - - San Francisco.
Printing
COSMOPOLITAN PRINTING HOUSE, P. J. Thomas, 505 Clay St.

THE EYES! THE EYES!
DR. E. H. PARDEE,
OCULIST AND AURIST,
HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS PROFESSION in London, and will give personal attention to all who may favor him with a call. N.B. No accounts in the office. Large assortment of French artificial eyes constantly on hand. Office, 641 Clay street, San Francisco. Office hours, 9 A. M. to 12 P. M. Over Clay street Bank.

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Coos Bay Coal at - - - $ 9 50 a ton
Eastport Coal at - - - - - - 9 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at - - - - - - - 10 00 a ton
Scotch Coal at - - - - - - - 10 50 a ton
West Hartley Coal at - - - - - 10 50 a ton
and Wellington Coal at - - - - 11 50 a ton
Coke at Gas House Rates. Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1113 and 1115 Mission treet.

KNABE
PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALLED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.
204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

PINK DYE.
QUICK CURE AND ALSO PREVENTATIVE FOR the above disease. Sold by druggists. Prepared only by
D. J. O'CALLAGHAN,
Sole Proprietor,
38 Jackson street.

WOOD AND COAL.
HARRY LINCOLN,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
WOOD AND COAL,
Cor. Hayes and Gough Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Orders filled and delivered promptly in any part of the City free of Charge. ☞ At the Very Lowest Rates. ☜

J. M. JOHNSON,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Wood, Coal & Charcoal
YARD AT 413 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Orders left at "Dodge's" Stables, No. 32 Post street, will receive prompt attention. Telephone connection.

COAL. COAL. COAL.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.
DANIEL GIOVANNINI,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in all kinds
CHARCOAL,
WOOD & COAL,
510 Pacific Street, San Francisco.

COAL
AND COAL OIL!
At Lowest Market Rates.
245 Stevenson Street,
Between Third and Fourth Sts.
HARRY JONES, Proprietor

COAL. COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.
☞ Telephone number, 2152.

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of Ladies' and Gent's
BOOTS AND SHOES.
☞ Full Line of the Best Eastern Manufacturers and Custom Workingmen's Boots and Shoes constantly on hand.
Remember the Number
138 SIXTH STREET 138
Bet. Natoma and Howard

HAVING OPENED A
CARRIAGE REPOSITORY
(In connection with the FURNITURE BUSINESS)
AT THE
LARGE NEW DOUBLE STORE,
1047 and 1049 Market St., opp Mechanics'.
WHERE THEY GUARANTEE A FULL ASSORTMENT from some of the most celebrated Eastern carriage builders, and will sell at exactly FROM The stock was selected by Mr. H. Cambell, the present carriage builder of this city. Planters' before buying 1047 and 1049 Market St. J. H. BOSWELL

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture.
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JONAS J. MORRISON,
LUMBER DEALER,
Corner Mission and Spear Streets, SAN FRANCISCO

A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.
Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

MUSICAL BOXES.
M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 23 Dupont Street, San Francisco, Manufacturers and Importers. A. E. JUILLERAT, Exclusive Agent.
MUSIC BOXES REPAIRED.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL.
The Best Hotel in San Francisco
Hot and Cold Water Baths Free.

Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
H. CURRAN. Proprietor.
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY location and offers good accommodation to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to the Market of any in the city.
Board and Room per Day, $2; Board and Room per week, $12 50; Single Meals, 50c. Rooms per Night, 25 to 50c. Single Rooms, $1 to $1 50.
New Meal Tickets, $4. Free Omnibus for the use of Families. None but the most obliging, yet strictly polite attendants employed. Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

HARVEY'S
HOT-WATER RADIATOR

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERature without the extravagant waste of fuel inherent to the ordinary stove; gives a full atmosphere without the dry, parching air or noisome gases of the hot-air furnace or stove; a complete elimination of heat without the hissing or cracking of the steam system.
☞ Information or Descriptive Circulars sent free.
NO. 213
MISSION ST.,
Bet. Main and Beale,
SAN FRANCISCO.

COAL!
Full Weight and Low Prices,
JULES LAMBLA'S,
Cor. Sutter and Powell Sts., San Francisco.
☞ Just give me a trial order, and remember that no matter in business dealing, and one order will convince you of that.

THE ROYAL ST. JOHN.
The Royal St. John is the only sewing machine in the world which runs either
Forward or Backward
Without stopping or changing direction of work. It possesses the most points of excellence, the most new and valuable improvements, and is positively
The Simplest, Lightest Running and Most Durable Sewing Machine Made.
☞ Buying agents wanted, address
C. SHAWL, 30 Second street, San Francisco.

A CHILD CAN USE IT

MRS. M. H. OBER, 326 SUTTER ST
BOSTON AND CALIFORNIA DRESS REFORM.
An Elegant CORTIL CORSET, to order, for $6. Warth Under Garments, especially Children's Corset Waists, Cashmere and Merino Union Suits, Shoulder-Braces, Hygienic Corsets, Hose and Skirt Supports, Emancipation Waists, and Combination Suits. (SEND FOR CIRCULAR.)

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL
Patronized by our Pastors and Decorated by Catholic Publishers.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., 622 Clay street, San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
Per Year by Mail (or if paid in advance) - - - $2 00
Per Year by Mail if not paid in advance - - - 2 50
Six Months (not paid in advance) - - - 1 50
Three Months (not paid in advance) - - - 1 00
Per Month (if not paid in advance) - - - 50c
☞ Additional communications, subscriptions, books and postal orders to P. J. McTeague, Editor and Manager.
Monitor Office, Box 2231 P. O., San Francisco, Cal.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Soul; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiasticus iv. 64)

THE MONITOR
is now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its acknowledged popularity as a sound, and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes The Monitor a valuable medium for advertisers.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

To Correspondents.
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.
No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the name of the writer. This is required as a proof of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should write as briefly and as pointedly, and should be careful to write on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.
All communications and correspondence, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1882. NO. 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
H. B. SLAVEN.
The Baldwin Building.

PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING.
GOLD PLATING.
SILVER PLATING.
Elegant and Durable.
ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED. WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Lowest estimates given on request. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance. From the very lowest Silver Plated Ware, to the finest Gold Plate on any article desired. Our work is warranted the best made. Over the Bank entrance, 418 Montgomery street.
PLATING ESTABLISHMENT
In the Baldwin Hotel
San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,
653 and 655 Mission Street, but New Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco, Cal.
E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.
Assayer Fine Gold and Silver Bullion at the Mechanics Institute for the last twelve years.

J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
S. E. cor. Kearny and Post Sts.,
☞ Entrance, 37 Post St.

KANE & HEANEY,
DEALERS IN
Choice Butter, Cheese, EGGS, ETC.,
1 and 2 Corbin Block, 417 Corbin Street.

STATHAM
PIANOS
Are Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability.
SOLE AGENT FOR WHOLESALE INSTALLMENTS
At the Factory:
765 MISSION STREET, 765
Tuning and Repairing a Specialty. Send for Circular.

WINDOW SHADES, WINDOW FIXTURES, CURTAINS, ETC.
N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 Sacramento Street,
Cor. Webb, SAN FRANCISCO.
EMBALMING.
☞ Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.
GEO. G. GERE, M. D.
and Surgeon,
304 Sutter St., San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS: 11 to 2 and 6 to 8 P. M.

WASHINGTON AND GRATTAN

T. P. O'CONNOR'S

Eloquent Tribute to THE TWIN PATRIOTS OF AMERICA AND IRELAND.

Washington's Character Analyzed by a Member of Parliament.

Historical Truths for American Catholics to Consider.

DAN O'CONNELL'S POETICAL TRIBUTE.

The celebration of the Grattan Centennial in this city on Wednesday evening last drew a very large and enthusiastic audience to the Metropolitan Temple. Professor Liebe, Mrs. Richmond, Miss Kate Field, Mr. Barry and Mr. Duffy of this city furnished a variety of vocal and instrumental music, and Mr. Duffy read the letter of Mr. Colmell, the distinguished Irish poet contributed a poem, which was read by Mr. Barry, and which will serve to add another laurel to the rare literary talents of the Bohemian. We regret that the pressure on our columns will not admit of publishing the poem entire, but the following concluding verses will give the readers an idea of the genuine merit of the entire production.

Years, years, occasion's cities,
Of storm and shelter and sunshine have passed,
A hundred years
Since Grattan left from Ireland the heaviest of her chains,
And half that time that bore him, a nation once again.

Oh, those were days of triumph—not to suppose some lost dream!
Lang Grattan's clarion accents throughout the enslaved land
His were no humble pleadings, no piteous claims for alms
He asked, as array at his back, he asked, and he debed.

In Ireland's doleful prison, he struck one glad tone note
Of Ireland's mournful story, his was the hand that wrote
The Irish Bill, a glorious chapter his country was to him,
One page, to shine forever, though all the rest be dim.

Though English jails are strong and strong, and English bullets still protect the red above the ground,
And English ballots still protect the red above the green,
Yet Ireland's shrine a noble tree is spreading far and wide,
And the music of its branches is heard across the tide.

And it whispers from the land, my friends, where you and I were born,
"Hail, you poor in the green sward, your country's dear mother
Hail, and hail the historian of future years will tell
The Grattan peace was sent again by Heaven and God.

God grant we read the signs aright, God grant it that through the traitors stole the tree, and trampled down the seed,
And that the work begun shall be done by every Irish man and Irish lad.

Then shall we see a Irishman an Irish soil shall rule,
After by applause which greeted these glorious lines of the poet half subdued, the chairman introduced Mr. O'Connor, who said that he was their attention while he sketched for them the memoir of the two patriots of America and Ireland—Washington and Grattan.

MR. O'CONNOR'S ADDRESS.

There is not one of us who does not regard as a happy and an auspicious coincidence that the centenary of the Irish Parliament and the hundred of American freedom and of the treaties of Versailles and Paris, which first established in indeed appropriate, for Washington was not only the father of American independence, but absolute some considerable extent, of the independence of Ireland, for the existence of Washington was necessary for the existence of Grattan; so we have met to-night to celebrate a Grattan, as always meet to propitiate that great work of Washington, which Washington succeeded in accomplishing. The more one reads the history of the last years of the eighteenth century the more he sees that there was a close connection between the events in the American revolution and those in the history of Parliament. There is a habit in the Old World of claiming the Revolution of 1776 as a direct result from the revolution of France, but this was, I believe, incorrect. The French revolution was but the shock the throes of kings, undermined aristocracy, and gave opportunity to the genius of man, was the document which declared "that all men are born free and equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain

INALIENABLE RIGHTS;

That among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That declaration was published, as you know, on the Fourth of July, 1776, the Bastile did not fall till the 14th of July, 1789. Ireland's independence was not granted till 1782; and thus, the Irish patriot and the French soldier were chronologically as well as morally justified in calling Washington the liberator and creator of modern Europe. Lafayette, as you know, presented Washington with the keys of the Bastile; Grattan declared American "the only hope of Ireland and the only refuge of the hopes of mankind;" and now the American citizen can exult in the fact that that broad land brought blessings to all mankind, not merely to itself, when the immediate splendor of freedom brings heat and light and hope to darkened and benighted nations, for a long, cheerless age, when the faint and struggling rays of liberty were the lamps of a new and better day to the toiling dwellers in the land of Washington and Grattan.

I have been re reading the life of Washington within the last few days, and I have almost admired at the coolness with which the people of another hemisphere to do too little rather than too much, honour. In his memory, all this, how America can defy the world in arms against her, and yet, in her own country, she has no statue, no effigy. She is more than equal to any country for the powers of defense, for the description of one foot of

AMERICAN SOIL

I could call to arms within a week 2,000,000 of men, trained to arms, bold in the instigating air of freedom, and passionately proud of their great land. How can such men? Let any statesmen, and rapid in the development he capable of such a flight of imagination as to place itself in the position, the embarrassment and the help lessness of Washington one hundred years ago? Can a nation of fifty five millions understand a nation of three—and the American colonies, as you know, did not number more than three millions? Can a nation that at one time had a million of soldiers in arms appreciate the difficulties of a General who commanded an army of more than seventy-seven thousand men? Can a nation that is paying off a debt of 87,000,000 pounds sterling, and that a few years ago had put 850 to bills for $1 in specie, and who had to keep some hundreds half clothed and half paid, appreciate the difficulties without pay. And when one has considered all these things, one has but begun the series of difficulties with which the footsteps of American independence had to contend. The English enemy had a thousand advantages in his favor. The English had trained troops. English enterprise had the Government of the United States and all official places, as today they occupy in Ireland every post from the Lord Lieutenancy down to the Doorkeeping of the Places. Among

THE OBSTACLES THEMSELVES

There were the cowardly, the mean, dull-minded and narrow of heart, who could not see the lofty vision of an independent nation, and who feared more bitter or more effective against the rights of their country than the American Revolution found sympathizers. In Washington, in spite of the difficulties of his position, he overcame all these attacks. An audience of Irish men, familiar from childhood with the history of America, could not be told that the cause of Washington was one of the darkest and almost hopeless gloom. He had to contend with a people who had to be sure, to create his army before he endeared upon the struggle—had to carry caged and starving soldiers through enterprising and hostile cities and deserts, and he had to resist the torpor of despair, he had in an equal degree to keep the enthusiasm caused of unexpected victory. Yet even with the great enthusiasm which he was able to accomplish all these wonders, his patience, his courage, his skill, and his genius, to chase all the miseries of his lines. Passing a few days ago through Lexington, I was told that Washington is dear to men of the Irish race, merely as the savior of the Union, but for the constant, consistent and devoted friend of the Irish people, of his love for Ireland, and their remaining in mind abiding testimony.

THE MARTYR-PATRIOT, ROBERT EMMETT.

After all, it is his moral grandeur, in Ireland, it is usually estimated by personal greatness, which comes nearer home, and such greatness is the highest of all. There is nothing so dear to the Irish heart as that any of the great heroes that were bestowed upon them. There seem to have been something about the man which, without any effort on his part, impressed the confidence and affection of his fellows, and it is this feature of his character which deserves the strongest recognition. What, then, that Continental Congress was, what was it that gave strength to the energy of the course of Washington. When the lingers of drers were passing over ragged roads with bleeding feet, what was it that gave strength to the way? The courage of Washington. When the days of gloom, when the arms of the young republic, and disaster followed upon disaster, what was it that enabled the man to persevere? The courage of Washington. Washington is the purest character in the eyes of his posterity. Washington is the purest character, for he does more than any man, I am free to say, to make Ireland a free nation. In the part of his character he belongs to the world and to all mankind. America has added to his fame, but America has added to his renown humanity, and for all the ages to come, the Irish people will be the last to deny him the right path and the wrong, between

THE ANGEL OF DARKNESS

That tempts to ruin, and the angel of light that points to the rugged

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

"BATTLING FOR ERIN'S RIGHTS."

(Written to a young lady of Virginia City and sung at the Land League meetings to the air of "The Harp that once through Tara's Hall.")

At morn and eve, on bended knee,
In sacred and holy prayer,
Our thoughts turn to a green isle,
And DAVITT who is there.

To DAVITT who so nobly gave
His pure, unselfish heart,
To help the cause of Ireland,
And aid us in our part.

His liberty he always gave
For poor old Ireland's sake,
And said, "Be not dismayed,
Our rights we now must take."

Let us, then, our work begin,
Ah, yes! and do it well,
As did that brave and noble soul,
Our own, our loved PARNELL.

The great PARNELL, whose noble deeds
Have sent our life long praise,
Is as true to dear old Erin
As are the sun's warm rays.

He lived the sunny little life,
And vowed he'd be her friend;
The haughty foe to conquer,
And the tyrant's chains to rend.

And other heroes, tried and true,
Who fought with right and well,
Till taken by the cruel foe,
Our hearts are with you still.

And, alas! England's prison walls
Are strong, and thick and sheer;
We'll not forget you! But, will take
Your places in the fight.

Come, join with us in heart and hand,
There's plenty work to do.
There's landlordism to cast down,
And Britain's blot too.

Long has the British lion's roar
The patriots pleading banned,
But Erin's sons are stronger now,
They're vowed to free their land!

Yes verdant hills and fertile vales
The line we will cause,
Nor cease until we've captured him
And won the victor's place.

And then we'll dig a grave so deep
The bottom can't be seen,
There we'll bury Britain's lion,
Beneath the shamrock's green.

Dear Erin! Long has your heart bled;
But you shall soon be free,
And then you'll see your sons unite
In peace and liberty.

And every heart will beat with joy,
Their colors we'll wear
The colors dear to Irish hearts—
The orange, white, and green.

Literary Miscellany.

The Power of Prayer.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY

"Ah! bitter chill it was,
The owl for all his feathers was a-cold,
The hare limped trembling through the frozen grass,
And silent was the flock in woolly fold."—KEATS.

Vespers had just ended, and the people were passing out of the warm church into the keen and bitterly cold winter night. Near the altar, the air was still perfumed with incense, and the white smoke hung like a fleecy veil, around the lights and flowers. In one of the pews before our lady's altar a boy knelt with his hands clasped over the back of the seat in front of him, and his head resting upon them. Not a sound escaped from him, and he remained in that position until it seemed as if he were a carved figure rather than a human being. At last, when everyone had gone, the head was raised, and a young, tear-stained face looked up, sorrowfully, yet trustingly, to the statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The red lips opened, and he breathed, rather than said the words, "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for me, a sinner." A moment later he was passing down the now darkened aisle, and reached the door just in time to get out before the sexton closed it for the night.

Down the slippery steps he walked, and into the cold, snow-covered square that spread out in front of the church. The wind came sweeping across the park and made him shiver. He buttoned his coat as tightly as possible, settled his cap more firmly on his head, hid his hands in his pockets, and started out—where? He didn't know, nor did he stop to think, but walked on, and it was only when he had crossed about half the square that he suddenly stood still and began to look around him.

Tom Carroll was about ten years old and of medium size for his age. He had a very grave, yet boyish face, round and full; a straight nose, gray-blue eyes, and hair—well, what might be seen of it, under the edge of his cap, glittered so in the sunlight that it might be called golden, but in reality it was a peculiar light red, almost bordering on yellow. His cap had once been black velvet, and the rest of his garments were also velvet, only shadows—and poor tattered ones at that—of what they once had been. Nearly a year before Tom had been left alone in the world. His father had died of a fever, and his mother and he struggled on for another month, when death claimed her, too, and she died, murmuring something about "her poor, dear mother," and beseeching him to be a good boy all his life. That was all. For a while Tom lived with his neighbors, till his little heart wearied of being a beggar, as he called himself, and he started off to another part of the large city and tried to earn his own living.

It was a wild undertaking, and many of the neighbors resisted as much as they could his scheme when he proposed it to them; but he stole away without any one's knowledge and they soon forgot him.

Tom did all sorts of things. He ran errands, he sold papers, he slept in alleyways at night till it became too cold to do so, and to-day he had found himself with twenty cents in his pocket, and very little clothes, and although he knew he could get a bed for one night for half the money, and have the rest for capital to start on in the morning, yet there came a feeling over him that he had done wrong, that he should have stayed with the people who knew him, that those with whom he came into contact were not all as good as they might be; that he was, somehow or other, different from what he had been; and so, as it was Sunday, he went to Mass. He thought over his position all day, and he went back to Vespers in the evening with the determination to pray to the Blessed Virgin that she would take care of him and guide him to do right. And thus we find him. He has prayed as fervently as he could, and he feels within him, young as he is, that something will turn up to show him what to do.

After thinking for a few moments, Tom started out again; this time with a fixed purpose, which was simply to walk around the little park several times, just "to get warmed up." How cheerfully, even in the midst of trouble, a person will work when he has something definite to do. Tom's face brightened up as he walked, and very soon he was so warm that he slackened his pace considerably, and began to watch the people as they brushed past him. Hitherto he had walked only in the middle of the little park, but now, forgetting himself, he strolled toward the more unfrequented parts, and just as he was turning one of the corners, going along a pathway that passed behind some trees, he saw a man sitting, in the shadow, on one of the benches. A groan and then a sorrowful wail came from the bearded lips, but was suddenly hushed as the man caught sight of the boy.

Tom stopped, looked up at him for a moment or so, and then walking up, said "What is the matter, sir? Are you sick?"

The stranger said something which Tom did not understand, for the simple reason that it was spoken in a foreign language. However, he noticed the torn and soiled stained clothes of the man, and, looking down at his own worn-out "suit," he thought the occupant of the bench was probably in trouble, as he was himself. The two recent pieces which composed his wealth were touching his fingers in his pocket. He took one out and offered it to his companion in misery.

Eagerly the man stretched forth his hand, but before his fingers touched the coin he drew back and waved the boy away, then clasped his hands, and, looking up toward heaven, murmured as if in prayer.

Again Tom offered the money to him. "No," he said, drawing himself further away. "I have more. This will get a bed for to-night. Oh! yes, please take it. I wish I had more to give you."

The bearded man looked down upon him, then almost mechanically he took the ten cents, put it in his pocket, and opened wide his hat, "blessed himself" in the same foreign tongue.

Tom was delighted. A slight tremor crept all over his body; something queer tingled under the ends of his fingers and the roots of his hair, and taking his cap off he raised his hand to his forehead, making the sign of the cross, and pronounced, in his clear, young voice, the sweet words "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The stranger men he felt the man's hands on his shoulders; a kiss was imprinted on his lips, and before he could recover from his astonishment the stranger was walking away into the darkness, and Tom never saw him again.

For several minutes the boy stood in the same place, and forget all about himself, thinking of the stranger he had just met.

A strange feeling came upon him; a longing to be again in the church praying for himself, and so, seeing no place was quiet, he concluded to kneel down by the bench just for a minute. He placed his cap on the snow, knelt upon it, and began to say the Litany of the Blessed Virgin. He knew it all by heart, and as he said it the tears came to his eyes, for it was the last thing his mother had taught him.

At the very moment that Tom stopped before the stranger on the bench a man, closely muffled up and evidently on his way home, was passing by on a cross-path, and seeing the strange pair he stood still to watch them.

"He's a good child," he said, "and I'm going to have a talk with him."

In a few minutes Tom came down the path, and was startled to see another stranger step out before him.

"Well, my boy," said he, "that was a cold place to pray, wasn't it?"

Poor Tom thought nobody saw him. Therefore he hesitated, but at length managed to say, "Yes, sir," and then looked up wonderingly in the stranger's face.

"Don't be afraid of me, my son. Are you alone—that is, have you a father and mother?"

"No, sir."

"Well, well, I suppose—he paused, not knowing exactly how to ask the boy where he lived, but resumed—"suppose we walk on a little," and Tom, entirely bewildered, did so, and soon found himself once more in the centre of the square. Then the man said:

"Have you any place to sleep to-night?"

"Oh, yes. I have ten cents," said Tom quite composedly.

"Will you tell me your name?" The question was asked in that soft and kindly tone which comes naturally to a fellow-creature when he is touched with pity.

"Yes, sir; Tom Carroll."

"The name of my dearest friend, my boy, but of course that is of no interest to you."

"Poor Tom," he continued, musingly, "I wonder where you are to-night, and where is my blessed sister."

He paused, then suddenly looked in the boy's face, and with an eagerness that frightened Tom, he asked:

"My lad! boy, do you know what was your mother's name?"

Tom's eyes again filled with tears as he said, "Yes, sir; Lucy."

"Can it be possible! the stranger mused aloud. Then turning the boy toward the light of a park lamp, he bent down and continued to run on in a husky voice: "Yes, yes, there are Lucy's eyes, and Lucy's mouth, too, and Tom's yellow hair; and they are both dead! Oh God rest their souls. Oh!—his arms were around the boy, and the rest of the sentence was lost in a long and loving kiss.

Tom submitted to all this without a word. He was thinking of his prayer and wondering if this was an answer.

"Now, Tom, my boy," said the man, "no doubt you are astonished, but it will soon be all right. I'm your Uncle James. Your father was my old schoolmate, and your mother was my sister. They both left us long ago to make their fortune in this big city. We heard occasionally, but no letter reached us in a long time, and I came hundreds of miles to find that you are the only trace left of them. Thank God that I found you at least. Poor mother, how she'll be delighted! She gave up long ago my hope she ever had of seeing Lucy again, and now—but come along home, and when we are settled down in my room you'll tell me all you can remember about your papa and mamma."

Tom's uncle was stopping at a hotel; and when the boy had been fitted out in a new suit, and when they had eaten a good warm supper, they sat down and Tom told his simple story. He concluded by narrating how he had prayed that day, and asked his uncle to kneel down and pray that they might be God.

And the two knelt down that boy and man, and offered up the pure thanksgiving of Christian hearts. Catholic Fireside.

Thousands of women have been entirely cured of the most stubborn cases of female weakness by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass, for pamphlets.

Many Druggists recommend and try to sell what pays them the largest profit. Do not be deceived. Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup. Take no other. The remedy stands on its own merits. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, and test it yourself. Larger bottles at 50 cents and $1. Ask to see larger size and read the wrapper.

HOME.

How sweet the tone of that little monosyllable, so fraught with love and tenderness, and every emotion expressive of the joys and joys of kindred. But how rarely do we appreciate the blessings of a home while it is ours.

"Going home" cries the wearied traveler, and the thought of that home, like some guiding star, sheds a radiance over his lonely path.

Whether it be through the wild, undeafened forest, the savannah's solitude, or upon the mountain glacier wherever the wanderer's steps may stray, his heart as the magnet to the pole, turns towards that much loved dwelling place.

"See the ship on her returning track homeward bound!" What a magic in those words to the storm-tossed mariner. Even through the beacon's flash, reflected on the ocean's wave, he beholds the little ray from a distant cottage window the seaman's home.

The loved home faces so far, so far away—as they met the dying gladiator's eyes, the crowded arena was but a blank, while the tones of the dear home-voices softly blended with his last sigh, when the hoarse sounds of the clamorous multitude were no longer heard.

Ah! far hamlet in your bright loveliness, and you, proud manly youth, some day you may roam afar to other climes, and the old roof-tree of your childhood's years will ever be cherished.

Not yet, in the flush of triumph and success, whether won by beauty or earned by renown, but when sorrow and disappointments cloud your sky when the flowers have faded and the laurels wither—then will the memories of "the old house at home" be more precious than the world can offer.

But, ah, the sad, sad stories we too often read of wretched dwellings, where strife, cruelty, and crime, and, above all, the demon of intemperance, hold their sway—from whence the little child goes forth, at midnight pleading, "Father, dear father, come home" and oft times pleads in vain.

Alas, that such should exist, even in our very midst, making the sacred name of home a mockery and a scorn.

Let us turn from the dark page, and glance through those glowing windows on a group assembled around the cheerful hearth, the light from the blazing fires illuminating each happy face, as the ripples of childhood's laughter ring out in echo to some merry tale or sportive jest.

Truly, that is a home of love! But in the fullness of their deep joy, may they reflect upon the desolate, the unknown, lonely, the pilgrim in life's lonely waste, Mocked by the memories of a home.

And homeless everywhere.

No, not everywhere, for there is another, brighter and far more bright on earth—

And there's a home in the home land.
But aye the fadeless morn!

And they who patiently and prayerfully watch and wait will one day hear the angel-voices calling, and see the angel-hands which beckon them to come home.

A Railway Episode with a Moral.

As a family composed of three persons, father, mother, and a little son, a bright little fellow, were making a trip to one of the railroads that run through Williamsport, Pa., a little incident occurred which is worth repeating. The day was a balmy one and the window was thrown up to let the fresh air. Little Fred, like all children, manifested a great desire to sit at the open window to see what was going on outside of the train. The father, sometimes alarmed at the conduct of his son, would attempt to hold him back, but the child would invariably resist, and, after a time, he would be allowed to do as he pleased. Little Fred, like all children, insisted on putting his head out of the open window to see what was going on outside of the train. The father, fearing what alarmed at the conduct of his son, attempted to restrain him, without using force, to keep him within bounds, but without successful; a bright idea came up in his mind. "Look, Fred," said he, "look!"

"keep your head in or the wind will take your hat," and in order to frighten his hopeful, spry disciple, he put his own head and concealed it. As soon as this had been done the child began crying and could not be quieted. Finally pulled Gordon told him to look in another direction and he would whistle the tune back again, all of which was very neatly done, and the happy parents settled back in their seats and began to converse with each other, thinking that they had cured little Freddie, but not so, for in a very short time he seemed to brighten up suddenly and away he went his little hat through the car window, shouting as it disappeared." Papa, whistle again." Moral—never deceive your children.

A Legend

There was a dispute among three maidens as to which had the most beautiful hand. One sat by a stream, and dipped her hand into the water, and held it up, another plucked strawberries until the ends of her fingers were pink, and another gathered violets until her hands were fragrant. An old haggard woman passing by asked, "Who will give me a gift, for I am poor?"

All three denied her; but another who sat near, unwashed in the stream, matained with fruit, unadorned with flowers, gave her a little gift, and satisfied the poor woman. And then she asked them what was the dispute, and they told her, and lifted up before her their beautiful hands.

"Beautiful, indeed," said she, when she saw them. But, when they asked her which was the most beautiful, she said, "It is not the hand that is washed clean in the brook, it is not the hand that is tipped with red, it is not the hand that is garlanded with fragrant flowers, but it is the hand that gave to the poor which is the most beautiful." As she said these words, her wrinkles fled, her staff was thrown away, and she stood before them an angel from heaven with authority to decide the question in dispute.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RESTORER is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color. It makes the scalp white and clean. It cures dandruff and humors and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes hair pliable, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recommended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assayer of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the test of many years, both in this country and foreign lands, and is now known and used in all the civilized countries in the world.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

$1,500 a year can be easily made at home working for E. G. Ricksott & Co., 19 Barclay street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

AN UNKNOWN MASTERPIECE.

There is a tradition current in Spain which is not one of the least angular of the many that float about in connection with the great painters. One day Rubens was in the neighborhood of Madrid, and visiting a monastery of very severe rules, remarked, not without some surprise, in the hands of the poor choir, a painting exhibiting adoration of the Virgin.

This picture represented the death of a monk. Rubens summoned his scholars, showed them the picture, and asked their hands opinion. All replied that it was of exceeding genius.

"Who can be the author of this work?" asked Vandyck, the chevalier pupil of Rubens.

"There is a name at the bottom of the picture, but it has been carefully rubbed out."

Rubens begged the favor of an interview with the prior, and asked of the old monk the name of the artist whom he admired so very much.

"The painter is no longer of this world," replied the abbot.

"Dead!" cried Rubens, "dead! And no one knows his name, no one ever hinted to me, no one ever told me of his name, which should be immortal—a name before which my own would have faded. And yet, my father, said the artist with a flush of pride, "I am I had hoped—"

At the mound of this name the pale face of the prior was suffused by a singular emotion. His eyes flashed, and he looked at Rubens with a strange and wild look. A faint glimmer of a smile flashed across his face—but it lasted only a moment. The monk then looked down, crossed his arms, and, when he raised his head raised to heaven in an instant of enthusiasm.

"The artist is not of this world," he repeated.

"His name, my father, his name, that I may render unto him the glory which is his own."

The monk shook in every limb; a cold sweat stood out upon his body and tinged his wan cheeks, his lips were compressed convulsively, like one ready to reveal a mysterious and which he possessed the secret.

"His name, his name, cried Rubens.

The monk shook his head.

"Listen to me, brother, you have not understood my meaning. I said to you that the artist was not of this world. I did not say he was dead.

"You say he lives" cried the artists in chorus.

"He has renounced the world. He is a cloister, he is a monk.

"A monk, my father, a monk! oh, tell me in what convent. He must come out of it. When God stamps a man with the seal of genius, this man should not be buried in obscurity. God gives such a man a sublime mission, and he must perform his destiny. Tell me in what convent he is concealed and I will tear him from it, telling him of the glory that awaits him. If he refuses, I will have the matter mooted by the Pope to return to the world and resume his brushes. The Pope loves me, my father, and will hearken to my words.

"I will give up neither his name nor the cloister in which he has afforded him shelter," replied the monk in a firm tone.

"The Pope will command you, said Rubens, exasperated.

"Listen to me, replied the monk, "listen to me in the name of God! He you have just seen, I have kept from entering the world, lest refusing fortune and glory, did not fire a struggle firmly against such a result from God. Think, my brother, that he must just have felt bitter disappointment, bitter sorrow, if he had entered upon life with the ardor of the fresh air. Little Fred, like all children, insisted on putting his head out of the open window to see what was going on outside of the train. The father, sometimes alarmed at the conduct of his son, attempted to restrain him, without using force, to keep him within bounds, but without successful; a bright idea came up in his mind. "Look, Fred," said he, "look!

"keep your head in or the wind will take your hat," and in order to frighten his hopeful, spry disciple, he put his own head and concealed it. As soon as this had been done the child began crying and could not be quieted. Finally pulled Gordon told him to look in another direction and he would whistle the tune back again, all of which was very neatly done, and the happy parents settled back in their seats and began to converse with each other, thinking that they had cured little Freddie, but not so, for in a very short time he seemed to brighten up suddenly and away he went his little hat through the car window, shouting as it disappeared." Papa, whistle again." Moral—never deceive your children.

More of Gladstone's Resources of Civilization.

The following events occurred last month not in Russia or Tartary, but in Christian Ireland as ruled by Christian England.

EVICTIONS AT SURNEY.

A correspondent describes the brutal and heartless eviction of three children from the Laurenson estate, which is noticed on our report of the Athy Union. On Wednesday, Sunday, the process server arrived on the lands at about twelve o'clock, accompanied by eighteen policemen. The first two houses were empty, but the third was occupied by the three children of Shaw. It was suggested to postpone the eviction until the return of the parents, who were away at a fair, but Mr. Laurenson's steward insisted on getting immediate possession, whereupon Kennedy rushed into the house, and although the rain was coming down in torrents, he flung the three little children out on the road, and then proceeded to break all the furniture and delf, pitching the bed and bedclothes into the pond of water by the roadside. Having cleared the house of everything, he put a lock on the door, and having taken his place outside the policemen, returned to Kildare, to serve a number of writs upon the tenants of Capt. Rice of Mount Rice.

EVICTION AT CASTLEDERMOT.

A man named William Lynch, with a wife and four small children, were evicted from his house on last Monday. He had offered to pay the full rent, but his landlord would not accept it. The landlord and his son, who acted as bailiffs, went to the house, armed with sledge and crowbar, and escorted by a number of police, who formed a square with steel bayonets, while they burst in the door. The little furniture was then thrown out into the roadway. Lynch's infant child, left to the last, was flung out upon the road. The furniture remained there all night, and the family might have sought the shelter of a hedge, but for the kindness of the neighbors, who let them in for the night. No relieving officer was present at the eviction.

A Terrible Tale of the Sea.

A terrible tale of suffering, exposure and privation has reached Falmouth by the arrival of a vessel trading between Europe and the coast of Africa. The barque Guiding Star, 311 tons register, of Lavery, R. J. Crithley master, arrived at the River Roger on her last outward voyage with a crew of nine hands all told, and brought on board two miles outside the bar. To enter the river safely it was necessary the ship should have a pilot, and the master accordingly sent off a boat, with four of the best and ablest men in the ship, in charge of the cook, were sent away in a boat for a pilot, a fifteen miles up the river, in order to procure the services of one. A pilot was taken on board, and the return journey commenced. The boat was again reached late in the afternoon, and, with a strong breeze blowing, the pilot ordered the crew to shorten the distance, that they should pull through the surf to reach the ship before it was dark, and then hoist the boat in and over and over. The men scrambled on the bottom of the boat, and found themselves in a moment in the sea, without food, oars, or sails, and the water swarming with sharks. So hopeless seemed their situation that the poor fellows, in their despair, tried to swim to the ship, a distance of three miles, but all failed, and the boat when his companions beheld him struggling beneath the surface of the water and the hungry monsters who swarmed round the party. Another man shortly after, exhausted, sank, and the survivors, seeing no chance of their being rescued, resigned themselves to their fate. Without food, and partially clothed, as the day wore on their sufferings were intense. A raging thirst consumed them, their tongues and lips, as they were completely worn out with exposure, and want of food while their skin blistered and peeled off in the heat of the sun. Towards the end of the day one of the men became raving maniacs. Clothing at the beach, the poor fellow slipped off into the sea, or, it might be said, jumped into the jaws of the sharks. Immediately afterward the crimson which dyed the water round the remainder of the ship told the tale of his death. The boat appeared to be drifting along the coast to the eastward, and, though on the second night the rigbtful, the poor fellows had no means of baling out the water. An eager watch was kept, but no help appeared on sea or on shore, on the third day, the cook, one of the men seems to have been truly horrible. The portions of their bodies exposed to the sun were quite raw, and their lips and tongues became shrivelled and parched, and at times their consciousness was lost. Fortunately the weather remained calm, or the poor fellows in their weak condition, must have been swamped in their boat. On the third day, some time in the afternoon, as far as the survivors could judge, the boat drifted near enough to shore that she had been at all. The men agreed that this was their last hope, though almost a vain one, and, abandoning the boat, they endeavored to swim ashore. The mate, it seems, was a poor swimmer, and was either drowned or eaten by sharks. The other men persevered, but in the breakers which fringed upon the shore they both lost consciousness and in this condition were washed ashore. They were the only two left of the six originally in the boat, one of them being the pilot and the other an Italian seaman named Cersitte. They retained no remembrance of how they lay on the beach, but when reason return of they fell in with a native trader, who, taking compassion on them, carried them to Opobo in his canoe, where they arrived two days after the upsetting of the boat at Opobo. They were fed clothed and allowed medical attendance, and, as soon as they were sufficiently restored, were forwarded on to Akassa, where the Guiding Star lay.

NEVER GIVE UP THE SHIP.

Washington, January 1 and 15, 1881.
GENTLEMEN: Three years ago I was taken down with a severe cough, which I could not shake off. I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which I did, and was cured by the first bottle. I also gave it to my children, with the same result. I believe it saved my life, and I shall always recommend it to my friends. Yours, etc., ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Nashua, Iowa, January 16, 1881.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.: Gentlemen—Some years ago I was given up by the doctors to die of Consumption, and I commenced taking your Cherry Pectoral, which I gave by bottles at Place Cottage, Ashford, Kent, Eng., and Sandringham, Norfolk, Eng., and I am now in good health. Yours, etc., REV. ROBERT ALLEN, Rector of Ashford, Kent, Eng.

Sold by all Druggists.

Family Fun.

The Power of Kindness.

"Ah," sighed the tramp, as he presented himself at the kitchen door of a neat and tidy cottage in the suburbs, where a kind looking, elderly lady was busy setting things to rights. "How strange are the ways of life. In only three short years since I was comfortably situated a good comfortable home, the best food the state affords, no end to attendants, but now how changed. I have not tasted bread for three whole days." and his face assumed the air of injured innocence as he saw the old lady brush a tear from her eye.

"Poor soul," she thought, "how did the change come about? Let me, you shall have a good meal before I hear your story. "Come right in." And she busied herself in preparing a meal for the unfortunate being, who went to work like a wolf at a knife and fork had long ceased to be a luxury to him, until he cleaned every platter

"Now, poor, unfortunate man, tell me what wrought this wonderful change in your condition, for I know it is malefactors that caused you to be thus thrown out upon the world!"

"Well ma'am, it proceeded the tramp, as he swallowed the last mouthful of huckleberry pie and walked toward the door, "you see, I'd been serving a term in jail in the penitentiary, and my term was up some three years ago, and as I had to leave." And then he stole quietly out, leaving the old lady in a state of bewilderment from which she never recovered, for she found he had taken half a dozen of silver knives as a precious souvenir of her kindness.

Married Bliss.

"You ought to get married, Bill," said Spondilos to a young friend of his as the two were leaning over the front gate of the Spondilos cottage one Sabbath day at sunset.

"Don't know," said the doubting William, "it strikes me that a single life beats married life all to smash."

"There's just where you are off, old boy," said Spondilos. "You don't know I used to be one of the gayest of our gang, but now, since I've tried married life a year, I'm as happy as a lark. Why, I can't be more little wife, and one of the sweetest of children, and when my day's work is done I hurry home to my cottage with a light heart. No Bill, the old life has no charms for me now."

Just then the door opened and Mrs Spondilos head protruded.

"Spondilos, run right up town and get a bottle of that stuff syrup for the baby—he's just coughing up his very too-mahs—and come just the short way home down a basin of meat, and some butter, and eggs, and coffee—we ve clean out—and some lard, shreed enough for a pie, and don't forget the can of peaches you promised me a week ago. We must have some potatoes, too, and if you see any vegetables get some. Heavens sake! do you think I can be pounded up here day after day with a squalling brat, and thinks I can be a little patter ship is not easily dissolved.

Value of Virtue.

Nothing makes a man so in love with society as purity. Many a man has been lifted out of debasing sins against which he has vainly struggled, by coming to know and love a pure, sweet woman. It is the sight of embroidered goodness that makes us want to be good. Your lives must be the witnesses of her life bids her children with a desire to be like her that makes them in their turn unselfish. There are obscure men and women who labor hard for their livelihood, a word of conscientious teaching, who, by their example, do more to make people around them gentle, truthful and like Christ like than any preacher can do. It is not those who talk about goodness but those who are good that are the salt of the world.

The Two Men Inside.

An old Indian once asked a white man to give him a cigar, and the white man gave him a loose handful from his pocket. The next day he came back and asked for another cigar. The man said, "I found a quarter of a dollar among the tobacco."

"Why dont you keep it," asked a by stander.

"I've got a good man and a bad man here," said the Indian, pointing to his breast, "and the good man say, "It is not mine, give it back to the owner. The bad man say, "Never mind, you got it, and it is your own now. The good man say, "No, no' you must don't keep it. So I don't know what to do, and I think to go to sleep, but the good and the bad men keep talking all night, and I don't know what to do and now I bring the money back I feel good."

Like the old Indian, we have all a good and bad man inside of us. We are in a Temptation, the good man is Conscience, and they keep talking for and against many things that we ought to do. Which wins?

Little by Little.

If you are gaining a little every day be content. If by your carefulness less than your income, so that, though it be little, you are yet constantly accumulating and growing richer and richer every day, be contented; so far as concerns money you are doing well.

Are you gaining knowledge every day? Though but little by little, the aggregate accumulation, where no day is permitted to pass without some addition to the stock, will be surprising to yourself.

Solomon did not become the wisest man in the world in a minute. Little by little, never omitting to learn something even for a single day always reading, studying a little between the time of rising in the morning and laying down at night, this is the way to accumulate a full storehouse of knowledge.

Finally, are you daily improving in character? Do not be discouraged because it is little by little. The best men fall short of what they would wish to be. It is something, it is much, if you keep good resolutions better to day than you did yesterday, better this week than you did last, better this year than you did last year.

Strive to be perfect, but do not become down-hearted as long as you are approaching nearer to the high standard at which you aim.

Little by little, fortunes are accumulated; little by little, knowledge is gained; little by little, character and reputation are achieved.

Bronchitis Ammen's Cough Syrup.

All druggists sell Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Large bottle, $1.00—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Tell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Dibbs—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Pains in Chest—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Our Young Folks.

The Dog and the Robbers.

A tragical story is told of an adventure that happened to the Monks of St. Bernard, in the days when the breed of their celebrated dogs was at its full perfection. No sooner did the storm rage, to whom the supposed possession of the monastery offered a rich booty, bad, by degrees, introduced themselves into the convent, arriving in parties at intervals, and were always received in the most friendly manner. As soon as the whole band was assembled they threw off their concealment and supposed the abbot to produce the keys of the treasure. The Monk was, fortunately, a man of more resolute character than usually occurred, in those places of seclusion and did not fear his presence of mind. He observed to them mildly that their conduct was unfriendly and all return for the hospitable attention they had received. The robbers, acting be supposed, were deaf to this appeal, still continued their demand. "If it must be so," said the superior, as we have no means of defending ourselves, I make a vow, that, at time, therefore, to the abbot where our treasures is kept." He led the way, and was unfortunately attended by the eager band. He placed his hand on a door, but, before he turned the key he turned back and made another appeal to the robbers. "Do not, I beseech you, and no choice being left him to throw the door wide open. It was the door in which the dog was shut up, he gave a voice, to which a loud yell responded, then gave a rapid signal, and in a moment the powerful animals bounded forth upon their prey, tearing some, attacking others, and pinning the leader to the ground. The dog strick glittering for their throats, bounding down the mountain in irresistible fury, to be intercepted and arrested by the dogs, who yawned beneath their feet."

Beware Girls.

Why are girls mischievous in their toleration of disreputed young men? It is very often the case that a thoroughly good girl will deliberately marry a man she knows to be a scoundrel and a libertine. What can she do? but marry to escape. A life partnership should not be contracted with a man who has so much caution as men display in making business combinations for limited periods. No man selects his business partner from among men who drink much liquor or have other bad habits. As for manners and the ability to make oneself agreeable, we have not of themselves influence enough among men to secure a dollar's worth of credit, or justify anyone in trusting their pocketbook on oath. A girl who is old enough or shrewd enough to be married, will know the standards by which men are judged, and would be far saver of a happy life if she were to make her parents select a husband in the greatest manner possible, than if she were to make her own selection, in the manner practiced by most. A life partner ship is not easily dissolved.

Value of Virtue.

Nothing makes a man so in love with society as purity. Many a man has been lifted out of debasing sins against which he has vainly struggled, by coming to know and love a pure, sweet woman. It is the sight of embroidered goodness that makes us want to be good. Your lives must be the witnesses of her life bids her children with a desire to be like her that makes them in their turn unselfish. There are obscure men and women who labor hard for their livelihood, a word of conscientious teaching, who, by their example, do more to make people around them gentle, truthful and like Christ like than any preacher can do. It is not those who talk about goodness but those who are good that are the salt of the world.

The Right of Way.

"What's the matter here," demanded a policeman sternly of a man and a woman who were standing on the sidewalk in the street. "Stop this row, and move on, or I'll lock you up."

"Why, officer, we are not in the way of the crowd," said the man, and we were just made me ask in the road, jumped the woman and brought water to his eyes.

"I didn't either, shouted the man, as he brought the umbrella down on the top of her bonnet: "she wants the whole street to get around in, and she tried to shove me off the walk.

"Why, couldn't he stand up on that lump instead of making me walk the sigh the water! and as a woman," and she clipped him under the jaw with a dexterity he couldn't dodge, "and now I bring the money back I feel good."

Like the old Indian, we have all a good and bad man inside of us. We are in a Temptation, the good man is Conscience, and they keep talking for and against many things that we ought to do. Which wins?

Little by Little.

If you are gaining a little every day be content. If by your carefulness less than your income, so that, though it be little, you are yet constantly accumulating and growing richer and richer every day, be contented; so far as concerns money you are doing well.

Are you gaining knowledge every day? Though but little by little, the aggregate accumulation, where no day is permitted to pass without some addition to the stock, will be surprising to yourself.

Solomon did not become the wisest man in the world in a minute. Little by little, never omitting to learn something even for a single day always reading, studying a little between the time of rising in the morning and laying down at night, this is the way to accumulate a full storehouse of knowledge.

Finally, are you daily improving in character? Do not be discouraged because it is little by little. The best men fall short of what they would wish to be. It is something, it is much, if you keep good resolutions better to day than you did yesterday, better this week than you did last, better this year than you did last year.

Strive to be perfect, but do not become down-hearted as long as you are approaching nearer to the high standard at which you aim.

Little by little, fortunes are accumulated; little by little, knowledge is gained; little by little, character and reputation are achieved.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEWMAN & FREUD,
1025 & 1027 Stockton St.,
HAVE JUST RECEIVED A COMPLETE ASSORTMENT OF GERMAN KNITTING YARNS, AND COTTONS, POMPEDOURE,
Berlin Zephyrs.
ALL SHADES OF
Crewel, Shetland and Saxony Yarns.
ALSO A LARGE ASSORTMENT IN Fancy Tidies on Canvas and Bunting, Slipper Patterns, Sofa Cushions and Brackets,
And a large assortment of Canvases.

MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, OF LYNN, MASS.,
Woman can Sympathize with Woman.
Health of Woman is the Hope of the Race.
Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham
LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.
Is a Positive Cure
for all their Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population.
It will free entirely the worst form of female complaints, all ovarian tumors, inflammation and ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.
It will dissolve and expel tumors from the uterus in an early stage of development. The tendency to cancerous tumors is greatly increased by neglect.
It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weak stomach, indigestion, bloating, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, depression and bad spirits.
That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured. In this and all other kindred complaints it acts in perfect harmony with the laws that govern the female system.
For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this Compound is unsurpassed.
LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND is prepared at 23 and 25 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price $1. Six bottles for $5. It is in the form of pills also, in the form of lozenges on receipt of price, $1 per box. For the cure of Liver Complaint they cannot be surpassed. Send for pamphlet, address as above. Mention this Paper.
No family should be without LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS. They cure Constipation, Biliousness, and Torpidity of the Liver. 25 cents per box.
Sold by all Druggists.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
CURES DYSPEPSIA, LIVER COMPLAINT, BILIOUSNESS, FEVER & AGUE, BLOOD DISEASES.
CURES FEVER AND AGUE.
CURES NERVOUS DEBILITY.
TRADE MARK.
CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever & Ague, Fever, Blood Disease, Dropsy, Nervous Debility, etc.
Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.
The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
12,000,000 Bottles
SOLD IN SIXTY YEARS.
This Syrup possesses Varied Properties.
It Stimulates the Digestive in the Saliva, Gastric Juice, Bile and Intestinal Fluids; it is a Laxative by Its Action on the Liver and Secretory Vessels; it is a Diuretic by Its Action on the Kidneys, and Cutaneous by Its Action on the Skin, thus effecting the Elimination of Four Distinct Secretions.
It acts upon the Liver,
It acts upon the Kidneys,
It Regulates the Bowels,
It Purifies the Blood,
It Strengthens the System.
It Promotes Digestion,
It Vanquishes Strengthens and Invigorates,
It Creates Healthy Blood and makes new.
It is the Great Spring Medicine of the Spring.
It is purely Vegetable, and contains no Poisonous Drugs.
Prepared only by the new Medical Company, Boston, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. 50 cents per Bottle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WITH
FIVE DOLLARS
AND AN ORIGINAL IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN
100 FLORINS
GOVERNMENT BOND,
INSTITUTED IN 1861
Which bondholders benefit and secured by the Government and are referred to it thereon.
FOUR TIMES ANNUALLY,
Until each and every bond is drawn, with a chance of obtaining one of the Prizes hereunder, which are as follows:
THE THREE HIGHEST PRIZES AMOUNT TO 200,000 FLORINS,
20,000 FLORINS,
15,000 FLORINS,
Any bonds not drawing one of the above prizes must draw a prize of not less than 200 Florins,
The next drawing takes place on the 1ST OF MARCH, 1882,
And every bond bought of us now or before the 1st of March is entitled to the whole prizes that may be drawn therein on that date.
Purchasers will receive Imperial Austrian Government Bon

THE MONITOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1882.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

Was the Duke of Wellington an Irishman?

It has become so great a habit with other nations to rob Ireland of the glory of having given birth to men of the greatest genius in literature, poetry, music, science, statesmanship or war, that we are not astonished and a doubt thrown upon the birth-place of the Duke of Wellington—or "the Iron Duke," as he was familiarly called. The genius of Goldsmith, Grattan, Burke, and hundreds of other prominent anti poets has enriched English literature so lavishly that if the question was asked as to their nativity, the answer, in most cases, would designate them as Englishmen, thus discarding the fruitful mother from whose bosom has sprung some of the brightest stars in the firmament of fame.

The pall which the accursed union with England spread over the shamrock-decked Island of Saints, has been used to cover with the mantle of oblivion every patriot, bard, statesman or soldier who did not seek celebrity through English sympathy. As Moore so truthfully says, when speaking of the price which England paid for talent and genius when it renounced its birthright—

"Unpraised are her sons till they've learned to be gray;
Undistinguished they live if they shame not their sires;
And the torch that would light them through ally's way,
Must be sought from the pile where their country expires."

These lines were never more appropriate than when applied to the very case under consideration, wherein we find a son of Erin promoted to the highest pinnacle of fame by a Government which has proved its deep-seated hatred of Ireland by rewarding only those who tried to forget that Irish blood gave them birth. Yet, it is a gratifying reflection to feel that, notwithstanding the recreancy of Wellington to his native land, he never forgot the fact that the proud eminence which England achieved on so many hard-fought European battle-fields was due to the undaunted courage of the Irish Catholic soldier. On this point he never shirked from giving the brave men who bore the blood-red flag of England over many an enanguined field, the full measure of that praise which a brave general will always bestow upon the more obscure but just as valorous rank and file of the army. On this point there is one tribute of Wellington's gratitude to the Irish Catholics who formed the vanguard of the valorous army he commanded which we think of sufficient interest to Monitor readers as to entitle it to a place in this necessarily brief notice of England's Irish warrior statesman. In 1829, when addressing the House of Lords in favor of the passage of the Catholic Emancipation Act, the Duke of Wellington thus alluded to the Irish Catholic soldiers in the English army:

"It is already known to your Lordships, that of the troops which our gracious Sovereign did me the honor to entrust to my command at various periods during the war—a war undertaken expressly for the purpose of securing the happy institutions and independence of the country—that at least one-half were Roman Catholics. My Lords, when I call your recollection to this fact, I am sure all further eulogy is unnecessary. Your Lordships are well aware for what length of period, and under what difficult circumstances, they maintained the entire honor upon the field, which overshadowed the thrones and wrecked the institutions of every other people; how they kept alive the only spark of freedom which was left unextinguished in Europe; and how, by unprecedented efforts, they at length placed us, not only far above danger, but at an elevation of prosperity, for which we had hardly dared to hope. These, my Lords, are sacred and imperative titles to a nation's gratitude. My Lords, it is become quite needless for me to assure you, that I have invariably found my Roman Catholic soldiers as patient under privations, as eager for the combat, and as brave and determined in the field, as any other portions of his Majesty's troops; and, in point of loyalty and devotion to their King and country, I am quite certain they have never been surpassed. I claim no merit in admitting that others might have rushed the storm of battle as skilfully as myself. We have only to recur to the annals of our military achievements to be convinced, that we indeed, of our commanders have not known how to direct the unconquerable spirit of their troops and to shed fresh glories round the British name. But, my Lords, while we are free to acknowledge this, we must also confess that, without Catholic blood and Catholic valor, we could never have been obtained, and the first military talents in Europe might have been exerted in vain, at the head of an army. My Lords, if on the eve of any of those hard-fought days, on which I had the honor to command them, I had thus addressed my Roman Catholic troops: 'You well know that you cannot claim as suitors you loyalty, or as dissenters your religion, that she has not thought proper to admit you amongst the ranks of her citizens; if so that account you deem it an act of injustice on her part to require you to shed your blood in her defence, you are at liberty to withdraw'—I am quite sure, my Lords, that, however bitter the recollections which it awakened, they would have spurned the alternative with indignation; for the hour of danger and glory is the hour in which the gallant, the generous hearted Irishman best knows his duty, and is most determined to perform it. But if, my Lords, it had been otherwise; if they had chosen to desert the cause in which they were embarked; though the remainder of the troops would undoubtedly have maintained the honor of the British arms, yet, as I have just said, no effort of theirs could ever have crowned us with victory. Yes, my Lords, it is manifest to the Irish Catholic that no effort can ever prove permanent in our military career; and that I, personally, am indebted for the laurels with which you have been pleased to decorate my brow—for the honors which you have so bountifully lavished on me, and for the fair fame I derive it above all other rewards, which my country, in the generous kindness, has bestowed upon me. I cannot but feel, my Lords, that you yourselves have shown a laudable partiality in placing this heavy debt of gratitude upon me—perhaps, perhaps, that has ever fallen the lot of any individual; and, however flattering the circumstance, it often places me in a very painful position. Whenever I meet (and it is of most an every-day occurrence with any of those brave men, who, in common with others, are the objects of this tax), and who have so often borne on the tide of victory; when I see them still branded with the imputation of a divided allegiance, still designated beneath the lowest menial, and still proclaimed unfit to enter within the pale of the constitution, I feel almost ashamed of the honors which have been lavished upon me. I feel that, though the merit was theirs, what was so freely given to me was in reality denied to them; that I had reaped, though they had sown; that they had borne the heat and burden of the day, but that the wages and repose were mine alone. My Lords, it is a great additional gratification to me to advocate these principles in connection with a distinguished member of my family, so lately at the head of the Government of his native country—a country ever dear to me from the recollections of my infancy, the memory of her sorrows, and the honors of her people. I deem, my Lords, in the name of Ireland; and it is the highest pleasure I can anticipate, to be thus united with the rest of my kindred, in the grateful act of closing the wounds which seven centuries of misgovernment have inflicted upon that unfortunate land."

The expressions which we have italicized in this extract are deeply interesting to our readers, many of whom will be pained for the first time that one of England's greatest generals paid such a just and magnificent tribute to Irish valor before the most exalted assembly of England's Parliament. "One-half our troops were Roman Catholics, * * * without whose blood and valor no victory could have been obtained." What an admission to fall from the lips of a distinguished representative of a land that for centuries previous had made of Catholic Ireland the prison-pen of patriots and the Calvary of Catholics! It is too late now for regrets, but we cannot subdue the passing thought which prompts us to pine over the fact that so many brave sons of Erin could do so much for the English invader and so little for the suffering land that gave them birth.

In regard to his nativity, Wellington himself almost answers the question at the head of this article when he says that Ireland is ever dear to him from "the recollections of his infancy, the memory of her wrongs, and the bravery of her people"—and in his closing sentence the Iron Duke could not conceal from the world the plague spot which England made of Ireland by "the wounds which seven centuries of misgovernment have inflicted upon that unfortunate land." The Irish blood in the veins of the Iron Duke must have forced this indictment to fall from his lips, yet, like all other appeals to England's sense of justice, it fell flat at the feet of John Bull, and served only to heighten the cruelty and to increase the torture with which the cutiff England ruled prostrate Erin through the penal days up to the time of Catholic Emancipation.

Let us now go back to the question of the nativity of Wellington, and we find the question set at rest by a very simple but very important custom throughout Great Britain, by which all the children of prominent parentage are recognized and their rights as heirs to lands or titles easily established. That record is the Register kept in all churches in Ireland, both Catholic and Protestant, and, according to the irrefutable evidence of the Parish Register of St. Peter's church, Dublin, Arthur Wellesley, subsequently Duke of Wellington, was born in that parish on the 30th day of April, 1769. He was the fourth son of the first Earl of Mornington. The original name of the family, which had settled in Ireland since the time of Henry VIII., was Colley or Cowley, but a female relative of Lord Mornington's having married into the ancient family of Wesley or Wellesley, and leaving no heirs, the property passed to her nephew, Richard Cowley, grandfather of the Duke of Wellington, on condition that the family should adopt the name of Wesley. The subsequent vanquisher of Napoleon received his first commission in the army in 1787 as an ensign in the 73d foot, being, in 1793, promoted to major in the 33d foot. About this time he represented the borough of Trim in the Irish Parliament, but was not distinguished for any particular political or military dress during his civil career. From 1794, when he joined the forces of the Duke of York in the Netherlands, down to 1821, Wellington's life was almost a continuous scene of preparation for, or participation in, the several great wars through which he passed.

In 1828 he became Prime Minister of England, presiding over a Cabinet which was determined that Catholic Emancipation should never be granted. But Daniel O'Connell, backed by the Irish priesthood and people, proved too strong, even for the modern Alexander, so he surrendered to them upon the grounds of "policy and expediency." In a word, he succumbed to the threat of civil war, and conceded to the Catholics, simply because he discovered that it would be detrimental to England's interests to continue the conflict. The army, as Wellington himself admitted, was "fully one-half Irish Catholics," and they, to a man, were on the side of O'Connell; so, to appease them, Catholic Emancipation was granted, and as the measure aroused the indignation of the Orangemen and other enemies of Ireland in the United Kingdom, the Catholic Association was suppressed, as a sop to satisfy them. But even the suppression of the Catholic Association failed to placate the anti-Catholic element; hence Wellington caused a measure to be introduced which disfranchised all the small Irish farmers, designated as "the forty-shilling freeholders." And finding that this unjust act failed to satisfy the orange mob and their allies, Wellington's Ministry passed a measure by which monastic institutions were menaced with extinction and Nuns and Friars subjected to transportation. These malignant measures reflect on their authors Peel and Wellington unpeelable infamy, and they also prove the latter to have been a trickster and a political shuffler who sacrificed his natural sentiments in order to retain a diplomatic prominence for which he lacked the necessary talent.

Against all these base measures leveled at the Catholics, O'Connell fought bravely, but a few friend Catholic lords like Clonerty had more influence than the Liberator, hence England emancipated the Catholics of Ireland by removing the manacles from their hands and forging them upon their feet, and in thus keeping Ireland in the chains of slavery England had no one more willing to rivet the bonds than Arthur, Duke of Wellington.

But it was not towards Ireland alone that Wellington's spirit of illiberality was directed, as history tells us that he opposed the Reform bill, the abolition of the Corn laws, and free trade. He denied to the Jews civil equality, and during his Premiership he rendered himself so generally obnoxious by his opposition to all liberal measures that he was publicly pelted with stones in the streets of London and the windows of his residence (Apsley House) were broken by an infuriated mob. He died at Walmer Castle, September 14th, 1852, and is buried in St. Paul's, where a magnificent monument has been raised over his remains, and—in the expressive language of an Irish poet, the author of "The Burial of Sir John Moore," whose poem has been appropriated by English collators and attributed to Campbell there let him slumber

"Like a warrior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him."

Was St. Cyril a Murderer?

FIRST ARTICLE.

This is an easy question to ask, but before we proceed to answer it there are a few matters that we wish the readers of both the Monitor and the Sacramento Record-Union to distinctly understand. In our issue of the 15th inst. we alluded to St. Cyril, Hypatia, and other historical characters connected with Alexandria in the fourth century, under the captions of "A Historical Error Corrected." We were then in receipt of the daily issue of the Sacramento Record-Union, which continued to arrive regularly up to the issue of Friday, the 17th inst., but no copies have come to hand since. On Saturday, the 18th inst., the Record-Union contained what it considered an answer to the Monitor's article, but the Monitor's copy of the daily issue was cut off from and intercepting that date. This was done, no doubt, in order that we might be left in ignorance of the rot which the Record-Union palmed off on its readers as historical truth, and also for the reason that thereby we might not be able to refute the foul calumnies which this unscrupulous and contemptible sheet had spread broadcast against the Catholic Church. But though the bigot might attempt to hide his false light under a bushel, the Monitor means to lift off the veil of secrecy with which an attempt has been made to shroud it, and to pillory the Record-Union in the stocks of public execration so that hereafter it will be more careful how it casts such epithets as "ignorant" at the Monitor. We will place the dunce's cap upon the dollard head and make him shiver with very shame for the nastiness of his language, the ignorance and insolence of his assertions, and the rancorous venom of his vitiated intellect.

Having thus enlightened our readers on the contemptible meanness to which the enemies of the Church will resort in order to cover up their bigotry, we will now proceed to prove, from irrefutable historical evidence, that St. Cyril was not a murderer, in the first place, and that the Monitor is very far from being "ignorant of the history of its own Church; but, on the contrary, that we can refute such a manufacturer of historical fiction as the Record-Union, and exhibit to its astonished gaze the fact that ignorance and bigotry belong entirely to our Sacramento contemporary who so stultified itself by withholding our copy of its issue in which the following article occurs

"Hypatia and St. Catharine" is the caption of this hidden literary gem from the mine of the Record-Union, and the first ray of light therefrom is thus emitted:

"It was understood in San Francisco Monitorial circles the responsibility of the Catholic Church for the hideous murder of Hypatia. This is a favorite calumny. The accountability of that crime is unalterably fixed upon Rome, for she canonized the chief murderer under the saintly title of St. Cyril of Alexandria. The Monitor, anxious to make it appear that the murder of Hypatia was committed by the Jews, or the ancestors of the Christians by the Jews. But that pretence is absurd. Hypatia had neither to do with the Jews."

We must inform our critical contemporary that the "audacity" of the Monitor is based upon the facts of history, which the allegations of the most arrogant literary mountebank can never overthrow. Words are but wind, and the Record-Union may blow its breeze of bigotry never so strongly, it will only be a foul wind laden with the miasma of hate, after all. The Monitor, therefore, again resumes its "audacity" and "absurdity" in flatly contradicting its mere assertion unfortified by a single fact and unfounded on any authority.

It is not our place to prove a negative, but as we well know the tactics of the traducers of our Church who never attempt to substantiate their own calumnious creations, but merely fling mud at the Church and then scud round the corner—it will be necessary, for the better understanding of the subject, that we give historical proof—even from Protestant sources—for every sentiment we utter in defence of a great saint whose sanctified ashes have been hoofed by the ghoulish expression of environed hate hot from the pit of hell and the Record-Union. Now for a little Protestant truth, wherein we propose to cook our contemporary's goose pretty effectually. But first let us hear what the historian of St. Cyril's era says on this subject

"The murder of Hypatia by a few sanctimonious fanatics from Nitria," says Socrates, the historian of his time and the enemy of St. Cyril, "brought disgrace on Cyril and the church Alexandria, because such atrocious deeds were quite at variance with the practices of Christians."—(Soc. Eccl. Hist. Book VII., chap. 15.)

Here we have an avowed enemy of St. Cyril declaring that Hypatia's murder was done by "unauthorized fanatics," for whose bloody deed St. Cyril could not be held responsible any more than could the eleven Apostles be held responsible for the betrayal of our Lord by Judas.

So much for that witness. Now let us call into court the Rev. Baring Gould, A. M., an eminent Anglican minister, and one who had no regard for the Catholic Church, except such impartial esteem as the force of truth compelled him to demonstrate in his historical writings. This distinguished Protestant divine has written a life of St. Cyril, and instead of embracing the opportunity afforded him of propagating a slander against a Catholic saint, he honestly and nobly denies the foul calumny in these words

"Cyril cannot be quite to the taken load. Had there been no disturbance caused by the Jews of Alexandria, there would have been no murder of Hypatia."—(Cook's Lives of the Saints, vol. I., p. 19-25.)

There! What can any impartial reader think of the mendacity of the Record-Union in placing such an unsupported and unsavory prejudices against the truthful testimony of such a respectable witness as this? But we are not yet done scourging the impertinent assurance out of our Sacramento scribe, as we will next introduce the testimony of no less a celebrity than the well-known Protestant Canon Robertson, who says, in very clear terms, that the very charge which the Record-Union re-hashes with such malicious fallacy is "an unfounded calumny." Here are Robertson's own words, with the volume and page where the pure peripatetic pensman of the Sacramento slander-monger can find them

"Hypatia (yet) had any share in the atrocious murder of Hypatia appears to be unsupported by any trustworthy evidence."—(Vol. I., p. 271.)

Here, indeed, is the testimony of these witnesses alone, might we rest our case and have the calumnious charge of the Record-Union thrown out of court by the verdict of impartial public opinion, but inasmuch as that paper has permitted its prejudices to run away with its sense of decency, we intend to notice every line it has written on this subject and to show up its falsehoods and its hate so that Catholics may form a correct estimate of their calumniator. For this reason we introduce the second slice of the Record-Union's spleen

"The truth is that the murder of that pious, beautiful and learned woman was an afire to which the Church is guilty, and the fact that the saintly Bishop Cyril was never called to account for it shows what the Church was in the fifth century. But indeed history informs us that organized secret societies of heathens, Christians and Jews, had sworn to destroy the Church, and had succeeded in every instance, which hastened to perpetuate the slaughter of the Christians, and to every opportunity. And among the worst of the diabolical societies were those of the twelfth time, Cyril of Alexandria stands conspicuous as the character of that age, and yet he was not so much a bad man as a bad priest. He was a scurrilous, a vulgar, a coarse, a drunken, a sanguinary priest, an impudent pretender, a corrupt and venal priest, a bigot, a fanatic and a liar. Yet he has been canonized by the Church—Hypatia on the hands, and all that can be said in mitigation of the murder of that he is to be numbered with saints, and by those who have believed to the same way by the same Church."

Now we have the Protestant historian's testimony in order to exhibit to Catholics the kind of literature which the Record-Union furnishes the Catholic families who are so criminally foolish as to permit it a place in their households. Catholic readers, behold a scoundrel by a pestilerous press, and the same disgraceful appellation applied to every saint in the calendar by a journal that revels in the rottenness of its unfounded abuse. And what makes the attack of the Record-Union still more dastardly and disgraceful is the fact that it cannot point to a respectable authority, either Protestant or pagan, in order to support its outpouring of wanton wrath.

Language fails us to express our contempt for the diabolical detractor who can thus outrage the religious feelings of Catholics, and we publish such a tirade of calumny against a saint who has been venerated through all ages during the past thirteen centuries. The only way we can stamp this outpouring of vileness with its proper standard is to quote from the same Protestant historian the following extract from the Bishop who raised by Almighty God to defend the faith of the incarnation of His Son, is styled "a stupid bigot" by the Satanic press of Sacramento. The bigot who presided over the hundred Bishops at the Council of Ephesus, in 431, is dubbed "an impudent pretender" by the foul-mouthed bleeder of the sanctified dead! The great ecclesiastic whom Pope Celestine styles "the generous defender of the Church and faith, the Catholic doctor, and an apostolic man," is held up by the Judas lacerator of journalism as "a corrupt and venal priest." The saint whose memory is celebrated by the Catholic Church all over the world as one of the army of the blessed who surround the throne of God in heaven, is designated as "a shameless liar" by a journal whose diabolical spirit must have been prompted by the devil! Yet this is the penalty which piety must pay to passion and prejudice, but it is consoling to think that the latter of the viper can be cured, and that when the pestiferous reptile ceases to be venomous it will be crushed beneath the heel of a holy Bishop, shall have been forgotten, the character of St. Cyril will shine forth as resplendent as it did when the coronet of canonization first placed him among the elect in heaven.

Thus we have convicted the anti-Catholic Record-Union of malicious falsehood, specially manipulated for the purpose of blackening the character of the Catholic Church. We have proved—even from Protestant testimony—that it was both designedly and willfully ignorant when it poured its slimy spite upon the tomb of St. Cyril, and next week we intend to further expose the fallacies of the article in question, an article, which for intensity of bigotry, depravity of taste and malignity of expression we have seldom seen equalled—and never excelled.

Olive Logan's Slur on the Irish.

Any person who possessed a knowledge of the pro-English prejudice of Olive Logan against the Irish people in general, and "the Pope's Irish" in particular, would not feel any surprise at the slur which the actress cast upon the Irish race, in the following reference to them, clipped from the Call of Sunday last

"At an aristocratic dinner party the other night, I happened to see a beautiful young lady, whose conversation had charmed me very much, what her nationality was. A sudden check came upon her gaiety. 'I am Irish, she answered, with downcast eyes, 'and I am ashamed of it.'

Female Bohemians like Olive Logan have a great weakness for airing their consequence before readers who care not a rent cent whether they dine with the lords in the drawing-room or the lackeys in the pantry, hence it is reasonable to suppose that the most polish of the writer never rested beneath the mahogany of any aristocrat, and it is also probable that such a scene as that described by the crushed actress never occurred

There is an insuperable barrier between the Irish race which even the brazen effrontery of such a veteran in the crooked ways of the world as Olive Logan can never surmount, hence this female Fitzgerald is always happy when she can cast a slur upon the Irish race. She does not even blame the penny-a-liner as we do the Call for inflicting such insults upon its Irish readers. No virtuous Irishwoman ever lived who was ashamed of her nativity, and if an Irishwoman would blush on an occasion such as that cited by Olive Logan, it would denote the crimson tinge which pure virtue feels when it finds itself seated beside the stage stalled literary scullion. It is also established fact that those people who are "ashamed to be Irish" are generally that class of whom Ireland has far more reason to be ashamed than they have to deny their country or their religion. Her Majesty's Prison Ships, anchored in Cork harbor, and Mountjoy Prison, Dublin, bear witness to the fact that a goodly number of Irishmen should be so instead of being so proud.

Miss Rebecca M. Ewing, daughter of Hon. F. W. Ewing, Lancaster, has entered the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, Notre Dame, Ind. She is known in society as Sister Mary La Salette.

Oscar Fingall O'Flaherty Wills-Wilde, the son of the Ireland's most patriotic poet and sweetest singer, take about Lady Wilde's last illness and death, and the fact that the Irish Bishop Cyril was never called to account for it shows what the Church was in the fifth century. But indeed history informs us that organized secret societies of heathens, Christians and Jews, had sworn to destroy the Church, and had succeeded in every instance, which hastened to perpetuate the slaughter of the Christians, and to every opportunity. And among the worst of the diabolical societies were those of the twelfth time, Cyril of Alexandria stands conspicuous as the character of that age, and yet he was not so much a bad man as a bad priest. He was a scurrilous, a vulgar, a coarse, a drunken, a sanguinary priest, an impudent pretender, a corrupt and venal priest, a bigot, a fanatic and a liar. Yet he has been canonized by the Church—Hypatia on the hands, and all that can be said in mitigation of the murder of that he is to be numbered with saints, and by those who have believed to the same way by the same Church."

Now we have the Protestant historian's testimony in order to exhibit to Catholics the kind of literature which the Record-Union furnishes the Catholic families who are so criminally foolish as to permit it a place in their households. Catholic readers, behold a scoundrel by a pestilerous press, and the same disgraceful appellation applied to every saint in the calendar by a journal that revels in the rottenness of its unfounded abuse. And what makes the attack of the Record-Union still more dastardly and disgraceful is the fact that it cannot point to a respectable authority, either Protestant or pagan, in order to support its outpouring of wanton wrath.

Language fails us to express our contempt for the diabolical detractor who can thus outrage the religious feelings of Catholics, and we publish such a tirade of calumny against a saint who has been venerated through all ages during the past thirteen centuries. The only way we can stamp this outpouring of vileness with its proper standard is to quote from the same Protestant historian the following extract from the Bishop who raised by Almighty God to defend the faith of the incarnation of His Son, is styled "a stupid bigot" by the Satanic press of Sacramento. The bigot who presided over the hundred Bishops at the Council of Ephesus, in 431, is dubbed "an impudent pretender" by the foul-mouthed bleeder of the sanctified dead! The great ecclesiastic whom Pope Celestine styles "the generous defender of the Church and faith, the Catholic doctor, and an apostolic man," is held up by the Judas lacerator of journalism as "a corrupt and venal priest." The saint whose memory is celebrated by the Catholic Church all over the world as one of the army of the blessed who surround the throne of God in heaven, is designated as "a shameless liar" by a journal whose diabolical spirit must have been prompted by the devil! Yet this is the penalty which piety must pay to passion and prejudice, but it is consoling to think that the latter of the viper can be cured, and that when the pestiferous reptile ceases to be venomous it will be crushed beneath the heel of a holy Bishop, shall have been forgotten, the character of St. Cyril will shine forth as resplendent as it did when the coronet of canonization first placed him among the elect in heaven.

Thus we have convicted the anti-Catholic Record-Union of malicious falsehood, specially manipulated for the purpose of blackening the character of the Catholic Church. We have proved—even from Protestant testimony—that it was both designedly and willfully ignorant when it poured its slimy spite upon the tomb of St. Cyril, and next week we intend to further expose the fallacies of the article in question, an article, which for intensity of bigotry, depravity of taste and malignity of expression we have seldom seen equalled—and never excelled.

Pope Leo's Latest Wishes.

A cablegram from Rome, under date of the 16th inst., brings the intelligence that the Pope had addressed a very important letter to the Italian Bishops, commending them, in view of the dangers surrounding the Church

I. To increase their spiritual activity.

II. To encourage Catholic societies among the laity.

III. To develop the Catholic press.

IV. To advocate boldly the temporal independence of the Sovereign Pontiff.

As soon as we receive the authorized text of this important letter in question, we will publish it in full, for the reason that the aidmonitions of the Vicar of Christ are not circumscribed by geographical boundaries, but are universal in their scope and general in their application. His Holiness, with his accustomed zeal for literature, advises the Italian Prelates to foster the Catholic press so that it may be able to cope with the corrupt Catholic and infidel press whose poison has so corrupted the Italian people that they have become impregnated with infidelity and are rapidly losing the faith. Here in America, too, we have to combat with a press of peculiar hostile character, and it is for the reason that we may be able to repel the attacks of our numerous enemies effectively that we again appeal to the Rev. Clergy, the agents and the friends of the Monitor in every vicinity to ask their Catholic neighbors to subscribe for the Monitor so that every Catholic home may have its Catholic paper and thus accord with the wish of the Vicar of Christ. There is no family so indigent as not to be able to spare a quarter—a dollar every month towards securing for the family such reading as will be beneficial to them both morally and religiously, besides becoming sharers in the blessings promised to all who help to instruct others to salvation. We hope, therefore, every friend of the Monitor will renew his efforts to spread the circulation of the journal that defends and diffuses the dogmas of our holy faith.

Electoral Reform in Italy.

On the 23rd of January the Italian Ministers proceeded to the Quirinal in order to submit certain decrees to the Royal signature, when Signor Logan's "beautiful voice" was heard on a matter of the most vital importance to the Catholics of Italy. The decrees in question were published in Italy, and the purport of them was that a sealed door whose Irish virtue felt absahed at the disgrace which she had brought upon the land of her birth, and we must admit in palliation of her disinterestedness, that a tear was made that the fact of the young lady being in such snobish company does not at all argue that the so-called "aristocratic party" was the best place in the world to look for either purity of morals or respectability of character.

Briggs's Buncombe.

Unfortunately for the cause of temperance, its advocates are too often both untrustful and intemperate in the use of their language when they attempt to show his shortcomings in the civil they are engaged in combating. We read in Sunday's papers that a certain Rev. M. C. Briggs, of Alameda, announced at the regular meeting of the Home Protective Association, on the previous Saturday night, that while the rents of Ireland amounted to $26,000,000, yet the whisky bills of Ireland amounted to $67,000,000 a year. This is absolutely false, and we challenge Mr. Briggs to prove his assertion. It may be congenial to the practice of Protestant preachers to fabricate falsehoods against the Irish people under the guise of doing good to humanity in general, but such recklessness as this revelation of Alameda evinces is enough to damn the very cause he espouses. The Irish people are not the drunken race this parson depicts them, and the latest proof of this fact is found in the evidence of a Methodist preacher, Rev. Mr. Briggs, who personally visited Ireland, spending several months there, and on his return to this country lectured on what he saw when in Europe. In one of his lectures, published in the Monitor on the 22d inst., this Protestant preacher declared that he saw more "intemperance in Wrexham, Wales, on one Saturday night, than I saw in Ireland in four weeks." Brother Briggs might bottle this statement, like Mr. Wesley, and keep it on some future occasion with advantage.

The Pope Coming to Canada?

Every few months some sensation-monger of the Associated Press manufactures a dispatch relative to the removal of the Pope from Rome. During the past three months he has been sent to Malta, to Germany and to Spain, and now, to cap the climax, a dispatch published on Sunday's papers has it that he is about to take up his quarters in the shrine of the St. Lawrence, and that the Government of the province of Quebec is about to raise the modest sum of $80,000, 000 to build a palace for his Holiness. All of which is mere sensational bosh, as the Pope has not the remotest idea of leaving Rome, in the first place, and he needs no $80,000,000 palace in Canada, even if he was so inclined. This disaster, however, will never occur, as the Papal Government has no desire to enter into any military contests with Germany and other European powers, who, in such an event, would gladiatorize forward in order to secure back the spiritual and temporal rights of the Papacy in the Italian realm. The fact is that the Governments in Europe have recently learned that no matter how much they may despise the Church, yet there is only one man in the world who can hold in check the elements that are ready to overthrow all Governments, and that man is Leo XIII., whose presence and power are necessary for the preservation of society and the stability of Christian principles.

Pope Leo's Latest Wishes.

A cablegram from Rome, under date of the 16th inst., brings the intelligence that the Pope had addressed a very important letter to the Italian Bishops, commending them, in view of the dangers surrounding the Church

I. To increase their spiritual activity.

II. To encourage Catholic societies among the laity.

III. To develop the Catholic press.

IV. To advocate boldly the temporal independence of the Sovereign Pontiff.

As soon as we receive the authorized text of this important letter in question, we will publish it in full, for the reason that the admonitions of the Vicar of Christ are not circumscribed by geographical boundaries, but are universal in their scope and general in their application. His Holiness, with his accustomed zeal for literature, advises the Italian Prelates to foster the Catholic press so that it may be able to cope with the corrupt Catholic and infidel press whose poison has so corrupted the Italian people that they have become impregnated with infidelity and are rapidly losing the faith. Here in America, too, we have to combat with a press of peculiar hostile character, and it is for the reason that we may be able to repel the attacks of our numerous enemies effectively that we again appeal to the Rev. Clergy, the agents and the friends of the Monitor in every vicinity to ask their Catholic neighbors to subscribe for the Monitor so that every Catholic home may have its Catholic paper and thus accord with the wish of the Vicar of Christ. There is no family so indigent as not to be able to spare a quarter—a dollar every month towards securing for the family such reading as will be beneficial to them both morally and religiously, besides becoming sharers in the blessings promised to all who help to instruct others to salvation. We hope, therefore, every friend of the Monitor will renew his efforts to spread the circulation of the journal that defends and diffuses the dogmas of our holy faith.

Electoral Reform in Italy.

On the 23rd of January the Italian Ministers proceeded to the Quirinal in order to submit certain decrees to the Royal signature, when Signor Logan's "beautiful voice" was heard on a matter of the most vital importance to the Catholics of Italy. The decrees in question were published in Italy, and the purport of them was that a sealed door whose Irish virtue felt absahed at the disgrace which she had brought upon the land of her birth, and we must admit in palliation of her disinterestedness, that a tear was made that the fact of the young lady being in such snobish company does not at all argue that the so-called "aristocratic party" was the best place in the world to look for either purity of morals or respectability of character.

Briggs's Buncombe.

Unfortunately for the cause of temperance, its advocates are too often both untrustful and intemperate in the use of their language when they attempt to show his shortcomings in the civil they are engaged in combating. We read in Sunday's papers that a certain Rev. M. C. Briggs, of Alameda, announced at the regular meeting of the Home Protective Association, on the previous Saturday night, that while the rents of Ireland amounted to $26,000,000, yet the whisky bills of Ireland amounted to $67,000,000 a year. This is absolutely false, and we challenge Mr. Briggs to prove his assertion. It may be congenial to the practice of Protestant preachers to fabricate falsehoods against the Irish people under the guise of doing good to humanity in general, but such recklessness as this revelation of Alameda evinces is enough to damn the very cause he espouses. The Irish people are not the drunken race this parson depicts them, and the latest proof of this fact is found in the evidence of a Methodist preacher, Rev. Mr. Briggs, who personally visited Ireland, spending several months there, and on his return to this country lectured on what he saw when in Europe. In one of his lectures, published in the Monitor on the 22d inst., this Protestant preacher declared that he saw more "intemperance in Wrexham, Wales, on one Saturday night, than I saw in Ireland in four weeks." Brother Briggs might bottle this statement, like Mr. Wesley, and keep it on some future occasion with advantage.

The Pope Coming to Canada?

Every few months some sensation-monger of the Associated Press manufactures a dispatch relative to the removal of the Pope from Rome. During the past three months he has been sent to Malta, to Germany and to Spain, and now, to cap the climax, a dispatch published on Sunday's papers has it that he is about to take up his quarters in the shrine of the St. Lawrence, and that the Government of the province of Quebec is about to raise the modest sum of $80,000,000 to build a palace for his Holiness. All of which is mere sensational bosh, as the Pope has not the remotest idea of leaving Rome, in the first place, and he needs no $80,000,000 palace in Canada, even if he was so inclined. This disaster, however, will never occur, as the Papal Government has no desire to enter into any military contests with Germany and other European powers, who, in such an event, would gladiatorize forward in order to secure back the spiritual and temporal rights of the Papacy in the Italian realm. The fact is that the Governments in Europe have recently learned that no matter how much they may despise the Church, yet there is only one man in the world who can hold in check the elements that are ready to overthrow all Governments, and that man is Leo XIII., whose presence and power are necessary for the preservation of society and the stability of Christian principles.

Pope Leo's Latest Wishes.

A cablegram from Rome, under date of the 16th inst., brings the intelligence that the Pope had addressed a very important letter to the Italian Bishops, commending them, in view of the dangers surrounding the Church

I. To increase their spiritual activity.

II. To encourage Catholic societies among the laity.

III. To develop the Catholic press.

IV. To advocate boldly the temporal independence of the Sovereign Pontiff.

As soon as we receive the authorized text of this important letter in question, we will publish it in full, for the reason that the admonitions of the Vicar of Christ are not circumscribed by geographical boundaries, but are universal in their scope and general in their application. His Holiness, with his accustomed zeal for literature, advises the Italian Prelates to foster the Catholic press so that it may be able to cope with the corrupt Catholic and infidel press whose poison has so corrupted the Italian people that they have become impregnated with infidelity and are rapidly losing the faith. Here in America, too, we have to combat with a press of peculiar hostile character, and it is for the reason that we may be able to repel the attacks of our numerous enemies effectively that we again appeal to the Rev. Clergy, the agents and the friends of the Monitor in every vicinity to ask their Catholic neighbors to subscribe for the Monitor so that every Catholic home may have its Catholic paper and thus accord with the wish of the Vicar of Christ. There is no family so indigent as not to be able to spare a quarter—a dollar every month towards securing for the family such reading as will be beneficial to them both morally and religiously, besides becoming sharers in the blessings promised to all who help to instruct others to salvation. We hope, therefore, every friend of the Monitor will renew his efforts to spread the circulation of the journal that defends and diffuses the dogmas of our holy faith.

Electoral Reform in Italy.

On the 23rd of January the Italian Ministers proceeded to the Quirinal in order to submit certain decrees to the Royal signature, when Signor Logan's "beautiful voice" was heard on a matter of the most vital importance to the Catholics of Italy. The decrees in question were published in Italy, and the purport of them was that a sealed door whose Irish virtue felt absahed at the disgrace which she had brought upon the land of her birth, and we must admit in palliation of her disinterestedness, that a tear was made that the fact of the young lady being in such snobish company does not at all argue that the so-called "aristocratic party" was the best place in the world to look for either purity of morals or respectability of character.

Briggs's Buncombe.

Unfortunately for the cause of temperance, its advocates are too often both untrustful and intemperate in the use of their language when they attempt to show his shortcomings in the civil they are engaged in combating. We read in Sunday's papers that a certain Rev. M. C. Briggs, of Alameda, announced at the regular meeting of the Home Protective Association, on the previous Saturday night, that while the rents of Ireland amounted to $26,000,000, yet the whisky bills of Ireland amounted to $67,000,000 a year. This is absolutely false, and we challenge Mr. Briggs to prove his assertion. It may be congenial to the practice of Protestant preachers to fabricate falsehoods against the Irish people under the guise of doing good to humanity in general, but such recklessness as this revelation of Alameda evinces is enough to damn the very cause he espouses. The Irish people are not the drunken race this parson depicts them, and the latest proof of this fact is found in the evidence of a Methodist preacher, Rev. Mr. Briggs, who personally visited Ireland, spending several months there, and on his return to this country lectured on what he saw when in Europe. In one of his lectures, published in the Monitor on the 22d inst., this Protestant preacher declared that he saw more "intemperance in Wrexham, Wales, on one Saturday night, than I saw in Ireland in four weeks." Brother Briggs might bottle this statement, like Mr. Wesley, and keep it on some future occasion with advantage.

The Pope Coming to Canada?

Every few months some sensation-monger of the Associated Press manufactures a dispatch relative to the removal of the Pope from Rome. During the past three months he has been sent to Malta, to Germany and to Spain, and now, to cap the climax, a dispatch published on Sunday's papers has it that he is about to take up his quarters in the shrine of the St. Lawrence, and that the Government of the province of Quebec is about to raise the modest sum of $80,000,000 to build a palace for his Holiness. All of which is mere sensational bosh, as the Pope has not the remotest idea of leaving Rome, in the first place, and he needs no $80,000,000 palace in Canada, even if he was so inclined. This disaster, however, will never occur, as the Papal Government has no desire to enter into any military contests with Germany and other European powers, who, in such an event, would gladiatorize forward in order to secure back the spiritual and temporal rights of the Papacy in the Italian realm. The fact is that the Governments in Europe have recently learned that no matter how much they may despise the Church, yet there is only one man in the world who can hold in check the elements that are ready to overthrow all Governments, and that man is Leo XIII., whose presence and power are necessary for the preservation of society and the stability of Christian principles.

THE MONITOR.

MONITOR MENTION.

Michael Dualty, although yet an inmate of Portland prison, has been elected to succeed A. M. Sullivan as Member of Parliament for Meath.

—Mr. Arthur Reid Peatock, coroner for West Sussex, Enchland, has been ordered into the

Farm and Home.

A Mortgage on the Farm.

Good farmer friends, whatever else you do there is one thing you want to avoid as you would a pestilence.

Never put a mortgage on your farm.

No matter how hard pressed you are, never be tempted to do it. If you do, you will regret it to the latest day of your life.

No matter if you do want to fix up the house, or buy more land, or get a better team, or send the boys to college, or buy the girls a piano—don't mortgage the farm to do it!

It will hang like an incubus over you. It will bind you to the wheel. It will make a slave of you, until the holder of the mortgage steps in and forecloses, and sells your homestead for half of what it is worth, and ends the matter.

Many circumstances may arise which place you in a tight place. You may need money in cases of sickness; your need may be imperative, and mortgaging the farm may appear feasible—but don't do it! If you must have the money, sell the farm yourself and begin anew. It will be better in the long run, for then you will be working for yourself, and not to pay interest, which brings you no nearer paying the original debt.

Our sympathies always go out towards the farmer who has a mortgage on his farm. We have watched the thing over and over again, and just know how it works. He has not a dollar he can call his own. The man who holds that mortgage wants every dollar he can grab. He hovers round, ready to pounce on the cash when it comes in from the sales of the pet colt, the young calf, the few chickens the children have raised, the butter the thrifty housewife has managed to spare.

The farmer who has his house mortgaged cannot indulge in luxuries. If he gets a new coat it is remarked upon. If his wife indulges in a new dress, somebody says they had better be paying up that mortgage. If his son drives a smart horse, the old gossips nod their heads at each other and talk about "putting on style, and his father's farm mortgaged!"

Who can feel an interest in a piece of property which is his only in name? Who cares about making a farm more valuable, that some man he owes may profit by it? The fact of it is, none of us have approached near enough to perfection to feel any great anxiety to spend our lives toiling to enrich somebody out of our family. It isn't natural.

And farming is a work in which a man to be successful must be interested, and to which he must bring his best energies, and his most vigorous and determined strength. He must get up every morning with the resolution "I must do something to-day that shall tell on my farm!"

He should be able to lie down every night with the assurance to soothe him to sleep: "I have benefitted my farm by one day's work, at least, this day!" How can a man do this for a farm which is mortgaged?

He knows that it is only a question of time when Mr. A——or Mr. B——will step in and plead hard times—(it is always hard times with capitalists)—and foreclose the mortgage. True there is the right of redemption. But what man ever yet redeemed his farm? Not one out of forty. Then the place must be disposed of, and we all know that anything sold at a forced sale never brings its value.

And when it is done, and the roof is gone from over the heads of his wife and children, and he is homeless, he has nothing to comfort him in looking back, for he knows that he has paid interest enough in all these weary years of indebtedness to almost discharge the debt, and now his all has gone into the hungry maw of the creditor.

So we end as we began—never mortgage your farm! Sell it, if you must, but sell it yourself, and do not spend your life earning money to pay out in interest, for interest goes on while you sleep, and it does not take long to set the ordinary farmer out of house and home.

A Madman's Wisdom.

Arab literature is full of anecdotes of wise and sober men who have reproved their disciples "betters." Here is one of the kind. A certain king went to visit a mad-house, and found there an intelligent-looking youth, who replying sensibly to a number of questions put to him by the sovereign at length addressed the latter saying:

"You have asked me many things; I will now ask you one. At what period does a sleeper enjoy his sleep most?"

The king reflected awhile and said "While he is actually sleeping."

"That cannot be," and the madman, "for he has no perception while sleeping."

"Then before he goes to sleep," said the king.

"How can any one enjoy anything," asked the madman, "before it comes?"

"Then," said the king, "after he has been asleep?"

"Nay," said the madman, "a man can not be said to enjoy a thing that has passed away."

So pleased was the king with the other's wit that he determined to make a companion of him, and had a table set in front of the window of the mad-house, and had his attendants hand him a cup of wine to himself and one to his mad friend. You drink your cup said the latter, "that you may become like me; but if I drink mine whom shall I be like?"

The king, on hearing this speech, threw away his cup and remained a teetotal abstainer for ever more.

Womanly Modesty.

Man loves the mysterious. A cloudless sky and a full brown rose leave him unmoved; but the violet which hides its blushing beauties behind the bush, and the moon when emerging behind a cloud, are to him scenes of inspiration and of pleasure. Modesty is to merit what shade is to a figure in painting—it gives boldness and prominence. Nothing adds more to female beauty than modesty. It sheds around the countenance a halo of light which is borrowed from virtue. Botanists have given the rosy hue which tinges the cup of the white rose the name of "maiden blush." This pure and delicate hue is the only paint christian virtue should use. It is the richest ornament. A woman without modesty is like a faded flower diffusing an unwholesome odor, which the prudent gardener will throw from him. Her destiny is melancholy for it terminates in shame and repentance. Beauty passes like the flower of the aloe, which bloom and die in a few hours; but modesty gives the female charms which supply the place of transitory freshness of youth.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the importance of the testimonials which are the proved value of the article of which they speak we publish herewith the affidavits and signatures of persons whose statements is beyond questions. The truth of these testimonials is wonderful, but can the fact that they sometimes be ignored.

Chester House,
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct 28, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for two years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves by lumbago pains and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks deemed my business to such an extent that good-timer forsook me. I passed stones, ranging in size from 12 down to a fine gravel, and the last one I passed was so large that it lodged in the bladder. I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys inside the hip bone, down in front and along the course of the ureter. The discharge of the stone was usually attended with stranguary of the urine of the bladder. The pains were very severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning from time to time until the stones were discharged, at times, the pains were so severe that they amounted almost to convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which make kidney and urinary diseases a specialty, and they told me I could not live long if I did not get rid of the stones. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney disease. I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed the stone referred to, and since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

S. O. Lewis

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and loins, so that I could scarcely rest day or night. My urine was high colored, and when I did it it was attended with severe pains and burning sensations. I was in doubt about commencing to take your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, as I had taken so much medicine without obtaining any relief, but finally concluded it would do me no harm to try it. I am cheerfully testify that nothing has given me so much relief. I believe it to be a thorough cure for kidney and bladder troubles.

C. B. Spellie

Hat & Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 23, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My business, that of rollmaking, is one that often induces and always aggravates any affection of the kidneys, as all rolling mill men know. I suffered so much that I was obliged to lay off for some time. Hearing of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I never felt better in my life than I now do. I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

A. Greer

SANTA ROSA, Cal., March 10, 1881

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last five years, and have used all the different medicines advertised for said disease, as well as the medicines prescribed by physicians, but nothing ever reached my case. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now entirely well. I can cheerfully testify that it has done all you advertise and claim for it.

H. M. Van Winkle

AUBURN, Cal., April 17, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians both allopathic and homeopathic, and never was relieved as I have been by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Wm. H. Conley

SANTA ROSA, Dec. 4, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after taking two bottles the pains all left me, and I have had no returns of pains since.

Chas. S. Wilcox

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 21, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with pains in my back and kidneys for upwards of two years. I was induced to try your medicine, and could obtain no other knowledge of friends. In the past, that had been cured by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, I was induced to try it, and it has proved to my case decidedly beneficial.

Geo. H. Gogg

Twenty-one and New Broadway

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 26, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My symptoms were pains in the back, also a burning sensation in two places directly over the kidneys. This was more severe when I had taken cold, as the cold always settled in my kidneys. I was treated by a physician who pronounced my case congestion of the kidneys, but failed to cure me. I have tried several remedies, but failed to obtain relief until I attend, which latter had been cured by your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, advised me to try it. I have been taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for the past three months, and have been greatly benefited.

I remain, very truly yours,

M. C. Lemmy

504 Stockton street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. After having taken several bottle never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was enabled to eat and sleep well.

Very truly yours,

Austin E. Allen

Los Gatos, Cal., Nov. 10, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have much pleasure in stating that after using two bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure I have been freed from pain in the back, from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials many of them in cases where hope was abandoned, have been voluntarily given, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any single bottle fails to do any physician or druggist recommend the great character of this

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevents its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

PREPARED BY
R. P. HALL & CO., NASHUA, N. H.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.

Prepared by R. P. HALL & CO., Nashua, N. H.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE
610 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few doors above Montgomery street,

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. mr10-3m.

OLIVER C. GILSON & CO.,
33½ O'Farrell Street,
(Near Stockton street, San Francisco.)

HAS A NEAT AND RESPECTABLE CHINESE HELP Office, managed by a white man, who speaks the language and are thoroughly experienced.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

D. C. PRESTON,
—DEALER IN—
STOVES, RANGES AND TIN WARE.
PLUMBING, METAL ROOFING, AND GENERAL JOBBING.
CONNECTING RANGES AND WATER-BACKS A SPECIALTY.
1241 Mission street.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER
CAN BE CURED
By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

IN PROOF OF WHICH HE FEELS LEAVE TO REFER to the following, named persons, who have been cured by him:

James Lavin, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
A. Gonzly, Petaluma, cancer of the neck.
James J. McArthur, Santa Rosa, cancer of the leg.
Mrs. O'Connor, 1416 Turk street, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Frank Edell, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the eye.
Mrs. Chas. Blackburn, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the nose.
Master Warner, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
Rudd Walsh, Nicphat, cancer of the face.
Martin Murphy, San Jose, cancer of the neck.
Wm. Reid, Fisherman's Ferry, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
J. C. McReynolds, Sulphur Creek, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
Mrs. Fuller, No. 1 Market street, Room 54, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mr. Cornwell, East Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
Stephen Daniels, Santa Rosa, cancer of the nose.
Miss Barlow, Eagleville, Modoc county, cancer of the breast.
Martin Myers, Freeport, Sacramento county, cancer of the lip; and two dozen of Charity, one of San Francisco and the other of Los Angeles, and others too numerous to mention.

The means by which these cures are performed mainly consists in a plaster, the recipe for which was left me by an Indian at his death, he being a well-known practicing physician in both Ireland, England and the United States. Persons who know themselves to be laboring under this form of disease who may wish to avail themselves of this cure will find me at the Brooklyn Hotel, Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

CHICKERING PIANOS.
B. CURTAZ, AGENT,
No. 20 O'Farrell Street.

P. J. O'Brien & Sons,
Carriage Builders,
329 and 331 GOLDEN GATE AVE.,
(Tyler Street,) near Larkin.

Carriages, Buggies and Wagons made of the Best Material, in the Most Workmanlike Manner, and Warranted to give Entire Satisfaction, at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing and Painting promptly attended to at Reasonable Rates.
Order by Telephone No. 2148.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Goods" of all kinds for horses. Use refer to all the principal trotters and horsemen on the Pacific Coast.

N. B. My acknowledged superiority in this branch of business is largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "turfmen" in the United States. The benefits of which redound to the public in the shape of a cheaper, well fitting article. Sole Agent for the A. H. Dunn & Co. celebrated Pomeroy and McKinney's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Trotting Saddles. Impossible to chafe with these saddles. Also Agent for the Celebrated Amesbury and Hamilton Ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddles, Imperial Saddle Cloths and Silk Face saddles. JOHN O'KANE.

JOHN J. DONOVAN,
Painter & Kalsominer,
No. 6 Potter (Twelfth st.)
Bet. Mission and Market SAN FRANCISCO

Sewing Machine Agency,
NO. 151 FOURTH ST.
Bet. Mission and Howard SAN FRANCISCO

ALL KINDS OF SEWING MACHINES CHEAP, ON easy installments. Machines rented for $2 a month. Repairing done. Needles and oil.

Assortment having recently increased at the low rates charged by Dr. Tobias, the Specialist, of 704 Kearny street, he is now prepared to offer other, but more reliable, remedies, which he feels confident will cure the worst cases of Seminal Weakness, Impotency, Syphilis, Gleet, Stricture, Gravel, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, and all those diseases of a delicate nature which require a skillful and secret treatment.

Promptness of Delivery is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders from the interior filled at city prices. Empty Boxing and Shipping free from observation. Black Books and Blanks furnished to order.

Cor. Clay and Sansome streets, San Francisco.

STOP TAKING DRUGS.
I Want Cases that Have Been Given Up.
(STARRH, CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHRONIC diseases.) Sent free, postpaid, $10, and be any address. 1916: Mission street.

CHEAP VARIETY BAZAAR,
741 MARKET ST., opp. Dupont.
THE UNDERSIGNED WOULD RESPECTFULLY AN nounce to the public that he has opened the above Bazaar, where he will keep constantly on hand every variety of Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods, Fancy Stationery, Jewelry, etc. Ladies' laces, embroideries, etc. Spectacles and Eye Glasses, to suit all, on account of small expenses, I am enabled to sell cheaper than any other store in the city. N. B. Watch made to order. Don't forget the number, 741 Market St. Please give me a call. Respectfully yours,
A. POLLACK

LITHOGRAPHERS BOOKBINDERS
P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JNO. F. SNOW & CO.
CLEANSING AND DYEING.
Blankets, Lace Curtains, Wool and Silk Goods, Coats and Ladies' Suits, Shawls, Cloaks, Furs, Feathers, Kid Gloves, Neckties, Crape Veils, Velvets, Etc., Etc.
CHAS. J. HOLMES, Proprietor.
633 Market Street, Under Palace Hotel
BRANCH: 1062 Broadway, Oakland.
Goods can be sent by mail from any part of the country, not weighing over 4 pounds. Orders by postal card promptly attended to.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the writing of one letter, making one remittance, keeping one account, paying one freight or express charge, one can get any kind of goods wanted, and never pay more (generally less) than when ordering direct from the dealer. It also has facilities for transacting any private or public business matters needing personal and prompt attention. The advantages of such an office as this as your agent are more valuable than ever. Address
THOMAS D. EGAN,
—OFFICE—
New York Catholic Agency, 33 Barclay street, and 38 Park Place.

SAVE MONEY.
SEND YOUR ADDRESS TO H. A. SMITH, 319 Post St. near San Francisco, Cal., for "Home Circle" containing full line of groceries, provisions and general merchandise at retail. Family supplies, such as flour, sugar, $7.50 dozen, Swiss, $2.50 dozen; best pickles or jams, 20 cents; crackers by the box 6c per lb or $1 box; everything the best, everything the cheapest, only cost you a postal card to get the full list, and which you get hundreds of dollars in family expenses.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

Senorita picking DAMIANA LEAVES for manufacturing the Celebrated LEWIS BIGGS, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 12 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco.

Gives Health and Strength! Cures Dyspepsia! Gives Appetite!
The Mexican Remedy for Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder!
DAMIANA BITTERS!
FOR SALE BY Druggists and Grocers.

GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS.

The Golden Palace TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street.
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Business.
THE CHEAPEST GROCERIES ONLY KEPT IN STOCK and the prices are the lowest consistent. Families can positively save money by trading in this store. Best teas and coffees, sugars, canned fruits sold wholesale and retail. The celebrated Buckeye Flour sold at mill price, and we fail to give satisfaction. Sugar retailed at refiners prices. Save this Tradesmen's Circular, and be convinced that the bargains offered. Goods delivered to any part of the city. Country orders solicited and promptly attended to. Goods SHIPPED FREE OF CHARGE.
CHARLES MONTGOMERY, Proprietor.

CHURCH MUSIC.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ: No. 1 Asperges, 25 cts; 2 Kyrie, 50 cts; 3 Gloria, 50 cts; 4 Veni Creator, 50 cts; 5 Credo, 75 cts; 6 Sanctus, 25 cts; 7 and 8 Sanctus and Benedictus, 50 cts; 9 Agnus Dei, 25 cts; 10 Tantum ergo, 25 cts; 11 Salve Regina, 50 cts; 12 Ave Maria, 25 cts; 13 Ave Verum, 25 cts; 14 Litanies of the Blessed Virgin, 50 cts; 15 Litanies of the Sacred Heart, 50 cts; 16 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 17 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 18 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 19 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 20 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 21 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 22 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 23 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 24 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 25 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 26 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 27 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 28 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 29 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 30 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 31 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 32 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 33 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 34 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 35 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 36 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 37 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 38 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 39 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 40 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 41 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 42 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 43 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 44 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 45 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 46 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 47 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 48 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 49 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 50 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 51 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 52 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 53 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 54 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 55 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 56 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 57 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 58 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 59 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 60 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 61 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 62 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 63 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 64 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 65 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 66 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 67 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 68 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 69 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 70 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 71 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 72 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 73 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 74 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 75 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 76 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 77 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 78 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 79 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 80 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 81 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 82 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 83 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 84 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 85 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 86 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 87 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 88 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 89 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 90 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 91 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 92 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 93 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 94 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 95 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 96 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 97 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 98 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 99 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 100 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 101 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 102 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 103 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 104 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 105 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 106 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 107 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 108 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 109 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 110 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 111 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 112 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 113 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 114 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 115 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 116 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 117 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 118 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 119 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 120 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 121 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 122 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 123 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 124 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 125 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 126 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 127 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 128 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 129 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 130 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 131 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 132 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 133 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 134 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 135 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 136 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 137 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 138 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 139 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 140 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 141 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 142 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 143 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 144 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 145 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 146 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 147 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 148 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 149 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 150 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 151 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 152 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 153 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 154 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 155 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 156 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 157 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 158 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 159 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 160 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 161 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 162 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 163 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 164 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 165 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 166 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 167 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 168 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 169 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 170 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 171 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 172 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 173 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 174 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 175 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 176 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 177 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 178 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 179 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 180 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 181 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 182 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 183 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 184 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 185 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 186 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 187 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 188 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 189 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 190 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 191 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 192 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 193 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 194 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 195 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 196 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 197 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 198 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 199 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 200 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 201 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 202 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 203 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 204 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 205 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 206 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 207 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 208 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 209 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 210 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 211 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 212 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 213 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 214 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 215 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 216 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 217 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 218 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 219 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 220 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 221 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 222 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 223 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 224 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 225 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 226 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 227 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 228 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 229 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 230 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 231 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 232 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 233 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 234 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 235 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 236 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 237 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 238 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 239 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 240 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 241 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 242 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 243 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 244 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 245 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 246 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 247 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 248 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 249 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 250 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 251 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 252 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 253 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 254 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 255 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 256 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 257 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 258 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 259 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 260 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 261 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 262 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 263 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 264 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 265 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 266 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 267 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 268 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 269 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 270 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 271 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 272 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 273 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 274 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 275 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 276 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 277 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 278 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 279 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 280 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 281 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 282 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 283 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 284 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 285 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 286 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 287 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 288 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 289 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 290 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 291 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 292 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 293 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 294 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 295 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 296 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 297 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 298 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 299 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 300 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 301 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 302 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 303 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 304 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 305 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 306 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 307 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 308 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 309 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 310 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 311 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 312 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 313 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 314 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 315 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 316 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 317 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 318 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 319 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 320 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 321 Litanies of the Holy Ghost, 25 cts; 322 Litanies of the Saints, 50 cts; 323 Litanies of the Holy Angels, 25 cts; 324 Litanies of the Holy Name, 25 cts; 325 Litanies of the Blessed Sacrament, 25 cts; 326 Litanies of the Holy Cross, 25 cts; 327 Litanies of the Holy

Market Report.

COMPILED WEEKLY BY F. P. FOSS, 205 and 207 WARD STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE,
622 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, Feb. 28, 1882

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The markets have been rather inactive the past week. Wheat is weak, Oats and Barley are lower. Potatoes are kicker with the prospect of further advances. Butter is firm. Eggs are higher ranging from 22½ to 24c.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receipts prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour

Quotations are: City Brands, $5 50@6 62½; City Superfine, $4 75@5; Interior brands, $4@$5 25 for extra, and $1 50@4 75 for superfine.

Wheat

Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 82½@1 85; No. 2, $1 37½@1 40 per cental.

Barley

Quotations are: Brewing, $1 87½@1 92½; Standard Chevalier, $1 75@1 85; Feed, $1 50@1 80 ₱ ctl.

Oats

Quotations are: Feed, $1 75@1 87½ for common; and $1 90@1 92½ ₱ ctl for good to choice; Surprise, $1 90@1 95 ₱ ctl.

Corn

Quotations are: $1 80@1 85 for Yellow; White, $1 80@1 90 ₱ ctl.

Hay

Quotations are: Wheat, old, $19@16; wheat, old wts, $13@14; volunteer and stable, $9 50@12; stock, $9 50@11 ₱ ton.

Rye

Quotations are: $2 20@2 25 ₱ cental for choice.

Buckwheat

Quotations are: $1 50@1 55 ₱ ctl.

Straw

Quotations are: 62½@70c ₱ bale.

Provisions

HAMS—Eastern, 16@16½c; California, 13@13½c.

BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@15½c; Extra Clear Sides, 14@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c ₱ lb.

PORK—Extra Clear, ₱ bbl, $24 50; do in half bbls, $12 50; Clear, ₱ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12 00; Mess ₱ bbl, $22@22½; do half bbl, $11 50@12; Prime Mess, ₱ bbl, $19@19 50; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ₱ bbl, $16@16 50; Choice Pig, ₱ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12; do 5-lb kegs, $3 25@3 50.

BEEF—Mess Beef, ₱ bbl, $10@10 50; Extra Mess do, $10 50@11; Mess Beef, half bbl, $5 50@6; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $6 25@6 50; Family do, ₱ bbl, $13@13 50; Family do, half bbl, $6@6 25.

LARD—Eastern Refined, tes, 16c; do in fancy tins, 15@15½c; do in 10-lb tins, 14½c; do in 5-lb tins, 15½c; do in 3-lb wooden buckets, 15c; California in tes, 13½@14c; half bbls, 14½@14½c; California in tins, 13½@14c; 5-lb do, 14@14½c; Leaf, in 10-lb tins, 16c; do in 5-lb do, 15½@16c; Leaf, in 3-lb do, 15c; do in 5-lb do, 15½@16c; Royal 3-lb pails, 19c ₱ lb.

Poultry

Quotations are: Early Rose, $2 00@$2 50; Early Chili, $1 75@$1 90; River Red, $1 60@$1 75; Tomales, $1 90@$2 00; Oregon Peerless, $1 90@$2 00; Burbank Seedlings, $1 80@2 00; Coffey Cross, $1 90@2 00; Petaluma, $1 90@$2 12½; Peach Blows, $1 90@$2 00; Sweet, $2 25@$2 75 ₱ ctl.

Onions

Quotations are: White, $1 90@$1 15 ₱ ctl.

Cormenal

Quotable at $12 00@$13 00 ₱ ton; table meal, $4 ₱ ctl.

Beeswax

Quotable at 23½@25c ₱ lb.

Beans

Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 20@25c; Fancy, 35@40c; Medium do, 20@25c; Firkin, 20@22c; Pickled, 20@22c; Eastern Butter, 20@25c ₱ lb.

Cheese

Quotations are: California Cheese, 12@13c; Eastern, 16@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 12@13c ₱ lb.

Poultry

Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 10@11c; Dressed, 13@14c; Ducks, $5 00@$6 00; Broilers, $3 50@$4 50; Hens, $5 00@$6 00; Young Turkeys, $6 50@$7 50; Old, $4 50@$5 00 ₱ dozen. Geese, $1 75@$2 00 ₱ pair; Pigeons, $1 50; Squabs, $2 50 ₱ doz.

Eggs

Quotable at 22½@23c for choice; 19@21c for Medium California; Lime, 25c; Eastern, —@—c.

Honey—Extra Clover, 20@22c ₱ ℔.

Domestic Fruit

Quotations are: California Oranges, $1 75@$2 50 ₱ box; California Lemons, $1 50@$1 00; Malaga, $5 00@$7 00 ₱ case; Mexican Oranges, $3 00@$4 00 ₱ hundred; Mexican Limes, $10 00@$12 00; California Limes, 50c@$1 25 ₱ small box, and $3 00@$4 00 ₱ large box; do; Bananas, $2 50@$3 00 ₱ bunch; Pine Apples, $8 00@$10 00 ₱ dozen; Apples, $1 25@$2 75; Oregon, $1 75 ₱ box; Pears, 75c@$1 00 ₱ box; Cranberries, $13@$16 ₱ bbl.

Vegetables

Quotations are: Cabbage, 60@75c ₱ ctl; Beets, $1@$1 25 ₱ sack; Carrots, $1 25@$1 50 ₱ sack; Turnips, $1 25@$1 50 ₱ sack; Parsnips, $1 25@$1 50 ₱ sack; Green Peas, 12½@15c ₱ ℔.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 7c; second do, 5½c; third do, 3@3½c ₱ ℔.

VEAL—Dressed, 6@7c ₱ ℔ for large, and 8@9c for small; 8c for choice.

MUTTON—Wethers, 4½@5c; Ewes, 4½@5c ₱ ℔.

LAMB—6@7c.

HOGS—Dairy and Grain-Fed, on the hoof, 6@6½c; choice, 6½@7c; soft, 5½@5½; Dressed, do, 8@8½c; Scalding Pigs, alive, $3 00@$3 50.

Cure by Absorption

Is most certain in the disease of the kidneys or bladder. Day's Kidney Pad never fails. Price $2. Children's cream "Sore-winding," $1 50. Of druggists or post-paid by mail. DAY KIDNEY PAD Co., Buffalo, N.Y.

The walls of at dirst-story Cincinnati building intended for a hotel, were watched daily by crowds as they rose, the opinion being general that they were too flimsy to stand. This judgment proved sound, for they have been toppled over by the wind; but the crash came in the night, when nobody was near enough to see it or get killed.

A Shasta County man owns a cow that is believed to be a cross between a cow and deer. She is of small stature, with head, nose, legs and feet greatly resembling a deer. She is a famous milker, and from the cream she yields nine pounds of butter are made per week.

Tell your friends of Ammen's Cough Syrup.

When any druggist or dealer tries to sell you, or tells you that some other remedy is as good or better, when you ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup, look him in the face, and you will see that he has stamped upon his countenance in unmistakable character, the word cupidity, and by investigation you will find he is recommending some direction of his own; that could gain him only a few cents to procure, or some patent remedy upon which he makes a larger profit. Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup. Take no other. Buy a 15 cent or 50 cent bottle. Test it yourself. It stands upon its merits.

—C. T. Wyer & Co., proprietors of the Pacific Coal and Feed Yard, 849 Mission street, (between 6th and 7th) make it a rule to give their customers 2,240 lbs. to the ton of Coal, and yet they charge less than dealers who practice this reputable trick of short weight and slaty coal. This firm prides itself upon the quality and the quantity of the Coal they furnish their customers, and if you send them a trial order you will be convinced that it pays to deal with a firm who practice thorough honesty in all their dealings.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

A Benzoin Mine

Of health is to be found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," to the merits of which as a remedy for female weaknesses and kindred affections thousands testify.

The Land Leagues principles bid fair to spread to the South seas, for the Alapai Mail records a case of ejectment in the Sandwich Island Court recently held at Halawa. In several villages of the province of Ulua the native tenants refuse to pay rent, but seem to be bent on taking up arms against the owners of the land. Japan bids fair to have all the accomplishments of Western civilization.

How Women Learn.

Women everywhere use Parker's Ginger Tonic because they have learned by experience that it overcomes deep sickness, indigestion, weakness in the back and kidneys, and other troubles of the sex.—Home Journal.

Is Catarrh, Bronchitis or Consumption Curable?

Dr. Fowler says it is, and he has cross grey in the production of his preparation, called the Chair of Heart, Throat and Lungs in one of the best medical colleges of the East. The Government gave him letters patent on an apparatus for changing the air of a low altitude into one of a high and rare nature. Said apparatus has been a great help to him in the treatment of lung difficulties. He gives its medicine in the stomach in the treatment of lung diseases. Send for his treatise on diseases of the lungs write to him also for opinion of your case; it will cost you nothing. He can furnish you hundreds of testimonials of cures given up by other physicians before they came to him. Inhalers are sent free. Direct to 127 Kearny street, Room 5, San Francisco, California.

Piles Cured.

Call at Dispensary of the Good Samaritan, 605 Kearny street, room 2, and 4 to 6 P.M. No knife, caustic or other surgical appliances employed. Consultation free. An cure guaranteed or money refunded.

Faded Colors Restored.

Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

—Get your large Crewel Issues at R. Stein's 533 Fourth street, near Freelon.

—Carpet-beating and whitening, 533 Tyler street near Larkin, 216 and 218 Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2,128. Tonkins Bros.

—A preventative for malarial disorders. A few doses will break up the worst ch. Smith's Ague Tonic, 1023 Market street. It will cure more aches and pains than any known remedy.

—Large number of new and second-hand Pianos of different makes, at all prices, for sale before purchasing. Spencer & Co., 25 and 27 Fifth street, Opera building.

—Save one-third of unbearable city tailor charges, without sacrificing quality or style of goods, or workmanship. Secure elegant comfort and satisfaction, by patronizing J. Gollan, 1023 Howard street.

—Save $150. Buy your pianos direct from the manufacturers. Wheelock & Co., New York, have opened an agency at 302 Sutter street, H. Gibson, manager. Instruments sold on instalments.

☞ Use nothing else but MERINO SOAP.

—Nothing contributes more towards health and happiness than a good bath. It is truly a gift of life," and people should be more particular than they are in procuring a good bath. We, from the fact that Weston's Home made bread is the best in the city, and yet, you will find it at 9 Stockton street, fresh every day.

—The National Surgical Institute, 319 Bush street, is the Western branch of the Parent N. S. Institute of Indianapolis and Philadelphia, which is so celebrated for the cure of all deformities and diseases, disease of the spine, hip, knee, and all joint-crooked limbs, club feet, feet, pigeon-toes and fistula. Call and see patients, and our facilities for curing them. References given and circulars sent if desired.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION. Compound Oxygen, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, Nervous Prostration, Etc. Pamphlet containing testimonials, and a treatise on Compound Oxygen, sent free. DR. STARKEY & PALEN, Philadelphia, Pa. Pamphlet mailed free, on application to Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1109 Girard St., Philadelphia, Pa. Mention this paper.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Premature Old Age, Impotency or exhaustion of sexual vigor, Excesses or excesses of the Brain, which leads to Decline, Decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. $1 a box, or six boxes for $5, sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. To cure any case with the six boxes sent at one time we will send the six boxes for $5 with our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not cure. Guarantee issued only when the treatment is ordered direct from us. Address DR. E. C. WEST, Sole Proprietor, 697 and 699 Sacramento street, San Francisco, a licensed and responsible house.

DAWSON'S AMERICAN AGENCY

627 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Furnishes Male Help of any Nationality.

UKIAH OFFICE, 206 POST STREET, FEMALE Department. Girls always in waiting for every class of work.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING.

DRESSES MADE IN THE LATEST STYLES AT LOW RATES. BY

MRS. F. WOLFE,

1118 POLSOM ST., Bet. Seventh and Eighth.

E. F. WILTON,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

12 Stockton Street.

NEAR MARKET ST. SAN FRANCISCO

FURLONG & MANSEAU.

MANUFACTURERS OF

Silver and Walnut SHOW CASES

819 Market Street bet. 4th & 5th, up stairs

Printing

COSMOPOLITAN PRINTING HOUSE, P. J. Thomas, 505 Clay st.

New Advertisements.

MICHAEL SHEA,

—DEALER IN—

BOOKS, STATIONERY, NEWSPAPERS, &c.

805 MARKET STREET,

2nd door Fourth Street SAN FRANCISCO

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

H. F. FREESE,

RUCHING FACTORY.

Has removed to the Spacious Store,

151 Third Street, two doors above Howard,

(ON HAND ARE MANY PARTTERNS IN ORDER. Elegant assortment of latest styles Hemings and Lace Goods. Full Line of Ladies and Childrens Underwear. Specialty of Laces and Hemings at the wholesale price.

A Trial Will Convince You that DR. J. D. MITCHELL'S Eureka Cough Syrup

MOST RELIABLE REMEDY FOR THROAT AND Lung Diseases, and all Pulmonary complaints. For sale by all Druggists.

TESTIMONIAL FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE SHAKERS COMMUNITY.

SHAKERS, ALBANY CO. N. Y. May 1, 1871.

DR. MITCHELL, San Francisco, Cal.

Dear Friend: I am not certain of finding you but a single line and a single question. Have you sent any of your salve of the place it was tried on? I thought it was worth a great deal to our Community, where so many babes, and although for only a few days, we had the pleasure of seeing how it did work, I feel as if we had congratulations and cheer. I tried it on all the "square" ailments that I ever knew. Now, Doctor, I would like to tax you for what, if you will spare time, I shall be happy to pay. If you will spare time to write me, I will forward to you the money. If you feel disposed to let us have it, I will return as much in value to you upon receipt. Hoping this may find you well, and that you are out of the snows, will conclude with my regard, trusting no bronchial pneumonia, my address is Mrs. E. A. LOMAS.

Mr. Samuel A. Cridge is an informed and reliable G. A.

Notice. The Eureka Cough syrup is now manufactured at No. 1211 Broadway, Oakland, Cal., and for sale at all Druggists. Office S. F. Branch, Proprietor.

MANUFACTORY:

1211 Broadway, - - - San Francisco

P. T. FLINN & SON,

S. W. cor. Howard and Eighth Sts.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

HAY, GRAIN, GROCERIES, PROVISIONS, Wines and Liquors.

☞ Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to.

McNALLY AND HAWKINS

Are Selling

CHANDELIERS

Of the Latest Patterns

In NICKEL, all GOLD, SILVER and GLASS, GOLD and GLASS.

And Bronzes of all descriptions Lower than ever before offered.

ALSO ENDORSED—

Sun Burners and Ventilators

For Lighting Churches, Halls, Theatres, &c.

Old Chandeliers Re-bronzed to look as good as new.

Orders by Plumbing, Gas and Steam fitting promptly attended to.

TELEPHONE connecting with all parts of the city.

697 Market street, Grand Hotel Building.

NOW DISCHARGING.

English Coke—Gaufield,
Sugar-loaf Lump Lehigh Coal,
Honeybrook Lehigh Egg Coal,
Wilkesbarre Egg Coal, and Cumberland Coal.

FOR SALE IN LOTS TO SUIT.

BLACK DIAMOND

COAL MINING CO.,

Cor. Spear and Folsom Sts.

J. ROCK'S NURSERIES.

A NEW DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF FRUIT TREES, NUT-BEARING TREES, ETC.,

CONTAINING

Many New and Rare Fruits,

IS NOW READY, AND WILL BE MAILED TO ALL applicants enclosing a three cent stamp. To all purchasers without charge.

☞ A New Descriptive Catalogue of Ornamental Trees and Evergreen Trees, Shrubs, Roses, Palms, Bamboos, etc.

Is now ready, and will be mailed to all applicants enclosing a three cent stamp. To all regular customers without charge.

JOHN ROCK,

SAN JOSE, CAL.

TO THE LADIES.

For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to

MRS. SWANTON'S,

1217 Stockton street.

WATCHES CLEANED, $1.

Glasses - 10 cents.

ESTABLISHED IN SAN FRANCISCO 11 YEARS.

HAMMOND, 4 Sixth Street, San Francisco.

New Advertisements.

THE EYES! THE EYES!

DR. E. H. PARDEE,

OCULIST AND AURIST.

HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS PROFESSION, and will give personal attention to all who may favor him with a call. No charge for consultation. Large consultation Private office for examination, 621 Clay street, opp. Post Office. Hours, 9 to 4. Residence, 1018 Clay street, bet. Taylor and Jones.

REDUCTION IN COAL.

I AM NOW SELLING:

Southport Coos Bay Coal at - - $ 9 00 a ton
Eastport Coal at - - - - - - - 9 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at - - - - - - - 10 00 a ton
Scotch Coal at - - - - - - - 10 50 a ton
West Hartley Coal - - - - - - 11 50 a ton
and Wellington Coal at - - - - 11 50 a ton

Yards at the Home Ruler, Bulkhead Pier.

J. FLYNN,

1113 and 1115 Mission treet.

KNABE PIANOFORTES.

UNEQUALLED IN

Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,

304 and 306 West Baltimore St., Baltimore,

No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

SOCIETY REGALIA!

Military and

NAVAL GOODS,

Guns and Fishing Tackle.

A. J. PLATE & CO.,

418 and 420 Market Street.

WANTED

Agents for the Fast-Selling Book,

"IRELAND OF TO-DAY."

From $10 to $15 orders a day are being taken by regular agents. Apply at once

A. L. BANCROFT & CO.,

721 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

P. J. DALY,

FRUIT AND PRODUCE

Commission House,

305 & 307 Washington St.,

Bet. Battery and Front. SAN FRANCISCO

Goods shipped to all parts of the State ☞ Stamp supplied at Wholesale Rates.

WOOD AND COAL.

HARRY LINCOLN,

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

WOOD AND COAL,

Cor. Hayes and Gough Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO

Orders Filled and Delivered promptly in all parts of the City free of charge. ☞ Give us the Very Lowest Rates. 93

J. M. JOHNSON,

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Wood, Coal & Charcoal

YARD AT 33 GOLDEN GATE AVE.

(Formerly Tyler Street)

Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny.

Orders left at "Bulletin" Stables, No. 11 Powell street, will receive prompt attention.

COAL. COAL. COAL.

2,240 LBS. TO THE TON.

Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.

Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.

T. L. SMITH,

Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.

☞ A Trial order Solicited.

COAL! COAL!

At Very Lowest Prices.

ALSO—

All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.

MARK HEYWOOD,

716 Folsom street.

DANIEL GIOVANNINI,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in all kinds

CHARCOAL, WOOD & COAL,

410 Pacific Street, San Francisco.

COAL AND COAL OIL!

At Lowest Market Rates.

245 Stevenson Street,

Between Third and Fourth Sts.

HARRY JONES, - - - Proprietor

COAL. COAL.

Lowest Rates.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

THOMAS MORTON,

630 Geary Street, San Francisco.

☞ Telephone number, 2595.

GEO. H. FULLER,

MANUFACTURER OF

Settees, School and Office Furniture.

CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.

Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street,

Manufactory, 124 Main St.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JONAS J. MORRISON,

LUMBER DEALER,

Corner Mission and Spear Streets, SAN FRANCISCO

A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand. Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

HARVEY'S HOT-WATER RADIATOR.

SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERature without the extravagant waste of fuel or litter of the open grate; a most healthful atmosphere without the dry, parching air or noxious gases of the hot-air furnace or stove; a noiseless diffusion of heat without the blasting or cracking of the steam system.

☞ Information or Descriptive Circulars sent free.

THE ROYAL ST. JOHN.

"The Royal St. John is the only sewing machine in the world which runs either

Forward or Backward

Without stopping or changing direction of work. It possesses the most points of excellence, the most new and valuable improvements, and is positively

The Simplest, Lightest Running and Most Durable Sewing Machine Made.

☞ Buying agents wanted, address

NO. 213 MISSION ST.,

Bet. Main and Beale SAN FRANCISCO.

C. SHAWL, 30 Second street, San Francisco.

MRS. M. H. OBER, 326 SUTTER ST

BOSTON AND CALIFORNIA DRESS REFORM.

An Elegant CORTIL CORSET, to order, $4. Warth Under Garments, specialty. Children's Corset Waists, Cashmere and Merino Underwear, Hygienic Corsets, Rose and Skirt Supports. Emancipation Waists, and Combination Suits. (SEND FOR CIRCULAR.)

A POSITIVE CURE FOR

DYSPEPSIA.

TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.

Made By

H. B. SLAVEN,

The Baldwin Building.

PLATING.

NICKEL PLATING,

GOLD PLATING,

SILVER PLATING,

Elegant and Durable.

ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Highest medals given at sixteen Satisfaction guaranteed in every particular. Prices the very lowest. Silver Ware, Knives and Forks Plated for nearly gold, used in quality, cleaned and placed among the family silver, $1 per doz. Best of references. The most extensive.

PLATING ESTABLISHMENT

On Pacific Coast

San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,

653 and 655 Mission Street, bet. New Montgomery and Third sts., San Francisco, Cal.

E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

Awarded First Premium at every fair of the Mechanics Institute for the last twelve years.

J. J. DYER, DENTIST,

S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,

☞ Entrance, 37 Post St. 93

KANE & HEANEY,

DEALERS IN

Choice Butter, Cheese, EGGS, ETC.,

11 and 403 Centre Market,

Entrance Sutter St., near Dupont, San Francisco.

Consignments solicited and all orders promptly attended to. Marketing delivered in all parts of the city.

STATHAM PIANOS

Are Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability.

SOLD FOR CASH OR INSTALLMENTS

At the Factory:

765 MISSION STREET, 765

Tuning and Repairing a Specialty. Send for Circular.

REFERENCE: GEO. W. WRIGHT, J. A. CAMPBELL.

N. Gray & Co.,

UNDERTAKERS,

641 Sacramento Street,

Cor. Webb, SAN FRANCISCO

EMBALMING.

☞ Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.

GEO. G. GERE, M. D.

and Surgeon,

304 Sutter St., San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS 11 to 2 and 6 to 8.

COAL!

Full Weight and Low Prices.

JULES LAMBLA'S,

Cor. Sutter and Powell Sts., San Francisco.

☞ Just give me a trial order, and remember that my weight is honorable dealing, and one order will convince you of that.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, INFLUENZA, CATARRH, LOSS OF VOICE, Incipient Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Ask for the California Pulmonary Balsam, and take no other.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,

417 Sansome Street, S. F

EXCELSIOR.

CHRISTIAN ZINNS,

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

5 Montgomery St.,

MASONIC TEMPLE SAN FRANCISCO

A large Assortment of

French and English Piece-goods

CONSTANTLY ON HAND.

CALL AND EXAMINE.

BOOTS AND SHOES!

MOORE & MURPHY,

Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of

Ladies' and Gent's

BOOTS AND SHOES.

☞ Full Line of the best Eastern Manufacturers and Jobbers Constantly on hand.

Remember the Number:

138 SIXTH STREET. 138

Bet. Natoma and Howard.

THE MONITOR,

A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.

Devoted to the Preservation and Defense of Catholic Principles.

Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING Co., Office—622 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

For Year by Mail (if paid in advance)	$ 00
For Year by Mail (if not paid in advance)	3 50
Six Months (if paid in advance)	1 75
Six Months (not paid in advance)	2 00
Three Months (if paid in advance)	1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance)	1 25
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces (in advance) $4 00, (not in advance)	5 00

☞ Address all communications, business and postal orders to E. J. MCCORMICK, Editorial Manager.

MONITOR Office, Box 2353 P. O., San Francisco, Cal.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second-Class Matter.

The Monitor.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Soul, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesi. iv. 34.

THE MONITOR

is now in its twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a staunch and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes The Monitor a valuable medium for advertisers.

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

To Correspondents.

Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and should write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of unused articles.

All communications and communications of a business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1882. NO. 22.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR

DYSPEPSIA.

TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.

Made By

H. B. SLAVEN,

The Baldwin Building.

PLATING.

NICKEL PLATING,

GOLD PLATING,

SILVER PLATING,

Elegant and Durable.

ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Highest medals given at sixteen Satisfaction guaranteed in every particular. Prices the very lowest. Silver Ware, Knives and Forks Plated for nearly gold, used in quality, cleaned and placed among the family silver, $1 per doz. Best of references. The most extensive.

PLATING ESTABLISHMENT

On Pacific Coast

San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,

653 and 655 Mission Street, bet. New Montgomery and Third sts., San Francisco, Cal.

E. G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.

Awarded First Premium at every fair of the Mechanics Institute for the last twelve years.

J. J. DYER, DENTIST,

S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,

☞ Entrance, 37 Post St. 93

KANE & HEANEY,

DEALERS IN

Choice Butter, Cheese, EGGS, ETC.,

11 and 403 Centre Market,

Entrance Sutter St., near Dupont, San Francisco.

Consignments solicited and all orders promptly attended to. Marketing delivered in all parts of the city.

STATHAM PIANOS

Are Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability.

SOLD FOR CASH OR INSTALLMENTS

At the Factory:

765 MISSION STREET, 765

Tuning and Repairing a Specialty. Send for Circular.

REFERENCE: GEO. W. WRIGHT, J. A. CAMPBELL.

N. Gray & Co.,

UNDERTAKERS,

641 Sacramento Street,

Cor. Webb, SAN FRANCISCO

EMBALMING.

☞ Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.

GEO. G. GERE, M. D.

and Surgeon,

304 Sutter St., San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS 11 to 2 and 6 to 8.

COAL!

Full Weight and Low Prices.

JULES LAMBLA'S,

Cor. Sutter and Powell Sts., San Francisco.

☞ Just give me a trial order, and remember that my weight is honorable dealing, and one order will convince you of that.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, INFLUENZA, CATARRH, LOSS OF VOICE, Incipient Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Ask for the California Pulmonary Balsam, and take no other.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,

417 Sansome Street, S. F

"NO RENT."

The Lamp of Patriotism Kept Aflame on the Altars of Ireland.

THE POET-PRIESTS ADVICE TO IRISHMEN.

Rev. Abram J. Ryan, in the Baltimore Catholic Mirror.

The tale of Saints is sadly troubled. She grieves about the mother of martyrs and their children, for relief from her anxiety. Her children are scattered, and the hearts of her children are sad so much and so long; and they have suffered so much at the hands of those in their country. For hundreds of years of persecution they have preserved their Catholic consciences. They are sometimes a chosen because a persecuted race. Tribulation is the lot of Catholic nations. The then crowned Princess of the Church, followed of her Lord, is the slave of a stranger country. Let the sketch of a lost chapter of the world's history show how that world treats the world's

The nations listen some in heart felt sympathy among in selfish indifference. The Church is a world.

"No rent!" Is it the cry of the people? Is it the cry of a people as that people loved it? Is it the cry of their people? Is it the cry of their God, and who, for right, have suffered? Is it the cry of those who are the world's tenants? Who are were and are as honest as the world? Who are and were as honest as the crown of their character?

"No rent!" was it borrowed from the communists? It is an honest watch word? Who is the author of the Communistic? Is it the Catholic watchword? Does it awaken an echo in the Church? Is it a political watch word or discussion for a selfish law? We answer none of these questions.

The Bishops of Ireland have answered them; and some of the Bishops of the country. Is not that sufficient. They had no personal purposes in their answer. Shall we, Catholics, not answer that the cry of "No Rent" was uttered by the Catholic consciences of the Irish people. It is not a Christian, nor a Catholic, nor Protestant Irish cry. There is no more discussion about it. The Irish tenantry must preserve the honor Catholic conscience of Ireland, even though they must seem to be in an attack, even towards the temporal interests of their people. These Irish Bishops are true, true and honest men. But it is only an apparent antagonism. The observer of God's laws, in the preservation of his own time, bring blessings in the temporal order. Irish people are learning, knowledge of their people, love of their land, devotion of their Bishops and Clergy, and the attachment to their political home, whether in Ireland, whether they have right to be Irish politicians, or in the United States, where no one has a right to be more than an American. Who are the Irish people not first and think afterward, when it is sometimes too late.

Not so with Irish politicians. They calculate in thought just like the Yankees, but before they act, and many of the actors in Ireland are due to the spirit, impulsive, generous and, we add, Christian, and we add, Catholic, impulsive and true, into the cold, calculating, selfish politicians.

The priests and prelates sacrifice themselves, for their beloved people, while the politicians sacrifice the people, too often, to their beloved selves.

What ought then to be the true Catholic Irish watch word of the Land League? "Fair Rent" "Fair Rent" That will appeal to the sure sense of the people, which preserves them, not without being covered with odium. The watch word will gather to its side the Protestants as well as the sympathies of all the world. It is a watch word which will be heard, and is full of dauntless and destructive "No Rent" Attempts have been made to make it the watch word which would make any government smile. In the hands of the Land Leagues, it is the greater of Ireland in her sorrow, we yield to none in our love of our Irish people, and we know that very fact folds their land to their breast in an embrace, a clearer and tenderer love. We know that both must be saved in the same motherland, love for it is necessarily greater.

But not to be saved in the old way, as it always has been, the prelates and priests of Ireland, who believe in the fine of the same, and, sanctify and with a love more sacred than do those who believe in the time of Irish politicians. That we underestimate their love for their country. We acknowledge it in all its extent; but it cannot, in the main, reach the intensity of that love of the priests. Were not the Irish priests afame on the altars of Ireland's Faith and guarded by the Sacrarib sword.

T. P. O'Connor at Los Angeles.

Enthusiastic Demonstration in Favor of Ireland's Freedom Splendid Speeches and Rousing Resolutions Cole for the Cause and Cheers for the Speaker.

We are indebted to a friend for a copy of the Los Angeles Express, from which we learn that Mr. T. P. O'Connor's visit to that beautiful region of the State was productive of great good. A public meeting was convened and the sympathies of the people enlisted for the cause of Ireland. The chair was occupied by Lieutenant Governor Mansfield, and among the vice-Presidents we notice the name of the following prominent citizens:

Hon. Eugene Meyer, Hon. V. E. Howard, Gen. George Stoneman, Hon. J. J. Ayers, Hon. E. F. Spence, S. Mc Kinley, Rev. M. Richards, Rev. H. McNamee, Rev. F. Verdaguer, S. M. White, Col. J. J. Gardner, Hon. L. Eyre, Anaheim, E. F. Spence, J. D. Lynch, John F. Morse, John S. O'Neil, E. Coke, A. W. Ross, O. H. Wyse, R. Steere, J. Mullally, M. Weil, W. S. Moore, C. Schoilling, J. H. Bowen, R. Chandler, George Kerckhoff, J. Maccard, Jacob Kohrts, J. M. Griffith, W. H. Workman, J. Lacy, Hon. Stephen M. White, Hon. Charles Daniels, Hon. H. Naduas, P. Hatter, J. Noel, C. Beaty, W. H. Wolfskill, Hon. Cameron E. Thom, J. W. Kline, Hon. Thomas Rowan, Hon. Frank King, Hon. B. Desmond, John Burns, Dr. J. H. Wolfskill, Hon. Frank Rader, E. E. Howitt, Hon. J. Conner, Rev. P. Fisher, Rev. W. Dorney, Rev. Father Ubach, Hon. J. J. Hubbell, Hon. J. Downey, Hon. J. Bryson, Hon. J. F. de Celis, J. A. Wilson, Hon. Stephen M. McFarland, Colonel J. E. Jackson, A. W. Potts, A. Beleweiter, J. A. McKinnon, Hon. Stephen M. McFarland, T. Duhig.

Lieutenant-Governor Mansfield introduced Mr. O'Connor in a few appropriate and happy rem

Poetry.

PARODY ON "THE CHARGE OF THE SIX HUNDRED."

(There are over 500 "suspects" at present in jail in Ireland. It seems, on detention, to retain the Land League.)

"Dash the League! Curse the League!
Forster, be thundered.
Here do I hold in jail
Over five hundred.
Yet, back to their battle-cry!
"Onward!" to do or die,
Defying Hell and Sir
Curse the Five Hundred!

"Onward!" brave Parnell said;
Was there a man dismayed?
Not, though the people saw
Every house plundered.
Fearless to do and dare,
Rose they up everywhere,
Facing their robbers there,
Defying an army, while all
The world wondered,
And from their vengeance deep—
Vengeance too long asleep—
Lassoled and lackey
Fly, like a flock of sheep,
Scattered and sundered.

After the bloody reign
Of global and felon's chain,
The world admits its pain
England has blundered.
Joyously the people see
Tyranny vanquished, flee,
And in their jubilee
Bless the Five Hundred.

CATHOLIC CHILD'S HYMN.

(The following lines would make a pretty song for Catholic school children and the Monitor offers to print the hymn in order that the use of so many schools be made desire to use them thus. An air can easily be found to suit the time by any teacher with a musical ear.)

In heart and soul a Catholic,
I love my holy faith,
I will be true to holy Church,
And faithful unto death.

I shun the schools of those who seek
To undermine our Catholic youth;
No Church I own, no schools I know
But those that teach the truth.

If base it is to yield before
The Persecutor's God;
The base fly to the rear with those,
Who mock the Church of God.

Oh! far from me such wickedness!
One treasure I hold dear,
My Holy Faith. I fear not men,
The God alone I fear.

I love his altar where I kneel
My Jesus to adore;
I love my Mother, Mary dear,
O may I love her more!

I love my Cross, I love my beads—
Each emblem of my Faith;
I love to kiss and pray at what they will
I'll love them unto death

Literary Miscellany.

The Priest's Revenge.

A CATHOLIC STORY FOUNDED ON FACT.

The train was ready to leave the depot at the German city of Cologne. A young priest traversed a second-class passenger car; he was alone as a traveler entered the same car; his priestly garb gave the stranger was the customary polite attentions. After a few seconds the train started; the stranger seemed to forget his surroundings, and the priest took advantage of this to observe him more closely. He was a man of a strong constitution, yet whose features betrayed a profound grief; sare had wrinkled his brows and whitened his hair. The priest was asking himself who this traveling companion could be, when the stranger himself interrupted the silence.

"Reverend sir," said he, "I would like to ask a great service of you; you are a priest, and your heart cannot remain closed to an unhappy man."

"I will do all that is in my power in order to render you a service," replied the priest kindly.

The stranger continued: "Twenty years have elapsed since I finished my study of medicine in the city of Bonn, whither we are traveling. I took upon me to attend a friend who was a student, and was suffering from a horrible disease; but, in spite of all my care, the condition of the sick man grew worse day by day. The mother of my friend, in despair, summoned the assistance of another physician, a remarkably clever young man. At the first examination of the patient he recognized that there was a mistake about the state of the sick man, and that he ought to be submitted to a treatment altogether different from mine, and in a moment of excitement the young doctor, in presence of witnesses, exclaimed that the physician who had been treating the sick man was utterly unfit to continue the practice of medicine and did not at all understand his business. These words spread abroad by an impruden tongue, went their ways and reached my ears. My pride was seriously offended by these utterances; I swore to get satisfaction with blood for these words not retracted. At that time I was taken up with the false principles which very many young men share about the duels and feelings of honor. I went to see the physician and accused him of having incurred my honor and reputation; I maintained that he either had to retract these words or accept a challenge. The young man was, nevertheless, very kind; he showed me every mark of respect and attention, and assured me that it was not his intention to offend me by his words; but, because they were true, it was impossible for him to retract them. Being provoked, I left him and after a few hours I sent him a second. The young doctor, holding the false impression that it was not possible to evade a meeting, appointed a place early with thickets, in the proximity of the city, and it was agreed that we should meet there early next morning. In the evening, oppressed by a scornful anger, I kept my room, and all my thoughts devoted upon the impending fight. Suddenly there was a knock at the door, and a youthful lady, veiling a veil, entered the room and presented herself on her knees, before me, and said: "I am the wife of the physician you have challenged; I have come to beseech you to have pity upon me and my poor children.

"The aspect of this weeping woman made a deep impression upon me; her anguish touched my heart; but soon my pride conquered.

"Madam," I replied, "either your husband shall retract his words or he shall fight."

"I beseech you" she groaned, and then fainted.

"My two seconds, who had just arrived, helped to revive the unfortunate; we conducted them conducted her home. The next day I went at the appointed time to the place designated. The physician had already arrived; two pistols were loaded; the seconds measured fifteen paces, and without fear I aimed at the physician. At the command of fire, only one shot was heard: I, only had fired. At the same moment a piercing and heart-rending shriek came forth from the next thicket; the doctor's wife sprang forward and received her husband in her arms; the shot had penetrated his heart. The seconds surrounded him, and, murmuring those words, "Oh, my poor wife! my poor children!" he breathed his last.

"The woman lifted up her head, but no tear was rolling down her cheek; she looked at me—I trembled.

"'Sir,' said she, 'you have killed my husband, and very soon I shall follow him to the grave; three children you have made orphans; pray our merciful Redeemer for give you!

"She fainted, and on the same litter were carried away the corpse of the husband and the insensible body of the wife. Like a madman, I wandered about the whole day; I dared not pray, and the next day, when I learned that the physician's wife had died—had followed her husband to the grave—I became so distracted that my friends feared I would lose my mind. Instead of counselling me to do my duty to the orphans and seek peace of mind and salvation of soul in practicing penance, they advised me to forget the committed crimes in debauchery and pleasures.

"He has offended you," they said, 'and you have killed him; that is quite natural; forget all this, and keep only in view your future welfare.

CATHOLIC CHILD'S HYMN.

"Following their advice, I embarked for America, after eight days, in order to practice my profession, without the least regret for leaving behind me in Germany, through my own malice, three helpless orphans.

"Twenty years I have attended closely to my business and have become a wealthy man; but the remembrance of the innocent blood shed by me haunts me, and never leaves my mind. At last I looked for a priest, to whom I confessed my crime; this venerable man of God told me to trace up the children of my victims, in order to repair, in some measure, the evil I have done; I only ask your reverence to assist me in the search."

The young priest had listened with the greatest attention to his companion's story, his features were pale, and he was much excited; he looked at the stranger and would have answered him as he asked. "It is not true, Rev. Father! I do not deserve any pardon, and it will not be granted me!"

He had just finished these words, as the train stopped; they had reached Bonn.

"I know," said the priest, "those you are looking for! they are good Catholics; they will forgive you."

Meanwhile two boys came running to meet the servant of God; embracing him, they remarked his unusual paleness;

"Are you ill, dear brother?" asked one of them.

"O, no!" he answered, "I am only tired; great this gentleman; he gave me the honor to be our guest." The stranger smiled at the young priest with gratitude.

"You are too good, reverend sir; indeed I do not know how to express my feelings of thankfulness towards you."

Leaning on the arm of the priest, he walked to his city; it seemed as if everything recalled to his mind the most painful remembrances.

Turning into a certain street his eyes fixed upon a house, and he almost broke down.

"He used to live there," he whispered in the ear of the priest.

Soon they arrived at the priest's house; the servant of God conducted his companion to a room, and retired for a moment with his brethren.

Meanwhile a servant entered: "Please tell me," said the stranger, "with whom I have the honor to sup?"

"You are in the house of the Rev. H—;" answered the servant; "he will be observed that the stranger grew pale.

"Is Mr. H—a father living?" asked the guest.

"No; he was killed in a duel, when the reverend gentleman was very young."

After this interlocutory, the priest with his brothers came in. The guest covered his face with his hands and threw himself on his knees.

"I am the murderer of your father; oh! forgive me."

"Stand up, my friend; we have forgiven you already. At the first words you spoke to me I recognized you as our father; to receive you; forget the past; only thank God for your conversion."

The man arose, and after kissing the hands of Father H— and his brothers, left the house and went to the house of his father in the city, of Bonn. There he still lives and serves God in austere penance and prayer.

England and the Vatican.

A pamphlet has just been published in London, entitled "Great Britain and Rome; or, Ought the Queen to hold Diplomatic relations with the Sovereign Pontiff." The author is the Right Rev. Monsignor Capel, D. D. In addressing himself to the question discussed, the writer opens his argument by citing the fact that in virtue of the liberty granted by the Constitution of England, Roman Catholics, without violation of the law of the land, acknowledge the Pope's supreme spiritual authority. The Pope claims no right of action, and has no wish to take part in the civil affairs of the nation. He does not request union with the State, nor the aid of civil power to enforce his commands. All he desires is freedom for the development of the resources of the Church for the religious, moral and intellectual progress of her children. For these purposes mutual understanding and loyal communication between the people and the civil government would be of incalculable value in reference to national education, marriage and such questions. These considerations alone, he contends, suffice to prove the importance and expediency of holding diplomatic relations with Rome. Beyond these general reasons, however, other motives exist in the constitution and circumstances of the British Empire for such a policy. Among these Mgr. Capel adduces the large Catholic population of the Empire, including nobility of the highest standing, officials and administrators of government, as well as the poor and working classes in large cities. With regard to Ireland, he says it should be governed as a country with the majority of its people Catholic. Before all things peasant proprietorship should be encouraged, the peasant class better cared for, the development of national manufactures encouraged, and self government conceded to the fullest extent compatible with Imperial interests.

"Old Bobbie."

There are many reputed remedies for that very painful disease, chronic nasal catarrh, but none which have given general satisfaction and become so widespread, and deservedly popular as Dr. Sagar's Catarrh Remedy. It has proved itself a specific in the worst forms of the disease. By druggists.

WHIL RUSSIA FALL TO PIECES?

Half of the Czar's Hundred Million Subjects Not Loyal Has the Revolutionary Struggle Entered upon a New Phase?

ST PETERSBURG, Feb. 15. Many Russians are particularly proud of the fact that their country is the largest in the world. No State ancient or modern, except the Roman empire, can stand comparison with the Russian empire in size, and therefore they say it is perfectly proper that the ancestry of all the Russians should be called the Czar, which is a short form of Caesar. The analogy between the empire of the Czars and that of the Cesars will be readily conceded as to two things; the Czar's Government of to day is hardly an improvement upon that of the Cesars of ancient times, and the dissolution which befell the Roman empire is surely in store for Russia. In fact, all the Russias have never been one country in either a political or a social aspect, and all the attempts of the Muscovite statesmen to Russianize the numerous peoples living under the Czar's sceptre have utterly failed.

Finland is now as foreign to Russia as it was at the time of its forcible annexation to the Czar's dominions. Its language, religion, customs, and very administration are different and quite distinct from those of Moscow. Finland is governed by its own Senate of Russia. The Finns have money, postal and custom stamps, and official documents of their own, and their hatred to Russia is as strong as ever. Poland, though officially it does not exist, is nevertheless a perpetual scarecrow for the Czar's Government. Repeatedly the population of Poland has been decimated, repeatedly the streets of Warsaw have been flooded with Polish blood, and Siberian mines packed with Polish patriots; and yet the Poles stand firm. Their watchword is revenge, and their national song is "Yet Poland has not perished." It is doubtful whether Poland can ever be restored as an independent State, but it is yet more doubtful whether the Poles and the Russians can ever be reconciled to one another.

The population of the several different provinces which constitute White Russia is Russian only in name. They are of a different race from the Muscovites and having its own religion and language. The White Russians have always lived under the Polish influence for the reason, as the Poles claim that the science, art, and literature of Poland are yet superior to those of Russia. The memory of their country's independence is not yet extinct among the population of the beautiful part of Russia known as Little Russia. The Cossacks of the Dnieper have a glorious, even a heroic, history of their own. Once it was in their power to become either Poland or the Muscovite State; being orthodox, they joined the latter, and Catholic Poland was doomed. But the treacherous Muscovites poorly rewarded their ally; the Muscovite Generals were granted the least land in Little Russia, and the Little Russians of to-day are strictly forbidden to use their language in schools, in public offices, or in literature.

The three Baltic provinces, Kurland, Esthland, and Livland, are German in name and fact, and they steadily propagate German ideas among the Russians of the neighboring provinces. They scorn everything Russian, and defy the Russian administration, being sure of protection from Germany. The lands of the Don Cossacks, the Ural Cossacks, and the Kirghis Steppes though they have been under the Czar's rule for centuries, are to have self-governed and every attempt to put Russian officials on the same footing with the rest of the Russian provinces has met with bloody opposition. True to the traditions of their ancestors, the Cossacks love freedom a great deal more than pleases the Czar.

The Caucasus, with its 3,000,000 warlike people, belonging to a dozen different tribes, is as yet held by the Czar on the footing of a conquered country, and a large army is constantly kept there, which not only consumes all the taxes collected in the country but also draws annually several million roubles from Russia.

Turkestan and other Asiatic provinces recently annexed to Russia are looked upon even by the Russian themselves as temporary possessions, which can only be kept under subjection to the Czar as a great and continual loss of men and money.

Last of all, Siberia, one of the richest lands on the globe, turned by the Muscovite into a penitentiary, up into a very hell, is that country loyal and true to the Czar? It would be unreasonable that those who live amid endless tears, tortures, and bloodshed should feel anything but repugnance to the authority in whose name these horrors are committed. Of all the Russias, then, only Great Russia, the central part of the empire, remains true to the Czar. Thus Russia disappears, and Muscovy reappears. It is no secret here that all the above mentioned provinces can by no means be counted as loyal to the Czar. The aggregate population of these provinces amounts to about fifty millions or just a half of the population of the Russian empire. Therefore the Czar has to turn a half of his people into soldiers, policemen, and spies in order to watch over the other half, and thus to preserve his authority. It is a question that under such circumstances a single conspirator is of importance, as it may depend upon him to turn the balance in favor either of loyalty to the Czar or of revolution. This explains why the Czar, as soon as he discovered a handful of daring conspirators, proclaimed a state of siege, suspended the common law, created at once half a dozen minor Czars, utterly neglected the interests of agriculture and industry, and directed his huge army, two million strong to hunting out that handful of conspirators. Yet it was all in vain. There is a rumor that the revolutionary struggle here has entered a new phase; not the killing of another Czar, but the killing of Czarism itself; for their ideal, the federation of the free Russian States, cannot be realized before the absolute monarchy is destroyed. Are we about to witness the dissolution of that hugh, inordinate, and already partly paralyzed political body that men call Czardom!

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvelous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving soreness and often averting life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in threatening chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and effects, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and strongly recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

Shocking Conduct of an English Snob.

On Monday last, says the Leister Leader of a recent date, Captain I. Estrange, R.M., attended at Casey's publichouse, Castlejordan, to make enquiries relative to the firing by the police on some men seen near there on Sunday night. Deeming it necessary to swear a witness, he found he had no Testament, neither had the publican. So he directed a policeman to go to Mr. Boylan, teacher of the National School, close by, and ask him for the loan of one. The sub-constable delivered the message. Mr. Boylan said he had no Testament.

In a few minutes Captain I. Estrange hastily entered the school-room, accompanied by three or four policemen, and called out loudly for the teacher.

Mr. Boylan said—I am the teacher

Captain I. Estrange—Take off your hat sir. How dare you keep on your hat in the presence of a magistrate and a gentleman? I am Captain Lestrange, R.M. Take off your hat.

Mr. Boylan—I will not take off my hat. I do not know you at all, and I think it strange any person should enter my schoolroom during business hours, and order me to take off my hat.

Captain I. Estrange—Policeman, pull off the fellow's hat.

The the policeman did, and flung it on the ground.

Mr. Boylan took it up and again put it on when Captain I. Extrange again ordered the policeman to pull it off.

This having been done with greater violence than before, Mr. Boylan asked him what did he mean by such conduct. Captain I. Estrange—I sent to you for a Testament. How dare you refuse it!

Mr. Boylan—I told the policeman that I had no such thing, and could not give it. The Captain and his party then left Mr. Boylan to continue the business of his school as best he might.

Evidently Captain L'Estrange has never read of the king who excused his valet master from removing his hat, even to royalty, lest his youth should suppose that there was no bigger monarch in his own school-room. A king may lay aside his dignity. When will some of the resident magistrates learn the lesson of courtesy? Your cacher le dechirure," "To hide the torn collar."

NEVER GIVE UP THE SHIP.

"Twenty one years ago I was dying with the CHOLERA MORBUS. There was no medicine that could do me good at least so all the doctors told me; when a friend gave me a few bottles of DR. JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE, and yet CANNABIS INDICA, which freely and fully relieved me."

"Send another $15 box of CANNABIS INDICA for a friend. Your CARMINATIVE has cured me of DYSPEPSIA." I am as sound and well as ever I was."

SALLIE P. BENTON.
January 24, 1865. Keysville, Charlotte Co., Va.

"This remedy speaks for itself. A single bottle will satisfy the most skeptical. We know that it relieves infantile complaints and will take a fond child in twenty-four hours." Price 25 cents per Bottle, or Three Bottles for $6.50. Address

FRADNAM'S AGY., 1682 Race St., Philadelphia.

Send stamp for book of testimonials of cures from prominent persons

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

CAUGHT BY AN OCTOPUS.

A Fisherman's Story of an Adventure on the Pacific Coast.

"Here's a delicacy," a Fulton Market fish-dealer said, yesterday, pouting at a spoon-like thing somewhat hairy from a hook. The creature's body was about the size of a man's fist, of a mottled brown color. From it extruded eight long feelers lined with suckers, and at the base two black horny bills protruded. "It's an octopus or squid, spoiler. I have a standing order from a Chinaman up town to get them whenever I can, and every last one I get goes up north or from California, and I buy it and I don't know what he does with them. For some immediately left him. He came back, and by the prise he pays, me. He eats them, and by the prise he pays, they must be extra nice. I reckon there'll be a grand spread over this one. It measures three feet across, which is about the ordinary size, although I have seen them nearly three times as big. I'd rather meet half a dozen sharks than one octopus. In almost any market in San Francisco you will find them from ten to twelve feet long. They are sold by the pound to the Chinese, and sometimes to Frenchmen and Italians. I kept a stall there once, and I have sold hundreds of them. The Chinese call them Liang Kwei Yu, and they are very fond of them. Italians and Frenchmen always wanted them cleaned, but Chinamen never, for they relies they were whole. I didn't understand this until one day I sold about fifty of them to an old Chinaman, who was particular about their having their bills and suckers on that I never got to follow him. He traced him to a Chinese doctor, who paid the old chap more for the suckers and bills than he paid me for the entire lot. I suppose that these are very valuable to them as medicine, as after that I made just double on my sales. They taste something like frogs. And are too soft and jelly-like to suit me. Angel Island is a great place for them, and one pleasant day you can see Chinamen hunting among the rocks at low tide, or hauling long nets for them.

"The largest one I ever saw alive had a spread of about twenty-two feet. It was a good many years ago. I was knocking about Frisco, where I met a friend who had got together a party to go up the coast, somewhere near Vancouver's Island, and hunt for a rich wreck, and I shipped. We discovered the old hulk in about forty fathoms. In the crew were two half-breeds from Mexico, who could stay under water, it seemed to me almost as long as fishes. They were pearl-divers from the Panama coast, and when they went down they carried a sharp stone in a skin down, and a rope to make fast to anything they could find where near Vancouver's Island, and have dropped down at one end. That back part was the agony, though, and she called it a train or something kind of a lake tow in front of it. We pulled and pulled until it was evident something was holding us, and we had to get loose. By the way it came we thought the whole wreck was afoul. In half a dozen fathoms we could see what the water was but the sight of it almost made us drop the line. The poor fellow seemed almost overwhelmed with a mass of living, frantic vitalized over him. The arms and legs of the body writhed about, some round his neck, others around his arms and body while fastened to his breast was a big bag like a bolster with a pair of eyes like a sow's in it, the same green light you see in them in the dark. The skipper and the other diver knew what it was, and called out for knives. We couldn't get it on deck, because three or four of its arms were strong around the low cable. The diver lowered himself, and putting his knife under the animal, he slit it fall. All these pills really look like little pebbles.

"Gennaro, you really are a donkey. One would think you engaged this bottle was a common one, just like any other, well, think so if you like, but come back to me in three days and see what I say.

Gennaro went home, and faithfully observed the rules laid down by the doctor, exactly well at first. One pill after another went into the bottle and none ever melted or gave the least sign of life. The wine, which puzzled Gennaro more and more. But one day at the end of six weeks, he burst out laughing.

"Yes, I reckon," "it is clear now; half a bushel of pills and half a bottle of wine make one donkey."

However, he went steadily on, and at the end of six months he felt quite well and pills but Gennaro, who had been drinking less and less of wine, was contented to do without it. He was cured.

"What do I owe you, Reverend Father" and he to the hermit.

"You owe me, my son, just one hundred Ave Marias, for you have had one hundred pills, but in return I will give you the bottle and the wine."

However, Gennaro did not need this sequence; he kept to his good habits, but Carmela hung up the bottle as a kind of relic, and kept it always ornamented with fresh red ribbon.

Wooden Swearing.

A missionary priest once said, "I hope, dear children, that you will never let your lips speak profane words. But how I wish to tell you about a kind of swearing which I heard a good woman speak about not long ago. She called it wooden swearing. It's a kind of swearing that many people besides children are given to when they are angry. Instead of saying what is in their feelings in oaths, they slam the doors, kick the chairs, stamp on the floor, throw the furniture about, and make all the noise they possibly can. I hope, dear children, that you will not do any of this kind of swearing."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from his practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Family Fun.

A Wedding Reporter.

Who Was Not Familiar With All the Set Terms

"I say" said the police reporter, tipping his hat over his eyes and scratching the back of his head. "I don't know whether this is right?"

"I don't know whether what is right" demanded the managing editor.

"This wedding. I went there last night and they gave me a heap of rot about their frocks, but I don't know whether it comes out straight or not. Now here is Mrs. Isaac Rolling. I've got her in a pannier silk, trimmed a la grox grain, with black point lace underskirt and box plaited hair. Was seen there nearly three times as big. I'd rather meet half a dozen sharks than one octopus. In almost any market in San Francisco you will find them from ten to twelve feet long. They are sold by the pound to the Chinese, and sometimes to Frenchman and Italians. I kept a stall there once, and I have sold hundreds of them. The Chinese call them Liang Kwei Yu, and they are very fond of them. Italians and Frenchmen always wanted them cleaned, but Chinamen never, for they relies they were whole. I didn't understand this until one day I sold about fifty of them to an old Chinaman, who was particular about their having their bills and suckersm that I never got to follow him. He traced him to a Chinese doctor, who paid the old chap more for the suckers and bills than he paid me for the entire lot. I suppose that these are very valuable to them as medicine; so after that I made just double on my sales. They taste something like frogs. And are too soft and jelly-like to suit me. Angel Island is a great place for them, and one pleasant day you can see Chinamen hunting among the rocks at low tide, or hauling long nets for them.

"The largest one I ever saw alive had a spread of about twenty-two feet. It was a good many years ago. I was knocking about Frisco, where I met a friend who had got together a party to go up the coast, somewhere near Vancouver's Island, and hunt for a rich wreck, and I shipped. We discovered the old hulk in about forty fathoms. In the crew were two half-breeds from Mexico, who could stay under water, it seemed to me almost as long as fishes. They were pearl-divers from the Panama coast, and when they went down they carried a sharp stone in a skin down, and a rope to make fast to anything they could find where near Vancouver's Island, and have dropped down at one end. That back part was the agony, though, and she called it a train or something kind of a lake tow in front of it. We pulled and pulled until it was evident something was holding us, and we had to get loose. By the way it came we thought the whole wreck was afoul. In half a dozen fathoms we could see what the water but the sight of it almost made us drop the line. The poor fellow seemed almost overwhelmed with a mass of living, frantic vitalized all over him. The arms and legs of the body writhed about, some round his neck, others around his arms and body while fastened to his breast was a big bag like bolsters with a pair of eyes like a sow's in it, the same green light you see in them in the dark. The skipper and the other diver knew what it was, and called out for knives. We couldn't get it on deck, because three or four of its arms were strong around the low cable. The diver lowered himself, and putting his knife under the animal, he slit it fall. All these pills really look like little pebbles.

"Gennaro, you really are a donkey. One would think you engaged this bottle was a common one, just like any other, well, think so if you like, but come back to me in three days and see what I say.

Gennaro went home, and faithfully observed the rules laid down by the doctor, exactly well at first. One pill after another went into the bottle and none ever melted or gave the least sign of life. The wine, which puzzled Gennaro more and more. But one day at the end of six weeks, he burst out laughing.

"Yes, I reckon," "it is clear now; half a bushel of pills and half a bottle of wine make one donkey."

However, he went steadily on, and at the end of six months he felt quite well and pills but Gennaro, who had been drinking less and less of wine, was contented to do without it. He was cured.

"What do I owe you, Reverend Father" and he to the hermit.

"You owe me, my son, just one hundred Ave Marias, for you have had one hundred pills, but in return I will give you the bottle and the wine."

However, Gennaro did not need this sequence; he kept to his good habits, but Carmela hung up the bottle as a kind of relic, and kept it always ornamented with fresh red ribbon.

Wooden Swearing.

A missionary priest once said, "I hope, dear children, that you will never let your lips speak profane words. But how I wish to tell you about a kind of swearing which I heard a good woman speak about not long ago. She called it wooden swearing. It's a kind of swearing that many people besides children are given to when they are angry. Instead of saying what is in their feelings in oaths, they slam the doors, kick the chairs, stamp on the floor, throw the furniture about, and make all the noise they possibly can. I hope, dear children, that you will not do any of this kind of swearing."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from his practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Our Young Folks.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THORNS."

The Hermit's Pill.

In a certain part of Sicily there lived a peasant named Gennaro. He had a good wife, and yet he was not happy. His one great weakness was for drink, and the country wine that he indulged in had such an effect on his brain that when under its influence he was like a mad man, and his poor wife came in for very hard blows. The liquor, Gennaro was full of repentance, he would throw himself at Camela's feet and entreat her pardon.

A scene of this sort was passing one day, when the parish priest happened to call.

"What is the matter here?" asked he.

"Oh!" sobbed Gennaro, "I am the worst wretch that ever lived. I am a monster, a serpent, a crocodile, a demon—I am under a curse when I am drunk; I become a perfect brute, and beat my poor Carmela, who is an angel—yes, an archangel. But what can I do! I can't help it; I can't cure myself. I am possessed."

"Oh, no, no, Gennaro," said the priest, "you can be cured if you really wish it."

"Wish it!" cried the poor fellow; "I do wish it with all my heart. I would give my eyes to be free from this."

"You need not go so far as that, Gennaro. The hermit of Salpenga, Father Polidoro, is a wonderful man. He has had much experience in the cure of drunkenness. Go to him, Gennaro, and ask for a pill that will cure you."

"Why, Father, do you know me?"

"Know you, my poor Gennaro, the drunken Gennaro and the poor Carmela!"

"Oh, Father, it is too true. I am a miserable and wicked creature. I wish I could be cured of this vile habit, and our parish priest says that you have a receipt for it."

"Oh that is what you want! But are you in earnest!"

"Indeed, I am, Father—The very sight of you, a holy hermit, seems to be working a change in me. Oh, now, once and forever, I will not drink more."

"What are you saying, Gennaro!"

"I swear I will never drink anything but water."

"May God bless you, my son, but you really are a fool. Never drink again! That is Satan himself who is tempting you to say that."

"Impossible, Father!"

"It is, indeed, and he is laughing in his sleeve at your oath. Tell me, Gennaro, how much do you drink?"

"Oh, Father not more than half a bottle a day, except—except the day I forget myself, and then it is two—three bottles at a time, sometimes four, and then my head is gone."

"Very well, my son, I see that is about seven bottles a week; that is too much—that is very moderate, very reasonable; I see no necessity for lessening it."

"Uh, Father, what do you mean by that?"

"Yes, I think it is a proper quantity for you to take, and you ought to go on with it—only—"

"Only!" said Gennaro, eagerly.

"You must take it in a different way. Wait for a few minutes." The hermit disappeared behind a curtain, and Gennaro began to wonder what this was, a trick, a trick or a magician.

However, Father Polidoro soon returned, holding in one hand an empty bottle, and in the other a little bag.

"Look here," said the hermit, "you will fill this bottle every day with wine, and drink it all; but every day you will put into your bag one of these pills; and do not take them out of the bag, but if you will do this faithfully, I will promise you a complete cure."

"Uh, Father, indeed I will do it without fail. But these pills really look like little pebbles."

"Gennaro, you really are a donkey. One would think you engaged this bottle was a common one, just like any other, well, think so if you like, but come back to me in three days and see what I say."

Gennaro went home, and faithfully observed the rules laid down by the doctor, exactly well at first. One pill after another went into the bottle and none ever melted or gave the least sign of life. The wine, which puzzled Gennaro more and more. But one day at the end of six weeks, he burst out laughing.

"Yes, I reckon," "it is clear now; half a bushel of pills and half a bottle of wine make one donkey."

However, he went steadily on, and at the end of six months he felt quite well and pills but Gennaro, who had been drinking less and less of wine, was contented to do without it. He was cured.

"What do I owe you, Reverend Father" and he to the hermit.

"You owe me, my son, just one hundred Ave Marias, for you have had one hundred pills, but in return I will give you the bottle and the wine."

However, Gennaro did not need this sequence; he kept to his good habits, but Carmela hung up the bottle as a kind of relic, and kept it always ornamented with fresh red ribbon.

Wooden Swearing.

A missionary priest once said, "I hope, dear children, that you will never let your lips speak profane words. But how I wish to tell you about a kind of swearing which I heard a good woman speak about not long ago. She called it wooden swearing. It's a kind of swearing that many people besides children are given to when they are angry. Instead of saying what is in their feelings in oaths, they slam the doors, kick the chairs, stamp on the floor, throw the furniture about, and make all the noise they possibly can. I hope, dear children, that you will not do any of this kind of swearing."

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from his practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEWMAN & FREULD,
1025 & 1027 Stockton St.,
Cor. Jackson.
Importers and Jobbers in all kinds of
COTTON & WOOLEN YARNS
Zephyrs, Canvasses,
HEADS, FLOSSES, CHENILLES,
And all materials used in art needle work and
KENSINGTON EMBROIDERY.
We also call public attention to our Large and Well-selected Stock of
Corsets, Hosiery, Underwear
Handkerchiefs, Embroideries, Laces, Fans, Etc., Etc., Etc.,
WHICH WE ARE OFFERING AT
GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.
NEWMAN & FREULD,
1025 & 1027 Stockton Street,
Cor. Jackson.

☞ We will redeem from The Monitor advertisement printed at cost, any article found misrepresented.

MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, OF LYNN, MASS.,

Woman can Sympathize with Woman.

Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population.

It will cure entirely the worst forms of Female Complaints, all ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It will dissolve and expel tumors from the uterus in an early stage of development. The tendency to cancerous tumors has been checked very speedily by its use.

It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion.

That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by the use of this medicine. It will at all times and under all circumstances act in harmony with the laws that govern the female system.

For the relief of Kidneys of either sex this compound is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND is prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price $1. Six bottles for $5. Sent by mail in the form of pills, also in the form of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Send for pamphlet. Address as above. Name this paper.

☞ Sold by all druggists. ☞

DR. CLARK JOHNSON'S Indian Blood Syrup.
CURES HEART DISEASE.
CURES LIVER AND ALL KINDS OF DISEASES.
CURES TUMOR AND DROPSY.
CURES PALPITATION AND NERVOUSNESS.

TRADE MARK.

CURES Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever and Ague, Rheumatism, Tetter, Dropsy, Pimples, Boils, Biliousness, Nervous Debility, etc.

The Best REMEDY KNOWN to Man!
12,000,000 Bottles
Sold in the last 12 months.

This Syrup possesses Varied Properties.

It Stimulates the Privates to the Brain, Nerves and Muscles, Restores Health to the Sick, Cures Fever and Ague, Cleanses the Blood, causes Mind and Nourishing of the Food in the Stomach, Gives Strength to the Limbs, and generally effects a Thorough Renovation of Food.

It Purges Out the Humors,
It Acts upon the Kidneys,
It Acts upon the Liver,
It Purifies the Blood,
It Quiets the Nervous System,
It Promotes Digestion,
It Nourishes Strengthens and Invigorates the System,
It Opens the Pores, Causes Healthy Perspiration.

It neutralizes the Mercurial taint, or poison in the blood, which generates Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all Skin Eruptions, Pimples, Boils, Tetter.

It is a Great Tonic, Unsurpassed by any manufacturer, and can be taken by the most delicate lady, or by the aged and feeble, and any young person or child.

WATERVILLE, Le Sueur Co., Minn.

A trial of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has greatly benefited my wife for Sore Eyes, of long standing.

V. ATHERTON.

Dallas, Texas Co., Mo.

Being a sufferer from Liver Complaint, I was induced by Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup, a short trial of which completely cured me.

URIELI. B. GRIFFIN.

Eagle Rock, Napa Co., Cal.

After a fair trial of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup, I am satisfied that it is a valuable family medicine.

W. SMITH.

Sacramento City, Sacramento Co., Cal.

I was troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Disease for years, and found no relief until I tried Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup which effected a complete cure.

Mrs. H. WITTEIER.

Williams, Colusa Co., Cal.

I was severely afflicted with Disease of the Stomach and Kidneys, and the use of Dr. Clark Johnson's Indian Blood Syrup has completely cured me. I advise all similarly afflicted to try it.

Mrs. M. WHITEHOUSE.

Agents wanted for the sale of the Indian Blood Syrup in every town or village. Large profits and a ready sale. Address Dr. Clark Johnson, Indianapolis, Ind.

DRUGGISTS SELL IT.

Laboratory 77 West 3rd St. N. Y. City

MISCELLANEOUS.

WITH FIVE DOLLARS
NOT CAN BUY A SHARE
OF
IMPERIAL AUSTRIAN VIENNA CITY
GOVERNMENT BOND,
Which hereby is issued and guaranteed by the Government and are redeemed in drawings
FOUR TIMES ANNUALLY,
Until each and every bond is drawn, with a larger or smaller premium. Every bond must draw a prize, as there are no blanks.
THE THREE HIGHEST PRIZ

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1882.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY MONITOR.

The issue of the MONITOR for Wednesday, March 22d, will contain the complete proceedings of all the St. Patrick's Day ceremonies and celebrations which may be received at this office up to Tuesday night. Our issue of that date will be the MONITOR everywhere on the Coast to send us communications or copies of the local newspapers in which St. Patrick's Day proceedings appear. On this occasion we will devote a SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT to sermons, addresses, orations, speeches, poems, and other religious or literary exercises of the day, and we will print an extra edition of

TEN THOUSAND COPIES

for circulation all over the coast, in the Eastern States and Europe. We again ask our friends everywhere to send us items so as to make up this mammoth issue of the MONITOR.

Is St. Catharine of Alexandria a Bogus Saint?

SECOND ARTICLE.

According to promise made last week we resume—under its proper title—the consideration of the infamous article which the Sacramento Record-Union inserted concerning St. Cyril of Alexandria, and the next paragraph in which is as follows:

"It is not, however, with Cyril, that we propose to deal in this article, but with a very curious illustration of the elasticity of Rome which has been brought to mind by a remark of the MONITOR. That paper observes innocently: 'It is actually amazing to reflect with what zeal the anti-Catholic or non-Catholic press denounces the murder of the pagan Hypatia, when they overlook the horrid murder and the barbarous treatment of so many Christian women of the world. A St. Catharine of Alexandria is now mentioned by these mourners over the fate of Hypatia, yet this beautiful Christian Virgin was torn limb from limb, by order of the tyrant Maximin,' etc. Now we have here a proof that the MONITOR is ignorant of the history of its own Church, but what is very much more interesting, we have an illustration of the manner in which the Church of Rome has often doubled upon its own trail, and utilized its own crimes and the virtues of its opponents. For the fact is that Hypatia and St. Catharine of Alexandria are one and the same, and that under the name of St. Catharine the Church worships the pagan philosopher who was so barbarously murdered by its own members. It is true that this is by no means a solitary instance of the kind. Rome has sought to absorb whatever threatened opposition."

In the foregoing paragraph the issue is very clearly set forth, viz.: That St. Catharine, whom Catholics venerate, and Hypatia, a pagan philosopher, are one and the same person, and, furthermore, that the MONITOR is "ignorant of the history of its own Church" in making the distinction it did between the pagan and the martyr. Passing over the splenic speculations of the scribe of the Sacramento Record-Union altogether, the only way to convict that paper of falsehood, or the MONITOR of ignorance, is to apply the test of history and chronology to the two cases before us, and here at the very outset of our researches we entirely upset all the theory and speculation of the falsifying Record-Union by the important chronological discovery that the era of Hypatia was more than a hundred years subsequent to the death of St. Catharine of Alexandria! Which, therefore, is "ignorant" on this point, the presumptuous and insolent Record-Union, or ourself? Let facts decide between us. We open the pages of one of the highest as well as the latest authorities upon events in ecclesiastical history, and we read these two paragraphs therefrom:

"Augustus Galerius and his Cæsar, Maximinus, ordered the persecution with renewed energy in the East. He was so carried away by his implacable hatred against the Christians that he ordered all meats exposed for sale in the market place to be sprinkled with the water or wine used in sacrifice, and on one occasion had thirty-nine confessors beheaded. Barbara, a virgin, remarkable for her prudence, and Catherine, also a virgin, and famed for her proficiency in philosophy, suffered martyrdom—the former at Heliopolis, A. D. 306, and the latter at Alexandria, A. D. 307.—[Alzog's Universal Church Hist., vol. 1, p. 283.]

Further on in the same work we read:

"Hypatia, a distinguished and esteemed female philosopher, was murdered at Alexandria, A. D. 415.—[Alzog's Universal Church Hist., vol. 1, p. 457.]

These two paragraphs, from the same volume of the same work, totally demolish the flimsy fabric of falsehood set up by the ignorant and impudent scribe of the Sacramento Record-Union, without the addition of a single sentence from us. Here we have one hundred and eight years intervening between the existence of two historical characters whom the anti-Catholic Record-Union confounds as one and the same individual! We have seen some silly blunders made by bigots in the course of a somewhat lengthy journalistic career, but we must say that this is the worst specimen of historical bungling we ever experienced. And then, the impudence of the Record-Union to brand the MONITOR as "ignorant of the history of its own Church"! But we have ample revenge in showing how shallow and untruthful are all the attacks of rabid papers like the Record-Union upon the Saints of God or the Church that canonized them. We conclude this portion of the prejudiced organ's article by adopting its own concluding sentence: "It is true that this is by no means a solitary instance of the kind," as the press which persecutes in its own peculiar way the Bride of Christ invariably derives its intellectual light from that well-known felicitous proper, "the Father of Lies."

Having thus virtually annihilated the Record-Union's transparent theory regarding the individuality of Hypatia and St. Catharine, it is not necessary that we should go further into this question, yet, in order to show our vicious enemy how entirely groundless is the charge, we will give a few particulars of the life of St. Catharine of Alexandria, whose biography was written in 326 by Eusebius, who was almost contemporaneous with her. His relation is interesting, even at this day when so many go-as-you-please Catholics give up their faith for the fatherly of the world. It was not so in the time of St. Catharine, who preferred death to dishonor, and suffered cruel torments sooner than submit to the beastly lust of the tyrant Maximin. Here is what Eusebius says of this saint:

"There was a certain woman, a Christian, and the richest and most noble of all the ladies of Alexandria, who, when the rest suffered themselves to be deflowered by the tyrant (Maximin), resisted and vanquished his unbounded and worse than beastly lust."

The Emperor Basil, in his Greek Menology, adds the following particulars regarding the martyrdom of this saint:

"She is said first to have been put upon an engine made of four wheels joined together, and stuck with sharp-pointed spikes, so that when the wheels were moved her body might be torn to pieces. The acts add, that at the first movement of the terrible engine, the cords with which the martyr was tied were broken asunder by the invisible power of an angel, and the angles falling to pieces by the wheels becoming separated from one another, she was miraculously delivered from death."

As we said in a previous issue, it is from this peculiar instrument of torture that we in the nineteenth century derive the name of a piece of pyrotechnics, or a peculiarly-shaped window, "so-called," as the American lexicographer Webster says, "from St. Catharine of Alexandria, who is represented with a wheel in allusion to her martyrdom." During the terrible persecution through which the Church passed in subsequent centuries, the Christians had no opportunity to translate the remains of the martyrs to suitable resting places, but in the eighth century the body of St. Catharine was translated to the great monastery on the top of Mount Sinai, in Arabia, built by St. Helen, and afterwards enlarged and beautified by the Emperor Justinian; and there, in a marble tomb, repose the ashes of this veritable saint of the Catholic Church, as proved by official documents preserved in Rome, as well as verified by a Protestant writer—Dr. Richard Pocock—in the first volume of his book of travels.

Thus we have very briefly sketched the life, sufferings, death, and final entombment of a saint whom the Sacramento Record-Union declared to be a myth, but whose character we have gloriously vindicated from the savage assault of an unscrupulous anti-Catholic sheet that has proved itself void of common decency in its treatment of this subject.

Do the modern discoverers of what they call "Romish superstition," "Romish errors" and "Romish credulity," ever stop to consider that Rome is wiser, older, and far more infallible than the best among them! Do they imagine that she has no credentials for every saint in her calendar, just as she possesses divine authority for every dogma she promulgates! Vain and erratic agitators! Rome never canonized a saint without centuries of scrutiny, and the most learned men in the world are not likely to be imposed upon by any fictitious fraud such as confounding a pagan who died in 415 with a Christian who suffered for the faith one hundred and eight years previously. Rome is far too cautious—even in a worldly point of view—to be caught in such a trap, and, fortified as she is by spiritual infallibility, such a criminal error is morally impossible—as we have shown from the irrefutable evidence we have adduced.

The Record-Union quotes the Encyclopedia Britannica as its principal authority from whence it derives its assertion that Hypatia and St. Catharine are identical. But every person versed in English literature can easily estimate the value to be placed on such evidence. To quote any English authority against the Catholic Church would be about equivalent to quoting the expressions of Satan in proof against Christianity. The main object of all English works wherein questions appertaining to the Church are passed under consideration, is to belie our belief, to slander our Church and to belittle Catholicity in every means possible. Doubtless in the very encyclopedia from which the Record-Union takes its one Catholic are called idolaters, confession is designated as a financial arrangement between priest and penitent, purgatory is styled an invention of Romish superstition, and Catholics are indiscriminately condemned for Mariolatry and mummery because we honor the Blessed Virgin and assist at Mass. Yet this is the source from whence the Record-Union derives its internal inspiration, a source from whence no one save a bigot of the most intense type would draw a single paragraph. But inasmuch as the British bigot of the Sacramento Record-Union has quoted an anti-Catholic Anglican authority against the Church in this matter, we propose to quote an American encyclopedia in order more thoroughly to confute the contemptible allegation dug up out of a disreputable source for a disputable purpose. Under the article designated Catharine, in Appleton's new American Encyclopedia, we read the following particulars of a saint which British bigotry has tried to hocus-pocus into a pagan:

"CATHARINE, SAINT, a saint of the Church of Rome, whose anniversary is celebrated on November 25th. She was a virgin of Alexandria, and is said to have suffered martyrdom under Maximin. The military order of the Knights of St. Catharine, of Mt. Sinai, was established for the protection of the pilgrims who came to worship at the tomb of the saint, which was on this mountain, where her corpse was supposed to have been found. St. Catharine was believed to have been of high descent and to have possessed remarkable mental attainments. Hence she has often been spoken of as a patron of schools of philosophy. Several of the great Italian painters have furnished pictures of St. Catharine; the most beautiful is that by Correggio."

This shot from an American encyclopedia goes clear through the bigoted British book and sinks that craft just as the balls from Jackson's American volunteers at New Orleans knocked the conceit and courage out of John Bull's forces and caused them to fly from off the American continent.

Next week we intend to continue this interesting question until we confute every idea advanced by the illiberal Sacramento Record-Union and disprove every assertion it has made regarding every matter it has touched upon in its Popery-hating publications.

England's Criminal Course Regarding Education in Ireland.

Statistics regarding crime in Ireland are published under the sanction of English authority for the purpose of placing the Irish people in a false light before the world. In this way, all Ireland has accused of being ignorant by the very Government that made education a crime! It was a penal offence, under the laws of England, for an Irish Papist to be taught to read or write! And this unjust and cruel discrimination against the Irish people has been kept up even to this day, as we propose to prove from English statistics. In the sixteenth century England confiscated all the property which belonged to the Catholic Church and to Catholic families in Ireland. She stole the churches, the abbeys and the schools of every grade which had—in previous ages—gained for Ireland a distinguished position as the cradle of learning in Europe. England thus having stripped the Church and the Catholic people of Ireland of every vestige of revenue whereby they might hope to educate their children, she put legal padlocks on the lips of Catholics who debarred them from all sources of learning. But the Irish were determined not to remain in the position of slavish ignorance to which English legislation consigned them, so they established schools under the very hedges which bounded their farms, and there, hidden from England's prying spies, the children of Ireland picked up the little elementary knowledge they could under circumstances that placed a price upon the head alike of the scholar and the teacher.

As time rolled on and England began to be ashamed of the barbarity which she used towards Ireland in this respect, Catholic priests and Sisters began to teach the children less stealthily, but still, out of the scanty means which fell from the contributions of the charitable. England never contributed a dollar towards the education of Catholic children. Finally, in later years, a change was made, these odious laws were partially repealed, and a certain percent of local and State aid was given to public schools, but the Catholic portion of the people were still compelled to support their own schools, no aid whatever being given to schools conducted by the Christian Brothers or other Communities.

This is the condition of educational affairs in Ireland even at the present day, and we recite these circumstances in order that Americans may understand why it is that the per centage of the Irish people who can read and write is not as great as it is in a country where education is open to all. But, as England has never dealt fairly with Ireland upon any point of law, commerce or education, it is almost too much to expect her to change her tactics, even at this late day, and statistics prove "perfidious Albion" to be true to her traditions in this respect. Sir P. J. Keenan, who was President of the Educational Section of the recent Social Science Congress, in Dublin, pointed out the unjust discrimination which England makes even down to this year in regard to Parliamentary grants for training colleges for teachers. Thus, for instance, England and Wales are supplied with 41 such colleges, receiving by annual grants of £108,600; Scotland has 7 such colleges, having grants of £25,900, while Ireland has but one such college, and only £7,823 appropriated for its support. His report also furnishes the additional fact that all the colleges in England, Scotland and Wales are under denominational control, conducted by numerous Protestant sects, while the one solitary school in Ireland is also in the hands of that class of anti-Irish bigots whose brains are based upon the theory of "Protestant ascendency."

Such is the manner in which Ireland has been kept wallowing in ignorance under English law, and from the facts we have copied from an authorized report of a public official, our readers may easily surmise how grudgingly England doles out the few paltry grounds which she casts at the very people from whom she has stolen some of the grandest churches and schools which are now devoted to imparting Protestant education to the scions of the very robbers who point the finger of scorn at the victims of England's outrageous laws forbidding the tuition of the Irish people.

Forster's Plea to the Irish People.

We publish in the present issue one of the most peculiar features that the agitation in Ireland has as yet presented. We refer our readers to Forster's speech at Tullamore, where they will find the accredited envoy of England pleading with the Irish people for peace, confessing England's sins through many centuries, and joining in the patriotic prayer "God save Ireland!" The political complexion of affairs in Ireland must have changed greatly indeed when the Irish State Secretary voluntarily goes down on his knees before an Irish assemblage and repeats the prayer which fell from the lips of the Manchester martyrs as they gave up their lives for the Irish cause. The Land League is it that has wrung this prayer from the perjured lips of Ireland's foe. It has brought the British Government to its knees, and the signs of the times portend that ere another decade of years Ireland will have her own Parliament and she will again renew her career of prosperity.

Attempted Assassination of Queen Victoria.

Among the cablegrams from Europe which we publish this week, our readers will find a full account of the recent attempt made upon the life of Queen Victoria by one of her hungry subjects. This is the seventh attempt which has been made upon her Britannic Majesty, from all of which she providentially escaped. These occurrences are set forth very graphically by Justin McCarthy, in his "History of Our Own Times," from which we condense them for our readers

"The first attempt was made on June 10, 1840, by Edward Oxford, a pedlar of seventeen, who fired two shots at the Queen as she was driving up Constitution Hill with Prince Albert. Oxford fired both shots deliberately enough, but rapidly missed in each case. He proved to have been an absolutely creature, half crazy with a longing to consider himself a political prisoner and to be talked of as such. When he was tried the jury pronounced him insane, and he was ordered to be kept in a lunatic asylum during her Majesty's pleasure. The trial completely dissipated some wild alarms that were felt, founded chiefly on alleged papers in Oxford's possession, about a tremendous secret society called "Young England," having among its other objects the assassination of royal personages.

"In May 30, 1842, a man named John Francis, son of a machinist in Drury Lane, fired a pistol at the Queen as she was driving down Constitution Hill, on the very spot where Oxford's attempt was made. This was a somewhat serious attempt, for Francis was not more than a few yards from the carriage, both Prince Albert and the Queen being at a very rapid rate. The Queen showed great courage. She was in some measure prepared for the attempt, for it seems certain that Francis had made two previous attempts, and presented a pistol at the royal carriage, although he did not then fire it. He was only twenty-two years of age, and although at first he attempted to escape, he was soon caught and brought before the Queen's council, yet when the sentence of death for high treason was passed upon him by the Queen and was carried immediate from the Court. The sentence was afterwards changed to that of transportation for life, the pistol was loaded at all, and another fact was proved, namely, that a small piece of bristol play acting done out of a longing to be transported. The Queen showed no fear, but was so much moved by the sentence of death for high treason as to beg that it might be not pressed, and was carried immediate from the Court. The sentence was afterwards changed to that of transportation for life.

"The very day after the mitigation of punishment, namely, July 3, 1842, another attempt was made by a hunchbacked lad named Bean. As the Queen was passing from Buckingham Palace to the Chapel Royal, Bean presented a pistol at her carriage. He did not succeed in firing it before his hand was seized by a prompt and courageous boy who was standing near. The pistol was found to be loaded with powder, paper, closely wadded, and a bullet, and was of very large size. About the time a very appropriate chance in the Queen's prayer, proved to be unusually sharp and decreasing was provided even for more than ordinary attempts, and the Queen was in the moment which was sure to be inflicted. A bill was introduced by Sir Robert Peel making such attempts punishable by transportation for seven years or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, and the Queen personally or privately whipped as often and in such manner as the Court shall direct, and on the motion Bean was committed under this Act and sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment in Middlesex penitentiary.

"On the 13th, however, conclude the attacks on the Queen. A bricklayer named Hamilton had been discharged from the service of her Majesty on Constitution Hill, on May 19, 1849, and was sentenced to seven years transportation. A man named Robert Pate, once a Lieutenant of Hussars, struck her Majesty on the face with a stick as she was leaving the Duke of Cambridge's residence in her carriage on May 27, 1850. This was considered an insult to the Queen's person, but the judge paid as much attention to the case of insanity set up on his behalf, as he could from his punishment the whipping which might have been ordered. Finally, on February 29, 1872, a lad of seventeen, named Arthur Orsini, presented a pistol at the Queen as she was entering Buckingham Palace after a drive. The lad, Orsini, proved to be unknown, and to have no name and useless or harmless weapon, with a few cartridges in his pocket. He had brought a piece of greasy, red rag. The wretched lad held the paper in one hand while he read from a manuscript petition on behalf of the Fenian prisoners. When he came to Queen Victoria's name, he put the paper in his hat, but he did not seem to be insane in the sense of being irresponsible for his actions or incapable of understanding the penalty they involved, and he was sentenced to twenty years imprisonment and a whipping."

Like all the preceding attempts upon the life of Queen Victoria, the recent attempt possesses no political significance, the act being prompted by a crazy desire for notoriety and sought that as the best way to achieve it. Aside from the enormity of the crime of murder, we would be sorry to learn that the spirit of assassination which prevails in other portions of Europe should ever find a foothold in England. Crimes of such enormity can remedy no real or fancied wrongs, while their perpetration inflames the worst passions of a portion of the people and incite them to deeds of violence upon other victims.

Ireland as it is at Present.

The current number of the Dublin Review contains an article on the Irish Land League, which, although written by an opponent of that grand organization, deserves attention at the hands of every lover of Ireland. It is consoling to find in the article in question such candid admission as the writer makes regarding the triumphant march of Land League principles throughout every province of Ireland. "The Land League," says this incipient John Bull, "although nominally suppressed, is winning a slow but certain victory." "The gentry" (that means the shonsen squires who robbed, starved and helped the famine fiend to fill the ditches of Ireland with victims) "are losing driven from the country, many of them ruined." These "gentry" can now appreciate the sufferings of the millions of evicted tenants, nearly all of whom were exiled from Ireland, which they left, as the London Times said, "with a sponge-bag—"The Land Courts," continues this pro-English writer, "and the no rent manifesto are working together to extinguish landlordism; and what then?" This question being answered by a free-trade fallacy in answer, but, as Brother Jonathan might say, "We guess the next move will be an Irish Parliament for the Irish people; at least we in America are praying that heaven may speed the day when Irish right will be supreme over English might.

"I heard," says Labouchere in London Truth, "of a fall from grace in average middle class 'society,' at which less than 200 people were present, and the liquor consumed between 9 p. m. and 6 a. m., amounted to seventeen dozen of champagne, two dozen of sherry, twenty bottles of brandy, bottles several dozen of claret. The scene at the finale was almost presidential as far as that described at the commencement of the first chapter of 'Harry Lorrequer.'" This was in merry England.

[Hire, Bridge of Alameda will please cut this out for self instruction.—ED. MONITOR.]

Death of Bishop Lynch of South Carolina.

A telegram dated Thursday last brings the sad news that Rt. Rev. P. N. Lynch, Bishop of the Diocese of Charleston, was buried on the 1st inst., his funeral being attended by Archbishop Gibbons of Baltimore, Bishop Corrigan, and many other prelates and priests. Bishop Lynch was a native of this country, having been born in South Carolina in 1817. He claimed to be a lineal descendant of the ancient Irish family of the O'Neills of Tyrone, some of whom settled in the Southern States when they were first colonized. Bishop Lynch had the happiness to make his early studies under the direction of one of the most distinguished prelates in the American Episcopacy, Bishop England, in the Diocesan Seminary of Charleston, and in 1834 he was sent to Rome, where he entered the world famed College of the Propaganda, from which Cardinal Cullen and Bishop O'Connor of Pittsburgh, his predecessors in that eminent seat of learning—he carried off the highest honors. In 1840 he received his degree as doctor of divinity, was ordained, and returned to Charleston, where he was appointed Rector of the Diocesan Seminary. In 1855, after the death of Bishop Reynolds, he was appointed Administrator of the Diocese, and in 1857 was consecrated Bishop of Charleston. In 1866 he attended the Second Plenary Council at Baltimore, and during its session he preached a most eloquent sermon on "The Mission of Sorrow," which, at the request of Archbishop Spalding, he published. In 1868 he attended the Second Plenary Council at Rome, and in 1869 he was consecrated Bishop of Tloma in partibus infidelium, and returned to his diocese. He is distinctly inquired after Dr. Grant. Having heard from Gen. Schofield that he had arrived in

Farm and Home.

Learning to Cook.

A judicious mother will so manage her daughters that even at the early age of 13 they can, in an emergency, prepare "a meal of victuals." A thorough domestic training is very useful to a girl. At school, she always has a teacher or fellow-pupil at hand to help her over hard places, but if she is set to make a batch of bread herself, and attends to it from the time the sponge is set till the loaves are taken, sweet, fragrant, golden-brown, from the oven, she learns meantime chemistry, caloric, perseverance delicate manipulation, self-reliance, neatness, and acquires skill and the habit of carrying her work in her mind, as one act of neglect or forgetfulness at any point of the process may spoil the whole.

Because some unwise mothers do not see in the stated and skillful performance by their daughters of household services a certain and valuable culture which cannot be acquired at school, they are willing to do themselves, what in justice and kindness to their daughters they should require of them.

Girls, left to their own device, waste a great deal of time which might be utilized to their advantage. A girl who can climb trees, who can dance hours without fatigue, or jump a rope (a very dangerous pastime by the way), who can take long walks, who can skate and row—can also sweep, and scrub, and mark bread, and wash and iron, if she is encouraged to do so. These are the accomplishments she must possess in order to make a happy home, though she may have half a dozen servants at her call. Those who have sufficient curiosity to investigate this subject will find that many of the most famous women in literature and art were as skillful in those accomplishments considered specially, as they were with the pen or pencil or chisel. In training girls to be useful, and ready to meet any emergency, mothers confer upon them an inestimable blessing.

Happy Homes.

We pity the man, however prosperous his pecuniary condition, or however great his fame, who has not a happy home. A happy home is the heaven of this life. Yet many of our most distinguished men have not been fortunate in this respect. They have been made to feel how unsatisfactory was the world's applause, or the possession of official power, while all was cold or heartless unsympathizing in their private home. And these unhappy matches have not always or generally been made from motives of ambition. They have seemingly been the misfortune of chance. But what a terrible misfortune! All the distinctions in the world afford no compensation for such a deprivation. There is something inexplicable about many matches. A young couple marry from actual preference for each other, and from no motive but sincere affection; but a want of congeniality is subsequently developed, and a wretched home for life is the result. Blessed indeed, and most highly favored, are they whose homes, from the beginning to the end, are always happy.

Keep the Girls at Home at Night.

Chief Kessler, of the Davenport police force, gives as his experience, that "if parents would only keep their children at home after sundown, two-thirds of the crime in this country would be prevented." The New York Herald says Chief Kessler was right, and cites the case of Jennie Cramer of New Haven as an instance in proof. Jennie was very beautiful, and the people with whom she, as the daughter of a large maker, naturally associated, were proud of her. She was somewhat vain, and arsenic assisted her complexion. People who had more money than her father had flattered her because she was beautiful. She had the freedom which American girls too frequently have, and her parents permitted her to go abroad at night. Their idea is the idea which prevails too extensively in this country, that a girl can take care of herself and where she is left to that idea she will become contaminated slightly or cruelly, as the case may be. Jennie fell into the hands of a rascal and was ruined. Her disgrace almost killed her parents. Jennie was out at night. There are many young girls in this city in danger of meeting Jennie's fate.

The True Wife.

A judicious wife is always nipping off from her husband's moral nature little twigs that are growing in wrong directions. She keeps him in shape by continual pruning. If you say anything silly she will affectionately tell you so. If you declare you will do some absurd thing, she will find some means of preventing you from doing it. And by far the chief part of the common sense there is in this world belongs unquestionably to women. The wisest things we commonly hear of come from them. Johnson's wife had lived there would have no hoarding up of orange peel, no touching all the poets in walking along the streets, no eating and drinking with disgusting voracity. If Oliver Goldsmith had been married he never would have worn that memorable and ridiculous coat. Whenever you find a man whom you know little about, oddly dressed, or talking absurdly, or exhibiting eccentricity of manner, you may be sure he is not a married man, for the corners are rounded off—the little shoots pared away—in married men. Wives have generally much more sense than their husbands, even though they may be clever men. The wife's advice is like the ballast that keeps the ship steady.

To Catarrh, Bronchitis or Consumption Sufferers.

Dr. Fowler says it is, and he has grown gray in the practice of his profession, has held the Chair of Heart, Throat and Lungs in one of the best medical colleges of the East. The Government gave him letters patent on an apparatus for changing the air of a low altitude into one of a high and rice versa. Said apparatus has been a great help to him in the treatment of lung difficulties. He gives no medicine in the stomach in the treatment of lung diseases. Send for his treatise on diseases of the lungs; write to him also for his opinion of your case; it will cost you nothing. He can furnish you hundreds of testimonials of cures given up by their friends before they came into his hands that are well to-day. Address 127 Kearny street, Room 7, San Francisco, California. R. H. FOWLER, M. D.

Faded Colors Restored.

Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the testimonials we publish, we place beneath the "facsimile signatures of parties whose sincerity is beyond question. The truth of these testimonials is absolute, for on the facts they announce is ignored

CLARION HOUSE,
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 20, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves by intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks disclosed my kidneys to such an extent that I was compelled to take I passed stones ranging in size from a pea down to a grain of gravel. At times the gravel would be passed from the kidneys into the bladder, I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys inside the hip bone, down in front and along the course of the ureter. The discharge of the stone was usually attended with strangury of the neck of the bladder. The pain was very severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning from time to time until the stones were discharged; at times, the pains were so severe that they amounted almost to unconsciousness. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which make kidney diseases a specialty, and they told me that I had Bright's disease, and that I could not live long. I commenced attending the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in ninety days, I discovered I was taking it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed five stones without pain, since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

S. O. Lewis

21st & Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov 25, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My business that of reforming, is one that often induces and always aggravates any affection of the kidneys, as all railroad men know. I suffered so much that I was obliged to lay off for some time. Having of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I attribute my present vigorous health, and the full enjoyment of my business, to Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

[illegible]

SAYS BARGAS, Cal., March 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last two years, and have used all the different medicines advertised for said disease, as well as the medicines prescribed by physicians, but nothing ever reached my case. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now perfectly well. I can cheerfully testify that it has done all you advertise and claim for it.

H. M. Van Wirkle

AUBURN, Cal., April 11, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians both allopathic and homeopathic, and I was in a literal sa I have been by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Mrs. M. E. Finley

SAYTE RAMA, Dec. 4, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and find it all you claim for it in kidney troubles.

E. T. Farmer

President Santa Rosa Bank.

ALAMEDA, Cal., Nov. 22, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after taking two bottles the pains left me, and I have had no return of pain since.

Chas. L. Milcop

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 17, 1882

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with pains in my back and kidneys for the past two years, the effects of a severe strain and cold contracted at the same time. Knowing your Kidney and Liver Cure was indorsed by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, was induced to try it, and it has proved to me, the most decidedly beneficial

Geo. H. Gogg

Twenty-fifth and New Broadway

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 26, 1882

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My symptoms were pains in the back, when turning or stooping, followed by pleasing diurtic over the kidneys. This was more so when I had taken cold, as the cold always settled in my kidneys. I was treated by a physician who pronounced my case congestion of the kidneys, and gave me to understand it was incurable. I commenced using your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, which I did on a friend, whose father had been benefited by your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, at least due to try it. I have been taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for the past three months, and have been greatly benefited.

I remain, very truly yours,

M. E. Lumby

104 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice for twenty years. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. After having lived second bottle never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was enabled to rest and sleep well.

Austin Allen

Los Gatos, Cal., Nov. 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have much pleasure in saying, that after using two bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, I have been freed from pain in the back, from which I have suffered for several years.

Mrs. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials may be had. The above testimonials have been selected because they have been substantially given, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any one who reads this has any physical trouble remember the great danger of delay.

☞ Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is for sale by all druggists everywhere.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a reliable and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and its effects are universally known to the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the most drugs, chemically united, and is now as known as the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It relieves at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or other ailment. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Long prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and inoperative ingredients, now offered, which, as their constant operative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment, and in the dangerous experimenting with unknown and worthless medicines, time the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists,
Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE
610 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few door above Montgomery street,
HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and marriage couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. m10-1m

OLIVER C. GILSON & CO.,
35½ O'Farrell Street,
(Near Market street, San Francisco)
HAS A NEAT AND REPECTABLE CHINESE HELP Office, managed by white men, who speak the language and are thoroughly experienced in

DAWSON'S AMERICAN AGENCY
607 SACRAMENTO STREET,
Furnishes Male Help of any Nationality.
BRANCH OFFICE, 306 POST STREET. FEMALE Department. Girls always in waiting for every class of work.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER
CAN BE CURED
By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.
IN PROOF OF WHICH HE BEGS LEAVE TO REfer to the following named persons, who have been cured by him:
James Lacie, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
A. Gaddy, Petaluma, above of the nose.
Jacob Gaddy, Petaluma, Santa Barbara, cancer of the lip.
Mrs. Gibbons, 1416 York street, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Frank Edell, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer on the ear.
Mrs. Chas. Blackburn, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the nose.
Market Wather, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
Rohr, Walsh, Milpitas, cancer of the face.
Martin Murphy, San Jose, cancer of the neck.
Wm. Boyd, Pinkerton's Bay, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
J. C. McReynolds, Sulphur Creek, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
Mrs. Foley, No. 8 Market street, Room 34, San Francisco, cancer of the back.
Mr. Cornwell, East Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
Stephen Daniels, Santa Rosa, cancer of the nose.
Ben Rudolph, Eagleville, Modoc county, cancer of the nose.
Martin Myers, Prospect, Sacramento county, cancer of the lip; and two Orders of Charity, one of San Francisco and the other of Los Angeles, and others not needs mentioning.
Cancers treated with these cures are performed simply covered by a plaster the recipe for which was left me by my father at his decease, he being a well known practicing physician in both England and the United States. Persons who know themselves to be afflicted under this form of disease, who may wish to avail themselves of this cure will find me at the Brooklyn Hotel, Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

P. J. O'Brien & Sons,
Carriage Builders,
329 and 331 GOLDEN GATE AVE.,
(Tyler Street,) near Larkin.
Carriages, Buggies and Wagons made of the Best Material, in the Most Workmanlike Manner, and Warranted to give Entire Satisfaction, at Greatly Reduced Prices.
Repairing and Painting promptly attended to at Reasonable Rates.
☞ Orders by Telephone No. 2115.

GOOD LIVING.
For Neatness, Cheapness and Stylishness, the Arcade Restaurant
11 and 13 SIXTH STREET,
Near Market, San Francisco,
CAN'T BE BEAT.
JNO. BARTELS, Proprietor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
Special attention given to the manufacture of "Roots" of all kinds for horses. Can refer to all the principal trainers and horsemen on the Pacific Coast.
N. B. My whips looked superiority in this branch of business is largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "rollers" in the trade. Also, a full line of Ladies' Whips, with gold and silver mounted, of a superior kind, serpent skin Side Saddles, etc.
Sole Agent for the U. S. Dixon's Condition Powders and Whitman's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Top Weights. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English Ladies' and Gentlemen's saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and Jockey saddles. JOHN O'KANE.

JOHN J. DONOVAN,
Painter and Kalsominer,
No. 6 Potter (Twelfth st.)
Bet. Mission and Market . . . San Francisco
Sewing Machine Agency,
NO. 151 FOURTH ST.
Bet. Mission and Howard . . . San Francisco.
ALL KINDS OF SEWING MACHINES CHEAP, ON easy Installments. Machines rented for $2 a month. Repairing done. Needles and Oil.

STOP TAKING DRUGS.
I Want Cases that Have Been Given Up.
CATARRH, CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHRONIC diseases, treatment, $10, sent to any address. 1816; Mission street.

CHEAP VARIETY BAZAAR,
741 MARKET ST., opp. Dupont.
THE UNDERSIGNED WOULD RESPECTFULLY AN nounce to the Public that he has opened the above Bazaar, where he will sell Fancy Goods, Notions, Hardware, Crockery, Glassware, Tinware, Furnishing and Fancy Goods, Stationery, Jewelry, etc. Ladies' Furnishing Goods, etc. Spectacles and Eye Glasses to suit all myths. Im Jewelry, small expensive, I am sure that I can sell cheaper than any other store in the city. N. B. Shirts made to order. Don't forget the place, 741 Market St. Please give me a call. Respectfully yours,
A. POLLACK.

LITHOGRAPHERS . . . BOOK BINDERS
P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JNO. F. SNOW & CO.
CLEANSING AND DYEING.
Blankets, Lace Curtains, Wool and Silk Goods, Scouring and Ladies' Suits. Shawls, Cloaks, Coats, Pants, Vests, Velvets, Silks, Satins, Crape Veils, Velvets, Etc., Etc.
CHAS. J. HOLMES, Proprietor.
633 Market Street, Under Palace Hotel.
BRANCH: 1063 Broadway, Oakland.
Goods can be sent by express from any part of the country, 50 weighing over 5 pounds. Orders by postal card promptly attended to.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE
of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the writing of one letter, including a money order, any one address, saving one dollar, and every paper sent regularly, twelve times a year, for one dollar. Address
THOMAS D. EGAN,
New York Catholic Agency, 33 Barclay street, and 38 Park Place.

SAVE MONEY.
SEND YOUR ADDRESS TO H. A. SMITH, 138 Fremont Street, San Francisco, for "Home Circle" one year, 50 cents; or, for a month, a well-known and popular Ladies' Journal, price 25 cents, and receive that choice Engraving, "Lady Washington and Family." Best opportunity ever offered to get up clubs. Agents wanted. Our terms are liberal, and we will make it for your interest to examine our goods and prices. Address as above.

THE BEST TEA.
The Best Tea at the Lowest Price. Tea Importers, 13 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco.
Give Health and Strength! Cure Dyspepsia! Gives Appetite!
DAMIANA BITTERS!
The Mexican Remedy for Disease of the Kidneys and Bladder!
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS, Liquor Dealers, Druggists, and Grocers.
LEWIS ROSS, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 13 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL,
Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
Hot and Cold Water Baths Free.
The Best Hotel in San Francisco
At the price.
Do no stand in omnibus for other hotels until you see the Franklin.
H. CURRAN, ... Proprietor.

R. W. THEOBALD,
IMPORTER AND DEALER
COAL YARD
IN ALL KINDS OF
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS
35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 2167.

Parker's Hair Balsam
PARKER'S GINGER TONIC
Ginger, Buchu, Mandrake, and many other herbal extracts known for their curative virtues combined with tonic, aromatic and stimulant properties. The Best Health and Strength Restorer Ever Used.
Ladies, Invalids, Clergymen, Students, and Those Requiring a Tonic, Will Find Invaluable Strength and Relief from Fever, Ague, Dyspepsia, and other Chronic Diseases. Sold by Druggists and Dealers. Large size, $1.00.

old young and healthy!
DAMIANA makes the weak strong and the
LEWIS ROSS, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, 13 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco.
Give Health and Strength! Cure Dyspepsia! Gives Appetite!
DAMIANA BITTERS!
The Mexican Remedy for Disease of the Kidneys and Bladder!
FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS, Liquor Dealers, Druggists, and Grocers.

THE ROYAL ST. JOHN.
A CHILD CAN USE IT.
The Royal St. John is the only sewing machine in the world which runs either
Forward or Backward
Without stopping or changing direction of work. It possesses the most points of excellence, the most new and valuable improvements, and is positively
The Simplest, Lightest Running and most Durable Sewing Machine Made.
☞ Buying agents wanted, address
C. SHAWL, 30 Second street, San Francisco.

The Golden Palace TEA STORE,
227 And 229 Second Street,
San Francisco, California.
Has Been Greatly Enlarged to Accommodate the Increased Patronage.
THE PROPRIETOR OF THE ROYAL SAFE DEPOSIT, is and will continue to offer the Choicest Teas, which can positively save money by trading in bulk with full weight and measure. Teas purchased by the whole and half chest, and sold at wholesale and retail, at very little advance from cost, and never fails to give satisfaction. Coffee roasted every morning, and ground to order, if desired. Fine Coffees, Imperial Teas, Choicest Japan, and other Teas, at prices which will be found satisfactory. Teas sent to any part of the city free of charge. Teas sent to any part of the country free of charge, if amount ordered be sufficient to pay the express charges

Market Report.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY T. J. DALY, 305 AND 307 MASON (NORTH) STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE,
422 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, March 7, 82.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Quite a change has taken place in prices the past week. Meat and potatoes have reached high figures. Grain is firm but rather inactive. Butter and Eggs are on the decline. Wool and Hides are still inactive.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receivers prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized, for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@$5 62½; City Superfine, $4 75@$5; interior brands, $5@$5 25 for extra, and at $3@$4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 62½@$1 65; No. 2, $1 57@$1 60 per cental.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 79½@$1 82½; Standard Chevalier, $1 75@$1 85; Feed, $1 70@$1 72½ ₩ ctl.

Oats—
Quotable at $1 72½@$1 75½ (for common) and $1 77½@$1 82½ (for goods to choice); Surprise, $1 85@$1 90 ₩ ctl.

Corn—
Quotable at $1 80@$1 85 for Yellow; White, $1 90@$2 00 ₩ ctl.

Hay—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $15@$16; wild oats, $13@$14; volunteer and stable, $9 50@$12; stock, $9@$10 $11 ₩ ton.

Rye—
Quotable at $2 20@$2 25 ₩ cental for choice.

Buckwheat—
Quotable at $1 50@$1 55 ₩ ctl.

Straw—
Quotable at 60@70c ₩ bale.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 15½@16c; California, 13@13½c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@15½c; Extra Clear Sides, 14½@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½ ₩ lb.
PORK—Extra Clear, ₩ bbl, $24 50; do in half bbl, $12 50; Clear, ₩ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12 00; Mess ₩ bbl, $22@22½; do half bbl, $11 50; $12 00; Prime Mess, ₩ bbl, $19@$19 50; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ₩ bbl, $16@$16 50; Choice Pig, ₩ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12; do 25-lb kegs, $3 25@$3 50.
BEEF—Mess Beef, ₩ bbl, $10@$10 50; Extra Mess do, $10 50@$11; Mess Beef, half bbl, $5 50@$6; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $6 25@$6 50; Family do, ₩ bbl, $13@$13 50; Family do, half bbl, $6@$6 25.
LARD—Eastern Refined, tcs, 16c; do in fancy pails, 16@17c; do in 10-lb tins, 14½c; do in 5-lb tins, 15½c; do in 20-lb. wooden buckets, 15½c; do in 10-lb do, 15½c; half bbls, 14½@14½c; California, in tcs, 12½@14c; half bbls, 14½@14½c; in 10-lb tins, 13½@14c; 5-lb do, 14c; 3-lb do, 14½c; Leaf, in 10-lb pails, 15c; do in 5-lb do, 15½@15½c; Royal 3-lb pails, 19c ₩ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: Early Rose, $2 50@$2 75; Garnet Chili, $1 75@$1 90; River Red, $1 60@$1 75; Tomatoes, $2 12½@$2 25; Oregon Peerless, $3 50@$2 00; Burbank Seedlings, $1 40@$1 60; Cuffey Cows, $2 12½@$2 25; Petalumas, $2 12½@$2 25; Peach Blows, $2 50@$2 50; Russets, $2 25@$2 75 ₩ ctl.

Onions—
Quotations are: White, $1 00@$1 15 ₩ ctl.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 60@75c ₩ ctl; Garlic, 1@1½c ₩ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@$12 00 ₩ ton; Cauliflowers, 75 ₩ doz; Chili Peppers, dry, 20@25c ₩ lb; Dry Okra, 20 ₩ lb; Turnips, 50c ₩ box; Carrots, 40@75 ₩ sack; Beets, 65@50c ₩ sack; Green Peas, 12½@15c ₩ lb.

Fruits—
BEEF—First quality, 8c; second do, 6½c; third do, 5@6½c ₩ lb.
VEAL—Dressed, 6½@7c ₩ lb for large, and 8@9c for small; 9c for choice.
MUTTON—Wethers, 7½@8c; Ewes, 6½@7c ₩ lb.
LAMB—6@7c.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain-Fed, on the hoof, choice to extra, 6½ ₩ lb; ordinary, 6c; Dressed, do, 8@8½; Roasting Pigs, alive, $3 00@$3 50.

Beautiful Women

Are made pallid and unattractive by functional irregularities, which Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will infallibly cure. Thousands of testimonials. By druggists.

—Get your boys to boot blacks at R. Stahl's 533 Fourth street, near Bryant.

—Nothing contributes more towards health than good bread. It is truly called "the staff of life," and therefore should be more particular than they are in procuring it pure. We would know for the fact that Wetzel's home-made bread is the best in the city, and you will find it at 9 Stockton street, fresh every day.

—Save one-third on fashionable city tailors' prices, without sacrificing quality or style of garments, or workmanship. Square dealing, comfort and satisfaction, by patronizing J. Gollan, Howard street.

—Save $150. Buy your pianos direct from the manufacturers. Wheelock & Co., New York, have opened an agency at 327 Sutter street, F. K. Gill, manager. Instruments sold on instalments.

—A preventative for malarial disorders. A few doses will break up the worst cold. Smith's Ginger Tonic, 1022 Market street. It will cure more aches and pains than any known remedy.

—Large number of new and second-hand Pianos of different makes, at all prices. See us before purchasing. Spencer & Co., 23 and 25 Fifth street. Open evenings.

—C. F. Wyer & Co., proprietors of the Pacific Coal and Feed Yard, 849 Mission street, (between 4th and 5th) make it a rule to give their customers 2,240 lbs. to the ton of Coal, and yet they charge less than dealers who practice disreputable tricks of short weight and slaty coal. This firm prides itself upon the excellence and quality of the Coal they furnish their customers, and if you send them a trial order you will be convinced that it pays to deal with a firm who treats them honestly in all their dealings.

—Gentlemen, use Merino Shirt.

—"Golden Medical Discovery" is not only a sovereign remedy for consumption, but also for consumptive night-sweats, bronchitis, coughs, influenza, spitting of blood, weak lungs, shortness of breath, and kindred affections of the throat and chest. By druggists.

—The leading topics of conversation in religious young men circles at present appear to be anti-fat, legend and anti-monopoly, anti-polygamy and anti-nuptial, penny ante, tool for drinks and church fair oyster soup.

Satisfaction for Two.

In our family of ten for over two years Parker's Ginger Tonic has cured headache, malaria, and in fact all other complaints so satisfactorily that we are in excellent health and no expense for doctors or other medicines.—Chronicle.

Our Anniversary.

The day we celebrate on each succeeding seventeenth of March with so much loyalty and patriotism, the birth day of the tutelar Saint of Erin, St. Patrick's Day, still seen here and it behoves every daughter of the old country who has one stock of affection left for to prove the same by appearing on that day with a pretty, stylish and neat-fitting dress which they can procure from Hodge's Cloak and Suit House, No. 10 Fifth street, where can be found the best for the least money as well as the latest and most fashionable styles.

Piles Cured.

Call at Dispensary of the Good Samaritan, 405 Kearny street, room 2, and get cured of Piles. No knife, caustic or other surgical appliances employed. Consultation free. A cure guaranteed or money refunded.

—Insist upon obtaining Florendo Cologne. It is pre-eminently superior in permanence and delicacy of odor.

—Carpet-beating and whitening, 333 Tyler. Oakland branch, 21st and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2,128. Carpet Cleaning Works.

—The National Surgical Institute, 319 Bush street, is the Western Division of the So. Inst. of Indianapolis and Philadelphia, which is so celebrated for the cure of all deformities and lameness, diseases of the spine, hip, knee, and all joints, crooked limbs, club feet, feet, paralysis, piles and fistula. Call and see patients, and our facilities for curing them. References given and testimony sent if desired.

—Ladies desirous of keeping up with the fashions in dress should call at 26 O'Farrell St., where dresses are made to order at reasonable low prices in the very latest styles.

Sure Cure—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

When we see a medicine advertised to cure a half dozen or more diseases of diseases, we conclude that it is a humbug. And having tested that the proprietor of Ammen's Cough Syrup only advertises or claims it good for coughs, colds and lung complaints, we were induced to try it, and now take pleasure in recommending it to our readers.

—Use nothing else but Merino Shirt.

COMPOUND OXYGEN
NEW TREATMENT by INHALATION. A Compound of Oxygen, Combined with Tonic Ingredients. Cures Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Headache, Debility, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all Chronic and Lingering Diseases. Not a Patent Medicine, but a Scientific Compound, Prepared by Physicians of Eminent Skill. Our Publications, Containing Testimonials of Cures, Sent Free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1109 and 1111 Girard Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Mention this paper.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.
A CURE GUARANTEED.
DR. P. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT; a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Nervous Prostration, Loss of Memory, Premature Old Age, and many other diseases that lead to Insanity or Consumption. Sent by express on receipt of the Brain, Nerve and Bone Treatment, $1 00 per box, or three boxes for $5 00. Each box contains one month's treatment. Each order must be accompanied by $5, and we will send the purchaser our written guaranty to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guaranties issued only when the treatment is ordered for permanent cure. Pamphlets, containing testimonials of cures, sent free. Address THE DR. SARDIS & CO., wholesale druggists, 637 and 639 Sansome street, San Francisco, wholesale agents Pacific coast.

HAVING OPENED A CARRIAGE REPOSITORY
(In connection with the FURNITURE BUSINESS.)
AT THE—
LARGE NEW DOUBLE STORE,
1047 and 1049 Market St., opp McAllister.
WHERE I KEEP CONSTANTLY A FULL ASSORTMENT of the most celebrated Eastern carriage makers, and will sell at eastern rates. The stock was selected by Mr. H Cheshire, the proprietor's principal partner in this city. Please call and judge for yourselves.
1047 and 1049 Market St. J. M. BROONZE.

HEALD'S BUSINESS COLLEGE,
24 Post Street, San Francisco, Cal.
Opposite Mechanics' Institute.
INSTITUTE TO THE PACIFIC COAST. THOROUGH EDUCATION to the made its graduates in demand for the best clerical positions in the Mercantile, Commercial positions. Pupils are fitted for the counting-house in a practical and ACTUAL BUSINESS TRAINING. For Circulars call at College, or address
President Business College, San Francisco.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING.
DRESSES MADE IN THE LATEST STYLES AT MODERATE RATES BY
MRS. F. WOLFE,
1110 FOLSOM ST., Bet. Seventh and Eighth.

CANCERS.
The Cure of CANCERS, TUMORS, KINGS EVILS, etc. Warranted.
The celebrated French BLOOD PURIFIER kept on hand.
DR. V. ROEGE,
No. 1 Mason Street, San Francisco, Cal.

E. F. WILTON,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
12 Stockton Street.

NEAR MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO.
FURLONG & MANSEAU,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Silver and Walnut SHOW CASES.
510 Market Street bet. 4th & 5th, up stairs

New Advertisements.

JAMES GRAHAM. GEO. LACOMBE.
STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
639 MARKET STREET,
Under Palace Hotel. SAN FRANCISCO.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
H. F. FREESE,
RUCHING FACTORY,
Have removed to the Spacious Store,
156 Third Street, two doors above Howard.
ON HAND, OR MANUFACTURED TO ORDER, a elegant assortment of Ladies' and Children's Under wear, consisting of Laces and Ruchings at less than wholesale prices.

A Trial Will Convince You that DR. J. D. MITCHELL'S Eureka Cough Syrup
IS THE
MOST RELIABLE REMEDY FOR THROAT AND Lung Diseases, and all Pulmonary complaints. For sale by all Druggists.
Testimonial from the Secretary of the Shakers' Community.
PHAKERS, ALBANY CO., N. Y. May 4, 1878.
DR. MITCHELL, San Francisco, Cal.
Dear Friend: I am not fearful of doing you, but a little good, I can and yours, assure me of the probability of your being at the place of my destination. I bought my first bottle of your Eureka Cough Medicine for one of our sisters, and although her cough was excessive, and wearing her out, the Eureka, contrary to all the "quack" compositions, cured her. I tried to get some more in Albany but did not succeed. Now, for her, I would like the recipe but that, I can will spare to be sure for her future use. I do not want it for marketing purposes. If you feel disposed to let me have it, I will return so much in value to you on receipt. Hoping this may reach you and find you well, I remain, yours, with sincerity and gratitude, MARY A. LOMAS.
Mr. Samuel A. Orgier is my informant and reference. M. A. L.
NOTICE. The Eureka Cough Syrup is now manufactured at No. 1211 Broadway, San Francisco, Cal., and for sale by all druggists. URIAH L. HEAGUE, Proprietor.
MANUFACTORY:
1211 Broadway. - - - - San Francisco

P. T. FLINN & SON,
S. W. cor. Howard and Eighth Sts.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN
HAY, GRAIN,
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Wines and Liquors.
Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to.

McNALLY AND HAWKINS
Are Selling CHANDELIERS
Of the Latest Patterns
In NICKEL and GOLD, SILVER and GLASS, GOLD and GLASS.
And Bronze of all descriptions Lower than ever before offered.
ALSO IMPROVED
Sun Burners and Ventilators
For lighting Churches, Halls, Theatres, etc.
Old Chandeliers Re-bronzed to look as good as new.
Orders for Plumbing, Gas and Steam fitting promptly attended to.
TELEPHONE connecting with all parts of the city.
807 Market street, Grand Hotel Building.

NOW DISCHARGING.
English Coke—Ganfield.
Sugar-loaf Lump Lehigh Coal,
Honeybrook Lehigh Egg Coal,
Wilkesbarre Egg Coal, and
Cumberland Coal,
FOR SALE IN LOTS TO SUIT.
BLACK DIAMOND COAL MINING CO.,
Cor. Spear and Folsom Sts.

J. ROCK'S NURSERIES.
A NEW DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE
OF FRUIT TREES,
NUT-BEARING TREES, ETC.,
CONTAINING
Many New and Rare Fruits,
IS NOW READY, AND WILL BE MAILED TO ALL applicants inclosing a three-cent stamp. To all regular customers without charge.
A New Descriptive Catalogue of Ornamental and Evergreen Trees, Shrubs, Roses, Palms, Bamboos, etc.
Is now ready, and will be mailed to all applicants inclosing a three cent stamp. To all regular customers without charge.
JOHN ROCK,
SAN JOSE, CAL.

TO THE LADIES.
For Cheap and Handsome Hats and Bonnets go to
MRS. SWANTON'S,
1217 Stockton street.

WATCHES CLEANED, $1.
Glasses - - 10 cents.
REFERENCE: SAN FRANCISCO 13 YEARS.
HAMOND, 4 Sixth Street, San Francisco.

New Advertisements.

THE EYES! THE EYES!
DR. E. H. PARDEE,
OCULIST AND AURIST,
HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS PROFESSION, and will give personal attendance to diseases of the Eye and Ear. Artificial eyes inserted free of charge. Office hours, 9 to 4. Residence and office, 1020 Sutter street, near Polk. Consultation hours, 9 to 4. Office, 621 Clay street, San Francisco. Office hours 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. Over Claystreet Bank.

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Coos Bay Coal at . . . $ 8 00 a ton
Eastport Coal at . . . . . 9 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at . . . . . 10 00 a ton
Scotch Coal at . . . . . 12 00 a ton
Wellington Coal at . . . . . 11 50 a ton
Coke at the House Rates. Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1113 and 1115 Mission Street.

KNABE PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALLED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability.
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

CUTICULA ANTI-ACHE
FOR THE BEST IMPROVED ARTIFICIAL LIMBS
MENZO SPRING,
9 Geary St.,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
1 OFFICER.

DR. MORTON,
987 Harrison street, S. F.,
Cor. Sixth.
OFFICE HOURS: 10 to 12 M. 2 to 4 P. M. 7 to 8 P. M. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

ROBERT MATTHEY,
PALACE BAKERY,
1523 Mission Street, bet. 11th & 12th,
Corner Mission and Lafayette Streets, S. F.

P. J. DALY,
FRUIT AND PRODUCE
Commission House,
305 & 307 Washington St.,
Bet. Battery and Front SAN FRANCISCO.
Goods shipped to all parts of the State ☞ Ships supplied at Wholesale Rates.

WOOD AND COAL.
HARRY LINCOLN,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
WOOD AND COAL,
Cor. Hayes and Gough Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO
Orders Filled and Delivered promptly to all parts of the City free of Charge. ☞ at the Very Lowest Rates. ☜

J. M. JOHNSON,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Wood, Coal & Charcoal
YARD AT 339 GOLDEN GATE AVE.
(Formerly Tyler Street.)
Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny,
SAN FRANCISCO
Orders left at "Baldwin" Stables, No. 11 Powell street, will receive prompt attention. Telephone connection.

COAL. COAL. COAL.
2,240 LBS. TO THE TON.
Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.
Coke and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOW EST Prices.
T. L. SMITH,
Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.
☞ Trial Order Solicited.

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
— ALSO —
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.
MARK HEYWOOD,
716 Folsom street.

DANIEL GIOVANNINI,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in all kinds
CHARCOAL, WOOD & COAL,
815 Pacific Street, San Francisco.

COAL AND COAL OIL!
At Lowest Market Rates.
245 Stevenson Street,
Between Third and Fourth Sts.
HARRY JONES. - - - Proprietor

COAL. COAL. COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON,
630 Geary Street, San Francisco.
☞ Telephone number, 2182.

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture.
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JONAS J. MORRISON,
LUMBER DEALER,
Corner Mission and Spear Streets, SAN FRANCISCO

A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.
Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

HARVEY'S HOT-WATER RADIATOR.
SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERATURE without the extravagant waste of fuel or litter of the open grate; a most healthful atmosphere without the dry, parching air so noxious gases of the hot-air furnace or stove; a noiseless diffusion of heat without the hissing or crinkling of the steam system.
☞ Information or Descriptive Circulars sent free.
NO. 213 MISSION ST.,
Bet. Main and Beale. SAN FRANCISCO.

TO SAVE MONEY!
Be sure to Buy your HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE of
TERRY & CO.,
747 MARKET STREET, 747
Opposite Dupont Street. - - - SAN FRANCISCO.
WHEN YOU HAVE ANY FURNITURE TO SELL, LET THEM KNOW.
They will PAY CASH FOR IT.

MRS. M. H. OBER, 326 SUTTER ST
BOSTON AND CALIFORNIA DRESS REFORM.
An Elegant COUTIL CORSET, to order, for $1.
Children's Corset Waists, Cashmere and Merino Union Suits, Shoulder-Braces, Hygienic Corsets, Hose and Shirt Supports, Emancipation Waists, and Combination Suits. (SEND FOR CIRCULAR)

EXCELSIOR.
CHRISTIAN ZINNS,
DRAPER AND TAILOR,
5 Montgomery St.,
MASONIC TEMPLE, SAN FRANCISCO
A large Assortment of
French and English Piece-goods
CONSTANTLY ON HAND
CALL AND EXAMINE.

E. BUTTERICK & CO'S (CELEBRATED) PAPER PATTERNS
FOR
Ladies', Misses, and Little Children's Garments.
SPRING STYLES NOW READY.
H. A. DEMING,
124 POST ST., San Francisco, Cal.

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of Ladies' and Gent's BOOTS AND SHOES.
☞ Full Line of the Best Eastern Manufacturers and Their Own Celebrated Hand and Sewed Goods.
Remember the Number:
138 SIXTH STREET, 138
Bet. Natoma and Howard.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL
Devoted to the Propagation and Defense of Catholic Principles.
Published by the MONITOR PUBLISHING CO. Office: 422 Clay street, San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
For Year by Mail (or paid in advance) $1 00
For Year by Mail (if not paid in advance) 1 50
Six Months (not paid in advance) 1 25
Three Months (if paid in advance) 75
Three Months (if not paid in advance) 1 00
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces (if advance) $4 00; (not in advance) 5 00 ☞ Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to
E. J. McCORMICK,
Editorial Manager,
Monroe Office, Box 2362 P. O., San Francisco, Cal.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second-Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR
is now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its widespread popularity as a standard and reliable Religious Newspaper has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes THE MONITOR a valuable medium for advertisers.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.
To Correspondents.
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.
No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the writer's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received upon all topics of interest to the cause advocated by the Journal. Contributors should be as brief as possible, and always write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of signed articles.
All contributions and communications, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Soul; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesia. iv. 64.

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1882. NO. 23.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
H. B. SLAVEN,
The Baldwin Building.

PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING,
GOLD PLATING,
SILVER PLATING,
Elegant and Durable.
ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED. WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Silver plated spoons as good as new. Solution plated forks, spoons, etc., worn smooth by long use. Prices the very lowest. Silver Plating Works, Palace Hotel, corner Sansome and Bush streets, opposite the Palace Hotel. Work done while you wait if desired. Reference, any business house in the city. Work warranted the best made.
Metropolitan Plating Works.
PLATING ESTABLISHMENT
On the Pacific Coast
San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works,
653 and 655 Mission Street, bet. New Montgomery and Third Sts., San Francisco, Cal.
Awarded First Premium at every fair of the Mechanics' Institute for the last twelve years.

J. J. DYER, DENTIST,
S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,
☞ Entrance, 27 Post St. ☜

KANE & HEANEY,
DEALERS IN
Choice Butter, Cheese, EGGS, ETC.,
10 and 40 Centre Market,
Entrance Sutter st., near Dupont, San Francisco.
Consignments solicited. Liberal cash advances on consignments. Prompt returns and satisfaction guaranteed to Marketing Produce.

NO. 23 POWELL STREET,
Bet. Market and Jackson, San Francisco.
CHOICE GROCERIES, PROVISIONS, WINES AND LIQUORS.
Orders Promptly Attended to.
JULES LAMBLA'S,
Cor. Sutter and Powell Sts., San Francisco.
☞ Just give me a trial order, and remember that no bottle is honorable dealing, and one order will convince of that.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS
AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, INFLUENZA, CATARRH, LOSS OF VOICE, Incipient Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Ask for the California Pulmonary Balsam, and take no other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
"7 Sansome Street, S. F."

Monsignor Capel.

HIS NEW PAMPHLET.

GREAT BRITAIN AND ROME

POSITION OF THE PAPACY.

The Pope and the Vatican The Vatican Must be Independent.

The Paris correspondent of the Tablet sends the following. Mgr. Capel, the Chaplain of Italy, "is at present in Paris superintending the publication of a French edition of his new pamphlet, "Great Britain and Rome," which is making no little stir in Catholic circles in England and on the Continent. Mgr. Capel causes to be made strictly well informed on matters relating to the diplomatic relations of Rome with Great Britain, and he is acquainted with the fact that he is known to have been for some time past medicinal agent of the Holy See in the United States, gives the eloquent ecclesiastic a peculiar interest to all Catholics, and more especially Americans. I called on Mgr. Capel yesterday, in hope of obtaining some information as to the rumored intention of the Pope to leave Rome. He received me with great courtesy, and made no objection to replying to the question I put him.

"Why not? of course understand, however, said he, "that I am speaking without authority and expressing only my personal opinion. I will answer the questions you particularly wish information about."

Correspondent—I should like an expression of opinion upon the present position of the Papacy in its relation to the Christian Powers, and especially in relation to the Italian monarchy.

Mgr. Capel—I have reason to believe that the European Powers are awakening to the necessity of the Pope being assured more perfect independence than he enjoys at present. The Vatican must be independent. It must be rendered from outrage and assured of being able to communicate at all times and under all circumstances with the members of the Catholic Church. King Humbert's government professes to protect the Vatican, but what reliance can be placed on a Power which is open to the influence of the Masonic Press? Rome, in fact, is a prisoner. The Pope is at present safe in the Vatican. His authority is no longer respected, and when people cease to respect authority, believe me, there are only evils from sliding to endless ill. I can quite conceive the possibility in cases arising which would compel the Pope to flee from Rome unless the great Powers take some measure to secure his liberty. Such a position as he now has is surely intolerable. Let us suppose an extreme case—the outbreak of war, let us say, between France and Germany, let us suppose Italy, or the Mediterranean, or Rome, or the Vatican to come into the vortex of war, and then wishing to endanger it. Let us suppose a revolution in Rome, and the Pope, to escape from violence, to flee to France, or Germany, or Spain, or Austria, or even Germany—would that by unanimous or at a finger to restore the Papacy to its old position? No. The Pope would return, even though his departure had been followed by a revolution and his leaving would be brought with disadvantage only to Italy. I know it has been foolish that Italy should be so blind to the benefits they derive from the presence of the Pope at Rome. To look at the matter from the lowest commercial standpoint, think of the money and business it brings to Italy every year. The first person to suffer by the Pope's departure would be King Humbert. He would have to follow him instantly. What would then Italy do? I don't know, I don't care to forecast. Let us suppose as a consequence the introduction of universal suffrage in Italy—I say that even then universal suffrage would call back the Pope; for though people often forget it the great mass of the Italian nation is Catholic.

BISHOP LOUGHLIN WINS.

In the suit of the Lay Committee of St. Anthony's Church, Brooklyn, against Bishop Loughlin, to compel him to disclose what disposition has been made of the funds of the church in three years, during which the Bishop has retained the demurrer interposed by Gen. Roger A. Pryor in behalf of the Bishop, the decision of which representation of one thousand of the church members, asserting that the Bishop and his Vicar Loughlin, Father Murphy, and Vicar-General Keegan, to compel him to disclose what disposition the church and its income. Gen. Pryor demurred on the ground that the object of the statute under which the committee sought a remedy was to require ecclesiastical corporations to exhibit the amount of their income for no other purpose than that the State, if need be, might interpose to check their aggrandisement.

REV. HUGH P. GALLAGHER.
BORN IN 1815. DIED MARCH 10, 1882.

A Specimen Irish Landlord.

Redpath's Letter—No. 2.

A Vandal who Preyed upon Irish Virtue.

Terror-stricken People in the Presence of a Pampered Parasite.

A BAD END TO A BAD LIFE.

The following revelations regarding Lord Leitrim will give American readers some idea of the grinding tyranny to which tenantry and peasantry have laboured through landlord influence, and it will also open their eyes to a few of the reasons why Irish tenants live still in base instead of decent houses.

MY VISIT TO LEITRIM'S ESTATES.

A visitor to a part of the estates of Lord Leitrim and would have treated him with a cordial welcome by no he showed his tenants, when a broken arm arrested my investigations in Donegal and prevented me from making any further tour of that, before I was disabled, I had seen many men who knew Lord Leitrim, and I visited the spot where he was killed, driving the same jaunting car and sitting on the same seat on which he sat when he was freed at. I was drawn by the same horse that carried him to his mortal death. I had written, also, to a number of gentlemen who were familiar with his record, and thus secured information on the subject.

The little town near by the spot where Lord Leitrim was slain is inhabited by people every one of whom personally knew him. He has not a friend in the village, every one is glad he was shot. Even the citizens throughout the country who condemn the act are prompt to admit that it exerted

A SALUTARY INFLUENCE IN DONEGAL.

It was like the execution of King Charles the First—it ended one epoch of arbitrary power. Landlords in Donegal have not been quite so in provoking their tenants since they were thus taught that the peasants had power, if they chose to use it, as well as the British Government. This is a great fact that answers all arguments against the shooting of rural tyrants in Ireland—the moral effect on them, on their own neighborhoods, these shrines have always and everywhere modified the tyranny of their equivalents, and they do not forget that they exercised the influence for evil that it exercises abroad. No landlord has ever been killed or shot at in Ireland whose history was not a disgrace to human nature.

"WHY DID HE DIE?"

There are two theories as to the cause of the death of Lord Leitrim. The first theory attributes the act to his agrarian tyranny as a landlord. The second theory attributes it to his social infamy as a man. Whichever cause, even in both cases, it was a Irish peasant who fired the shot that he was killed for the wantonly despotic exercise of his power as a landlord.

Lord Leitrim owned 95,000 acres in Ireland, in the County Donegal, 41,376; in the County Leitrim, 23,026; in the County Galway, 18,145; in Kildare, 611. He had three country residences, one in Donegal, one in Galway, and one in Leitrim.

As long as he lived, and wherever he lived, he used his power as a landlord

TO STRIP THEM BARE.

From a religious point of view, the same act, of course, has the same moral value wherever it is done. But, from the point of view of social equity, the same act in different countries may have a very different degree of social culpability affixed to it. In some countries a moral lapse on the part of an unmarried woman is followed by no disastrous social results—that is, although she may lose equanimity and the teachings of the church and have committed the same sin against purity and her own soul, yet she is not thereupon utterly ruined. She does not become an "outcast" if she can retrieve herself and rarely fails to do so. Not so in Ireland. Chastity is the most characteristic trait of the Irish race. There is not in all the west of Ireland a notorious that unfortunate class, who "live by selling their desires." If a young girl yields to temptation, and it becomes known in the west of Ireland, she is instantly abandoned—she becomes, not in a moral sense only, or in a rhetorical sense only, but in fearful fact, an abandoned woman—an outcast.

THIS INSTITUTION, 1866, chartered in 1868, failure of the State of California has blocked to confer Collegiate Honors. The lions street, opposite the Old Mint, the was The course of instruction embraces branches necessary to the acquisition of a liberal and refined education.

The second term of the Sixteenth Academic Year will commence August 1st, 1882, and continue for 40 weeks. Students may be received at any time, and wherever the Spacious Irish girl has wandered, she is ever ready to pour forth her praise given by every traveller to the virtue of the Irish women as well deserved. Hence the greater culpability of the act which taking the power to ruin them, wield that power as Lord Leitrim wielded it.

Lord Leitrim's worst offence against women was committed in the County Leitrim. He brought RAIN TO SOME GIRLS TO RUIN THEM.

It is said of him that he tempted girls to visit him and sent them adrift—giving them just money enough to land in Liverpool or New York, thereby, of course, with a strong indifference on the part of the Liverpool and New York authorities, to a life of infamy. Whenever he saw a good looking girl among the families of his tenants, he would seen, through his influence, to have that woman—whether a Protestant or a Catholic—in his castles, if the proposal was accepted he was not long before she was an outcast. His housekeeper knew well her vile trade. Why do not more of his victims—the girls—allow their child to be thus imperilled they were seen evicted and, until within two years, were seen in New York, meant literally what Mr. Gladstone termed it, therefore, indeed, to be a common an evicter himself—"a sentence of starvation.

EVICTION AS A MEANS OF SEDUCTION.

As you drive out to the home of Lord Leitrim's death you see a couple of flat mills and a decent village about half a mile from this spot where he was slain. The tenants were evicted by Lord Leitrim. Why? She was a widow, and would not allow her daughter to become My Lord Leitrim's paramour.

Leitrim had another half-dozen women at his castle. They were said to be "strangers."

Leitrim died—dare to say that the reason on the refusal to allow her daughter to go to his castle. Well he was slain in Donegal and by a life of thrift and honest economy she had accumulated a fair property. She had a son, Leitrim, by Leitrim's father; but it contained as many exceptional traits as Mr. Gladstone's land bill, and therefore it was easy for the unscrupulous landlord to break it under the pretext that the tenant had violated some of its restrictive clauses.

"Do you see that little tree with the moss over the stump in the middle of the field?" asked the gentleman who accompanied me to the place where the management of his Donegal estates.

LORD LEITRIM WAS FORCED TO RESIGN FOREVER

"Now that tree had been growing apparently from one root and that one of them had been cut down. It was a mere sapling.

"Well," continued my companion, "after Mrs. —— expelled him," (I omit this lady's name as the Irish people are not ambitious of celebrity in connection with the fame of Lord Leitrim), he came along one day after Mrs. —— refused to let her daughter go to his house, and noticed that the other tree that grew on that stump had been cut down—although the stump had been covered with moss. He inquired who it was that did it, and when he was told that it was one of the lady's sons, Leitrim made an excuse for breaking the lease. And he evicted them.

The improvements on this farm had cost this lady about a hundred pounds, and she never received a shilling from this lordly landowner.

A TARA HILL EPISODE.

It would be wrong to suppose that this was an exceptional act of tyranny on the part of Lord Leitrim. I met two similar instances—one in Meath, near Tara's Hill, and the other at Kenmare, on the property of Lord Lansdowne and in the neighborhood of the wife in every County.

Let me mention one of these episodes, by way of parenthesis, to show that Lord Leitrim was the worst of his kind, or, rather, he was better more thoroughly, even an exceptional despot.

I was travelling from Tara's Hill with Rev. Canon Ulick Bourke, the learned Priest of Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

GRATTAN'S CENTENNIAL.

[Read at the Grattan Commemoration at St. Mary's Hall, Oakland, February 23rd, 1882.]

O Mother! stricken to the earth
O land of pains and tears!
Another century has passed
Of grief, of blood, of fears.
Oh fair land! cursed by flame, by sword,
By hate, by lawless power,
We meet to-night to honor him
Who raised thee from the dust.

A hundred years have passed away
A weary hundred years,
Since GRATTAN's voice in thunder tones
Spoke through the Volunteers—
And in that voice the tyrant heard
A hundred thousand men,
The voice of man with sword in hand,
God send that sight again!

For countless years her patriot sons
Had prayed and plead in vain;
The tyrant hand pressed heavier still
And tightened Erin's chain—
Until immortal GRATTAN rose
And dared the British hosts,
And showed unto the palsied King,
A hundred thousand swords.

Ah tyrant! then your coward heart
Gave way to craven fears,
And well you caused the lesson, taught
By Irish Volunteers—
The chain was broke, the gallant North
With South, East, West, made stand!
And Freedom's sun in splendor rose
Upon our own loved land.

Oh gaze a moment on this sight
Our fair land crowded so long,
Standing erect in Freedom's light
And chasing Freedom's song!
Oh glorious time! oh vision bright!
The wrongs of centuries o'er;
She stands amid her gallant sons,
"Great, glorious, free, one more."

Ah! the vision was too bright,
The hope was all too fair,
The Volunteers laid down their arms
Oh day of dark despair!
Can tongue or pen or skill tell the tale
Of blood, of crime, of hate,
Of fire and sword that swept the land,
In fatal ninety-eight.

Oh brothers! we whose kindred sleep
In martyrs' bloody grave,
Whose fathers knelt to worship God
By night in lonely cave—
In reverence we have gathered here,
To honor GRATTAN's name.
To praise and bless those noble hearts,
Shrined in the book of Fame.

Oh could they speak, those gallant ones
Whose fires were freely given
For liberty and native land
From their high place in Heaven,
Methinks these words would gladly ring
In solemn, sweet accord,
Oh mighty is a people's voice
Held for pasture God the sword!

Men of the League! the lesson heed—
The hard may soon be light,
The darkest night of peoples pleas
Or speak with burning fire,
Not them, not them, will pale the sod—
To which our hearts are given,
By rifle sent and bullet speech
Shall Ireland's chain be riven.

KATE E. QUIRLAN, Oakland, Cal.

Literary Miscellany.

WILLIE'S STORY OF THE GLEN.

CHAPTER I.

In the grave-yard adjoining a Catholic chapel that stood in a remote part of the north of Ireland, there knelt, one evening, an old woman engaged in prayer, beside the tomb of a departed friend.

The chapel was of aged appearance; and were the small stone crosses on one end of the roof, it had nothing of exterior ornament. Yet there was nothing wanting, even to the simple edifice, the romantic character arising from the taste always displayed in the choice of a situation for their chapels by the members of the Roman Catholic Church. The spot was wild, but beautiful even in wildness; and the healthy hills by which it was surrounded gave it an air of solitary sadness that accorded well with the feelings of the old woman before mentioned.

It had been one of those lovely days in the early part of the year, which seem given us by Nature as a foretaste of approaching summer. A warm and sunny afternoon was succeeded by the stillness of evening, and all around was calm and peaceful. The road, or rather pathway, by which she came thither, lay through a barren tract of bog and heath; but these had long been familiar to Nelly's partial eye, and they were to her more and dearer than the finest garden of fairy-land, which she had heard of in the legends of her country.

Her prayers were frequently interrupted by sobs of anguish, whilst tears rolled heavily down her cheeks; and long and deep shadows had fallen on the grass ere she arose from the cold ground. She chapped her hands as she was about to turn away, and those words burst from her lips: "I have seen her grave for the last time! I have taken my last farewell! We were constant to each other while we lived—now, she is no more; but she sleeps quietly in her grave, and the grass of her dear country is green above her head; but her sister must away over the sea, and lay herself down in the land of the stranger."

Her tears again flowed faster than before, and she seemed to be riveted to the spot, when a soft voice at her side was heard to say—"Oh, aunt! it's time you were leaving this place; the night falls fast; and I have stayed long beside you at my mother's grave, without your heeding me. Come let us go home, for my uncle will be frightened by our long stay."

"Home! did you say, child! Where is now our home! Where will it be in a few days hence! On the rude billows of the sea—and our house will be left desolate."

But, aunt, we shall not be desolate while we are together, and while there is One above us, who will watch over and guard us in all our doings. And though our way may appear dark and comfortless, He can drive away the clouds of darkness, and bring the light of a new morning."

Her words fell soothingly on the ear of her companion, who became calmer; and throwing her arms around her niece, she said, "Praised be His holy name! He can and will sustain us!" And you, my child, are the chief comfort he has left us; and you will not forsake your poor aunt Nelly!"

"No aunt, I will not forsake you. I will go where you go, and work for you while I have health and strength; and all would be too little to repay the care you have taken of me since my childhood, when I was first left an orphan in your charge." As she spoke, tears, before restrained, burst from her eyes; but hastily dashing them away, she took her aunt's arm, and led the way from the chapel-yard.

They had far to walk, and night fell so much faster than usual, that, long before they reached a poor cottage, which was at any distance, they had crossed a part of the heath, when suddenly they were startled by the figure of a man coming near—receding, then advancing again, and apparently watching their steps. Terrified by the approach of an unknown person in such a manner, and still more alarmed when they thought on the lateness of the hour, and the increasing darkness, they clung closer together, and lingered a few moments in the hope that the stranger—lest he still hovered near, and they did not regain courage enough to venture on the attempt—should take a turn in the pathway had led them some distance from the object of their fears. They now quickened their pace, and were proceeding mindfully, when, on rounding a hillock which intercepted their way, the same person stood within a few rods of their path.

"Holy Virgin!" exclaimed the old woman; when instantly the object of her terror bounded forward, exclaiming, "Sure it's only me, Nelly; don't be frightened!"

"Weary on you, Connor Connellan! is it you that come here to scare us out of our wits!"

"Yes, Nelly; I knew you would be late coming home, and I thought I'd just watch that nothing came across you; so I wandered about, hoping you would not come in the dark, and thinking I would still be near, without your being the wiser for Kathleen's grown so proud, she'll scarce speak to me, now that she is going from the Glen. But come, Kathleen," he continued, seizing her not unwilling hand, and pressing it within his; "we'll have this one more walk together." Then, grasping Nelly's arm with the other hand, he guided them cautiously and safely over bog and heather, till they gained the high road, crossed it, and reached a lane leading to their dwelling. They were met here by Dermid, the husband of Nelly.

"You are very late," he said; "and I was going in search of you; but Connor told me he would watch to see you get safe home, so I stayed to boil the potatoes for supper. Come in, Connor, you will not refuse to take a morsel with us, when it may be the last time."

They entered the house, which had a most comfortless appearance, being nearly devoid of furniture; yet there was a fire on the hearth, the steam from the potatoes arose in front of it, and a milk can stood on a piece of wood raised at either end to serve as a table.

The cottage inhabited by Dermid and Nelly stood in the lower extremity of a wooden glen, such as is to be seen frequently on the banks of a mountain rivulet in the North of Ireland. It was a highly picturesque spot. Near it stood a fan mill, the property of Dermid; and that he possessed in addition being a piece of ground denominated a garden, for potatoes, and a field for pasture. Here, however, he had lived in comparative happiness. His wants were few, and he had few cares. For many years, when not laboring on his ground, he had found constant employment at the mill; but of late it had gone out of repair, and Dermid was growing old and unable for hard work. The late proprietor of the estate on which he lived had died some years before, leaving his son, an absentee, in possession of the property, which he placed under the management of an agent, a stranger to the place, who cared only for collecting the rents, and was regardless of the circumstances or feelings of his tenantry, his character, and to whom he had looked forward as the stay of his declining years, suddenly conceived the desire of enlisting in the army. It was said that he was moved to this by grief, because he was disappointed in love. His father and mother did everything in their power to dissuade him from his purpose, but he was inexorable. All his sayings, he said, should be there; and he kept his promise as far as was in his power; and by means of his savings transmitted regularly to them, he enabled them to live free from any difficulties in the payment of their rent; until, in an evil hour, his employment was ordered to the West Indies. No letter or remittance came from him for the space of a long year, and then tidings came that he had died a victim to the climate.

The pride and hope of his parents thus taken from them, they were inconsolable. Pressed for their rent, they had not the wherewithal to pay it. Dermid would have parted with his hill and the field adjoining it; and a neighbor would gladly have given him an equivalent for them, which would have enabled him to pay his landlord, and to retain possession of the cottage and garden; but he was told that permission to divide his property could not be granted. Report said that the agent wished to build a shooting-lodge, and that he did not choose to look out upon the hovels of the peasantry.

Whatever truth might be in the latter statement, certain it was that an offer had been made to Dermid of having his passage paid, as well as that of his family, to America, provided they choose to accept it, rather than to be driven to destitution, or to the necessity of spending the remainder of their days in one of the workhouses erected throughout the country.

It was a sad alternative, but what could they do! Their chief support, for some time past, had been derived from the operations of Kathleen, who had labored hard at her needle, yet could not gain a sufficiency for their livelihood, independent of any of the comforts which advanced years, or a time of sickness might require.

Kathleen was justly esteemed the beauty and pride of Glenard. Her mother, who died on giving her birth, had entrusted her child to the care of her sister Nelly, by whom she had been nurtured with all a mother's tenderness; and when the father of Kathleen was also taken from her before she had arrived at womanhood, she found a welcome in the home of Dermid, and was by him and Nelly instructed in the little stock of useful practical knowledge befitting her station. She returned the kindness bestowed on her with the warm affection of a daughter.

Dermid had a brother living in New York, who in his letters gave a favorable account of the emigrants to that city. He had often pressed Dermid to follow him there, and had promised to befriend him as much as lay in his power, should he ever think of making the New World his adopted country. Kathleen's work, he said, would readily procure for her a livelihood; and his brother and Nelly should have a home at his house until they could procure some occupation suited to their declining years.

"Never could I leave my own country," said Dermid, "as long as I had a house over my head. And so it would be still, if my old landlord had lived, for I had his word for it, and he was aye good to the tenants; but it's worse than useless fighting with power, when you have only poverty on your side. And sure it's better to die of want in a strange land, than among your own people; not to say how your life may be taken from you in one of those poor houses, where I am told we are all to be shut up. If I could get work, I am strong and hale yet, though I'm not young. They say there is employment for us all in America; and I could keep you out of want there, Nelly; and Kathleen would be a help and comfort to us both."

Bitter was the grief of Nelly when she found her husband's decision was made. "Was it not trouble enough," she said, "to have their bit of shelter taken from them, and to be turned out of the Glen—that beloved spot where she had passed so many years—but must they be driven in their old days, to a foreign land, there to live, and there to die, amongst strangers—if they ever lived to cross the sea! And if Dermid would wait yet awhile till the young lord, her own foster-son, was come home, he would surely befriend them, and give to them their rights."

But there had been no tidings of the young nobleman's return, and years might pass away before he should revisit his paternal property. The estate of Lord Glen and suffered from the twofold miseries of an absentee landlord and a non-resident agent. The visits of a latter, who sojourned in a distant town, were made once in six months, and then he came merely to receive the rents, not to inquire into the wants or prosperity of the tenants. During these visits he stayed at the village inn, and all who came to wait on him were received with a bland countenance and affable manner; but he seldom went abroad among the people, and those who would not, or could not, bring their money on the appointed day, were aloof to the mercy of the bailiff. O'Reilly by name, a person exceedingly unpopular, not only on account of the office which he held, but more especially of his having on one occasion subjected himself to the odium which is attached throughout Ireland to the name of an informer.

Some years back, when the traffic in illicit distillation was carried on to a great an extent that the government found it necessary to have recourse to the most decisive measures for its suppression, a noted distiller, who had his residence in a mountainous district running between the denomination of Glenard, had long pursued his illegal practices; and had so often evaded the search of the officers of justice, that he had become a marked man, and at length a reward was offered for his discovery and capture. The task of making known his haunts, and of delivering up his person to the revenue officer of the district, was undertaken by O'Reilly for sake of the proffered reward. He pursued his plan of action with so much secrecy, that a party of soldiers had entered the glen unobserved—were guided warily along a defile, where was no human habitation, and, aided by a dim twilight of a November morning, that served to mark out their way whilst too faint to make a disclosure of their march to any but the nearest observer, they had commenced surrounding a hill beneath which lay the object of their search, before he had the slight[illegible] approach.

Just then, [illegible] country collected and promptly to his master, [illegible] impending[illegible] caught [illegible] soon [illegible]

FALLY AND [illegible]KIN

[illegible] Newan, the [illegible] of the mountain [illegible] ing his still, his cabin, and their contents, to the mercy of the enemy. Unnoticed by the latter, he was far in advance ere they discovered, by a diligent search throughout the hut, that its owner had fled.

O'Reilly now traced some footsteps on the grass, and still guided by him, the soldiers determined to pursue the delinquent. The cabin reports that an English Amazon is gone to Spain, for the purpose, to organize a guerilla band against the Austrians, though it may be doubted whether she will prove quite as successful as Pitt's notice and secretary, Lady Hester Stanhope, who ruled her little corner of Syria literally with sword and fire, and had her army of devoted soldiers with whom she could bid defiance to the Viceroy of Egypt. The Philadelphia Ledger recently announced the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Hatzier, at the age of ninety-two, leaving a large family of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. She was married to a sergeant of cavalry in the French service in 1810, and when her husband was ordered to Russia she determined to go also. Her hair was cut short and the female apparel changed for a soldier's uniform, and thus disguised she passed through the whole campaign, fighting by the side of her husband. She was present at all the principal battles and at the burning of Moscow. They were taken prisoners, but finally got back to France in safety, whence they came to the United States in 1846.

BOY LONG AND A WOMAN DIED

in the Medical College Hospital, Nashville, Tenn., who was said to have twice enlisted in the southern army during the war, and to have served some months each time before her sex was discovered. Her name was Rosetta Roberts, but she was more familiarly known as "Soldier Charlie." Another "woman of war" was published some little time ago, telling how Kate Hanson, of Tioga County, Pennsylvania, who had a reputation for masculine ways and was an expert rifle woman, disappeared from home not long before the war, and donning male attire, enlisted with one of a lake steamboat until the breaking out of the war, when she enlisted in an Ohio regiment, and rose to the rank of a captain. In 1861, her captain, James Hopkins, told her he had long suspected that she was a woman, and that she was so unexpected that she lost her self-possession and convicted herself by her reply. She begged the Captain not to reveal her secret but he took her before General Thomas, and made known the fact to him. Kate was at once sent back to the rear, and ordered to resume her proper attire. She became a nurse in the hospital, and was loved by her men for her Captain, who had been wounded in a skirmish. Between them an affection was formed. At the close of the war they were married, and after spending some years in Cuba returned to this country, well-to-do and happy.

DURING THE RECENT WAR BETWEEN CHILI AND PERU

a Chilian woman enlisted in a cavalry regiment, her sex being known, and rose to sergeant. Some three years ago it was discovered in Rome that a soldier named Mariotti, of the 11th Battalion of the Bersaglieri, who, though being confined to the room by illness, [illegible] on being formally carried to [illegible] was found to be a woman. She had served in Garibaldi's army, and had [illegible] ANDI [illegible] strong and worked [illegible] ing conferred upon her a decoration and sent her home with a pension of 600 a year. A great sensation was created in Paris, this week by the appearance in the ranks of the Communist army in 1871, at Paris. A writer in Notes and Queries (among others) Louise Hossaye de Hannes, who served from 1792 to 1795, and was at Quiberon; Angelique Brohon (who married for she was married), sous-lieutenant of the Grenadiers of the Guard, Legion of Honor, who was born in 1792, and died in the Invalides about 1859; Therese Figuer, who served as a dragoon for fourteen years, from 1798 to 1812, had

FOUR HORSES KILLED UNDER HER.

Died in 1861 at the age of eighty-seven, in the Hospice de Petit Menage, at Paris; Virginie Chesnieres, who served during the Peninsular War as a sergeant in the Twenty-seventh Regiment and died in 1873. Louise Seanagatti was a lieutenant of infantry in the Austrian or Sardinian army during the Napoleonic wars. Marietta Pillini and Herminia Maselli fought under Garibaldi in 1867; Herminia was at the battle of Custozza, and Pillini fought in the War of Liberation against the French as a subaltern in the Ninth Prussian Regiment, and was decorated with the Iron Cross and the Russian Order of St. George; she (after had connived at his escape) from Spandau in 1816, and in 1869 her grandson received a commission in his grandmother's regiment. Berthe Maria, who died in Paris about a year ago, left behind her in her hope of obtaining a large sum of money; and revenge rankled in his heart towards one who had so long neglected throughout the district, whilst he himself was hated and shunned.

The time at length came when he might, without fear of consequence, gratify his vindictive spirit. By means of his admissions in the management of a difficult business, he had gained the particular favor of the agent, who afterwards employed him, not only in his office of bailiff, but also as his counsellor with regard to each tenant on the estate. Dermid's farm was soon brought under the agent's consideration; and his non-payment of rent was urged as a decided reason for his dismissal. The idea was added the likelihood that he and his family might, at no distant period, become inmates of the workhouse, and thus be a burden on the property. A notice was therefore sent to him, signifying that he must leave the house on or before the first of May; and to make the matter more sure, Mr. Telifer himself came up one morning to the Glen—an event of rare occurrence, and made Dermid the offer of a free passage to the United States.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits

Conferred upon the tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is composed of the best vegetable alteratives, with the Iodide of Potassium and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly powerful and certain in its remedial effects, it produces rapid and complete cures of Scrofula, Sore Boils, Humors, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders rising from impurity of the blood. By its increasing efforts it always relieves and often cures Liver Complaints, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, and is a potent reviver of vitality. For purifying the blood it has no equal. It tones up the system, restores and preserves the health, and imparts vigor and energy. For body vigor it has been in extensive use, and is to-day the most available medicine for the sufferings of humanity.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

READ! READ! READ!

The History of Sharboro & Co's Grocery Firm, the Pioneers of the Business in San Francisco.

At the end of this article will be found the business card of Messrs. Sharboro & Co., grocers, No. 531 Washington street. The firm is one of the oldest and most respectable in the city, having occupied their present premises over twenty years, and built up their immense business by scrupulous integrity and fair dealing with their customers. There is several obvious reasons why this old and popular firm can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply one of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore impact and purchase in such large quantities that they can defy competition from having no business profits to pay other importers. In the next place BEING ON WASHINGTON STREET are at least one-half less than in the more central parts of the city, which gives them a great advantage in competing for public patronage. But the great cause of their success is HIS HONESTY AND FAIRNESS—THE GREAT ATTENTION TO THE CORRECTNESS OF THEIR WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, AND THE PROMPTNESS WITH WHICH ORDERS ARE SUPPLIED TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY. Years of experience confirms the confidence of the public in the excellence of their goods, which after all is the great secret of success in any business. THEIR TEAS always come direct from the place of exportation, and are put up through any other hands on reaching them; THEIR SUGARS are always sold at refinery prices; THEIR BUTTER AND CHEESE come from the first dairies in the State; and THEIR FLOUR is selected with the greatest care and prudence. We speak thus particularly in the praise of

MESSRS. SHARBORO & CO.,

because we have known them for twenty years as business men, and we feel proud the MONITOR ranks them among its patrons. Below will be found the price current list of this distinguished firm for March, and it will be found worthy the attention of the many dealers who read the MONITOR. In consequence of the rush we have secured a good-house, in which I slept, and two schooldays free for the pace, and the other quite as comfortable. I had breakfast last morning and was shown throughout the establishment, which is very extensive, including a newspaper already always endeavor to assist its readers where to get the necessaries of life cheapest. The lowness of route spokes of in connection with Sharboro & Co. also gives the old Washington, San Francisco and Clay street Markets below, in the same block, and explains the reason why we find all articles sold there so much cheaper than elsewhere. These markets are known to all our readers as the best markets in the city, and therefore we do not intend to mention them, but simply refer to the superior quality of their meats, fruits and vegetables, when parties have laid in their supplies of GROCERIES AT SHARBORO & CO'S.

SHARBORO & CO'S. PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR MARCH, 1882.

SUGARS. REDUCED.

Cube	12½ lbs
A Crushed	12½ lbs
Pulverized	12½ lbs
Extra C	14 lbs
Golden D	15 lbs
Extra No. 1	16 lbs
Extra No. 2	17 lbs
New Orleans Whole	12½ lbs

COFFEE.

Costa Rica Coffee, 30 lbs	17½ c
Costa Rica Coffee, 30 lbs	17½ c
Fresh Roasted Coffee, lb	25 c
Fresh Roasted Coffee, lb	25 c

TEAS. NEW CROP JUST ARRIVED.

Black Oolong Tea (choice), lb	75 c
Black Oolong Tea (choice), lb	75 c
Mixed Green and Black Tea, lb	75, 85, 100 c
Mixed Green and Black Tea, lb	75, 85, 100 c
Green Young Hyson Tea, lb	75 c
Green Young Hyson Tea, lb	75 c

CANNED GOODS.

Tomatoes, 2 lbs	10 c
Tomatoes, 3 lbs	15 c
Assorted Pie Fruit, lb	15 c
Assorted Pie Fruit, lb	15 c
Green Gages, lb	15 c
Green Gages, lb	15 c

EXTRACTS.

Assorted Flavoring Extracts, lb	15 c

MISCELLANEOUS.

Tea Saucers, lb	10 c
Soap, lb	10 c
Soap, lb	10 c
Spices (grounds), lb box	15 c
Spices (grounds), lb box	15 c
Yeast Powder, lb	25 c
Yeast Powder, lb	25 c
Starch, lb	10 c
Starch, lb	10 c
Starch, lb	10 c
Tapioca, 10 lbs	1 00
Tapioca, 10 lbs	1 00

PROVISIONS.

Hams, lb	13 c
Hams, lb	13 c
Butter, lb	30 c
Butter, lb	30 c

FISH.

Dungeon Mackerel, 8 lbs	50
Mackerel, extra, kit	65
Codfish, lb	8
Codfish, lb	8

CANDLES.

Adamantine Candles, lb	20 c
Wax Candles, lb	25

COCOA AND CHOCOLATE.

Cocoa and Chocolate, lb	75 c

FRUITS.

French Prunes, lb	18
German Prunes, lb	15
Raisins, lb box	10
Raisins, large, lb box	10
Raisins, lb box	10
Raisins, lb box	10
Walnuts, lb	20
Walnuts, lb	20
Almonds, lb	20

PICKLES.

Worcestershire Sauce, lb bottle	75 c
Pickles, lb qt	10 c
Pickles, lb	10 c

MEAL.

Meal of all kinds, lb	5 c

FLOUR.

Having laid in a large supply of Flour before the recent rise we can furnish our customers with First Class Flour at the lowest market price.

N. B.—The MANAGER of our house having TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' EXPERIENCE in the grocery business in this city, and being an expert in buying large stocks of goods, is a guarantee that under his management we are able to sell first class GROCERIES CHEAPER than any other house on this Coast. Examine our goods and prices before purchasing our goods, and judge for yourself. Economy is the result of trading with us. Wealth is the result of economy. Country orders promptly and carefully filled.

B. SBARBORO, Manager.

Our Young Folks.

A TRUE STORY.

What Our Lord Did for a Child Who had Fallen.

Our Lord describes those who are of the kingdom of heaven as being like children. And could we by His grace attain to the faith and simplicity of childhood, what answers to prayer should we not receive, what miraculous conversions should we not obtain! The faith that removes mountains is the faith of an obedient heart. Would to God we had more of it!

Not long ago a Protestant gentleman who had lost his wife, and had a little girl, brought his child to a convent, requesting the nuns to undertake her education and bring her up as a Catholic. He stated that he did not profess any religion himself, holding, in fact, the modern so-called philosophical views of positivism, agnosticism and such like. But he added that he really thought religion was a very useful thing for women, and that he considered the Catholic religion was peculiarly adapted to the weaker sex. Having paid the usual compliment, he went away, well satisfied with the manner in which he had disposed of his little daughter.

The nuns of course instructed the little child in all the doctrines of the faith. She might be then about six years old, and was an intelligent and docile little creature. Amongst other things, they used to have taught her about the Eucharistic Presence, telling her that our dear Lord was ever in the Tabernacle waiting to come into our hearts at the first chance of our receiving Him in our love. And so one day some office in the convent chapel, which the nuns and pupils and other children having withdrawn, the little one managed to linger behind and hide herself from observation. Finding herself alone, she succeeded in mounting a chair in front of the altar, and having climbed thereon, crouched down in front of the Tabernacle. Then gently lifting the curtain, she peeped into the place within. But no one answered, neither was the door opened to the eager little child. She then went put her head close to the door and said: "Are you there, dear Jesus? There was no reply to her first question, and she repeated it. "Dear Jesus, are you there?" Then came a voice which said: "I am here, my child. What do you want?" Now in terror, as from doubt, the little child replied, "I want my papa to be converted, dear Jesus, and I want it immediately."

She had hardly concluded her innocent petition when one of the nuns, entering the chapel, found her descending from the altar, and, of course, inquiries were made as to what she had been about.

The next day but one, the Mother Superior received a letter from the child's father, stating that he was a large client of the above occurrence, and stating that he had been walking through a neighbor's field, when, suddenly, a most intense and vehement conversion arose in his mind that life was impossible to him without some faith, and also that the Catholic faith alone was the true one. He went immediately in search of a priest, and at the time of writing his letter was actually received into the Church.

Before such wonderful instances of what faith and confidence can obtain, we can but cry: "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief."

Carrying Bundles.

Have pity on the youth who is ashamed to be seen carrying a bundle. Such a youth will never climb the hill; he will never grow up to be honoured and respected by society. Let him alone, let him stay where he is, there are who have the failing. Do you remember the story of the young man who came down from the country to the town of Hampshire, and entered the great wholesale establishment of Messrs. Jaques and Ames—in Boston! He had money enough with which to purchase a certain quantity of goods, and was a young merchant, just commencing business and he would like to get as many more on credit, if they would trust him.

Mr. Lawrence shook his head. The young man could offer no security, and the old merchants did not consider it good policy to trust strangers, especially those so young and modest. The young man was probably do the same himself by one whom he did not know. "However, he added, I hope it will grow into your confidence one of these days."

Then he paid for the goods he had purchased; and when he had paid down the money he was asked where he would have them sent. "I will take them myself," he said.

"But the bundle is heavy," said the clerk.

And I am young and strong, answered the customer, and I will take it on my shoulder. I cannot earn half a dollar more easily or more honestly." And he had taken up the bundle, and the clerks had turned towards the door, when Mr. Lawrence came out from his office, where he had been a spectator of the scene, and called the youth back. "You can have all the goods you want, young man, if you take your own selection, and set your own time for payment. The young man who is so wrapped up in his books and writings, which he carefully locked against her, he may, I venture observes, "that he did not know his wife was fitting and fashioning for him a bonnet of the most beautiful American war, and is still in service.

FEMALE SOLDIERS.

Women who have Borne the Musket, their Sex Being Unsuspected.

The cable reports that an English Amazon is gone to Spain, for the purpose, to organize a guerilla band against the Austrians, though it may be doubted whether she will prove quite as successful as Pitt's notice and secretary, Lady Hester Stanhope, who ruled her little corner of Syria literally with sword and fire, and had her army of devoted soldiers with whom she could bid defiance to the Viceroy of Egypt. The Philadelphia Ledger recently announced the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Hatzier, at the age of ninety-two, leaving a large family of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. She was married to a sergeant of cavalry in the French service in 1810, and when her husband was ordered to Russia she determined to go also. Her hair was cut short and the female apparel changed for a soldier's uniform, and thus disguised she passed through the whole campaign, fighting by the side of her husband. She was present at all the principal battles and at the burning of Moscow. They were taken prisoners, but finally got back to France in safety, whence they came to the United States in 1846.

BOY LONG AND A WOMAN DIED

in the Medical College Hospital, Nashville, Tenn., who was said to have twice enlisted in the southern army during the war, and to have served some months each time before her sex was discovered. Her name was Rosetta Roberts, but she was more familiarly known as "Soldier Charlie." Another "woman of war" was published some little time ago, telling how Kate Hanson, of Tioga County, Pennsylvania, who had a reputation for masculine ways and was an expert rifle woman, disappeared from home not long before the war, and donning male attire, enlisted with one of a lake steamboat until the breaking out of the war, when she enlisted in an Ohio regiment, and rose to the rank of a captain. In 1861, her captain, James Hopkins, told her he had long suspected that she was a woman, and that she was so unexpected that she lost her self-possession and convicted herself by her reply. She begged the Captain not to reveal her secret but he took her before General Thomas, and made known the fact to him. Kate was at once sent back to the rear, and ordered to resume her proper attire. She became a nurse in the hospital, and was loved by her men for her Captain, who had been wounded in a skirmish. Between them an affection was formed. At the close of the war they were married, and after spending some years in Cuba returned to this country, well-to-do and happy.

DURING THE RECENT WAR BETWEEN CHILI AND PERU

a Chilian woman enlisted in a cavalry regiment, her sex being known, and rose to sergeant. Some three years ago it was discovered in Rome that a soldier named Mariotti, of the 11th Battalion of the Bersaglieri, who, though being confined to the room by illness, [illegible] on being formally carried to [illegible] was found to be a woman. She had served in Garibaldi's army, and had [illegible] ANDI [illegible] strong and worked [illegible] ing conferred upon her a decoration and sent her home with a pension of 600 a year. A great sensation was created in Paris, this week by the appearance in the ranks of the Communist army in 1871, at Paris. A writer in Notes and Queries (among others) Louise Hossaye de Hannes, served from 1792 to 1795, and was at Quiberon; Angelique Brohon (who married for she was married), sous-lieutenant of the Grenadiers of the Guard, Legion of Honor, who was born in 1792, and died in the Invalides about 1859; Therese Figuer, who served as a dragoon for fourteen years, from 1798 to 1812, had

FOUR HORSES KILLED UNDER HER.

Died in 1861 at the age of eighty-seven, in the Hospice de Petit Menage, at Paris; Virginie Chesnieres, who served during the Peninsular War as a sergeant in the Twenty-seventh Regiment and died in 1873. Louise Seanagatti was a lieutenant of infantry in the Austrian or Sardinian army during the Napoleonic wars. Marietta Pillini and Hermina Maselli fought under Garibaldi in 1867; Herminia was at the battle of Custozza, and Pillini fought in the War of Liberation against the French as a subaltern in the Ninth Prussian Regiment, and was decorated with the Iron Cross and the Russian Order of St. George; she (after had connived at his escape) from Spandau in 1816, and in 1869 her grandson received a commission in his grandmother's regiment.

Berthe Maria, who died in Paris about a year ago, left behind her in her hope of obtaining a large sum of money; and revenge rankled in his heart towards one who had so long neglected throughout the district, whilst he himself was hated and shunned.

The time at length came when he might, without fear of consequence, gratify his vindictive spirit. By means of his admissions in the management of a difficult business, he had gained the particular favor of the agent, who afterwards employed him, not only in his office of bailiff, but also as his counsellor with regard to each tenant on the estate. Dermid's farm was soon brought under the agent's consideration; and his non-payment of rent was urged as a decided reason for his dismissal. The idea was added the likelihood that he and his family might, at no distant period, become inmates of the workhouse, and thus be a burden on the property. A notice was therefore sent to him, signifying that he must leave the house on or before the first of May; and to make the matter more sure, Mr. Telifer himself came up one morning to the Glen—an event of rare occurrence, and made Dermid the offer of a free passage to the United States.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

Treatment of Women.

In an old dusty treatise upon Family Medicine published in London, in the year of grace 1682, we find the following quaint and sensible remarks upon the treatment of women, it is well known, figured in the ranks of the Communist army in 1871, at Paris. A writer in Notes and Queries (among others) Louise Hossaye de Hannes, served from 1792 to 1795, and was at Quiberon; Angelique Brohon (who married for she was married), sous-lieutenant of the Grenadiers of the Guard, Legion of Honor, who was born in 1792, and died in the Invalides about 1859; Therese Figuer, who served as a dragoon for fourteen years, from 1798 to 1812, had

FOUR HORSES KILLED UNDER HER.

Died in 1861 at the age of eighty-seven, in the Hospice de Petit Menage, at Paris; Virginie Chesnieres, who served during the Peninsular War as a sergeant in the Twenty-seventh Regiment and died in 1873. Louise Seanagatti was a lieutenant of infantry in the Austrian or Sardinian army during the Napoleonic wars. Marietta Pillini and Hermina Maselli fought under Garibaldi in 1867; Herminia was at the battle of Custozza, and Pillini fought in the War of Liberation against the French as a subaltern in the Ninth Prussian Regiment, and was decorated with the Iron Cross and the Russian Order of St. George; she (after had connived at his escape) from Spandau in 1816, and in 1869 her grandson received a commission in his grandmother's regiment.

Berthe Maria, who died in Paris about a year ago, left behind her in her hope of obtaining a large sum of money; and revenge rankled in his heart towards one who had so long neglected throughout the district, whilst he himself was hated and shunned.

The time at length came when he might, without fear of consequence, gratify his vindictive spirit. By means of his admissions in the management of a difficult business, he had gained the particular favor of the agent, who afterwards employed him, not only in his office of bailiff, but also as his counsellor with regard to each tenant on the estate. Dermid's farm was soon brought under the agent's consideration; and his non-payment of rent was urged as a decided reason for his dismissal. The idea was added the likelihood that he and his family might, at no distant period, become inmates of the workhouse, and thus be a burden on the property. A notice was therefore sent to him, signifying that he must leave the house on or before the first of May; and to make the matter more sure, Mr. Telifer himself came up one morning to the Glen—an event of rare occurrence, and made Dermid the offer of a free passage to the United States.

(CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.)

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits

Conferred upon the tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is composed of the best vegetable alteratives, with the Iodide of Potassium and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly powerful and certain in its remedial effects, it produces rapid and complete cures of Scrofula, Sore Boils, Humors, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders rising from impurity of the blood. By its increasing efforts it always relieves and often cures Liver Complaints, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, and is a potent reviver of vitality. For purifying the blood it has no equal. It tones up the system, restores and preserves the health, and imparts vigor and energy. For body vigor it has been in extensive use, and is to-day the most available medicine for the sufferings of humanity.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEWMAN & FREUD,

1025 & 1027 Stockton St.,

(Cor. Jackson.)

Importers and Dealers in all kinds of

COTTON & WOOLEN YARNS

Zephyrs, Canvasses,

BEADS, FLOSSES, CHENILLES,

And all materials used in art needle work and

KENSINGTON EMBROIDERY.

We also call public attention to our

Large and Well-selected Stock of

Corsets, Hosiery, Underwear

Handkerchiefs, Embroideries, Laces, Fans,

Etc., Etc., Etc.,

WHICH WE ARE OFFERING AT

CREATELY REDUCED PRICES.

NEWMAN & FREUD,

1025 & 1027 Stockton Street.

P. O. Box 1857. [illegible]

☞ All orders from the interior receive prompt attention. Packages sent on Application.

MRS. LYDIA E. PINKHAM, OF LYNN, MASS.,

Woman can Sympathize with Woman.

Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

Is a Positive Cure

for all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our female population and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and the consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It will dissolve and expel tumors from the uterus in early stage of its development. The tendency to cancerous humors is checked very speedily by its use.

It removes Dizziness, Faintness, destroyed all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Heada

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1882.

$500 Reward to Prove a Recent Calumny.

A Catholic who desires to keep progress with the current literature of the day must expect to meet with calumnies against the Church in almost every periodical among the promiscuous reading matter with which the world is deluged. From the passive daily journal to the ponderous quarterly Satan seems to have set his seal so that Christianity may be calumniated and the Church that represents it on earth held up to the scorn of the reading—but not reflecting—world. In by-gone days assaults were made upon the Sacraments and the dogmas of the Church, but these pillars of truth were so bravely defended that the enemy gave up assailing them and turned his attention to the Infallibility of the Pope and the Immaculate Conception. Here again the Catholic host was victorious and the vanquished foe driven back defeated. In latter days we meet the enemy on the educational question and on the scientific field, and here, it seems, the scene of the conflict between truth and error is to be carried on through future years. "The Scientists," as the modern manufacturers of new theories are called, have banned together in order to break down the barrier of truth which God has erected around His Church: they have appealed to man's fallible judgment in order to overturn the omnipotent and immutable laws of God. And, outside of the Catholic Church, they have made legions of perverts from Protestantism and turned them into embryo pagans—men who are too enlightened to yield adoration to a God in whose existence they have no faith whatever.

What the world calls "progress" in our time is the entire exclusion of religion from education, and also the entire exclusion of truth from the writings of those who advocate this theory. Calumny against the Church is not criminal so long as it contributes to crush Catholicity. This is no rash charge, as we have just laid down Harper's Magazine for the current month, having perused therein some of the most glaring falsehoods we ever read—outside of the Sacramento Record-Union. The particular article to which we allude is entitled "The New French Minister of Public Instruction," under which caption the reader would naturally expect to find a biographical sketch of Paul Bert, but this individual, in the present instance, is merely a stool-pigeon used by the writer in order to aid him in a vicious assault upon the Jesuits. The expulsion of the Order from France is not only justified, but the writer claims that such a course was made obligatory upon the French Government by reason of the nefarious teaching of that body, and Paul Bert, the infallible Minister of Public Instruction under the god-like Gambetta, is the Moses who will lead the blind Catholics of France out of both bondage and darkness into the freedom and light of the nineteenth century. How is it proposed to do this? By ridiculing religion out of the text-books of the day, and improving the head at the expense of the heart.

But it is with Paul Bert and Harper's Magazine, more than with any other detail, that we have to do in the present article, wherein is given what purports to be a literal translation of a portion of Father Gury's Compendium of Moral Theology, and which is introduced for the purpose of showing the venal nature of the teaching of the Jesuits. After quoting a number of supposed extracts from the work in question, the writer gives the following as from Gury:

"Question.—Is an extreme necessity, or almost extreme, whatever may be the cause of it, may one steal an object of great value, or a large sum, if one has need of it? Answer.—There are few opinions. The first says no; the second, more probable and more common, says yes, provided the rich person is not thereby reduced to equal destitution, and the poor man takes only what he needs."

Perhaps the most agreeable (but in all likelihood not the most acceptable) refutation we can give this pretended extract is to offer a prize of $500 to Paul Bert, to the writer of the article, or to Messrs. Harper & Bro., the publishers of the magazine, if they can produce a recognized edition of Gury's work with any such proposition therein! Gury is entirely of a different opinion, and even Tamburini, with all his laxity, does not countenance such a departure from correct morals. Yet there it is, quoted in Harper's Magazine, read by 50,000 people in America, and believed by a large majority of them to be a correct translation from a text-book used by the Jesuits.

It is thus such slanders against the Church are concentrated, focused and propagated. Almighty God says: "Thou shalt not steal." The Catholic Church, as His visible power on earth, reiterates "Thou shalt not steal." Every Jesuit in the world teaches the same command from the Decalogue, yet here we have a leading American literary monthly giving the lie to the Church of God and branding one of her purest and strictest Religious Orders with teaching a doctrine diametrically at variance with God, the Church, and common honesty! Why, even Satan might feel ashamed of such diabolical depravity.

It is very evident, therefore, that the enemies of God's Church never forget the iniquitous maxim bequeathed to them by the Jesuit calumniators of the past, and they repeat in these days the proverb of Calvin: "The Jesuits must be crushed by calumnies." Yet, although more than three hundred years have elapsed since this edict of Calvin's was promulgated, the Jesuit Order still exists, and calumny has failed to accomplish its hellish work. It is thus the providence of God overrules the machinations of the Evil One and truth triumphs over error.

The enemies of the Church, whenever they scrape the Jesuits for false teaching, seem to lose sight altogether of the incontrovertible fact that the Church permits no work on theology to be published without ecclesiastical sanction, and Gury's Compendium of Moral Theology, and the very edition from which the above garbled extract was taken, is said by the writer to have been issued from the presses of the Propaganda at Rome. This fact is presented to the reader in Harper's Magazine in order to give the color of truth to a glaring falsehood and to carry conviction to all doubting minds. Then the enrenomed and unscrupulous writer garbles the Latin of the original text, changes its meaning, injects into it, and parades it before the public as the pure text of a Jesuit theologian. This is what has been done in the present instance, and these are the tactics followed by every falsifier when he wishes to wound the Church of God by circulating calumnies against the Jesuits. Knowing this to be a well-fortified fact, we offer a prize of $500 to the parties interested if they can prove that Father Gury teaches the erroneous doctrine imputed to him in the foregoing extract.

The case of Paul Bert, the originator of the present calumny, brings to mind the Scriptural text addressed to a more notorious persecutor of the Christian Church than once heard a voice from heaven saying: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" Because it is not the Jesuits alone against whom Paul Bert levels his enmity, but against the Church of which they are a portion, and also against the Christian teaching of which they are the preceptors. If the Jesuits were banned never existed, the Gambettas and Berts of France would be just as persevering in their persecution of the Church of God, the glorious Order of Jesus notwithstanding their efforts to prove to the world how hypocritically giving the lie to the Church of God and branding one of her purest and strictest Religious Orders with teaching a doctrine diametrically at variance with God, the Church, and common honesty! Why, even Satan might feel ashamed of such diabolical depravity.

It is very evident, therefore, that the enemies of God's Church never forget the iniquitous maxim bequeathed to them by the Jesuit calumniators of the past, and they repeat in these days the proverb of Calvin: "The Jesuits must be crushed by calumnies." Yet, although more than three hundred years have elapsed since this edict of Calvin's was promulgated, the Jesuit Order still exists, and calumny has failed to accomplish its hellish work. It is thus the providence of God overrules the machinations of the Evil One and truth triumphs over error.

The enemies of the Church, whenever they scrape the Jesuits for false teaching, seem to lose sight altogether of the incontrovertible fact that the Church permits no work on theology to be published without ecclesiastical sanction, and Gury's Compendium of Moral Theology, and the very edition from which the above garbled extract was taken, is said by the writer to have been issued from the presses of the Propaganda at Rome. This fact is presented to the reader in Harper's Magazine in order to give the color of truth to a glaring falsehood and to carry conviction to all doubting minds. Then the enrenomed and unscrupulous writer garbles the Latin of the original text, changes its meaning, injects into it, and parades it before the public as the pure text of a Jesuit theologian. This is what has been done in the present instance, and these are the tactics followed by every falsifier when he wishes to wound the Church of God by circulating calumnies against the Jesuits. Knowing this to be a well-fortified fact, we offer a prize of $500 to the parties interested if they can prove that Father Gury teaches the erroneous doctrine imputed to him in the foregoing extract.

The case of Paul Bert, the originator of the present calumny, brings to mind the Scriptural text addressed to a more notorious persecutor of the Christian Church than once heard a voice from heaven saying: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" Because it is not the Jesuits alone against whom Paul Bert levels his enmity, but against the Church of which they are a portion, and also against the Christian teaching of which they are the preceptors. If the Jesuits were banned never existed, the Gambettas and Berts of France would be just as persevering in their persecution of the Church of God, the glorious Order of Jesus notwithstanding their efforts to prove to the world how hypocritically giving the lie to the Church of God and branding one of her purest and strictest Religious Orders with teaching a doctrine diametrically at variance with God, the Church, and common honesty! Why, even Satan might feel ashamed of such diabolical depravity.

It is very evident, therefore, that the enemies of God's Church never forget the iniquitous maxim bequeathed to them by the Jesuit calumniators of the past, and they repeat in these days the proverb of Calvin: "The Jesuits must be crushed by calumnies." Yet, although more than three hundred years have elapsed since this Inauguration of a New Work of Mercy.

On next Sunday, the feast of St. Joseph, Patron of the Universal Church, the corner-stone of the new Home for Old Ladies will be laid with appropriate ceremonies. His Grace Archbishop Alemany will officiate on the occasion and Rev. J. H. McNally will deliver an oration in the course of which he will fully explain the nature and object of this new enterprise on the part of the Sisters of Mercy. Governor Perkins has signified his intention of being present, and it is expected that a large number of prominent City and State officials will also participate in the good work which this institution is designed for. The site chosen for the proposed building is at the corner of Mission Avenue and Turk street, a short distance from Calvary cemetery, and persons desiring to be present can reach there by the Sutter or California cable line of cars. It is also probable that a number of civic societies will be present so as to add additional interest to the important occasion.

The labors of the Sisters of Mercy during the twenty-nine years of their sojourn in this city, is known to all who are conversant with the history of California. They have fed the hungry, clothed the naked, nursed the sick, nourished the orphan and shielded the Magdalen. To these corporal works of mercy they have devoted their lives and even human gratitude—if no higher motive could move the Christian heart—should prompt every citizen of San Francisco to lend his generous assistance in erecting their proposed new shelter for a class of aged and infirm women whose virtues entitle them to public sympathy. The Sisters of Mercy have many of this class under their sheltering wings at present, but applications have become so numerous that they find themselves compelled to erect more commodious quarters for the reception of all who claim their shelter. No question of creed or country intercepts between the Sisters and those they provide for in their old age. Protestant and Catholic are alike welcome, and we hope to see an immense concourse of citizens assembled to witness the ceremonies on Sunday next and also that a munificent contribution will be given in aid of this much-needed charity.

Collection for the Orphans Next Sunday.

The circular from Archbishop Alemany, read in all the churches last Sunday informed our readers that collections will be made in all the churches next Sunday in aid of the five hundred and twenty orphans at present in St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, San Rafael, under the charge of the orphan friend—Father James Crokin. It is only necessary to remind Catholics that our Blessed Redeemer has said that what we do for "one of these little ones" we do for Him, in order to induce the charitable to contribute liberally to this great work in advance are they urged to bear in mind that the orphans are entirely dependent on the generosity of the American Party began to be felt in its Eastern

Farm and Home.

Some Silly Women.

One of the most ridiculous, and at the same time one of the saddest sights in fashionable life is to see a woman, either married or single, upon whom the golden gate of blo ming womanhood has closed forever, displaying the unpardonable ill-taste of dressing like a school-girl of sweet sixteen. The modern fashion of wearing bright, intense shades, has given unusual scope to elderly ladies who still refuse to give up gay or trying colors, and the result has been that these ill-dressed women have appeared more than usually conspicuous in their incongruous attire. Our various watering-place resorts for a season of two past have shown many representatives of this class of people, who seem oblivious to the fact that the nearer they approximate to uniformity of color and quietness of tone in dress the better they appear. A case is recalled of a fashionable dame summering at Saratoga, the wife of a merchant prince, whose unlimited means enabled the lady to dress in the most expensive attire, but who, instead of choosing dark, elegant costumes, with their soft trimmings of black or cream-tinted laces, which would have greatly toned and added to the appearance of the unmistakably faded, but still sweet-looking face of the lady, invariably appeared in toilet colors and combinations, which, instead of enhancing and softening the poor countenance, brought out and intensified every defect and exaggerated every time-marked feature. Light blue, delicate green and pale pink were the colors almost invariably chosen for full dress occasions, and fichus, ribbons, breakfast caps and other adornments of these same bright shades were unfailingly chosen as toilet accessories, when dark dresses were occasionally worn. Sitting upon the wide piazza, in the full glare of the sun's searching rays, the delicate blue morning robe, with its accompanying mob cap of blue, trimmed with pearl white lace and pink roses, gave the sallow face of the lady a sickly yellow hue, which resembled nothing so much as the now fashionable shade of "old gold." A fine covering of face powder, evidently put on without the aid of eye-glasses, was fastened over her face, only giving additional grotesqueness to her general appearance. The lady was refined and educated, yet lacked the one thing needful in dress—good taste.

A Beautiful Mind.

Is like a precious and prolific seed—the mother of loveliness, the fountain of bliss, the produce of many treasured and inestimable flowers—no canker can deface nor time destroy. Even should there be those of its lovely produce that pass away, yet the source is there; the seed remains to revive, to remodify, to place again on our bosom and near our hearts in renewed beauty, in the same deep interest and winning power as at first. We would gather it as the richest possession, as the well-spring of the purest, most abundant, and enduring joys, as our support, our comfort, and the cherished object worthy of our highest admiration, and we could cling to it, thanking God that it is immortal—living for ever.

Let the Little Ones Laugh.

A child's mirth is easily aroused. How still is the house when the little ones are fast asleep and their pattering feet are silent! How easily the fun of a child bubbles forth! Take even those prematurely aged little ones bred in the gutter, cramped in unhealthy houses, and ill-used, it may be, by drunken parents, and you find the child nature is not all crushed out of them. They are children still, albeit they look so haggard and wan. Try to excite their mirthfulness, and see long a laugh rings out as they will. There is there will be about thing no sorrow in the world. Let the little ones laugh then—too soon, alas! they will find cause to weep. Do not try to silence them but let their giee fillion ring out a glad some peal, reminding us of the days when we, too, could laugh without a sigh.

Boiling Water in a Sheet of Paper.

Take a piece of paper and fold it up, as school-boys do, into a square box without a lid. Hang this to a walking stick by four threads, and support the stick upon hooks or other convenient props. Then a lamp or taper must be placed under this dainty caldron. In a few minutes the water will boil. The only fear is lest the threads should catch fire and let the water spill into the lamp and over the table. The flames must therefore not be too large. The paper does not burn, because it is wet; and even if it resisted the wet it still would not burn through, because the heat imparted to it on one side by flame would be very rapidly conducted away by the water on the other. Another experiment of a similar nature, but perhaps even more striking, is as follows. Twist up the edges of a common playing-card so as to fashion it into a light tray. On this tray place a layer of small shote or bits of lead, and heat it all over the flame of a lamp. The lead will melt, but the card will not burn. It may be charred a little round edges, but immediately below the lead it will not be burned, for heat again the lead conducts off the heat on one side as fast as it is supplied on the other.

An Æsthetic Cot Kicked.

They stood on the porch at midnight. "Ah, sweet mine," he sighed, "lilly of my soul, dewdrop of my happiness, let the intensity of our affection intensify to intenseness, and let us live to love, that loving we may live in the ethereal otherearthly of a passionless passion, purified to angelic refinement."

"Rather over, here mine," she answered, depositing her wealth of golden hair upon the shoulder of his six-dollar sister, "and our lives so sweetly perhaps, just now, will be joined in the superlative certainty of conjunctive bliss conjugated in happy wedlock."

"Dear heart of mine," he rapturously exclaimed, pressing her to his new satin necktie, "this is too too!"

"And this too, too!" abruptly broke in the girl's father, coming down in his boots, and giving the young man two kicks which landed him out in the street—and separation like a pall thenceforward fell upon those two young lives.

Hard Lumps in Breast.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I wrote you some time ago that I thought I had a cancer. There was a large lump in my breast as large as a walnut, and had been there four months. I commenced taking your "Golden Medical Discovery," "Favorite Prescription" and Pellets in June, and the lump is gone.

Yours gratefully, MRS. R. CLARK, Irvington, Mich.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the statements, as well as the power and value of the article of which they speak, we publish herewith the "facsimile" signature of persons whose sincerity is beyond question. The truth of these testimonials is absolute, not just the lie that by authority be legitimized.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., 1878 29, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for two years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves by intense pain in and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks discussed my kidneys to such an extent that great stones formed I passed stones ranging in size from the head of a pin to a good sized pea. When the stones passed from the kidneys into the bladder, I experienced intense pain, which would last for from two to three days, and then down in front and along the course of the ureter. The discharge of the stone was usually attended with scraping of the neck of the bladder. The pain was very severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning from time to time until the stone were discharged, at times, the pains were so severe that they amounted almost to convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which make kidney diseases a specialty, and they told me that I could never be cured. Learning through a friend the good effects resulting from the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney diseases, I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed no stones whatever, as you know which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

J. O. Lewis

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 21, 1881

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and loins. At times could scarcely urinate, and when I did, it was attended with severe pains and burning sensations. I was in doubt about commencing to take your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, as I had taken so much medicine without obtaining any relief, but finally concluded it would do me no harm to try it. I can cheerfully testify that nothing has given me so much relief. I believe it to be a thorough cure for kidney and bladder troubles.

C. B. Lillie
21st & Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My business that of telegraph—is one that often relieves and allays aggravation any affection of the kidneys I ever had. I suffered so much that I was obliged to lay off for some time. Hearing of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I never felt better in my life than at present. I can recommend the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affection.

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., March 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last ten years, and have used all the different media, you advertised for said disease, as well as the medicine prescribed by physicians, but nothing ever reached my case. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now perfectly well, and can cheerfully testify that it has done all you advertise it to do.

H. M. Van Winkle

AUBURN, Cal., April 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians but to no effect. I have used three bottles of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and feel it is my duty to let the world know. I suffered so much that I was obliged to lay off for some time. Hearing of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I never felt better in my life than at present. I can recommend the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affection.

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., March 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last ten years, and have used all the different media, you advertised for said disease, as well as the medicine prescribed by physicians, but nothing ever reached my case. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now perfectly well, and can cheerfully testify that it has done all you advertise it to do.

H. M. Van Winkle

AUBURN, Cal., April 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians but to no effect. I have used three bottles of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and feel it is my duty to let the world know. I suffered so much that I was obliged to lay off for some time. Hearing of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I never felt better in my life than at present. I can recommend the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affection.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials—many of them in cases where hope was abandoned—have been received by the proprietors, but space forbids the publication of more. Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in the cure of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any one who read this has any physical trouble remember the great danger of delay.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Eruptions, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weakness and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Exhaustion, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial.

It is doll to compare with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, called blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

610 CLAY STREET,

Opposite Clay Street Hotel, and a few doors above Montgomery street.

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Fare Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. m10-3m

OLIVER C. GILSON & CO.,

33½ O'Farrell Street,

(Near Stockton street, San Francisco.)

HAS A SEAT AND REPUTABLE EMPLOYMENT Office, managed by white men, who speak the language and are thoroughly acquainted with the city. Good help always on hand. Gentlemen can always find a pleasant, reliable place to obtain good help. Terms reasonable. Trustees and other business men can be accommodated with a private room. Stamps for return postage should accompany all orders. Address as above. f1-1y

DAWSON'S AMERICAN AGENCY

507 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Furnishes Male Help exclusively, by personal search through acquaintance and by advertising. No charge unless employed. Branch office for country trade, Dawson's Hotel, Marysville. Cal. Country dealers and others can be supplied with any class of help by addressing the office. Terms, $2 for single men, $3 for couples, and $5 for three or more. Country orders must have some reference as to character and ability. Refer to Bank of California, Wm. Sharon, Esq., Hon. John Conness, Hon. Thos. H. Selby, Hon. Geo. C. Perkins, Hon. Aaron Sargent, Hon. Eugene Casserly, Hon. Thos. Bishop, Hon. Jas. Phelan, Hon. Geo. Hearst, Hon. Jas. Lick, Hon. Chas. Crocker, Hon. Leland Stanford, Hon. Chas. Cadwalader, Hon. Jas. Ben Ali Haggin, Hon. Tiburcio Parrott, Hon. Jas. Anglo, Hon. Henry Miller, Hon. Isaac Friedlander, Hon. Alex. Weill, Hon. Lloyd Tevis, Hon. Jas. Alvord, Hon. Geo. Gordon, Hon. Jas. Otis, Hon. Geo. Pen Casse, Hon. Jas. Mc Cullough, Hon. Jas. Mc Cullough, Hon. Jas. Mc Cullough

Market Report.

MARKETED WEEKLY BY F. J. DAY, 305 AND 307 SANSOME STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE.
422 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, March 14, '82.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Business at the close of the week was more active in cereals, at lower prices for Spring Wheat and Barley being considerably weaker. The prospect, of good crops, caused by the late rains, has weakened the market. Receipts on Saturday were very heavy and included two large shipments to New York.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receivers prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Prime; for those that come up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@$5 62½; City Superfine, $4 75@$5; Interior brands, $4@$5 25 for extra, and $4 50@$4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 62½@$1 65; No. 2, $1 57½@$1 60 per cental.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 70@$1 90; Standard Chevalier, $1 80@$1 70; Feed, $1 60@$1 70 ⅌ ctl.

Oats—
Quotations are: Black, $1 72½@$1 77½; for common; and $1 77½@$1 82½ ⅌ ctl for goods to choice; Surprise, $1 80@$1 90 ⅌ ctl.

Corn—
Quotations are: $1 80@$1 85 for Yellow; White, $1 80@$2 00 ⅌ ctl.

Hay—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $15@$16; wild oats, $13@$14; volunteer and stalk, $9 50@$12; Alfalfa, $9 50@$11 ⅌ ton.

Rye—
Quotations are: $1 30@$2 50 ⅌ cental for choice.

Buckwheat—
Quotations are: $1 65@$1 75 ⅌ ctl.

Straw—
Quotations are: 62½@70c ⅌ bale.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 15½@16c; California, 13@13½c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@16c; Extra Clear Sides, 14½@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c ⅌ lb.
PORK—Extra Clear, ⅌ bbl, $24 50, do in half bbls, $12 50; Clear, ⅌ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12 00; Mess ⅌ bbl, $22@23; do half bbl, $11 50 @$12; Prime Mess, ⅌ bbl, $19@$19 50; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ⅌ bbl, $16@$16 50; Choice Fig, ⅌ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12; do 25 lb kegs, $3 25@$3 50.
BEEF—Mess Beef, ⅌ bbl, $10@$10 50; Extra Mess do, $10 50@$11; Mess Beef, half bbl, $5 50 @$6; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $6 25@$6 50; Family do, ⅌ bbl, $13@$13 50; Family do, half bbl, $6@$6 25.
LARD—Eastern Refined, tin 10c; do in fancy pails, 10½@10c; do in 10-lb tins, 12½; do in 5-lb tins, 13½; do in 20-lb wooden buckets, 12c; California, in tcs, 12½@12½c; half bbls, 14½@14½c; in 10-lb tins, 13½@13½c; 5-lb do 14@14½c; Royal Lard, in 10-lb pails, 15c; do in 5-lb do, 15½@15½c; Royal 3-lb pails, 15½c ⅌ lb.

Potatoes—
Quotations are: Early Rose, $2 12½@$2 25; Garnet Chili, $1 75@$1 90; River Red, $1 65@ $1 75; Peerless, $1 75@$1 87½; Dunning Peerless, $1 80@$2 00; Burbank Seedlings, $1 80@2 00; Cuffey Green, $2 12½@$2 25; Petalumas, $2 25@ $2 50; Power Blows, $2 20@$2 30; Brown, $2 25 @$2 75 ⅌ ctl.

Onions—
Quotations are: White, 75c@$1 00 ⅌ ctl.

Garlic—
Quotations are: 3½@5c ⅌ lb.

Beans—
Quotations are: Choice fresh red Butter, 3½@3½c; Fancy, $4 62½; Medium do, 2½@2½c; Fancy, $4 62½; Pickled, 2½@2½c; Eastern Butter, 1½@2c ⅌ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 17@18c; Eastern, 18@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 17@17½c ⅌ lb.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 13@15c; Dressed, 18@20c; Ducks, $6 00@7 00; Broilers, $7 00@8 00; Hens, $6 00@7 00; Young Roosters, $6 00@8 00; Old, $5 00@6 00 ⅌ dozen; Geese, $1 75@2 25 ⅌ pair; Pigeons, $2 00; Squabs, $3 00 ⅌ doz.

Eggs—
Quotable at 19@20c for choice; 18@21c for Medium California; Eastern do, 20c; Pickled, 16c—Salt Lake, —@—; Oregon, 22½@23c ⅌ doz.

Domestic Fruits—
Quotations are: California Oranges, $1 75@ $3 50 ⅌ box; California Lemons, $1 50@$4 00; Bananas, $6 00@7 00 ⅌ bunch; Messina Oranges, $1 50@$1 60 ⅌ hundred; Mexican Limes, $10 00@ $12 00; California Limes, 3@3½c ⅌ small box, and $3 00@$4 00 ⅌ large, do; Bananas, $2 50@$3 00 ⅌ bunch; Pine Apples, $6 00@$7 ⅌ dozen; Apples, $1 25@$2 25; Oregon, do, $1 75 ⅌ box; Pears, 75c@$1 00 ⅌ box; Cranberries, $13@$16 ⅌ bbl.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbages, 65@75c ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 1½@1½c ⅌ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@ $13 00 ⅌ ton; Cauliflowers, 75 ⅌ doz; Chile Peppers, dry, 7@8c ⅌ lb; Dry Okra, 20c ⅌ lb; Turnips, 50c ⅌ box; Carrots, 60c ⅌ box; Beets, 60c ⅌ box; Green Peas, 12½@15c ⅌ lb.

BUTTER MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, fresh; second do, 6½; third do, 5½@6c ⅌ lb.
VEAL—Dressed, 6@7c ⅌ lb for large, and 8@9c for small; 9c for choice.
MUTTON—Wethers, 7½@8c; Ewes, 6@6½c ⅌ lb.
LAMB—6@7c.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain-Fed, on the hoof, 6@6½c; dressed, 6½@7c ⅌ lb; Corn-Fed, do, 8@9c; Roasting Pigs, alive, $5 00@$5 50.

Tetter, Ringworm, Scald Head, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Blood Poisons, Mercurial Disease, Rheumatism, Syphilis, Sores, Blisters, Mercurial Pains, Diseases of the Bones, Joints and Skin, Nervous Prostration, Loss of Vitality, Impotence, Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes, Female Weakness, Leucorrhœa, Ulceration, Irregularities, Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Constipation, Piles, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Malaria, Fever and Ague, Consumption, Scrofula, Chronic Diarrhœa, Cholera, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum, Nausea, Vomiting, Cankers, Dysentery, Sick Headache, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, Nervous Irritability, Fever, Inflammation, Fever and Ague

Poetry.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

BY BISHOP ENGLAND.

When that has not wandered far
From where he first drew vital air,
Can tell a bar bright the visions are
That still surround his fancy there!
For it is sweet to round memory's throne,
When time and distance glide away,
To the scenes that long have flown,
And view them over on St. Patrick's Day.

Though distant from our native shore,
And bound by fortune's stern decree
To see our native land no more,
Still, Erin, we must think of thee.
Is there a heart of Irish mould
That does not warm the night away
That prompts the generous patriot soul
To celebrate St. Patrick's Day.

No nation since the dawn of time
Has sacrificed more lives than we,
Our blood has flown in every clime
That raised the shout of liberty!
But ah! will freedom never smile,
Nor shed one bright, one glorious ray,
To cheer our one loved native isle,
And raise our hopes on Patrick's Day.

Yes, Erin, rise they dropping brow,
And wreath it with the Shamrock green;
Go tell thy proud, thy haughty foe,
That divisions no longer reign queen.
Columbia's banner wave on high,
The eagle seizes on its prey;
Then, Erin, stop thy tearful eye,
And raise thy hopes on Patrick's Day.

The gallant sons have nobly bought
Columbia's gratitude for thee,
In freedom's cause they nobly fought,
And shed their blood for liberty.
Then, boys, fill high your glasses full,
Let your's be crushed as they may,
The toast we drink is England's fall,
And Ireland's joy next Patrick's Day.

Literary Miscellany.

Kathleen of the Glen.

AN IRISH STORY FOUNDED ON FACT.

CHAPTER II.

To stay was well nigh impossible, and when the first struggle was over, and their determination made, the family at the cottage took themselves to making preparations for their departure. Their slender store of household goods had been sold by auction on the morning of that day when they were first introduced to the reader; with the exception of a few necessary articles, which they meant to carry with them.

In all his exertions, Dermid found a ready help in Kathleen, who did everything in her power to assist her uncle, and to assuage the grief of her aunt; and yet, she herself, perhaps, was not the least sorrowful at heart of the party. She had long been loved by Connor Connellan, and his love had been returned with a fervour unknown even to herself, until the time came for them to part.

Best formed, and handsomest of the Gaels in and around Ballycastle, Connor had received from nature, in addition to these outward advantages, the far better gifts of a fine disposition, and a warm affectionate heart. His moral character was irreproachable, and his religious principles were well grounded. He had for many years held the situation of under-gardener at the Park; and was thus enabled to support himself and an aged mother, and also to furnish his house with such things as he considered necessary, before declaring openly his attachment to Kathleen, or asking the consent of her uncle or aunt to their marriage. But to a Scotch gardener had been brought over, who had undertaken the work, with the understanding that at Michaelmas he should be well-remembered spot. Not a tree was there, not a rock, not a bend of the stream, but recalls to her mind childhood's happy hours, when light-hearted as the bird on the thorn, she had bounded swiftly along the river's side, or climbed its banks in search of berries and wild flowers. Amid these loved haunts, happy days had passed in ignorance of the world, save that little circle which formed her own immediate neighbourhood. Here she had spent the happiest periods of her life; they were fled, and all beyond seemed vast and sorrowful. She had gained a steep precipitous path which led to the summit of the bank; she clambered to the top, and looked around on the whole extent of country that lay beneath. The very side she could discern the dwelling of some kind friend or young companion with whom it was grief to part. To the westward lay a wild extent of country, commonly called the Glen. It was inhabited by an uncultivated race of people; yet there were amongst them many kind hearts. Many there were who loved Kathleen for her truly estimable qualities, and some, too, who envied her for the simple graces of her person, because they won for her the admiration of those across the sea; but no one had ever ventured to speak of love to her, or to obtain. Nearer lay the priest's abode; and the view of its white walls, neat hedges, and clumps of evergreens, awakened the liveliest feelings of gratitude towards its inmate; gratitude for the truest and best blessing—that of instruction in her duties as a Christian. Downward still, the distant village smoke reminded her of her kind schoolmistress—of her favorite young companions, with whom she had spent hours that flew fast away whilst engaged in useful employment: there also stood the church, to which on the Sundays, she had repaired, to join in worship, and to learn the lessons of piety drawn from Holy Writ. Last of all, about half way between the village and where she stood, her eye rested on the cottage of old Hannah Connellan, the mother of Connor. Her heart sickened as she gazed at an abode, round which an air of peculiar neatness bespoke the taste of its inmate. She turned away her head, and breathing a prayer for all the friends from whom, at that hour, she seemed to have fled forever, she again descended the bank to the pathway.

Near her stood a moss-covered stone, on which she leaned to rest, and to recover from her varying emotions. She had plucked few primroses from the bank. "I wonder," she said, "if there are flowers as sweet, skies as blue, fields as green, as our own, in the land to which I am going! They may be so to others, but not to me, for here I leave behind me all that I have loved best on earth."

Just then the bushes were parted in front of where she sat, and Connor Connellan was by her side.

"I was looking for you at the cottage, Kathleen, and they told me you were not far off; so I thought you would be in this Glen. You'll not be angry with me, asthore, for going to see you on board the ship, and out of the Lough, if I can get a passage so far?"

"Surely not, Connor. I'll be glad of your company, and so will we all, if you can leave your mother, and can take the time from your work."

"My work is little worth now-a-days; and the neighbors have promised to take care of my mother till my return; so we'll be together as long as we can, Kathleen, for may be it's the last time we may meet in this world."

"And have you forgiven me, Connor, for all I said last night? And have you not thought me unkind or ungrateful?"

"Forgiven you! Arra, and not thought more kindly of you since; for all you say and all you do is good and right; and I never knew what to do myself."

"Stop Connor—it is not for mortal to listen to such praises, when I know how frail and sinful we all are, and how many times I myself have erred from the right way. But, in very truth, I know well that had I deserted my parents at this time, it would have gone near to break their hearts, especially my aunt Nelly's—near as it was being broken before, when Maurice went abroad. And no wonder, for Maurice was good, and kind and thoughtful.

Connellan turned quickly aside; his eyes flashed, and his cheek glowed. Then again looking steadily in her face, he said—"They say you and Maurice were fond of one another; and if there could have been a dispensation got, he would have had you away with him.

"And is it for you, Connor Connellan, to be jealous of the dead! No, surely, though he liked me well, I never had a thought of him beyond what a sister feels for her only brother. But my duty to his father and mother is second only to that which I owe to my heavenly Father, and with them I must my lot be cast, until I find it testimony longer need my assistance. The time I come back to dear Ireland—then may I revisit these peaceful happy scenes; and perhaps—but Connor, I—and I forgive, and constant as when I left him!"

"True and constant he will be to you, dearest Kathleen, while the sun shines above his head, or the life-blood warms his heart."

He took from her hand the nosegay of primroses which she had gathered; and placed in it the following verses, which she, her, he said, of him and of the Glen when she should be far away on the sea:—

"To a Kathleen."

"These lines, though rudely traced, shall be
Memorials of my love to thee,
Thou art as pure as yonder stream
And then hast lift thy native shore;
Dearest! amid foreign climes to roam,
Far distant from thy mountain home.
The Glen, where many a wild flower grew,
The violet, like thine eyes of blue;
Sweet as thy breath, the heath bell there
Perfumes the early morning air;
While sights long dreaming shadows mark
They raven hair, profuse and dark.
And all that's sweet, and soft, and true—
Speaks my wilder'd heart of you.

The next day the poor exiles bade a sad and long adieu to their beloved Glen. The grief of Dermid, long suppressed, broke forth with resistless violence, as he looked for the last time on the cottage, and the piece of ground he had called his own. He had no longer home;—he could now look upon himself only as a homeless wanderer. Nelly, on the contrary became more calm at sight of her husband's unwonted burst of feeling.

Kathleen endeavored to sustain and comfort both; and was herself supported by Connellan, who accompanied them on their route to Londonderry; and having obtained a passage on board the vessel, sailed with them down the river, and to the entrance of Lough Foyle. Here they were detained some days waiting for the tide to carry them out to sea; and here he still lingered, unable to part from his friends, until the captain of the vessel gave the hint to some of them put

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22, 1882.

IRISH VIRTUE AND VALOR VINDICATED.

A Reply to "Irish Pretensions in Ireland and America."

FIRST ARTICLE.

An article has recently appeared in a local journal noted for its Knownothing bigotry, in which an effort has been made to cover with ignominy the glorious fame which the Irish race has won for itself on American soil, and, as we never permit a serpent to sting either our breed or our native country without stamping out the reptile with our heel, so we mean to place the iron heel of truth upon every utterance of the falsifying sheet in question, and thus sketch the serpent that seeks to inject its poison into the pages of American history.

The first paragraph in this tissue of falsehood is in keeping with the tone of the whole disreputable slander upon the name and fame of the Irish race. The scorpion who thus belittles the Irish character and its career of glory, thus initiates his venomous spleen:

"The Land League rebellion in Ireland is culminating and collapsing. Like all Irish uprisings, it has been a wordy, money-getting campaign, with much of the money coming from the Irish working class of America.

We will not use any language of our own to convict this falsifying calumniator of the untruth of his statement, but let his assertion be annihilated by Mr. Sexton, an Irish member of Parliament, who thus spoke of the Land League in a speech recently delivered in the House of Commons.

"The Hon. member for Cork had said: 'The spirit which had been raised in Ireland could never die.' For his own part, he hoped self believed it never would die. He was glad to say that in the House of Commons, and he should be ready to say it as soon as he returned to Ireland. The spirit which had been raised in Ireland was a spirit which, for the full development and furtherance of the object it sought, needed no concern with treason or treasonable practices (hear). Mr. Sexton then proceeded to say that the Land Act was a failure, and concluded as follows: The Chief Secretary of Ireland had arrested and thrown into jail hundreds of the most respectable men in Ireland. Any one in Ireland who was honored by the warrant of the right Hon. gentleman immediately became an object of the love and the devotion of the people (hear). If a farmer was sent to Kilmainham he became a Poor Law Guardian before he came out (hear) and a laugh), or probably the chairman of the Local Board of Guardians. If a common business man went to Kilmainham he was made mayor (a laugh). His Hon. friend, the member for Wexford, described the right Hon. gentleman as a lady killer, but the right Hon. gentleman had not beaten the women; the women had beaten the right Hon gentleman (hear). The Land League was nominally suppressed, but the rules of the Land League were in the memory of the people, and its doctrine in their hearts. The moral force of that organization continued for two years extended all over Ireland, and it was to the combined of that moral force that he looked for the emancipation of the Irish people."

Such language as this could not be spoken publicly in the English Parliament unless it was true, and it must prove to every unprejudiced mind that the League, so far from "culminating and collapsing," is rapidly growing into a tower of strength in the hearts of the Irish people. This nails the first falsehood pretty effectually. Let us now proceed to the consideration of number two:

"When disloyalty to England, accompanied by ignorance and bigotry, is transported across the ocean, and our land is made the theatre for its display, and when the Irish vote is massed under the leadership of Papist priests and Democratic politicians, it is a state of affairs which is, to the last degree offensive. It is more than offensive when it amounts—as it continually does—the attitude of opposition to our laws, and breaks out—as it continually does—in rhetoric of denunciation against the laws and good order of society."

The depravity of an American journal can be best estimated when Americans read in its columns sentiments upon the Irish people in consequence of their "disloyalty to England." Shame upon the traitorous and treacherous traducer who has forgotten that the very corner-stone of this republic has emphasized upon it "disloyalty to England." This was the clarion cry that rung out through all the land from Lexington's memorable day down to the ignominious and complete route of England's troops, culminating with their inglorious surrender at Yorktown! "Disloyalty to England" was the tone rung out by the Liberty Bell in old Faneuil Hall when it proclaimed liberty to every citizen throughout the land. God bless the man whose "disloyalty to England" placed the stars and stripes of this great empire at the summit of the republics of the world! God bless, again, the Irishmen who—from 1776 to 1882—have made their "disloyalty to England" an additional impetus in their steadfast fidelity to the Constitution and laws of this land! And yet, this craven and cowardly pro-British sheet has the assurance to charge as a crime against the Irish people their "disloyalty to England." An American paper—no matter what blatant patriotism it may pretend to—that will thus attempt to rob a republican government of its prestige, should be watched as an Irish enemy in the American camp. History informs us that English gold has been used in by-gone days wherewith to purchase the patriotism of American citizens, and England has furnished the funds in order to purchase this hireling press, so as to pull down the American Republic and to erect the throne of royalty upon its ruins! We caution citizens of every class, therefore, to look with suspicion upon that venal sheet which in this land parades its ill-natured injectures upon American citizens, because, forsooth, their grandest boast is—"disloyalty to England." We now pass to falsehood number three:

"If the Irish in Ireland were less idle and more honest; if they would breed fewer children, and pay less attention to the priests; if they would be more economical, and send less money to the Pope; if they would imitate the industry, providence and prudence of the French peasantry; if they would work harder, and agitate less; if they would be more loyal to the Government; they would try so hard to pay their rent as they do to repudiate their debts; if they would cultivate a national pride above bigotry—if all these things were to come to pass, there would be less famine, less discontent, and less revolutionary agitation in that country."

If the pensioned English scribe who jingled English gold in his pocket as he wrote these worthless lines, would write nothing but the truth, he would not sell a single sheet of paper in a century. The Irish in Ireland are "idle," because the cursed laws of landlordism put a tax on industry. Every improvement of his house, his farm, or his premises, imposed additional rent upon the poor, toiling peasant, until the burden became too great, and Pat refused to work and still starve—in order to fatten a pampered landlord who tried to drag him down to the level of a badly-kept beast.

This is the cause of Irish idleness, so far as it exists, and English laws are to blame for every idle hour spent by a peasantry who have no peers in the world in working when they receive "a fair day's wages for a fair day's work." Look at the Irish in this land. What is it that makes them hated and despised by that despicable class of Knownothing and de-nothing American bummers who revel in their rotten bigotry? They are hated, because they are industrious, because they accumulate wealth, because they own farms, because they pay taxes; in a word, they are despised by that contemptible clique because they fill the full measure of men in this land and leave the dirty drones who denounce them standing on the street corners all the day idle! This is why such literary scavengers, as the writer in question, throws the mire of his mud-laden mentality at the Irish people in America. Were we as docile as dogs, were we talking machines, and, not men, were we merely "heweers of wood and drawers of water," the reptile tongues of rancorous writers would not hiss their hatred against us, but because we can outstrip such snails in the race of life—then they leave their slimy trail across our track in their vain efforts to stay the onward march of the great Celtic nation in this New Ireland! Thank God they never can and they never will bar our progress so long as we are true to ourselves and our adopted country.

And so the Irish raise to many "babies" to suit this infant-killing calumniator. Well, it was a good thing for America that Ireland raised so many children twenty or thirty years before the Revolution. The "boys" born on the banks of the Shannon, the Suir, the Blackwater, the Boyne and the Liffey, came in mighty handy when the time came to lift the tea into Boston harbor and to lather the British on the battle-fields of the Revolution! Irish-born babies like Barry, the first Commodore of the American navy, came in mighty handy when the work of Knownothings. Irish-born males like Montgomery, who fell before Quebec, were not taunted by traitors in disguise with being "disloyal to England." No, no; in those days a premium was proffered for Irish bravery to boa. out of this land the very English to whom we are now taunted with being guilty of disloyalty! Nor were "Irish boys" so much out of places in 1812-15, when they knocked the British beaks into spinters and made John Bull pack up in short time and return to that land to which Irishmen have always been disloyal. The same Irish babies came in mighty handy when we had our family quarrel in 1861, a time when, if no soldiers save the Knownothing crew that decry the Irish had taken the field for the Union, every battle would have been a Bull Run defeat! This is a fact which we intend to develop more fully hereafter. Thus, this Malthusian malligner of the fathers and mothers of the Irish people in America is proved to be an arch-falsifier! What! Blame the Irish people—like Herod—they do not "slaughter the innocents" and have the blood of their murdered offspring cry to heaven for vengeance! This is the modern idea, because belief in God is dead in the hearts of many a mother who will one day call on the mountains to cover her, in order to hide her from the vengeance of an angry God and to escape the hell that yawns for her guilty soul!

No! Thank God, the Irish people are guiltless of this growing crime! Like Mary, the Mother of God, they have borne children in suffering; like her, they have known the pangs of poverty; like her, they have felt the sword of sorrow pierce their hearts; like her, they love God, they have found their recompense in peopling Heaven with saints! Their souls, too, are pure, because they have been true to the laws of nature and of nature's God, and they did not turn the nursery into a graveyard for garrotted infants! Yet these virtuous Irish mothers are accused by this vile and venomous babyburning bigot with the hideous crime of maternity! We blush for our profession that a paper can be found in California which would print such an infernal indictment against them.

We admit the Catholics of Ireland are not "progressive," in the modern acceptation of the term; they do not know the diabolical designs which abortionists and other abominable parasites practice. They only know that God has commanded them to "increase and multiply" so that His faith may be spread throughout the world; so that His altar may be served by faithful children; so that His holy virgins of Mercy and Charity may be followed by thousands of worthy daughters of St. Vincent de Paul; so that men and women may exist in the world, who, by word and example, will keep society free from the foul precepts of that modern curse upon the creative providence of God! This is why Irish parents "breed so many children," and the wretch who blames them therefor is a most despicable villifier of woman's sacred dignity as wife and mother!

[Next week we will resume this subject and continue it until we expose the virus out of the miserable malligner of our race and religion.]

More of the "Record-Union's" Falsehoods Exposed.

THIRD ARTICLE.

The next charge we have to meet in the column of calumny, directed on the Church by the Sacramento Record-Union is one that is about as baseless as the generality of such slanders. Following is the indictment:

"Catholics worship Santama Bulbah under the appellation of St. Josaphat, and thus the heathen god Pan was converted into a French saint under the name of St. Fiacha, and continued to be worshiped, with the rites of the Lampsacene, so late as the seventeenth century."

It is a well-known axiom among logicians that an unsupported assertion is sufficiently contradicted by a general denial. The Sacramento scribe must have been wool-gathering in the valley of Josaphat, and must have had the god of Pan-demonium at his elbow, when he conceived the remarkably original ideas contained in the above literary and historical curiosity. We have already proved the Sacramento Record-Union to be a reckless, rollicking sheet, and if we had no other proof of our assertion the foregoing forgery proves it. There is not a syllable of truth in a line of the foregoing extract, and we challenge the Record-Union for proof of its calumny. Until it does so, the odium of its venality must rest upon the Sacramento slanderer. Give us the name of the Martyrology or of the Calendar in which the lives of these hypothetical or unknown saints are to be found, as there is no mention of them even in the fountain-head of British bigotry—the Encyclopedia Britannica. Here they must be known only in the regions of the Sacramento river, found, perhaps, among the debris of that Slickens-laden stream, just as Moses was found among the bull-rushes. We want light on this subject, and challenge the Record-Union to produce its credentials for canonizing Josaphat and Foutin, and also for transforming Buddha and Pan into Popish saints without leave or license!

While the Record-Union is raking over the debris of detraction against the Church for proof regarding these mythical personages, we wish it would also give us the name of the Council wherein "one bishop was kicked to death by another bishop," as well as the names of the kicker and the other one who "kicked the bucket." We are collating a museum of literary curios regarding the Church, and we want this information to give zest to our collection. We sincerely hope that the Record-Union's great "interest in the truth" will prompt it to furnish this important information, as it is not right that the knowledge of such an occurrence should be confined to a few, among prelates should be hidden from the gaze of the world in the scrap-book of our Sacramento contemporary.

This comprises the slanders which the Record-Union has hurled against the Church of God, and which, we think, we have squelched as conspicuously as historical evidence can contend for it is a tissue of falsehood. Like all the enemies of the Church, the Sacramento slander has resorted to the use of all disreputable assailants by making reckless assertions without producing a single witness in proof of their truth. To apply the degrading epithet of "scoundrel" to a great saint of the Catholic Church, may—when we consider the source from whence it comes—tend more to elevate him in the eyes of the faithful, just as the crucifixion of our Blessed Redeemer upon the cross elevated that imagery of degradation into the highest and holiest emblem of man's veneration. Yet the very St. Cyril, at whom the bigot of the Record-Union hurled the low-flung and opprobious title of "scoundrel," was a bishop endowed with wisdom, and a model of virtue. Leaving aside all the eulogies which Catholic writers have bestowed upon St. Cyril, the following voluntary tribute of an English Protestant writer is in itself sufficient to successfully contradict all the evidence from prejudiced sources arrayed against St. Cyril by the Record-Union in its recent article endeavoring to bolster up its former bigotry. In Canon Bright's Church History, quoted by Baring Gould, we read this truthful tribute of two Protestant authors to one who rickly deserves the strong encomiums which his saintly character has evoked—even from those who are antagonistic to the Church or nobly represented by that great Confessor of the Faith—St. Cyril of Alexandria:

"Historical justice cannot ignore," says Canon Bright, quoted by Baring Gould, "the noble unselfishness of Cyril, his patience in explaining over and over again his own statements, his readiness in welcoming substantial agreement on the part of others—in a word, the power and love and command which made him a true minister in the reunion of 433. We need not dwell on the instances in which he showed a remarkable forbearance, as when he bore, without irritation, the schooling of St. Isidore; or his care for the due probation of aspirants to the priesthood, his depth and acuteness as a dogmatic theologian, his faith and thankfulness when treated as a deposed prelate. The way not to understand him is to substitute a haughty and heartless dogmatist, for the ardent, zealous, from the deep-suffering man who, against an opponent strong in sophistry, in recent influence and in Church prestige, persevered in defending the simple Scripture and Scriptural and Nicene mystery that "the one Lord Jesus Christ was very God of very God, who for us men and for our salvation, came down from heaven and was Incarnate, and was made man."

How different this language from that used by St. Cyril's ravifier in the Record-Union! Thus the truthful testimony of Protestant writers, such as we have named, will crush to earth the vile aspersions of calumny, unsupported by a single reliable or respectable writer, and will place the character of the glorious Bishop of Alexandria in thus triumphantly vindicated even by the testimony of non-Catholics.

In its rejoinder to the MONITOR defence of St. Cyril, this Record-Union quotes from Gibbon, and, in order to show the veracity of that infidel, which formed the population of Alexandria during St. Cyril's Episcopate in that city, we will quote from the same anti-Catholic authority:

"The most trifling occasion," says Gibbon, "a transient scarcity of fish or lentils, the neglect of an accustomed salutation, a mistake of jurisdiction, were any time sufficient to kindle a seditious among that vast multitude, whose resentments were implacable and blind.

"Such was the inflammable material of Alexandria which no man could control, and, knowing this to be the true character of the people, compelled Haraug Gruhl to declare that "had there been no onslaught on the synagogues, there would have been no murder of Hypatia. The people of Alexandria," adds this writer, "were singularly fiery and given to sudden outbreaks. It is clear, therefore, that the Jewish incendiaries who burned the church of St. Alexander, were the originators of a series of outrages which culminated in the murder of Hypatia, and to this crime and treachery must be traced the foul deed which the Record-Union endeavors to lay upon the character of a Bishop who had no more responsibility in the matter than that which might be attributed to any Bishop of our own day who presides over a See wherein mob violence occurs which he is utterly unable to prevent.

Five Cent Catholics.

We were seated in our office one day last week when a lady entered and informed us that she desired to call our attention to a subject which she thought would make an excellent subject for the MONITOR. Eager at all times to procure topics whereat to gladden our readers, we inquired the nature of the subject in question, and we were rather astonished when the lady remarked that she had come to talk to us about "Five Cent Catholics." "Pray, madam, what do you mean?" "Well, I mean what they!" "Well, sir," she replied, "they are that class of Catholics who spend their dollars and dimes on food and raiment, and give a pinchpenny to Almighty God on Sunday." We looked at the fair lady in amazement, as she continued: "I attend at different churches on occasional Sundays, so I make it a special duty to peep into the collection plate as it passes me on its rounds among the congregation, and the number of nickels therein is really a sad sight. Now, sir, I want you to mention this fact in the MONITOR, in order to show such Catholics that it is an awful sin for them thus to try and palm off their nickels upon Almighty God, thus giving a half-dime to religion for every half-hundred dollars they spend upon themselves."

We saw the point, and, remembering that one of the precepts of the Church commanded us "to contribute to the support of our pastors," we deemed it well to call the attention of our readers to the necessity of their thus fulfill their obligation by giving towards the support of the clergy and the maintenance of the House of God, a con which they would be ashamed to offer for anything better than a Chinese cigar! Contributing to the support of our clergy is a good work, and St. Paul says "Faith without good works is dead," hence we hope the readers of the MONITOR will not so far forget themselves as to be ranked among the five cent Catholics alluded to by our lady visitor. Give freely to God and He will return to you a hundred fold. This He has promised, and has performed it in innumerable cases. No man ever yet became imporoished by giving charity, and what nobler charity can appeal to Catholics than the proper support of our clergy and contributing towards providing the lights and linens, vestments and elements for the proper celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass? The priest of God is the servant of his people, he answers when they call upon him in sickness or death; he is in who admits them into the Church and consigns their bodies to the tomb if they die in the grace of God. And yet there are Catholics upon whom God has showered his choicest blessings of faith, hope and charity, who pitch an occasional picayune into the plate on Sunday and march home from Mass thoroughly satisfied that they have done their duty! But they should remember that the all-seeing eye of God is upon them, and that He will judge them hereafter as to whether they have done their duty or not. Priests cannot plead for themselves upon this point, because thoughtless Catholics would say they were selfish—"always asking for money"—is the way they put it; hence priests never allude to the five cent pieces which fill the plate on Sunday and of which it takes twenty to make a dollar!

But there is another class of Catholics to whom we might as well allude in this letter, and that is the give-nothing Catholics, those who walk into church as if they held an over-due mortgage on it and came around to collect their interest; people who flaunt up the center aisle and flop down in somebody else's pew with an air as much as to say: "There, Lord! you see how condescending I am to come here among such a miscellaneous crowd of unappreciative people." These are the do-nothing-give-nothing drones in the hive of the Church, and as such people are too utterly utter to take a Catholic paper, we know there are none of that class among the MONITOR readers. But they are to be seen in every congregation, and when the nickel-laden plate passes them by they are too much absorbed in their prayer books even to notice it under their very noses. These people are incorrigible—nothing short of a miracle would open their pockets, and they are ninety-nine degrees worse than the five cent Catholics, because these give something, even though it be only a tenth part of what they can afford, still something is better than nothing, even in a Church collection, and we have hope that a reformation will take place among those who have been five cent Catholics hitherto, that they will find they can afford a dime or a quarter on Sunday, and thus escape the annoyance and humiliation of having to confess the sin that they did not contribute according to their means to the support of the Church of God.

We have said that priests do not refer to this question, but we are glad to find the matter attracting the attention of the laity, the matter pertains to them, and from them the remedy must emanate. We also thank the zealous lady who was so incensed at seeing such meagre contributions among large Catholic congregations that—like a lady—she could not keep her tongue still until she mounted the two flights of stairs leading to our sanctum and let her mind loose to the MONITOR.

The Coming Conflict in England's Eastern Empire.

The signs of the times point to a revival of the religion of the Koran throughout Mohammedan countries, and to the peril of British interests in India. In Asia and Africa Pan-Islamism marches at a pace that promises to leave Pan-Sclavism, erewhile progressive in the Russian and Asiatic Empires, at a long distance behind. Judging, indeed, from recent developments Soudan, where the Meccan "Messiah" has unfurled the standard of Islam, not to speak of the insurrection in Yemen, the garden of Arabia, a plot of "holy war" on the part of all true believers in the Koran, would seem to be imminent. While, however, the Czar, the civil and religious head of the Greek Church, is regarded as the leader of the Sclav element in Europe, Mohammedans, on the other hand, in the absence of a recognized Caliph, are seemingly at a loss where to select "a Commander of the Faithful." The Sultan of the Ottoman Empire, in the crippled condition of Turkish resources, any more than his co-religionist, the Shah of Persia, subsidized by "Christians," can hardly aspire to the supreme spiritual sway once wielded by the successors of the Prophet at Damascus and Bagdad. The coming man in the Mohammedan world may perhaps be found in the deserts of Arabia, or more probably, in the jungles of Hindostan, here that Sepoy, who claims to be linearly descended from Mohammed, and whose forefathers invaded India in 664, number well-nigh a million of fighting men filled with a burning hatred of the British name. Like the Pathans of the Punjab, the Ghazees of Delhi, and the Moplahs of Malabar—all of the strictest school of Mecca the Sepoys may be pronounced, with truth, muscular Mussulmans, in a sense that the Anglican Kingsley—so sagaily worsted by Cardinal Newman—never dreamed of.

In India, it has been the policy of the paramount power to foment the furious fanaticism of the followers of Islam at the expense of the Hindu population, just as in Ireland similar Satanic statecraft has stimulated Orangeism to array themselves against their Catholic fellow-subjects. Mussulmans, however, imbibe the Janissaries of diabolical diplomacy in Ireland, are too day, as in the past, the fiercest and most implacable foes of England in the East. During the insurrection of 1857-58 that swept over India like a devastating fire, the Moslem element assumed the chief direction of the movement that for more than a year paralyzed British supremacy in Anglo-Asia. Nor is it too much to say that the widespread rebellion which culminated in wholesale massacres throughout Bengal and the north-western provinces, was, for the most part, the work of Mohammedans. In the Koran, which numbers well-nigh 50,000,000 believers throughout the Indian peninsula, the faithful are assured that "the sword is the key of heaven and hell;" and that death must be the lot of those who refuse to accept the creed of Mecca. From this sanguinary spirit which savors somewhat of the blood-stained Sassenach penal code in Ireland, the sacred books of the Brahmins—the sacerdotal caste of the vast Hindu population—are singularly free. Fortunately for British supremacy, in 1857-58, the Hindu princes of central India, with but few conspicuous exceptions, continued to maintain friendly relations with the administration at Calcutta. Had it been otherwise, the issue of the conflict would not have been doubtful. Frightful famines and all the evils of bad government have, however, alienated the Hindu masses from the paramount power, and in the event of the proclamation of a "holy war," they would, in all probability, be found willing auxiliaries of their Mohammedan fellow-subjects. Threatened at once by widespread disaffection and Russian intrigues, the destinies of the British Empire in the East, at present, are trembling in the balance. "I cannot forget," declared Lord Canning, one of the ablest Viceroys of India, "that in the sky of India, serene as it is, a small cloud may arise, no larger than a man's hand, but which, growing larger, may at last threaten to burst."

Should the agitation in the Mohammedan world continue to gather strength, there would not be wanting patriotic devotion worthy of the Queen of Oude and the Queen of Jhansee, who died on the field of battle, in 1858, while leading their troops into action. Mohammedans have not forgotten the wrongs heaped upon their race at the close of the insurrection, nor how, after a most trial by court-martial, the venerable King of Delhi, the last representative of the Mogul Monarchy, and the spiritual chief of Islam in India, was brutally forced to witness the murder, in cold blood, of his two sons by a British officer. The King, whose royal rights were guaranteed by treaty, and who, it should be remembered, maintained neutrality during the struggle, was transported, with every mark of ignominy, as a felon, to the remote province of Pegu, where he died in great misery. With Turkestan in possession of Russia, in spite of the London Foreign Office, and Afghanistan subject to her influence, notwithstanding the lavish loss of blood and treasure during Lord Lytton's administration, the British-Indian frontier is no longer safe. There is, moreover, in view of the recent attitude assumed by the Moslem propaganda, a point worthy of note in regard to the coming crisis that already blackens England's horizon in Asia. Of late, Irish regiments, heretofore quartered in England and in their own country, have, in consequence of the latest phase of the Land League movement, been ordered on foreign service. While, in fact, the garrison in Ireland is, for the time past, composed of troops of English birth, Irish soldiers constitute at present the chief strength of Great Britain in her Oriental dominions. Whether Irishmen would, as in 1857-58, take the field against Mohammedans fighting for their rights on their own soil, is at best dubious. By a curious coincidence, Erin's national color is that of Mecca, the only difference being that the crescent, and not the Celtic shamrock, emblazoned on a green field, forms the sacred standard of Islam. Nor is it at all improbable that in the shock of war in the East, if not in the island of the West, the dream of Thomas Davis, a plot of "holy war" on the part of the humiliation of England, and the triumph of the Green Flag of Erin and Mecca and sorrow—of the GREEN ABOVE THE RED.

The Apostate Canon Campello.

Everybody has heard or read about
Canon Campello,
Who left the true fold in the lurch;
But all are scared
He's only a seed
That was thrown by the Methodist Church.

In the current number of the British Quarterly Review, the organ of the English Congregationalists, we find an article from the pen of T. A. Trollope, which gives a graphic sketch of the life of Canon Campello, showing him to be a sham and one of that very unfortunate few who pretend to a degree of piety that they are not possessed of. Even before Mr. Trollope's disclosures enough was published in non-Catholic papers to prove that love of licentiousness misrelled liberty—was the true reason why Canon Campello became an apostate. His disgraceful conduct had become so notorious in Rome that he was threatened with ecclesiastical suspension unless he reformed, but, finding that his bauer of his political friends in Liverpool, who pressed deep gratitude for the interest shown to public affairs by the Canon, threatened to withdraw his support, the Canon, to control, he finally concluded that among the sects he could carry on his immoral practices without in the least detracting from his assumed character as a Protestant. Everybody knows, he betrayed God and—like Judas—took the thirty pieces of silver from some syndicate of sectarians. It is well, therefore, to know from a Protestant writer what manner of man this was over whose "conversion" anti-Catholic cranks made such a sensation, and, in order to arrive at the value of the prize which Protestantism parted for its gospel of error, we quote from the article in question. Mr. Trollope recites a disgraceful but unfortunately well-authenticated story of how Campello was discovered in a masked ball in the character of a young devil, dancing and—what making a great uproar. Mr. Trollope adds:

"Common report and public opinion at Rome assert far worse things of Campello than this masked ball affair. It is affirmed that he has used that 'liberty' which he Eminence Cardinal Serafini assured him he need not sacrifice, in a far more criminal manner than anything usually forgiven here to Roman Catholics. We have no such knowledge of the facts as would justify us asserting that these things are true. They are not, however, mere calumnies of the clerical press or of clerical adherents; and we have alluded to them because, did we abstain from doing so, we should not be giving a true account of the estimation in which the new convert is held by the general mass of his fellow-citizens."

What a suitable "convert" such a character would make among the free-love fraternity! Yet this is precisely the type of person whom sectarian exhibits to the world as having been "rescued from Romanism." Rather let us call them rotten branches cut off from the tree of life, thereby giving fresh impetus to the healthy portion which spreads its branches more widely and sinks its roots more deeply into the fruitful soil which surrounds the tree of true knowledge.

Of course there is a natural umbilical cord which binds such characters as Piere Hyacinthe, the husband of an American widow and the father of an "old-Catholic" child, and "converts" like Count Campello, hence they correspond with each other, and we find in a letter written recently by the latter that he has already grown tired of "mashing" in the Methodist fold and is looking around for "fresh fields and pastures new" wherein he may disport his bovine propensity. The "converted" Canon tells his partner that he has a brilliant circus and the more subscribers we secure the more profitable will be our venture. We deeply sympathize with our Methodist brethren in the disappointment they must feel in thus having lost such a suitable shepherd from their fold, because we see in the character of Campello those peculiar characteristics which combine to make him a grand success as a Methodist revivalist of the Harrison type, and the "converts" he would draw into the meshes of the Methodist net would help to swell Gideon's band of buncombites enormously.

SENATOR BAYARD ON "THE POPES IRISH."

Senator Bayard in the course of his eulogy on the death of the late Congressman M. P. O'Connor, of South Carolina, in the senate chamber last month, paid the following glowing tribute to the services rendered by Irishmen to America. Of "Ps. O'Connor he said:

"His name and parentage were Irish, and he was one of the almost countless illustrations of worth and character, eloquence and wit, courage and capacity, which that island of sorrows has contributed to build up and strengthen a government of the "United States, and the advancement of its people." Continuing, he said:

"Mr. President, if the names of the men of Irish birth and Irish blood who have dignified and decorated the annals of American history were to be erased from the record, how much of the glory of our country would be subtracted? In the list of American statesmen and patriots, theologians and poets, soldiers and sailors, jurists and orators, what names shine with purer lustre, or are mentioned with more respect, than those of the men, past and present, we owe to Ireland?

On that imperishable roll of honor, the Declaration of Independence, we find their names, and in the prolonged struggle that followed, there was no battlefield, from the St. Lawrence to the Savannah, but was enriched with Irish blood shed in the cause of civil and religious liberty. Today we see them in our midst, honored and beloved by their associates, and valued, not by their constituents alone, but by the entire country."

IRISHMEN IN THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

By the Act of Union, Ireland was allotted 105 members. After the general election of 1880 Gladstone, Disraeli and Beaconsfield rigged, therefore, 103 Irish members to be accounted for. At the last general election, 24 Conservatives, 16 Whigs, and 63 Home Rulers were returned, Mr. Yule Lawson, who has always claimed to be a Home Ruler, at once joined the Conservatives, making the numbers 25 Conservatives, 16 Whigs, and 62 Home Rulers. On Dec. 27, last, the Irish day, in the humiliation of England, and the triumph, after ages of shame and sorrow—of the GREEN ABOVE THE RED.

"BABY'S GOT THE MUMPS."

Fun in a Fifth Street Family.

[Sacramento Record Union.]

As a reporter was passing along J street yesterday afternoon, between four and five o'clock, he observed a neatly attired but homeless young lady rushing into the old established and favorably known drug emporium of H. C. Kirk & Co. The girl's manner indicated beyond a doubt that she was in a terrible excited state of mind. Her "lamps" and "frizzes" had evidently been neglected that day, for her dark eyes flashed a red morning furze. At once the thought flashed across the mind of the pencil shover that here might be a chance for an item—a sensational novelette. He quickly followed the lady into the store, where she was observed to rush up to one of the clerks and exclaim: "Baby's got the mumps; give me quick, give me a bottle of that Great German Remedy." Her request being promptly complied with, she hastily handed the drug clerk fifty cents and departed. "My sensation is spoiled," thought the man of news, "but as I may some day have a baby with the mumps, I'll try to gain a little information which in future years may possibly enhance my domestic happiness. He accordingly approached the genial managing partner of the house named—Mr. Joseph Hahn—with the question, "What do you know about baby's with the mumps, and this so-called Great German Remedy?" "My esteemed friend of the press," observed the smiling Joseph, "I know that mumps, rheumatism and all similar painful troubles are easy cured by the great medicine of the remedy in question. Mr. Jacob Gilli, just as bitter as gall, came in the other day say away alone in Memphis, close came from eighteen miles to get it, it just cures like magic, as a pain knife." No article in our house has ever been in such demand. We have sold over 1000 bottles since it came to give such great satisfaction. We at the last general election, 24 Conservatives, 16 Whigs, and 63 Home Rulers were returned, Mr. Yule Lawson, who has always claimed to be a Home Ruler, at once joined the Conservatives, making the numbers 25 Conservatives, 16 Whigs, and 62 Home Rulers. On Dec. 27, last, the Irish day, in the humiliation of England, and the triumph, after ages of shame and sorrow—of the GREEN ABOVE THE RED.

New Advertisements.

SPECIAL
GOLD MEDAL
Awarded in 1877, at Philadelphia.
For Excellence, Purity, and Evenness of Quality.
DAVENPORT WHISKEY!
Pure & Unadulterated
Superior to ANY BRAND IMPORTED.
DAVENPORT WHISKEY
IS UNRIVALLED
This is a WHISKEY of Superior Quality, as has never been on the market in any country.
This Article should NOT be classed with the so-called Compounds of this Coast, but is of a rich, rare flavor and full-bodied, and NO BLENDED or COMPOUNDS can COMPARE with it.
Distillation of 1875 and 1876 is EXCELLENT.
SCHULTZ & VON BARGEN, SOLE OWNERS,
DAVENPORT.
DAVISSON, HALL & CO
Successors to Tobin, Davisson & Co.,
IMPORTERS OF Yankee Notions, Ribbons, Fancy Goods, Parasols,
LACES AND EMBROIDERIES,
Lisle Thread and Silk Gloves,
Zephyr Wool, Corsets, Ladies' Skirts, Goffs Alpaca Braid, Earl & Wilson's Linen Collars.
We would call special attention to our magnificent assortment of BURNING GLASSES and LAVA Tacks for gas fixtures, etc., etc.
In as much as we give exclusive attention to the class of goods above mentioned, and as our trade is a special one, we offer superior inducements to all assortments, style and price.
DAVISSON, HALL & CO.,
6 and 8 Sutter St., S. F.
IT STANDS AT THE HEAD.
THE NEW DOMESTIC RUNNING LIGHT SEWING MACHINE.
Unequalled for Simplicity, Durability and Relish for Family or Manufacturing Purposes.
Send for Circular.
J. W. Evans, No. 29 Post St.
PACIFIC COAST LAND BUREAU.
A CORPORATION.
President ..... WENDELL EASTON
Vice President and Gen. Manager ..... OTO. W. PRINK
Treasurer ..... ANDREW CALDERWOOD, ESQ.
Secretary ..... F. R. WILDE
Board of Directors:
J. O. FAIRBIRD, HRANT T. ASHANT,
G. W. PRINK, F. R. WILDE,
WENDELL EASTON
Principal Place of Business:
22 Montgomery street, S. F.
Sub Agencies at each county seat of the State.
Agency for Sale and Exchange of Farming Lands, Large Tracts subdivided and Sold at Auction or Private Sale.
Offices and Immigrants located. Careful appraisals for Banks, Courts, Administrators, Trustees, etc. Large Forms compiled with. Full records of sales in each county on file at the General office. Assume entire charge of property, pay taxes, mortgages, etc., etc.
MONEY TO LOAN.
DENNIS REDMOND.
MERCHANT TAILOR,
No. 508 Hayes street.
Perfect fit and good work guaranteed.

CARPETS BEATEN, MADE, MOVED and laid, 50 cts per yard. L. BEKMANN, at 117 Sixth street. Carpets and Window Shades.
BAD TENANTS EJECTED FOR $4.
COLLECTIONS MADE IN THE CITY OR COUNTRY.
PACIFIC COLLECTION CO.,
508 California Street - - - - - Room 3.
(Over German Savings Bank.)
FISH FOR LENT.
The Largest Assortment in the City.
Extra Finnan Haddies SMOKED.
Extra Potomac River Roe Herring, in 15 lb. kits.
Extra Mess Bloater Mackerel, in 10 and 15 lb. kits.
Extra Mess Mackerel, in 5 lb. tins.
Extra Large Smoked Bloaters.
Extra Large Holland Herring, in kegs and tins.
Extra Mess Shad, in 15 lb. kits.
Extra Fine Tongues and Sounds, in 5 lb. kits.
Extra Fine Smoked Halibut.
Smoked Mackerel.
George's Bank Codfish.
Columbia River Salmon Bellies.
Eels Smoked.
" Pickeled.
Shrimps, Anchovy and Bloater Paste, Oysters, Lobsters, Clams, Fish and Clam Chowder.
Lebenbaum, Goldberg & Bowen,
428, 430 & 432 Pine St.
LEBENBAUM, GOLDBERG & CO.,
1447 and 1449 Polk St.
LEBENBAUM & GOLDBERG,
191 Post St.
NAPA SODA
Napa Soda
Is a Table Water, of the purest quality, and is fitted with Hopper, Syrup and Shaker, for the dispensing of ice cold sparkling, and still or plain soda. It is claimed to be a superior article, perfectly healthy, and recommended by the faculty, and is a purer and more healthy drink than any other refreshing beverage, it is extensively used, and with unlimited success, as a cure for Heart, Liver and Kidney diseases, Dyspepsia, General Debility and Nervous Prostration. It is the greatest corrective every discovered for excessive drinking or smoking. In cases of Exhaustion and Debility, it is invaluable, as it invigorates the system without the use of Spirits. Mixed with the Water, its component parts are so perfectly united by Nature, that for a beverage this Water is unsurpassed. It is the greatest corrective for Intoxication, and a dram of it, in company, made or followed by a glass of bottled and iced Napa Soda, pure and unadulterated from Nature's laboratory, will instantly take the place of the fearfully pernicious Cocktail, leaving the breakfast table free from the effects of the previous night's debauch. Hotels, saloons and families promptly supplied.
NAPA SODA
CUTLER & PEARSON,
No. 11 Drumm Street, S. F.
L. P. DEGEN,
MANUFACTURER OF
LEATHER BELTING
Also Water-Proof Leather Belting.
No 12 FREMONT ST., near Market SAN FRANCISCO.
ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS REWARD!
Information is wanted of the place where WILLIAM MICHAEL KELLY is located. He was born in 1840 in Ballinasloe, County Galway, Ireland. He lived a number of years in Norwich, Connecticut, with his mother, Mrs. Kelly, and a short time in Hartford, Conn., and in Philadelphia, James W. B. Kelly. He went to California in 1862, and died somewhere in that State. Address any information to Box 1076, P. O. Box 1076, New Haven, Connecticut.
NOLAN BROS.
HAVE REMOVED
—TO THEIR—
NEW STORE,
In PHELAN'S Building, 812 & 814 Market St.
—Where we will be pleased to see—
ALL OUR OLD PATRONS.
We are thankful for past favors, and solicit a CONTINUANCE OF YOUR FAVORS.
NOLAN BROS. 812 and 814 MARKET ST.,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
"THE WINTHROP RANGE."
JACOB AHLBACH.
Single Oven. TINSMITH, PLUMBER, GAS FITTER,
AND DEALER IN
Stoves and Tinware,
No. 231 Fourth street.
False Grates for saving fuel. Agent for the Winthrop Range.
TO SAVE MONEY!
Be sure to Buy your HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE of
TERRY & CO.,
747 MARKET STREET, 747
Opposite Dupont Street, - - SAN FRANCISCO.
WHEN YOU HAVE ANY FURNITURE TO SELL, LET THEM KNOW.
They will

Farm and Home.

Ice for Infants.

The pain of teething may almost be done away with, and the health of the child benefited by giving it fine splinters of ice, picked off with a pin to melt in its mouth. The fragment is so small that it is but a drop of warm water before it can be swallowed, and the child has all the coolness for its feverish gums without the slightest injury. The avidity with which the little things taste the cooling morsel; the instant quiet which succeeds hours of fretfulness are the best witnesses to the magic remedy. Ice may be fed to a three months' child in this way, each splinter being no longer than a common pin, for five or ten minutes, the result being that it has swallowed in that time a teaspoonful of warm water, which, so far from being a harm, is good for it, and the process may be repeated hourly as often as the fretting fits from teething begin.

A Word with Parents.

If you are a farmer do not overwork your children, and thus by a hard and dreary life drive them off to the cities. Arise at a reasonable hour in the morning, take an hour's rest after each meal, and quit at five or six o'clock in the afternoon. Let the young people, in games and other amusements, have a happy time the remainder of the day. There is no reason why a farmer's family should be deprived of recreation and amusement, any more than others.

Teach your children those things which they will need when they become men and women. As women, they should know how to cook, how to make a bed, how to preserve cleanliness and order throughout the house, how to ornament their rooms, to renovate furniture and clothing, how to sing, how to play various games, that they may enliven the household. They should be taught to swim, how to ride, how to drive, how to do business, and how to preserve the health. The mother should early instruct money to the girl, with which to buy articles for the household, that she may learn its value. Think what a Christian man and woman need know in order to be healthy, happy, prosperous and successful, and teach them that.

Things to Try.

Try pop-corn for nausea.
Try cranberries for malaria.
Try a sun-bath for rheumatism.
Try ginger ale for stomach cramps.
Try clam broth for a weak stomach.
Try cranberry poultices for erysipelas.
Try a wet towel to the back of the neck when sleepless.
Try buttermilk for the removal of freckles, tan and bottermut stains.
Try a hot flannel over the seat of neuralgic pain, and renew frequently.
Try taking your cod-liver oil in tomato catsup if you want to make it palatable.
Try taking a nap in the afternoon if you are going to be out late in the evening.
Try a cloth wrung out from cold water put about the neck at night for sore throat.
Try sniffing powdered borax up the nostrils for catarrhal "cold in the head."
Try walking with your hands behind you when you find yourself becoming bent forward.
Try planting sunflowers in your garden if compelled to live in a malarial neighborhood.
Try a newspaper over the chest, beneath your coat, as a chest protector in extremely cold weather.

Changes of a Century.

The nineteenth century has witnessed many, and very great discoveries and changes.

In 1809, Fulton took out the first patent for the invention of a steamboat.

The first steam-boats which made regular trips across the Atlantic ocean were the Sirius and Great Western in 1836.

The first public application to practical use of gas for illumination was made in 1802.

In 1813 the streets of London were for the first time lighted with gas.

In 1830 there was built in Waltham, Mass., a mill, believed to have been the first in the world, which combined all the requirements of making finished cloth from raw cotton.

In 1790 there were only twenty-five post-offices in the whole country, and up to 1837 the rate of postage was 25 cents for a letter sent over four hundred miles.

In 1797 wooden clocks began to be made by machinery; this ushered in the era of cheap clocks.

About the year 1833 the first railroad of any considerable length in the United States was constructed.

In 1840 the first experiments in photography were made by Daguerre.

About 1840 the first express business was established.

The anthracite-coal business may be said to have begun in 1820.

In 1836 the patent for the invention of matches was granted.

Steel pens were introduced for use in 1803.

The first successful method of making vulcanized India rubber was patented in 1839.

How it Happened.

The other day Mr. Moriarty, seeing his neighbor, Mr. Finnegan's goat in the street, went and filled an old tin can with red pepper and put it where the goat could get at it. And of course the goat swallowed it. But a goat's vitals, though they may be hoopskirt proof are not fire proof, and I about ten minutes that goat was rearing up on his hind legs and coming down solid on head and turning somersaults and pawing and rolling in a fearful manner. And Moriarty sat upon the fence laughing tumultuously, and Finnegan looked out and saw it and was awful mad and got a spade and crept along the fence, behind Moriarty, and with the spade, brought a whack up under him that hoisted him off that fence like a shot, and he went down flat and got gravel in his mouth, and Finnegan went over the fence on top of him, and while they were in a heap chewing and clawing, he got madly botted them and then all three joined in a terrible fight and it took six neighbors and a policeman to stop it. That's how it happened that Moriarty and Finnegan were too lame to go to the ball. It does seem as though a man couldn't have an innocent bit of fun without trouble resulting.

A Burnt Child

Does not dread the Pierce's Extract of Witch-hazel, which is the best liniment for burns, sprains, and bruises. It also breaks up colds, fevers, inflammatory attacks, and cures rheumatism. Of all druggists.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the statements, as well as the power and value of the article of which they speak, we publish herewith the "fac-simile" signatures of parties whose sincerity is beyond question. The fact of these testimonials is absolute, nor can the facts they announce be invented.

CLAYTON HOUSE,
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 18, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves by intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks diminished my kidneys to such an extent that gravel stones formed I passed stones ranging in size from the bowl of a pin to a good sized pea. When the stones passed from the kidneys into the bladder, I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys inside the hip bone, down in front and along the course of the urethra. The agony was so great that I was nearly distracted. The stricture of the neck of the bladder, the pains were very severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning from time to time until the stones were discharged at times, the pains were so severe that they admonished almost to convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which make kidney diseases a specialty, and they told me that I could never be cured. Learning through a friend the good effects attending the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney diseases, I commenced using it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed five stones without any pain, after which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

S. O. Lewis

21st & Market Sts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 25, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My business, that of reporting, is one that often induces and always aggravates any affection of the kidneys, so all endured was hard. I suffered so much that I was almost unfitted for my business. Having of your Kidney and Liver Cures some time ago, I began taking it, and after taking three or four bottles, I found myself completely restored. I never fail, before in my life, than I now do. I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

J. P. Hiscock

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., March 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last five years, and have used all the different medicines advertised for solid disease, as well as the medicines prescribed by physicians, but nothing ever reached my case. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now entirely cured, and can cheerfully testify that it has done all you advertise and claim for it.

H. M. Van Winkle

AUBURN, Cal., April 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians both allopathic and homeopathic, and never was relieved at all. I have been by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Mrs. M. E. Finley

SANTA ROSA, Dec. 9, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and find it all you claim for it in kidney troubles.

E. T. Fanner
President Santa Rosa Bank.

ALAMEDA, Cal., Nov. 22, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after taking two bottles the pains all left me, and I have had no return of pains since.

Chas. S. Pilcoy

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 11, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with pain in my back and kidneys for the past two years, the effects of a sunstroke received while on the plains in 1850. Knowing of friends, in the east, that had been cured by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, I concluded to try it, and it has proved in my case decidedly beneficial.

Geo. H. Gropp
Twenty-ninth and Broadway.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 30, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaints for the past seven years. My symptoms were pains in the back, also a burning sensation in two places directly over the kidneys. The pain was more severe when I had taken cold, as the cold always settled in my kidneys. I was treated by a physician who pronounced my case congestion of the kidneys, but failed to cure me. I have tried several remedies, but failed to obtain relief until a friend, whose father had been cured by your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, advised me to try it. I have been taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for the past three months, and have been greatly benefited by its use.

I remain, very truly yours,

M. C. Lemby
506 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure recommended to me. After taking two bottles I am entirely cured. Am 75 years of age, and this is the first time I ever wrote for publication. Yours truly,

Austin Gilley
LOS GATOS, Cal., Nov. 15, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have much pleasure in saying, that after using two bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, I have been free from pain in the back, from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials—many of them in cases where hope was abandoned, have been voluntarily given, showing the remarkable power of this medicine over all diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, or Urinary Organs. If any one who reads this has any physical trouble remember the great danger of delay

MISCELLANEOUS.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the glow and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures dandruff, prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists,
Lowell, Mass.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S
EMPLOYMENT OFFICE,
610 CLAY STREET,
Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few door above Montgomery street.

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands, Mechanics, Gardeners, Coachmen, and marriage couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers. mr16-3m

DAWSON'S AMERICAN AGENCY
627 SACRAMENTO STREET.
Furnishes Male Help of any Nationality.

BRANCH OFFICE, 206 POST STREET. FEMALE DEPARTMENT. Girls always in waiting for every class of work.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER
CAN BE CURED
By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

IN PROOF OF WHICH HE BEGS LEAVE TO REFER to the following named persons, who have been cured by him:
James Lavin, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
A. Conly, Petaluma, cancer of the neck.
James D. McGuffey, Santa Barbara, cancer of the lip.
Mrs. O'Donnell, 310 Tyler street, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Frank Grell, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer on the eye.
Mrs. Chas. Blackburn, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the nose.
Master Warner, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.
Robt. Walsh, Milpitas, cancer of the face.
Martin Murphy, San Jose, cancer of the neck.
Wm. Boyd, Fishermen's Bay, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.
J. C. McReynolds, Sulphur Creek, Sonoma county, cancer of the back.
Mrs. Fisher, No. 3 Market street, Room 34, San Francisco, cancer of the breast.
Mr. Gerverdt, East Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer the lip.
Stephen Parkins, Santa Rosa, cancer of the nose.
Baw Runson, Eagleville, Modoc county, cancer of the face.
Stanton Myers, Freeport, Sacramento county, cancer of the lip; and ten dozen of Charity, one of San Francisco and the other of Los Angeles, and others not herein mentioned.

The names by which these cures are performed readily reside in a locality, that they hold up with a full view of my labors. I do not claim to be doing a miracle, but I do claim to be doing a work of benevolence, for which I am entitled by the United States. Persons who know themselves to be laboring under this form of disease who may wish to avail themselves of this cure will find me at the Revenue Hotel, Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

P. J. O'Brien & Sons,
Carriage Builders,
329 and 331 GOLDEN GATE AVE.,
(Tyler Street, near Larkin.

Carriages, Buggies and Wagons made of the Best Material, in the Most Workmanlike Manner, and Warranted to give Entire Satisfaction, at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing and Painting promptly attended to at Reasonable Rates.
Orders by Telephone No. 1182.

Sewing Machine Agency,
NO. 151 FOURTH ST.
BUY MINNOW AND HOWARD ..... San Francisco.
ALL KINDS OF SEWING MACHINES CHEAP, ON easy installments. Machines rented for $2 a month. Repairing done. Needles and Oil.

GOOD LIVING.

For Neatness, Cheapness and Stylishness, the Arcade Restaurant
11 and 13 SIXTH STREET,
Near Market, San Francisco,
CAN'T BE BEAT.
JNO. BARTELS, Proprietor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Can refer to all the principal horse-owners throughout the Pacific Coast.

The "Oakland" has excelled superlatively in this branch of business in largely increasing the sale of horses, and is valuable suggestions of the most skilled "surfeits" in the United States. The benefits of which received in the public in the shape of a service, was, either adopted, Sole Agent for Dr. A. H. Dixon's Condition Powders and McKinney's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Tie Weights. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English Ladies' and Gentlemen's saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and fifty-two saddles. JOHN O'KANE.

CHEAP VARIETY BAZAAR,
741 MARKET ST., opp. Dupont.

THE UNDERSIGNED WOULD RESPECTFULLY AN-nounce to the public that he has opened the above Bazaar, where he will keep constantly on hand every variety of Gentlemen's Furnishing and Fancy Goods, Stationery, Jewelry, etc. Ladies' laces, embroideries, etc. Sewing and Fancy Silks, Satins, and all sizes. On account of small expenses, I am enabled to sell cheaper than any other house in the city. N. B.—Orders made to order. Don't forget the number, 741 Market St. Cheap gets an early. Respectfully yours,
M. POLLACK

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS.
P. E. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
STEAM
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.
Between Sansome and Battery.

JNO. F. SNOW & CO.
Blankets, Lace Curtains, Wool and Silk Goods, Shawls, Cloaks, Ladies' Kid Gloves, Necktie Silks, Velvets, Kid Gloves, Trimmings, etc.
CLEANSING AND DYEING.
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
CHAS. J. HOLMES, Proprietor.
OFFICE:
632 Market Street, Under Palace Hotel
BRANCH: 1062 Broadway, Oakland.
Goods can be sent by mail from any part of the country, not weighing over 4 pounds. Orders by postal card promptly attended to.

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL.

The Best Hotel in San Francisco
Hot and Cold Water Baths Free.
Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
H. CURRAN, Proprietor.
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY location and offers good accommodation to families and the traveling public, and is the nearest Hotel to the wharf of the steamers.
Board and Room per day, $2 to $3. Board and Room per week, $4 to $5. Single Meals, 25c. Rooms per night, 25c to 50c. Rooms per week, $1 to $3.
Free Coach to and from the Hotel.

JONES OF BINGHAMTON.

Every Stone equally low.
Every Joints Five Ton Wagon Scale is warranted five years, made of the best of iron and steel. Double Brass Tary Beam. Scoop by pass the market. Sold on Time. For Sale Price $60 Cash or one in advance.
JONES OF BINGHAMTON, Binghamton, N. Y.

DAMIANA BITTERS!
Great Health Restorer and Strengthener.
The Aztec Lady Bitters.
Cures Impotency, Sterility, Nervous Prostration, Wakefulness and Kindred Diseases of the Sexual Organs.
Liquor Dealers, Druggists, and Grocers.
FOR SALE BY
DAMIANA makes the weak strong and the old young and healthy!
Aug. Sutro, Manufacturer, 12 Montgomery Ave., San Francisco.

R. W. THEOBALD,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS
35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 2187.

BEATTY'S BEETHOVEN ORGAN
Walnut or Ebonized (Cold Laid) Case as desired. 5 Octaves, 10 Sets Reeds, 27 Stops.
PRICE, delivered on board cars here, with stool, Piano Cover and Book of complete musical outfit) for ONLY $90.00

The Beethoven Organ can be shipped to a distance, and the purchaser can then have the instrument tuned by any local piano tuner, or I will tune it for $2 per day and expenses. Boxing and cartage, $2. Organ weighs about 300 lbs. Boxed for shipping, 350 lbs. Order Blank and Circular containing full specifications, sent free. Address, DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

WALNUT OR EBONIZED (COLD LAID) CASE AS DESIRED.
Instrument Height, 9 Inches, Length, 4 Inches, Depth, 6 Inches.

IF I can prove the truth of the statements made in this advertisement (write all to mean to Washington, are for thermometer. My manufactory is open to visitors always. Prices $5 lowest. Before sending elsewhere for a Piano or Organ, write me for my Illustrated Catalogue, Free. Address, DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

SOLD FREE. Address Tryo & Co., Augusta, Me.

$66 Address H. HALLET & CO., Portland, Me.

BEATTY'S $90 Pianos $200 Organs $125 upright. Factory running day & night. Address DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, N.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

AN ENGLISH OFFICIAL ON THE LAND LEAGUE.

George Gray Endorses the Land League Movement and Says that a New Civilization is about to Dawn.

BELOW ZERO.

The Joannette—Why Past Efforts to Find Her Failed.

"I Am Sure We Would Have Found Her, but We Were Frozen Out."

[San Francisco Call.]
Life-Saving Station No. 7, 12th Dist., Ocean Beach, California.

Point Lobos, Dec. 26th.

A reporter has just had an interesting interview with Henry Bohn, keeper of the above station, the details of which are of such profound interest as to warrant their full publication for the readers of the Call.

A MEMBER OF THE CONWAY CREW.

Mr. Bohn was a member of the Corwin, which left San Francisco May 22, 1880, in search of the Jeannette, returning October 15, 1881, after an unsuccessful search for the lost steamer.

The Corwin crew numbered forty-two, all of whom returned sound and well from the Arctic expedition. They could gather no information from natives along the coast in regard to the missing steamer. Mr. Bohn, of the plucky crew, relates: "I am sure we would have found her, had we not been frozen out at Wrangell Island." And then he went on to give a backward look. "It is true we all got back safely, but a number of us were intensely so account of the extreme weather. We had a fearful cold on my watch, and could not have been better to-day hitting the table, but for a wise provision made before our departure. Some of the officers, I, for one, had every body to know what did some of us so much during the terrible voyage. We had taken a good supply of St. Jacobs Oil on board, and to this I owe my life. Two others of our crew had boils and Willard, were in a dreadful condition from neuralgia and rheumatism, and this wonderful remedy saved them. There isn't a scintilla of doubt about it."

"The fact is, this great German remedy is the very best thing ever known for all sorts of ailments that come to human lot. We are never without it. See here," he added warmly, pointing to a box close at hand; "these here—we have a supply right here at the station. It is a grand thing to use after exposure. It is the enemy of all disease. It is the king of pain. It is the destroyer of sickness. It is the glad harbinger of health. It is the silent physician that never fails to cure his patient. It is the avenger of blessing. But I am getting eloquent yet, and I ought to do so, for it saved my life. Of course, I speak

Market Report.

ISSUED WEEKLY BY T. J. GALY, 305 and 307 WASHINGTON STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE,
422 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, March 21, '82.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Sales of Wheat made Monday and at the close of last week, show that a very large business has been done, and the market in England being reported firm tended to strengthen the views, both of holders of Wheat and of ships. Potatoes have weakened in price. Butter has lowered. Eggs are firm at 19@20c.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receivers prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 25@$5 37½; City Superfine, $4 75@$5; interior brands, $5@$5 25 for extra, and $4 50@$4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 80@$1 82½; No. 2, $1 52½@$1 77½ per cental.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 65@$1 75; Standard Chevalier, $1 82½@$1 65; Feed, $1 50@$1 65 ϕ cwt.

Oats—
Quotable at $1 67½@$1 70; for common; and $1 77½@$1 87½ ϕ cwt for goods to choice; Surprise, $1 77½@$1 87½ ϕ ctl.

Corn—
Quotable at $1 62½@$1 67 for Yellow; White, $1 75@$1 80 ϕ ctl.

Hay—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $12@$16; wild oats, $13@$16; volunteer and stable, $9 50@$12; Alfalfa, $9@$11 ϕ ton.

Rye—
Quotable at $2 05@$2 00 ϕ cental for choice.

Buckwheat—
Quotable at $1 65@$1 75 ϕ ctl.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 15½@16c; California, 13@13½c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@15½; Extra Clear Sides, 14@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c.
PORK—Extra Clear, $ bbl, $24 50; do in half bbls, $12 50; Clear, $ bbl, $22 50; do half bbl, $11 50; Mess, $ bbl, $20@22; do half bbl, $11 50@$12; Prime Mess, $ bbl, $19@$19 50; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, $ bbl, $16@$16 50; Choice Pig, $ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12; do 7-lb kegs, $3 25@$3 50.
BEEF—Mess Beef, $ bbl, $10@$10 50; Extra Mess do, $10 50@$11; Mess Beef, half bbl, $5 50@$6; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $6 25@$6 50; family do, $ bbl, $13@$13 50; Family do, half bbl, $6@$6 25.
LARD—Eastern Refined, tcs, 16c; do in fancy pails, 15@15½; do in 10-lb tins, 14½; do in 5-lb tins, 15½; do in 20-lb wooden buckets, 15c; California, in tcs, 12½@13c; half bbls, 14@14½; in 10-lb tins, 13½@14c; 5-lb do, 14@14½; Kegs, 1c lb less than tcs; do in 5-lb do, 15½@15½; Royal 5-lb pails, 15½ ϕ lb.

Potatoes—
Quotations are: Early Rose, $2 12½@$2 15; Garnet Chili, $1 87½@$1 90; River Red, $1 65@$1 70; Tomales, $2 12½@$2 25; Oregon Peerless, $1 75@$1 80; Burbanks, $1 75@$1 80; $ cwt; Oregon Coffee Cows, $2 12½@$2 25; Petaluma, $2 10@$2 25; Fresh Blows, $3 50@$3 37½; Sweet, $2 25@$2 50 ϕ cwt.

Onions—
Quotations are: White, 75c@$1 00 ϕ ctl.

Cornmeal—
Quotable at $42 00@$43 00 ϕ ton; table meal, 5c ϕ lb.

Honey—
Quotable at 22½@25c ϕ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 27@28c; Fancy, 29@30c; Medium do, 20@25c; Firkin, 20@22c; Pickled, 20@22c; Eastern Butter, 18@20c ϕ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 17@18c; Eastern, 18@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 17@18c ϕ lb.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 18@19c; Dressed, 19@20c; Ducks, $6 00@$10 00; Broilers, $7 00@$8 00; Hens, $7 00@$8 00; Young Roosters, $8 00@$9 00; Old, $6 00@$7 00 ϕ dozen; Geese, $1 75@$2 25 ϕ pair; Pigeons, $2 00; Squabs, $3 00 ϕ doz.

Game—
Quotable at 19@20c for choice; 16@20c for Mountain Quail; California Hare, 12½c; Eastern, 19c—Salt Lake, —@—; Oregon, 22½@25c ϕ doz.

Domestic Fruit—
Quotations are: California Oranges, $1 75@$3 50 ϕ box; California Lemons, $1 50@$4 00; Malaga, $6 00@$7 00 ϕ case; Mexican Oranges, $1 00@$1 50 ϕ hundred; Mexican Limes, $10 00@$12 00; California Limes, 50c@$1 25 ϕ small boxes, and $3 00@$4 00 ϕ large, do; Bananas, $1 50@$3 00 ϕ bunch; Pineapples, $8 00@$10 ϕ dozen; Apples, $1 25@$2 25; Oregon, do, $1 75@$2 50; Pears, 75c@$1 00 ϕ box; Cranberries, $13@$16 ϕ bbl.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 60@75c ϕ ctl; Garlic, 1½@1½c ϕ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@$12 00 ϕ ton; Cauliflowers, 75 ϕ doz; Chili Peppers, dry, 20@25c ϕ lb; Dry Okra, 20c ϕ lb; Turnips, 60c ϕ sack; Carrots, 60@75 ϕ sack; Beets, 60@75c ϕ sack; Green Peas, 12½@15c ϕ lb.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 8c ϕ lb; second do, 6½; third do, 5@6c ϕ lb.
VEAL—First quality, 8@8½c ϕ lb for large, and 9@9½c for small; 10c for choice.
MUTTON—Wethers, 7½@8c; Ewes, 6½@7c ϕ lb.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain-Fed, on the hoof, 6½@7c; choice, 6½ ϕ lb; soft, 5½@6c; Dressed, 8c; Spring Pigs, alive, $3 00@$3 50.

"Their Competition is Gone."

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: I was attacked with congestion of the lungs, severe cough, fever, severe pain in the side, a burning fever, and a general giving away of the whole system. Failing to find relief in remedies prescribed, I tried your "Golden Medical Discovery." It effected my entire cure. Your medicines have only to be used to be appreciated. Their merits speak for themselves, and, since trials of the doctor would, like Othello, find their occupation gone.
Yours truly, L. B. McMILLAN, M. D.
Newport, N. Y.

Pine Cured.

Call at Dispensary of the Good Samaritan, 605 Kearny street, room 2, and get cured of Piles. No knife, ointment or other surgical appliances employed. Consultation free. A cure guaranteed or money refunded.

Good Advice.

Family for the past five years has been kept in good health by Dr. Sanford's Ginger Tonic. It prevents malaria, headache, and all nervous complaints. Cures more aches and pains than any known remedy. Depot 1023 Market st.

Various Causes

Advancing years, care, sickness, disappointment, and hereditary predisposition—all operate to turn the hair gray, and either of them inclines it to shed prematurely. Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore faded or gray hair to its rich brown or deep black, as may be desired, softens and cleanses the scalp, gives it a healthy and vigorous action. It removes and cures dandruff and humors. By its use falling hair is checked, and a new growth will be produced in all cases where the follicles are not destroyed or the glands decayed. Its effects are beautifully shown on brushy weak or sickly hair, on which a few applications will produce the gloss and freshness of youth. Harmless and sure in its operation, it is incomparable as a dressing, and is especially valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts. It contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil or color white cambric with lasting long on the hair, and keeps it fresh and vigorous.
FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

A PROSPEROUS INSTITUTION.

We are always glad when opportunity offers to chronicle the success of home enterprises, whether they are of a manufacturing or a mutual character, and speaking of this latter class of enterprises brings to mind the fact that we paid a visit last week to the business offices of THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION for monumental persons, at 1036 Mission street, where we made the acquaintance of the Secretary and General Manager Mr. W. Price, by whom we were very courteously received, and who told him that we would like to look into the workings of the enterprise he managed, in order to satisfy our readers that it was a solid institution, and not like many similar institutions in the East, a scheme to catch the unwary. Mr. Price at once accompanied us to another apartment where we found half a dozen clerks and book keepers busily employed entering applications, answering correspondence, and attending to the various details of such an extensive business. We examined the books of the concern, saw the original applications, traced the entry through various books until it culminated in the cash book, and came away perfectly satisfied that THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION was a solvent and secure institution. Mr. Price, before leaving, opened the company's magnificent new safe and exhibited to us sufficient funds to form the major portion of many a nest egg. His also took from a recess therein a certificate of deposit for a large sum in one of the leading banks of the city, and then he turned to another desk and took therefrom the Record of Applications which numbered no less than twenty hundred that date and they were coming in at the rate of about 20 a day.

From these positive proofs of the probity of the management and the economy of admiistration, we are induced to lay before our readers the benefits which THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION offers to single persons of either sex.

In those instances, foremost among which is that the premium paid by applicants is very small. Thus You will receive from $1,000 to $2,000 if you are married within one or two years, the very time that persons are most in order to give them a start in life. Mr. Member do not have to wait until they are dead—as in life insurance companies—before they can see the pleasure of placing a moity of their savings in an institutionwhich will return it to them with large interest at the most critical period of life. There is not a single one of women in California that does not spend more money foolishly in a month or two than would be the premium on a $2,000 policy in THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION. As an affiliated society for stockholders in this Association, it has received the cordial endorsement of such well known representatives men of this State as—Sheriff P. J. White, M. J. Kelly, Chief of Police & Burke; Chief Justice Wallace, H. W. Tully of Stockton, Dr. R. H. Brewer of Sacramento, Hon. J. K. Luttrell, ex-Member of Congress, Gov. G. G. Downey of Los Angeles, Hon. A. Crag, formerly of Santa Cruz, Michael Kane, formerly of Kane & Ward, liquor merchants; C. T. McMahon of Sand Ridge, and a host of such responsible and respectable gentlemen who could not be induced to lend their names to any enterprise that was not legitimate, nor endorse an association that was not safe.

"Want of room prevents us from saying as much in favor of this Association as we would desire, but full particulars regarding its workings can be ascertained from the By Laws of the Association, copies of which can be had by dropping a postal card to W. Price, Secretary, UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA, 1036 Mission street, San Francisco.

Could Hardly Stand on Her Feet.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I must tell you what your "Favorite Prescription" does for one. Before taking your "Favorite Prescription" I could hardly stand on my feet, but by following your advice, I am perfectly well. The "Favorite Prescription" is a wonderful medicine for debilitated and nervous females. I cannot express how thankful I am to you for you advice. Yours truly,
MRS. CORNELIA A. ALLISON, Peoria, Ia.

Satisfaction for Ten.

In our family for ten for over two years Parker's Ginger Tonic has cured headache, malaria, and in fact all other complaints so satisfactorily that we are in excellent health and no expense for doctors or other medicines.—Chronicle.

Is Catarrh, Bronchitis or Consumption Curable?

Dr. Fowler says it is, and he has grown gray in the practice of his profession, has held the Chair of Heart, Throat and Lungs in one of the best medical colleges of the East. The Government gave him letters patent on an apparatus for changing the air of a low altitude into one of a high, and vice versa. Said apparatus has been a great help to him in the treatment of lung difficulties. He gives no medicine in the above, but the treatment of lung diseases. Send for his treatise on diseases of the lungs, with a blank for his opinion of your case; it will cost you nothing. He can furnish you testimonials from half a dozen clerks and book keepers busily employed entering applications, answering correspondence, and attending to the various details of such an extensive business. We examined the books of the concern, saw the original applications, traced the entry through various books until it culminated in the cash book, and came away perfectly satisfied that THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION was a solvent and secure institution. Mr. Price, before leaving, opened the company's magnificent new safe and exhibited to us sufficient funds to form the major portion of many a nest egg. His also took from a recess therein a certificate of deposit for a large sum in one of the leading banks of the city, and then he turned to another desk and took therefrom the Record of Applications which numbered no less than twenty hundred that date and they were coming in at the rate of about 20 a day.

From these positive proofs of the probity of the management and the economy of admiistration, we are induced to lay before our readers the benefits which THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION offers to single persons of either sex.

In those instances, foremost among which is that the premium paid by applicants is very small. Thus You will receive from $1,000 to $2,000 if you are married within one or two years, the very time that persons are most in order to give them a start in life. Mr. Members do not have to wait until they are dead—as in life insurance companies—before they can see the pleasure of placing a moity of their savings in an institutionwhich will return it to them with large interest at the most critical period of life. There is not a single one of women in California that does not spend more money foolishly in a month or two than would be the premium on a $2,000 policy in THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION. As an affiliated society for stockholders in this Association, it has received the cordial endorsement of such well known representatives men of this State as—Sheriff P. J. White, M. J. Kelly, Chief of Police & Burke; Chief Justice Wallace, H. W. Tully of Stockton, Dr. R. H. Brewer of Sacramento, Hon. J. K. Luttrell, ex-Member of Congress, Gov. G. G. Downey of Los Angeles, Hon. A. Crag, formerly of Santa Cruz, Michael Kane, formerly of Kane & Ward, liquor merchants; C. T. McMahon of Sand Ridge, and a host of such responsible and respectable gentlemen who could not be induced to lend their names to any enterprise that was not legitimate, nor endorse an association that was not safe.

"Want of room prevents us from saying as much in favor of this Association as we would desire, but full particulars regarding its workings can be ascertained from the By Laws of the Association, copies of which can be had by dropping a postal card to W. Price, Secretary, UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA, 1036 Mission street, San Francisco.

Could Hardly Stand on Her Feet.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I must tell you what your "Favorite Prescription" does for one. Before taking your "Favorite Prescription" I could hardly stand on my feet, but by following your advice, I am perfectly well. The "Favorite Prescription" is a wonderful medicine for debilitated and nervous females. I cannot express how thankful I am to you for you advice. Yours truly,
MRS. CORNELIA A. ALLISON, Peoria, Ia.

Satisfaction for Ten.

In our family for ten for over two years Parker's Ginger Tonic has cured headache, malaria, and in fact all other complaints so satisfactorily that we are in excellent health and no expense for doctors or other medicines.—Chronicle.

Is Catarrh, Bronchitis or Consumption Curable?

Dr. Fowler says it is, and he has grown gray in the practice of his profession, has held the Chair of Heart, Throat and Lungs in one of the best medical colleges of the East. The Government gave him letters patent on an apparatus for changing the air of a low altitude into one of a high, and vice versa. Said apparatus has been a great help to him in the treatment of lung difficulties. He gives no medicine in the above, but the treatment of lung diseases. Send for his treatise on diseases of the lungs, with a blank for his opinion of your case; it will cost you nothing. He can furnish you testimonials from half a dozen clerks and book keepers busily employed entering applications, answering correspondence, and attending to the various details of such an extensive business. We examined the books of the concern, saw the original applications, traced the entry through various books until it culminated in the cash book, and came away perfectly satisfied that THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION was a solvent and secure institution. Mr. Price, before leaving, opened the company's magnificent new safe and exhibited to us sufficient funds to form the major portion of many a nest egg. His also took from a recess therein a certificate of deposit for a large sum in one of the leading banks of the city, and then he turned to another desk and took therefrom the Record of Applications which numbered no less than twenty hundred that date and they were coming in at the rate of about 20 a day.

From these positive proofs of the probity of the management and the economy of admiistration, we are induced to lay before our readers the benefits which THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION offers to single persons of either sex.

In those instances, foremost among which is that the premium paid by applicants is very small. Thus You will receive from $1,000 to $2,000 if you are married within one or two years, the very time that persons are most in order to give them a start in life. Mr. Members do not have to wait until they are dead—as in life insurance companies—before they can see the pleasure of placing a moity of their savings in an institutionwhich will return it to them with large interest at the most critical period of life. There is not a single one of women in California that does not spend more money foolishly in a month or two than would be the premium on a $2,000 policy in THE UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION. As an affiliated society for stockholders in this Association, it has received the cordial endorsement of such well known representatives men of this State as—Sheriff P. J. White, M. J. Kelly, Chief of Police & Burke; Chief Justice Wallace, H. W. Tully of Stockton, Dr. R. H. Brewer of Sacramento, Hon. J. K. Luttrell, ex-Member of Congress, Gov. G. G. Downey of Los Angeles, Hon. A. Crag, formerly of Santa Cruz, Michael Kane, formerly of Kane & Ward, liquor merchants; C. T. McMahon of Sand Ridge, and a host of such responsible and respectable gentlemen who could not be induced to lend their names to any enterprise that was not legitimate, nor endorse an association that was not safe.

"Want of room prevents us from saying as much in favor of this Association as we would desire, but full particulars regarding its workings can be ascertained from the By Laws of the Association, copies of which can be had by dropping a postal card to W. Price, Secretary, UNIVERSAL BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA, 1036 Mission street, San Francisco.

THE PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA.

ASSETS	$1,019,573 33
LIABILITIES, Including Legal Reserve,	855,941 00
SURPLUS	$163,632 33

OFFICERS:
GEO. A. MOORE, President
W. R. CLUNESS, Vice-president and Medical Director
E. B. MOTT Jr. Secretary | J. M. PATTON Assis't Sec'y

DIRECTORS:
GEORGE W. BEAVER, SAMUEL LAVENSON,
ROBERT SHERWOOD, J. F. HOUGHTON,
A. S. DAMA, HUGH E. L. RUX,
COLUMBUS WATERHOUSE, ROBERT HAMILTON,
W. T. GARRATT, EDWARD CALDWALDER,
W. R. CLUNESS, D. W. EARL,
GEORGE A. MOORE, C. N. FOX.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
J. F. HOUGHTON, ROBERT SHERWOOD, C. N. FOX.

DEATH LOSSES PAID IN SAN FRANCISCO:

	Name	Amount.		Name	Amount.
1.	Anderson, Tufos	$1,000	32.	Hentman, George H	$12,000
2.	Severns, Clem	1,000	33.	Sloan, Orpi	10,000
3.	Reiderman, Charles	5,000	41.	Hughes, Matthew K	2,500
4.	Barnard, S. H	2,000	42.	Isaacs, Joseph	1,000
5.	Bolte, Lodar	4,500	43.	Jones, E. L	2,000
6.	Slade, Thomas M	2,000	44.	Jones, Gustavus A	2,000
7.	Cohen, William S	2,000	45.	Kent, William F	500
8.	Chesney, Parker B	1,000	46.	Kimball, J. P	2,000
9.	Carmichael, George	1,000	47.	Kennedy, Simon	500
10.	Cullen, Patrick	1,000	48.	Libby, Edgar C	2,000
11.	Clark, George W	500	49.	Lankman, Diederich	500
12.	Davis, Isaac	750	50.	Leich, Louis	500
13.	Easter, Albert G	1,000	51.	Lehman, Isaac	10,217
14.	Edwards, Caithas	1,012	52.	Mathesson, Mark J	2,000
15.	Elmers Abbie C	10,000	53.	Montgomery, John	500
16.	Parks, F. W	1,000	54.	Marion, Samuel	500
17.	Fleming, George	1,000	55.	O'Leary, Patrick	2,000
18.	Friedlander, Isaac	10,777	56.	O'Brien, Ellen A	2,000
19.	Feehan, John	2,000	57.	Pierce, Hiram G J	2,000
20.	Gauther, William	2,000	58.	Quinn, Jeremiah	2,000
21.	Green, Samuel	2,000	59.	Perkins, James E	2,000
22.	Greenebaum, Joseph	5,000	60.	Regan, John	250
23.	Gundlach, J. H	1,000	61.	Rogers, Edmond K	2,000
24.	Grigg, Price	250	62.	Ricks, J. H	3,166
25.	Gom, Jacob	1,000	63.	Silvey, Anthony	2,000
26.	Grimhawel, William	500	64.	Samist, Herman	2,000
27.	Maine, Carl H	2,000	65.	Schoen, Edward	1,000
28.	Kavarih, William L	10,000	66.	Sprekles, Henry	10,000
29.	Higgs, James H	500	67.	Sprekles, Gaery	717
30.	Hewn, George L	500	68.	Sullivan, John	500
31.	Hual, Charles	500	69.	Tonnes, John H	2,000
	Hoffman, Charles	500	70.	Vakwhalla, I. S	500
	Hoffman, Edward	500	71.	Wahr, Peter	500
	Hein, Peter J	500	72.	Winklebeck, John	500
	Hawley, Mary	500	73.	Woodward, Robert Ion	500
	Humphrey, Erwin D	2,000	74.	Zinkan, Peter	500
	Kaufman, Leopold	500
	Hoyt, James F	2,000		Total	223,663

The Policies of this Company contain NO RESTRICTIONS as to residence or travel, and by recent action of its Board of Directors, ARE INDISPUTABLE after three years.

Its Mutual Investment Policies contain a Guaranty of CASH SURRENDER VALUES, CASH DIVIDENDS AND VALUES IN PAID-UP INSURANCE.

Capable and Reliable Agents are wanted by this HOME Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE:
418 CALIFORNIA STREET, San Francisco, Cal.

Largest and Best-Selected Stock of WALL PAPER IN THE CITY.
G. F. CLARK & CO.,
645 MARKET STREET, S. F.
WINDOW SHADES IN ANY STYLE

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture.
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JONAS J. MORRISON,
LUMBER DEALER,
Corner Mission and Spear Streets. SAN FRANCISCO
LUMBER YARD
A Choice Assortment of Sugar Pine, Spruce' Cedar, Redwood, Puget Sound and Oregon Lumber Constantly on Hand.
Also Laths, Shingles, Shakes, Etc.

DIPHTHERIA.
REMEMBER THIS NO CASE CAN PROVE to be fatal where ROLLAND'S DIPHTHERIA REMEDY is used. It is a positive preventative and cure. Also cures croup. Stops the spread of Diphtheria. It will cure sore Throat. It is the magic in Croup and Whooping-Cough. It is strictly a Throat and Lung Remedy. BUT A CURE ALWAYS. Sold by WIDMER, corner Market and Third, KELL, corner Market and Fourth, San Francisco; and by all druggists. Office and Laboratory, 762 Mission street, San Francisco.

John Stow Geo. Lacombe
STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
630 MARKET STREET,
Under Palace Hotel. SAN FRANCISCO.

EXCELSIOR!! EXCELSIOR!!
Special Cars have Arrived WITH AN IMMENSE
Stock of Domestic and Imported Woolens of the NEWEST Designs and Styles, for the NEW STORE and SEASON,
ALSO THE LARGEST AND FINEST
STOCK OF GENT'S FURNISHING GOODS
IN THIS COAST, AND THE BEST MAKE OF EASTERN "PERFECT-FITTING" SHIRTS.
ALSO THE NEWEST STYLES AND PATTERNS IN NECK WEAR from New York and Paris.
Which will be sold at 25 EASTERN PRICES. Also a Large Stock of GENTS' AND YOUTHS' READY-MADE CLOTHING
Manufactured Specially for us at OUR NEW YORK HOUSE after the most Approved and Revised Styles and Patterns and Warranted Full Shrunk.
PANTS FROM $5 00. SUITS FROM $20 00.
OUR ONLY ADDRESS
NICOLL THE TAILOR.
PHELAN'S BUILDING,
816 and 818 MARKET ST., San Francisco.
RE-OPENED AND RESTOCKED
WITH A LARGER AND FINER STOCK OF
New and Second-Hand FURNITURE,
CARPETS, STOVES, ETC.,
CHEAPER THAN EVER. THANKING THE PUBLIC FOR PAST and Liberal Patronage. I hope to merit the same in the future. Give me a call. Auction sales solicited. Second-hand furniture wanted.
J. M. PEARLMAN, Auctioneer,
1124 Market street and 19 Turk street.

MRS. M. H. OBER, 326 SUTTER ST
BOSTON AND CALIFORNIA DRESS REFORM.
An Elegant COUTIL CORSET, to order, for $4. Worth Under Garments, (specialty, Children's Corset Waists, Cashmere and Merino Union Suits, Shoulder-Brace, Hygienic Corsets, Hose and Skirt Supports, Emancipation Waists, and Combination Suits. SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

HARVEY'S
HOT-WATER HEATING SYSTEM
SECURES A MILD UNIFORM TEMPERATURE throughout a house, without the trouble or litter of the open grate; a most healthful atmosphere without dry, parched air or noxious gases of the hot-air furnace or stove; a noiseless diffusion of heat without the bluster or crackling of the steam system.
Information or Descriptive Circulars sent free.
NO. 213 MISSION ST.,
Bet. Main and Beale. SAN FRANCISCO.

WE WILL WAGER $500.
That our Men's Suits for $7.50, $8.50, 9.50 & $10.
AND THE ONLY VALUE AND OFFER IN SAN FRANCISCO
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
504 and 506 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.
KNABE
PIANOFORTES.
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability

THE EYES! THE EYES!
DR. E. H. PARDEE,
OCULIST AND AURIST,
HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS PROFESSION, and will give personal attention to all who may favor him with a call. No assistants in the office. Large assortment of French artificial eyes constantly on hand. Office, 491 Pacific street, San Francisco. Office hours 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. Over Clay street Dock.

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Coal Bay coal.....$ 8 50 a ton
Eastport Coal ..... 7 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at ..... 8 50 a ton
Beetch Coal at ..... 10 00 a ton
West Hartley Coal at ..... 11 00 a ton
and Wellington Coal at ..... 11 50 a ton
Cube at the Home Rates Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1113 and 1115 Mission treet.

PHOSPHATE SOAP.
UNRIVALED FOR
Curing Skin Diseases and for Preserving a Healthy Skin.
THOMAS MONOD & CO. SOAP MANUFACTURERS SAN FRANCISCO
GOOD WATER

KNABE
PIANOFORTES.
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
504 and 506 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THE EYES! THE EYES!
DR. E. H. PARDEE,
OCULIST AND AURIST,
HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS PROFESSION, and will give personal attention to all who may favor him with a call. No assistants in the office. Large assortment of French artificial eyes constantly on hand. Office, 491 Pacific street, San Francisco. Office hours 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. Over Clay street Dock.

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Coal Bay coal.....$ 8 50 a ton
Eastport Coal ..... 7 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at ..... 8 50 a ton
Beetch Coal at ..... 10 00 a ton
West Hartley Coal at ..... 11 00 a ton
and Wellington Coal at ..... 11 50 a ton
Cube at the Home Rates Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1113 and 1115 Mission treet.

PHOSPHATE SOAP.
UNRIVALED FOR
Curing Skin Diseases and for Preserving a Healthy Skin.
THOMAS MONOD & CO. SOAP MANUFACTURERS SAN FRANCISCO
GOOD WATER

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL
DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS AND DEFENCE OF CATHOLICITY.
Published by THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO., Office—422 Clay street, San Francisco, California.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Per Year by Mail (or rate in advance) $2 00
Per Year by Mail (if not paid in advance) 2 50
Six Months (if paid in advance) 1 75
Six Months (if not paid in advance) 2 00
Three Months (if paid in advance) 1 00
Three Months (if not paid in advance) 1 50
To Ireland or any of the British Provinces (in addition to above) $1 00; (not in advance) 3 00
Address all communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to
P. J. McGINNIS,
Editorial Manager.
MONITOR Office, Box 2253 P. O., San Francisco, Cal.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second-Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR
is now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and as a substantial and reputation as a staunch not reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes it a valuable medium for advertisers.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.
To Correspondents.
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday morning of each week.
No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, and always write legibly, and on one side of the paper only. We reserve the right to reject any communication we may deem unsuitable.
All contributions and communications, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager.

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1882. NO. 25.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth..... Strive for Justice for thy Soul; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. [Ecclesia. iv. 28.

MISCELLANEOUS.

California FIG SYRUP SALT
A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
H. B. SLAVEN,
The Baldwin Building.
PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING, GOLD PLATING, SILVER PLATING,
Elegant and Durable.
ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED WORK CALLED for and delivered free. Lowest estimates given on orders. Satisfaction guaranteed in every particular. Prices the very lowest. Silver Plated Amalgamated Plate for sterling gold, used in quartz, placer and placer mining; warranted the best made. Order one Thousand reference. The trade supplied.
PLATING ESTABLISHMENT
On the Pacific Coast
San Francisco Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works
653 and 655 Mission Street, bet. New Montgomery and Third sts., San Francisco, Cal.
E. C. DEVERSON, Proprietor.
Awarded First Premium at every fair of the Mechanics Institute for the last Ten Years.

J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
S. E. cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,
Entrance, 37 Post St.

KANE & HEANEY,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN
Choice Butter, Cheese, EGGS, ETC.,
111 and 40 Centre Market,
Entrance Sansome street, Near Pacific street.
Consignments solicited, and all orders promptly attended to. Marketing delivered to all parts of the city.

STATHAM PIANOS
Are Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability.
SOLD FOR CASH OR INSTALLMENTS
At the Factory:
765 MISSION STREET, 765
Tuning and Repairing a Specialty. Send for Circular.
N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
641 Sacramento Street, San Francisco.
EMBALMING.
Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.
GEO. G. GERE, M. D.
and Surgeon,
304 Sutter St., San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS 11 to 1 and 6 to 7 p. m.

THAT OUR $12.50, $14, $15, $16.50 & $18 BUSINESS SUITS
Are of Better material and Better made than any other House.
THAT OUR $20, $22.50, $25, $27.50 and $30 DRESS SUITS
CANNOT BE EQUALLED ON THE PACIFIC COAST.
WE WILL WAGER $1000 That you can find no Superior Clothing and Better value, fit, etc. at HEIMAN BROS.,
Popular One-Price Clothiers,
1026 to 1030 Market St.
THAN ANY STORE IN THIS CITY
Largest assortment of Men's, Youth's and Boy's Suits, Overcoats, Hats, Caps, Furnishing Goods, etc., ever seen.
DON'T FORGET THE NUMBER AND NAME.

HALL'S PIANOS
TYLER ST.
HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS
AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE FOR COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, INFLUENZA, CATARRH, LOSS OF VOICE, Incipient Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Ask for the California Pulmonary Balsam, and take no other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome Street, S. F.

What the Land League is Doing.

Landlordism in its Last Gasp.

PITY THE SORROWS OF THE POOR SHONEENS.

TREASURER EGAN'S LETTER.

LANDLORDS TROUBLES TO EVICT TENANTS.

Paying Out Pounds to get in Peasnies.

A Truthful Article from the London Times.

The following letter from Mr. Patrick Egan, Treasurer of the Land League, to Hon. P. A. Collins, President of the Land League of America, is a magnificent proof of the earnestness and intelligence of the Irish people in the great contest which now engages their attention.

PATRICK EGAN, Treasurer.
PARIS, March 7, 1882.

My Dear Mr. Collins—I had the pleasure to day to acknowledge to you by wire, and also by Father Walsh, two remittances from the Irish National Land League of the United States, bringing the total amount received by me from all sources since the 7th of January—exactly one month—up to the munificent sum of £21 617. This, of course, does not include amounts received in Ireland by the Ladies Land League, or for the Sustentation Fund, and with the exception of £470 from the patriotic Irish exiles at Melbourne and Port Douglas, comes entirely from America, and constitutes a splendid

Poetry.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

LINES ON FINDING A SINGING BIRD DEAD IN THE SNOW.

BY REV. WILLIAM P. TRACY, S. J.

What a fount of joy, of rapture
Was this wood-born child of song!
Like a smile or ray of sunshine,
Through the air he passed along;
All the Summer he was making
Verses still, yet sweet of flow;
Ah! how sad to see his plumage
Flying with the flakes of snow.

Priest and bard would come to listen
To his thrilling matin lay
And the hard world sit all dreamy,
And the priest kneel down to pray!
Hear the winds above him sighing!
Do they whisper of his woe?
Like a bunch of blossing roses
Now he lies upon the snow.

Ah! no more we'll see him building
Happy homes of down and moss
Ah! no more we'll hear him chanting
On the chapel's golden cross;
In the earth rich seeds are hidden,
Flowers will come in Summer's glow;
But our garden will be lonely,
For the bard sleeps in the snow.

Philadelphia, March 15, 1882.

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

THOUGHTS OF IRELAND.

Oft I muse at close of day,
And my thoughts do softly dwell
On the dearest spot on earth to me
On the Isle I love so well.

And on the wings of fancy's flight
My spirit oft doth roam,
Back to the days of childhood,
To my dear old Irish home.

And as I gaze with gladness
On the scene I know so well,
Fancy takes a sudden break
And breaks the magic spell.

She shows me dear Old Ireland,
Filled with sorrow, woe and woe,
Governed by a tyrant race,
Bears Erin's bitterest foe.

And so I look and shudder,
For upon that blessed land
The people they are being crushed
By England's merciless hand.

And the Irish heart within me,
Sends forth this plaintive cry,
That the time will come when Erin
Will lift her banner to the sky.

So now beware—bold England,
For your reign is nearly o'er,
The Irish National Land League
Is already at your door.

San Francisco. W. J. A.

Literary Miscellany.

Kathleen of the Glen.

AN IRISH STORY FOUNDED ON FACT.

CHAPTER III.

The sun that rose next morning had not yet sunk behind the western hills when a traveller alighted from one of the public conveyances, which in those mountainous districts serve as a substitute for railways and stage coaches, and passing by the chapel already mentioned, wended his way towards the Glen. He looked eagerly around him; and on gaining the summit of a hill, quickened his steps as he turned from the high road down the lane which led to the cottage of Dermid.

What a sight was there! The cottage was in ruins; the roof was gone, and the blackened and still smoking rafters showed that fire had been employed in its destruction. The walls were standing, but broken and defaced; and some rose-trees, which the hand of Conenor had trained around the window, now trailed along the ground.

"Alas! alas!" exclaimed the astonished spectator, as he gazed on the scene of desolation; "can this be the work of accident, or of design? And the inmates—where are they?"

He flew towards a half-clad boy, who was crossing over some stepping-stones in the river, and exclaimed—

"Tell me, child, when was this house burned down, and what has become of its owner, Dermid?"

"Wha-at," said the child, unable to reply from amazement at the question, as well as the ignorance displayed by his questioner. The words were repeated with even more vehemence; and the boy, having gained the bank, seemed to have gained with it his self-possession.

"Do you not ken," he said, "that they are all away?"

"Who are away! Where are they all gone! Why is the house deserted and in ruins?"

"Oh, just Dermid, and Nally, and Kathleen. They went back in the riot; and Mr. Telfrair, the a-a-agent, came upon them for the money; and it's pay it they couldn't as he turned them out, and set fire to the house; for he said it wasn't worth repairing; and they're all away till America."

The torrent of ill news thus poured upon the listener's ear was more than he could withstand. He had braved many dangers—he had encountered years of toil—and, alike on the battle-field or on the lingering march—at the moment of action or in the weary watch of the night—he had stood firm to his post—unflinching in his duty; but a tale such as this spoke to his heart; and might well have crushed a more hardy one than he. He uttered not a word—not a cry; but, tottering back a few paces, he leaned for a moment against a tree for support, and at length sunk on the grass in a state of insensibility.

The child had passed, unheeding, on his way. No aid was near; and it was long ere nature's effort could bring back reviving consciousness. With it came all the horrors of the scene; and, senseless save to the absorbing idea, the soldier moged towards the ruin, assailed on his fancy at every step, and at length in mute agony around. He remained for hours in the same posture, and was still riveted to the spot, when, after a long and wearisome journey, Connor Connal, sick at heart, returned as night fell, and was proceeding homewards by way of the glen. His first impulse had been to go some miles round, and avoid passing the cottage; but then, he thought, "tis all that is left of her, and shall I not revisit her now desolate home?"

Little was he prepared for the scene of ruin and desolation which that once happy home presented to his view! The blackened walls, the smoldering fragments of thatch, proclaimed too well how soon the work of destruction had been begun—how rapidly carried on.

"Dane tyrant!" he exclaimed, "was it enough to take possession of the poor mansion, but must thou destroy it also? The owner was turned adrift, to secure to thy his little shelter: and now that little shelter is levelled to the ground. Woe, woe to our land when her rightful lords desert us, and strangers are sent to bear rule in their place!"

Such were the bitter expressions of mingled grief and indignation that burst from his lips as he hurried through the gateway, crossed his threshold, and passed on to the midst of the floor where once stood the kitchen. The recollection of the last evening spent here rushed upon him the last, fell heavily on his heart. Her voice, her sir, her manner, as, firm to her resolution of going, she yet uttered the last, the thought of parting from him—all rose with vivid coloring to his mind. Sobs choked his utterance, and tears rolled heavily down his cheeks.

Ere long he was startled by a sound, as of a stifled groan, that seemed to issue from the ruined wall beside the kitchen hearth. He turned toward the spot. Dark and gathering clouds, that indicated a coming storm, had partially obscured the moon. She now shone out with renewed splendor, and by her light he beheld the figure of a man reclining against a heap of stones; his pallid features wearing the appearance of something unearthly. Nor was this idea less likely to strike with awe the imagination of Connelian, when he recognized the features, pale and gastly as they were, of the son of Dermid. Horror-struck by the vision, yet possessed of too much moral courage to be overcome by the terror which it inspired, he stood some moments confronting the form, though not daring to accost it, until it slowly advanced from its resting-place, and gazing at him, exclaimed, "Connar Gooel! Ian, is it thus we meet again?"

"But is it yourself, Maurice, or is it your ghost that speaks to me? And oh! why is it that you have come here at this time, to find your home destroyed, your father, mother and Kathleen gone?"

Not regarding one another now as rivals, but as brothers in affliction, the two young men grasped each a hand of the other, and proceeded to hear and relate their respective tales of occurrences, which were mutually interesting. Maurice eagerly inquired into the cause of the desolation he had witnessed—hearing every particular with breathless attention, and then briefly told his own adventures.

Recovering from the fever, which had nearly cost him his life in the West Indies, he had obtained leave to quit his regiment, and to return home in attendance on a young officer, who soon after his arrival in England fell a victim to the climate which he had left. Maurice had watched him day and night, and he had only waited to see his remains laid in their last resting-place, and then hastened homeward, enriched by a dying bequest of his late master, in the expectation of rendering his family more comfortable than they had been for years past. What was now his disappointment and self-reproach at not having acquainted them of his arrival in England, instead of waiting to be himself the bearer of news which came too late! On what could he determine in his present perplexity! He could follow his friends to America—he might bring them back to their own country; but here they had no longer a home to which they could return, and the means he had saved would be greatly diminished ere he could procure one for them.

Connor tried every effort to calm the feelings and assuage the grief of his friend. He took him to his own home, and bestowed on him every consolation in his power, whilst his own heart was bursting with recollections of the past, and solicitude for the future.

In the time of our utmost need, Providence often sends us unexpected relief. It was but a few days after the event recorded here, that the village of Glenard was paralyzed by the unlooked-for return of its young lord. Great was the rejoicing occasioned by his arrival. The news soon spread throughout the neighbourhood, and Connor, with Maurice, who still lingered there, were amongst the crowd who flocked to the village on that evening to witness the illuminations, and to learn the reasons why and wherefore the young lord had come to take up his abode at the castle, in a manner so sudden and so unforeseen.

Night came. Connor was not wont to remain out so late; and his old blind mother sat by the fire waiting anxiously for his return, when she was startled by a knocking at the door, not loud, but continuous, as if of some person outside eager for admission. "Who is there?" said the old woman.

"May I come in?" said a gentle voice.

"Come in and welcome; but you must pull the latch outside, for I can scarce make my way to the door."

Quickly was the summons obeyed, and Hannah listened eagarly to the sound of the footstep as it approached to where she sat.

"Now tell me," she exclaimed almost breathless with sudden emotion, "how have you come here?"

"I have come, mother, a houseless wanderer, to ask for shelter and protection, have I believed it would not be refused."

"It is—it must be—the voice, and the tread of Kathleen, if she yet walks this earth."

A soft hand placed within hers was the only answer, but it was sufficient to confirm the truth of the conjecture which had before flashed before her mind, and it was instantly followed by a long and fond embrace. But, though her remaining sense, rendered more acute by her loss of sight, had sufficed to identify, to Hannah's utmost satisfaction, the person of the worn and wearied traveller resting by her side, with that of the one whom, next to her own son, she loved with the warmest affection, yet were both her senses and her reasoning powers quite inadequate to solve the mystery of how a girl whom, she knew to a positive certainty to be on the high seas, could at one and the same moment be here in her cabin, seated with her at her own fire-side.

Kathleen's tale of disaster and suffering was quickly but feelingly recounted. The ship in which the poor emigrants had ventured all their worldly possessions was not many leagues distant from the coast, when it encountered a terrific gale of wind. All night the crew battled with the elements, but were unable to make headagainst their fury; and, when morning dawned, they found themselves driven back with so much violence against the land, that the captain confessed his inability to manage the vessel, from her having on board an over abundance of passengers. They were at the time off the entrance to Lough Swilly, and as a last alternative he strove, by putting in there, to obtain shelter and safe anchorage. But though the rage of the tempest had in some measure abated, the ship was no longer sea-worthy, and had already began to fill with water. The men worked hard at the pumps, but this too was ineffectual. The boats were lowered, and as many as they could hold betook themselves to the mercy of the waves. Some left and shiftlessly and the rest remained to risk their lives to save ty of the firm guarantees the return of the a leaguer.

The Directors are Messrs. Wendell Easton, J. D. Eldridge, G. D. Frink, Grant Taggart, F. B. Willoughby.

ST. PATRICK'S GRAVE.

Away in the far North, in the quaint little graveyard of the Cathedral Church of Down, lies the grave of St. Patrick. In the saint's lifetime called Dun-doleth-Glasse, the town in which the honoured remains were interred became known as Downpatrick. This ancient borough has been singularly privileged in Irish ecclesiastical history in having not less than three saints interred in their old and venerable cathedral churchyard, the ancient chronicles telling us that—the grave in Down three saints do fill—Patrick, Brigand, and Columkille.

For centuries, and even up to the present day, the shrine of St. Patrick and of his great fellow-laborers in the cause of Irish evangelization has been annually visited by hundreds of pious pilgrims, the tradition of the neighborhood affirming the miraculous cures of physical ailments have been obtained by helpless sufferers. In the "Life of St. Patrick," written by the Nun of Kenmare, we find it stated that when the Saint died at Saul (a little village lying a couple of miles eastward of Downpatrick, on the shore of Strangford Lough) in the year 465, a dispute arose between his followers as to which place his remains should be removed. It was known that the Saint's wishes pointed in the direction of Armagh; but anxious to prevent dissension among his disciples over his remains, and unwilling to express a decided preference for either place, he gave instructions for his funeral to the effect that when his body was removed for interment it should be placed on a bier drawn by two young bullocks, which should be permitted to go without hindrance or guidance in whatever direction they chose, and that wherever the bullocks should stop there his remains should be buried. The bullocks stopped at Dun-doleth-Glasse, where his place of sepulture was accordingly selected. Close beside stands the Cathedral Church of Down, one of the most venerable ecclesiastical structures in Ireland, and nearly right opposite the southern side of the Cathedral tower, on the highest part of the old burial ground (which in itself forms a hill) is the grave of St. Patrick. To a stranger the first look begets disappointment. Instead of jealously guarded crypt or tomb, worthy even in a small degree of the great Apostle, the eye rests on a flat green sod (square), 7 feet long by 3 feet wide with a hole at the east end 20 inches square by 18 inches deep, which from tradition is the basin and by a continuation of visitors is rapidly developing into much larger proportions. Up to the year 1846 a substantial Irish stone cross, dating from centuries before, stood at the head of the grave, and formed a source of great pride to the people of Downpatrick, as well as of interest to the visitors; but in that year a band of vandals in the dead hour of Ireland's night dragged the sacred emblem from the grave of the Saint, and conveying it a short distance, deposited it with opprobrious in the common town drain. The indignation of the inhabitants was profound and on the action of the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral, who, at once offered a reward for his discovery. Ample evidence of the crime was adduced to prove the guilt of the vandals, and the cross was restored to its place at the head of St. Patrick's grave. Again, it was stolen, illustrious as it was, and was never found, but on that occasion it was unfortunately smashed into many fragments, and being after wards recovered, was deemed beyond repair, and was ultimately sold to a stone cutter, who, for a trifling consideration, allowed the fragments to be buried beneath the sod, and a new cross of Irish stone, of the same pattern, was erected in place of the old one. Some Scotchmen, who happened to be in Downpatrick at the time, and who had been deeply interested in the fate of the old cross, subscribed a sum of money to have it replaced in the place of the old one, and it now stands there, a fine specimen of Irish stone cross, the gift of Scotchmen to Ireland. Beneath the cross, and at the head of the grave, there is a small square of white marble, with the following inscription:

"Hic Jacet Sepultus Patricius Hibernorum Apostolus."

Beneath, in a circle, the following, and, to judge from some letters of his, which I have recently published in a pamphlet form, he has good reason to be so. His own father and mother were, he tells us, sent to preserve his grave through the active and fearless exertions of his nephew, Mr. Patrick Carlin, of Downpatrick, who, in the course of the last thirty-five years he has witnessed in the district in which he has ministered both as landlord oppression and extortion, the mere recital of which is enough to stir the blood of even the coldest and most phlegmatic. Here is a portion of the evidence he gives—Above all others the farmers' wives, mothers, and daughters have been the principal sufferers under the system of bloody landlordism. It is in the to touch and break the heart of any man to see these emaciated forms, the traces of toil and hardship on every feature of them, and the marks of misfortune which they are doomed to wear, and the poor food that thousands of them have to live on. Such as this hitherto been said of this class of the community: but no longer must this suffering be ignored. At the end of the year thirty-five I am at the service of the warm affection with which she retained their salutations. And yet, when the first transport of glad surprise was over many conflicting thoughts passed through the mind of the soldier, and filled his heart with varying emotions. Memory recalled the happy hours of childhood, when his cousin was the companion of his sports;—of boyhood, when he began to regard her with sentiments of fonder attachment;—of manhood, when those sentiments ripened into love; and she was to him, like a sunbeam, shedding light across his path-way, and cheering his humble abode. Then came the dread hour when he tore himself away from her presence. Still, go where he would her image was ever before him; in dangers and in difficulties, in sickness and in sorrow, that image seemed as a guardian angel to watch over him; and, despite of himself, he had ever looked with a longing anticipation to his return home to his country—to his friends—and to Kathleen. Now he had returned—he had met her—she had bended before him again, and—it was in the house of a rival! Yet that rival was the most generous and noble of his race, and had acted a brother's part by him. He had no certainty of his being an accepted lover; it was but his own suspicion; and he resolved to suppress his feelings, and enjoy the present without brooding over the past, and indulging gloomy surmises about the future.

(Concluded next week.)

How Women Learn.

Women everywhere use Parker's Ginger Tonic because they have learned by experience that it overcomes dampedness, indigestion, weakness in the back and kidneys, and all troubles of the sex.—Home Journal.

Carpet-beating and whitening. 353 Tyler, Oakland branch, 21st and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2,126. Cooking Box.

☞ Use nothing else but MERRY'S SOAP.

Our Young Folks.

THE LOCKSMITH'S CHANCE.

Bank Officers Who Were Willing to Pay for Talent.

Pat Lynn, the great locksmith of his day, was often sent for by presidents of banks and other great people, and he rather liked to be sent for, instead of going and waiting. So one morning Pat said he would come as soon as he had done his breakfast, and he happened to be a great deal later than usual this particular morning.

Pretty soon came the second messenger for Pat from the bank president, and as Pat started off with messenger No. 2. When he reached the bank he found the president pale and cadaverous, as if he had had a fever. They couldn't open the safe to get the money out for the business of the day; something or other was the matter with the lock. They were in a deal of a stew, and hailed Pat on his arrival with delight, for now they could open the safe.

Pat was bald-headed, and had a habit of running his hand over his pate, thus really rubbing his hair away. He wore spectacles as a general thing, but when he was particularly desirous of looking at anything, or was particularly excited, he took the spectacles off his eyes and fixed them on his forehead.

He now rubbed his hands over his head a minute, put his spectacles over his forehead, looked at the lock a half minute, worked at it with his tools a minute or two, and the lock was fixed all right and the safe as ready to open.

The president was delighted and so was the cashier. They shook hands with Pat, who received their salutations with a good deal of style.

"And now, Mr. Lynn," asked the president, what is your charge?

Pat put his spectacles a little higher, just a little, and said:

"One hundred dollars."

"What! Take hundred dollars for less than three minutes' work, Mr. Lynn! Why, this is outrageous," said the president.

"It is reasonable," said the cashier.

"All right," said Pat Lynn, rubbing his hand over his head, and then putting his spectacles a little higher over his forehead—just a little. "You won't give me my money—I won't give you my work. And I'll leave things as I found them." Here he took hold of the lock, and circumscribed it, just as if gear, as it was first, and so left the safe in precisely the same unopenable condition as he found it. Then he started to go home.

But the president and cashier, appreciating the situation, seeing what a bit they were in, begged Pat to let up on them, and fix the lock so they could open the safe.

Pat reasoned with them on request, but still kept his hand on the safe. It was all ready to open, but wasn't yet opened.

"Now, be reasonable in your charges; do, Mr. Lynn," said the bank president.

"Two hundred dollars," said Pat, rubbing his head and raising his spectacles once more.

"Why, this is downright robbery," cried the president.

"Might as well break into the safe as compel us to this extremity," said the cashier.

"All right," said Pat, circusing with the rock rapidly, before anybody could prevent him, and then opening the safe door by leaving it for the third time hermetically sealed.

By this time the president had his mad up. He ordered Pat out of his office, and went for a rival blacksmith. He came quick enough, and worked at the lock with a hand enough, but he didn't fix the lock, and he couldn't open the safe, and it got to be nearly 10 o'clock, and no money available yet.

In despair the third messenger was dispatched after Pat Lynn, who came back with a lot of extra dignity.

"Open the safe on my terms, Mr. Patrick Lynn," said the president.

Pat rubbed his head, put his spectacles way up on his forehead, and opened the safe.

"Now your terms," said the president.

"Three hundred dollars," said Pat.

The cashier protested, but the President paid the money, and Pat, as he left, gave $4[illegible] next time," remarked the president to the cashier.

"Extreme me," said Pat with dignity, "but my terms next time will be $500."

"You see," said the president to the cashier, as Pat left, "he is a man."

And Pat rubbed his head and took his check without a word. He was master of the situation, and he knew it.

The Small Boy, Goose and Pickerel.

One would hardly believe that a goose could be broken of the habit of going into the water, but a case of this kind has occurred at Gloucester. A boy owned a large gander, and he thought it would be a good joke to tie a fish-line to the leg of the gander, with a hook properly baited, and wait for the result. So he fired the gander with a line on one leg about ten feet long, at the end of which was a pickerel hook and a leg full bait. The gander was driven into the millpond, where he swam around for half an hour, when he came to the end of his line. Suddenly the gander felt a pull at his leg. He looked as surprised as the "Lone Fisherman" when he hooked the whale. The gander seemed to think there was something the matter with him, and he looked down at his feet under water to try and see into it. The pickerel began to yank, and the gander made up his mind that he was not well and wanted to go home. He started for the shore, but the pickerel on the hook wanted to go the other way, and it was a tough lick for a time. The gander, to those on shore who were watching, seemed frightened, and at times would act as though saying his prayers and asking for mercy, and then he would get up and try and fly ashore, when the pickerel would pull him back. They say it was a fine study to watch the expression on the features of the gander. He seemed to realize that a change was about to come over him, and while he hoped for the best, he seemed to be prepared for the worst. After half an hour of the hardest work he had ever done, the gander came ashore, and dragged a six-pound pickerel up the bank, and the boys came and took off the pickerel and put on another frog, and tried to induce the gander to go and take another swim, but he wouldn't have it. They say he must have crushed a noble nature. Not any more pickerel in mine, if you please and he flew off toward the barn, squawking as though his heart would break. This was several weeks ago, but since then the gander has never gone into the water.

☞ $1,500 a year can be easily made at home working for us. H. Hallett & Co., 102 Barclay street, New York. Send for their catalogue and full particulars.

READ! READ! READ!

The History of Sharboro & Co's Grocery Firm, the Pioneers of the Business in San Francisco.

At the end of this article will be found the business card of MESSRS SHARBORO & CO., grocers, No. 531 Washington street. The firm is one of the oldest and most respectable in the city, having occupied their present premises over twenty years, and built up their immense business by scrupulous integrity and fair dealing with their customers. There are several obvious reasons why this old and popular firm can supply the public with goods in their line cheaper than any other in the city, and at the same time give them better articles. In the first place they supply several of our large public institutions, such as the Industrial School, City and County Alms House, City and County Hospital, etc., and therefore buy and purchase in much large quantities that they can defy competition from having no immediate profits to pay other importers. In the next place MESSRS OF WASHINGTON STREET are at least one-half less than in the more central parts of the town, which gives them a great advantage in competing for public patronage. But the great cause of their success is the honesty and fairness of THEIR DEALINGS, THE CORRECTNESS OF THEIR WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, AND THE PROMPTNESS WITH WHICH ORDERS ARE ATTENDED TO ALL PARTS OF THE CITY. Years of experience confirms the confidence of the public in the superior quality of their goods, which after all is the grand cause of success in any business. THEIR WINES, imported or home manufactured, are all of the best brands that can be used for medicinal or domestic purposes. THEIR TEAS always come direct from the place of exportation, and never go through any other hands on reaching them; THEIR SUGARS are always sold at extreme prices; THEIR BUTTER AND CHEESE come from the best dairies in the State; and THEIR FLOUR is selected with the greatest care and prudence. We speak this particularly in the praise of

MESSRS. SHARBORO & CO.,

Because we have known them for twenty years to be honest men, and we feel proud of the Monitor ranks them among its patrons. Below will be found the price current list of this distinguished firm for March, and it will be found worthy the attention of the many dealers who read the MONITOR. A newspaper should always endeavor to assist its readers where to get the necessaries of life cheapest. The lowest of rents spoken of in connection with SHARBORO & CO. also applies to the old Washington, San Francisco and Clay street Markets below, in the same block, and explains the reason why we find all articles sold there so much cheaper than elsewhere. Those markets are low-rent and enable sellers at the most economical places to purchase meats, fruits and vegetables, when parties have laid in the supplies of GROCERIES at SHARBORO & CO's.

SHARBORO & COS. PRICE CURRENT LIST FOR MARCH, 1882.

SUGARS. REDUCED.

Dubes, lb. lb. Mills	11½
Extra Coffee	11½
Dry Granulated	11½
Golden C	10½
Golden D	10
Island, in kegs	9½
New Orleans White	11
New Orleans Yellow	9½

COFFEE.

Costa Rica Coffee, Green, lb.	19
Old Gov. Java Coffee, lb.	19½
Mocha Coffee, lb. Roasted	19½
French Ground Coffee, lb.	17½

TEAS. NEW CROP JUST ARRIVED.

Black Oolong Tea, lb.	50
Black English Breakfast Tea, lb.	75, 80, $1.00
Black Uncut, Ext. Black Tea, lb.	75, 80, $1.00
Japan Tea (natural leaf) lb.	75
Japan Young Hyson Tea, lb.	75, 80, $1.00
Green Gunpowder Tea, lb.	75

CANNED GOODS.

Tomatoes, W. den	11
Strawberries, W. den	11
Assorted Fruit, W. den	11
Assorted Table Fruit, W. den	11
Green Corn, W. den	11
Peas and Corn, W. den	11

EXTRACTS.

Assorted Flavoring Extracts, B. doz.	$1

MISCELLANEOUS.

Crackers, lb box	10
Soap, lb. bar	5
Soap, (pickled) 1 bbl.	$4.00
Soap, (pickled) 1 bbl. 2 gallons	$6.00
Soap, Castile, lb.	15
Rice, (choice table), lb. lb.	10
Tapioca, lb. lb.	10
Spices, assorted, B. doz.	$1.00
Pickles, assorted, 2 gals.	$1.00
Herd Bread, lb.	5
Pilot Bread, lb.	5
Eggs, 10 lbs.	$1.00

PROVISIONS.

Lard, lb.	17½
Lard, lb.	15½
Bacon, lb.	17½
Cheese, lb.	12½

FISH.

Mackerel, W. den	60
Mackerel, choice, 10 kit	$7.50
Herring, 1 kit	60
Herring, smoked, W. box	50

CANDLES.

Adamantine Candles, lb.	20
Wax Candles, lb.	25

COCOA AND CHOCOLATE.

Cocoa and Chocolate, lb.	15

FRUITS.

French Prunes, lb.	18
German Prunes, lb.	15
Raisins, lb. box	$1.50
Raisins, half box, lb.	$1.00
Citron, lb.	20
Walnuts, lb.	20
Almonds, lb.	20
Filberts, lb.	20
Cocoanuts, 1 doz.	$1.00

PICKLES.

Worcestershire Sauce, lb bottle	35
Pickles, Chow Chow, lb.	20
Bottle Pickles, lb.	20

MEAL.

Meals of all kinds, lb.	3½

FLOUR.

Having laid in a large supply of Flour before the late rise we can furnish our customers with First Class Flour at the lowest market price.

N. B.—THE MANAGER of our house having TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' EXPERIENCE in the grocery business in this city, and being an expert in buying large stocks of goods, is a guarantee that under his management we are able to sell first class GROCERIES CHEAPER than any other house on this Coast. Examine our goods and prices before purchasing our supplies, and judge for yourself. Economy is the result of trading with us. Wealth is the result of economy. Country orders promptly and carefully filled.

H. SHARBORO, Manager.

KNIGHTS OF ST. PATRICK.

Banquet at the Baldwin Traditional Toasts Splendid Speeches Song and Story in Honor of Ireland's Saint.

The Knights of St. Patrick wisely confided to none this year their annual banquet which had been allowed to fall into disuse in consequence of the sad state of Ireland through the fell influence of famine and the fraudulent course of the British Government. Accordingly on the evening of the 16th inst., in order to avoid the Lenten fast on Friday, a large number of the members of this patriotic organization and their friends assembled at the parlors of the Baldwin Hotel, and after an hour's social converse, they proceeded to the spacious dining hall, where they found a magnificent repast prepared for them, and which they had come prepared to enjoy. Judge M. Cooney, as President of the Society, occupied the Chair, having on his right Rev. A. Cullen, and on his left Dr. J. F. Gibbon. After grace was said the Knights and their guests discussed the numerous dishes presented to them, at the conclusion of which the Chairman announced that the edibles having been disposed of, the liberal portion of the prepared feelings would be commenced by reading the communications received from regretable parties by the Secretary, Mr. Cummings, in a very appropriate manner as follows.

Mr. President, Knights of St. Patrick and Friends—The brief time necessarily elapsed since my call to the chair, to make the evening unique it impossible to do more than a passing allusion to the subject. To mention the names alone of the illustrious patriots, heroes and martyrs who have adorned the pages of Ireland's history would be impossible on an occasion like this even though it were desirable. Heroism is differently defined. Some think it consists in the courage displayed on the battle field that constitutes it. I believe that the most logical evidence of heroism is the courage displayed in the humbler and civil walks of life; and that Ireland's proud record anything nobler than is shown by the patriots who have been drawn from his or her home by as dammatic a struggle for freedom as ever was fought for their land. Toiling and struggling against the most adverse circumstances to earn as much as would bring the necessaries of kindred and power for the cause of freedom everywhere, whenever and wherever they found it struggling for existence. Approve and as often exposed to more sublimely heroic deeds than those of the Irish Brigade at Fontenoy, when "like eaglets in the nest they beat back the army of the Duke of Cumberland. The heroism shown by the Irish race in defence of their nationality and their religion is admitted by all. The number who have sacrificed life and death for both, from St. Laurence O'Toole, to Father Murphy of '98, from the earliest martyrs to Irish nationality to the Manchester Martyrs, and the other martyrs now in jail for Irish nationality, and gathered around this festive board tonight where fealty and devotion to the land of our birth are renewed, the thought springs up, has that long line of heroes and martyrs suffered and died in vain. Shall our native land continue to be a mere province of England, or shall she assume her proper place as a nation. I believe that the dawn of that day already in the horizon, and that the rising of the sun will witness the full success of the hopes of the heroic dead martyrs of Ireland.

"The State of California," was responded to by Hon. Chas. Gildea, in a very interesting and well-filled address, alluding to the commerce of California, and exhibiting the vast strides which the State had made since the commencement of the war. Mr. Gildea's remarks were frequently applauded. "The Statesmen and Poets of Ireland," was the next toast, which was responded to in a very interesting manner by Mr. P. J. Tobin, who, in response to the list was "The City of San Francisco," which fell to the lot of ex-Auditor J. P. Dunn, and well did the gentleman do it, in a speech of some length he sketched the commercial advantages possessed by the Queen City of the Pacific, and pointed to that most inhuman Power, the English Government. It is celebrated, my friends, in pledges some written and others spoken, Ireland's hope will be watched, vigilantly watched, by her children, her valiant sons, and when that opportunity comes—"Why, he will ask if it will, England's diabolical work will be punished, and Ireland's rights be given to her divested [applause,] and here, my friends, the 17th of every March will be celebrated until Heaven's bright sun shall have dawn of the coming illustrious day, which will rank Ireland among the nations of the earth [applause]. Some sad and sentimental, which will give to old Erin the proud honor of being a leader to our grand, and glorious Republic [applause]. Applause? Oh, my friends, for the time when the tones of the melodious harp and lute the tones of the ravenous lion, will be heard all over our own fair land. Heaven speed the hour when Erin's day of sorrow and woe shall be found to take his place in Ireland, corresponding with that occupied in these United States by our glorious and immortal Washington. [Applause.] Any man who knows the Irish character must have hope, strong hope, that there is a bright future before Ireland. You can wrong the Irishman by indifference, by intimidation, by ignorance, but you cannot wrong him with impunity, because you have the power to do it. Do not wrong him in this with impunity because you think he is weak and you strong. He will convince you of your mistake though it may take him a lifetime to do it. He will convince you of your mistake in the broad daylight, and before your face. You need never fear being struck in the back by an Irishman. An Irishman is no coward. If you get his blood him, it will be in front. What I say of the Irish individual is equally true of the Irish nation. Nothing overcomes the nation of this can be given than the continuous contest which feeble Ireland is waging—unassisted by any ally—for her rights against the British Government. The British Government is growing weaker every day, when the nations of the world with Ireland. If I were a British statesman and had the interests of England at heart, and knew the Irish character as well as I know it, I would strongly advocate giving to Ireland what she justly demands [applause;] giving her the right to govern her people and to make her own laws [applause;] or I would feel, my friends, that if the English Government would not accede to this reasonable request the time was not far distant when the sons of the Irish race at home and abroad will take from England what she now asks. [Applause.] And when the time comes, Ireland will not be satisfied with what she now demands, but will insist upon interest and compound interest for the rights usurped by England for many ages. And, my friends, I would not be surprised to see the British Lion taken down and trampled in the dust and the green flag hoisted over Windsor Castle in order to pay that debt. [Applause.] And, gentlemen, if that should take place, and more unlikely things have taken place in the past, the verdict of humanity would be, "A righteous vindication, a just retribution." [Prolonged manifestations of approval.]

"The Republic of the United States" was responded to by Dr. J. C. Shorb in a speech of great length and delivered with the Doctor's accustomed oleaginous effect. During the delivery Dr. Shorb was greeted with rounds of applause. "Our Judiciary," in a speech was responded to by Judge J. F. Sullivan, which was creditable alike to his head and his heart, and which sketched in large but beautiful words the wisdom, prudence, courage and honesty which should characterize the judiciary of every land but especially California. Judge Sullivan's remarks met with hearty and well-deserved applause. At the conclusion of Judge Sullivan's speech, Hon. Judge Myrick of the Supreme Bench, was called upon and he complied by citing the many virtues for which Ireland's patron saint was proverbial, and asking the countrymen of St. Patrick to copy after their Apostle. Judge Myrick paid a glowing tribute to the character of the Irish people and particularly alluded to his dear dead friend—Rev. Hugh Gallagher, The next toast, "The Martyrs and Heroes of Ireland," was responded to by Mr. M. J. Cummings, in a very appropriate manner as follows.

Mr. President, Knights of St. Patrick and Friends—The brief time necessarily elapsed since my call to the chair, to make the evening unique it impossible to do more than a passing allusion to the subject. To mention the names alone of the illustrious patriots, heroes and martyrs who have adorned the pages of Ireland's history would be impossible on an occasion like this even though it were desirable. Heroism is differently defined. Some think it consists in the courage displayed on the battle field that constitutes it. I believe that the most logical evidence of heroism is the courage displayed in the humbler and civil walks of life; and that Ireland's proud record anything nobler than is shown by the patriots who have been drawn from his or her home by as dammatic a struggle for freedom as ever was fought for their land. Toiling and struggling against the most adverse circumstances to earn as much as would bring the necessaries of kindred and power for the cause of freedom everywhere, whenever and wherever they found it struggling for existence. Approve and as often exposed to more sublimely heroic deeds than those of the Irish Brigade at Fontenoy, when "like eaglets in the nest they beat back the army of the Duke of Cumberland. The heroism shown by the Irish race in defence of their nationality and their religion is admitted by all. The number who have sacrificed life and death for both, from St. Laurence O'Toole, to Father Murphy of '98, from the earliest martyrs to Irish nationality to the Manchester Martyrs, and the other martyrs now in jail for Irish nationality, and gathered around this festive board tonight where fealty and devotion to the land of our birth are renewed, the thought springs up, has that long line of heroes and martyrs suffered and died in vain. Shall our native land continue to be a mere province of England, or shall she assume her proper place as a nation. I believe that the dawn of that day already in the horizon, and that the rising of the sun will witness the full success of the hopes of the heroic dead martyrs of Ireland.

"The State of California," was responded to by Hon. Chas. Gildea, in a very interesting and well-filled address, alluding to the commerce of California, and exhibiting the vast strides which the State had made since the commencement of the war. Mr. Gildea's remarks were frequently applauded. "The Statesmen and Poets of Ireland," was the next toast, which was responded to in a very interesting manner by Mr. P. J. Tobin, who, in response to the list was "The City of San Francisco," which fell to the lot of ex-Auditor J. P. Dunn, and well did the gentleman do it, in a speech of some length he sketched the commercial advantages possessed by the Queen City of the Pacific, and pointed to that most inhuman Power, the English Government. It is celebrated, my friends in pledges some written and others spoken, Ireland's hope will be watched, vigilantly watched, by her children, her valiant sons, and when that opportunity comes—"Why, he will ask if it will, England's diabolical work will be punished, and Ireland's rights be given to her divested [applause,] and here, my friends, the 17th of every March will be celebrated until Heaven's bright sun shall have dawn of the coming illustrious day, which will rank Ireland among the nations of the earth [applause]. Some sad and sentimental, which will give to old Erin the proud honor of being a leader to our grand, and glorious Republic [applause]. Applause? Oh, my friends, for the time when the tones of the melodious harp and lute the tones of the ravenous lion, will be heard all over our own fair land. Heaven speed the hour when Erin's day of sorrow and woe shall be found to take his place in Ireland, corresponding with that occupied in these United States by our glorious and immortal Washington. [Applause.] Any man who knows the Irish character must have hope, strong hope, that there is a bright future before Ireland. You can wrong the Irishman by indifference, by intimidation, by ignorance, but you cannot wrong him with impunity, because you have the power to do it. Do not wrong him in this with impunity because you think he is weak and you strong. He will convince you of your mistake though it may take him a lifetime to do it. He will convince you of your mistake in the broad daylight, and before your face. You need never fear being struck in the back by an Irishman. An Irishman is no coward. If you get his blood him, it will be in front. What I say of the Irish individual is equally true of the Irish nation. Nothing overcomes the nation of this can be given than the continuous contest which feeble Ireland is waging—unassisted by any ally—for her rights against the British Government. The British Government is growing weaker every day, when the nations of the world with Ireland. If I were a British statesman and had the interests of England at heart, and knew the Irish character as well as I know it, I would strongly advocate giving to Ireland what she justly demands [applause;] giving her the right to govern her people and to make her own laws [applause;] or I would feel, my friends, that if the English Government would not accede to this reasonable request the time was not far distant when the sons of the Irish race at home and abroad will take from England what she now asks. [Applause.] And when the time comes, Ireland will not be satisfied with what she now demands, but will insist upon interest and compound interest for the rights usur

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1882.

Passage of the Chinese Bill.

Congress has at length meted out justice to the Pacific coast by passing the Chinese Bill, and if no undue influence is used upon President Arthur in order to induce him to veto the measure, every laborer, mechanic, and workingman with a family will have great cause to thank God for the legislation that will—for a time at least—put a stop to the influx of a barbarian horde that has already done much to demoralize the youth of the Pacific coast, a race that has driven the rising generation from the hives of industry and made them idlers and vagabonds, driving the boys into the prisons and the girls into lives of shame.

There are to-day, in California alone, thousands of men able and willing to work on railroads and other enterprises requiring unskilled labor, who are compelled to see the very bread taken from their mouths by a horde of slaves imported here by the shipload by monied monopolists who care nothing for the welfare of the white race so long as they can make millions of money out of docile labor. There are also other thousands of good, virtuous girls who were turned away from domestic employment and driven to disreputable courses, in order to make room for Chinese servants. Thus the white people who would make good citizens of the republic, and help to build up Christian society, are driven out of honorable employment, society is demoralized, and the whole coast made to suffer from competition against which it is impossible for white labor to combat.

The Methodist and Baptist preachers soon to think that the Chinese should be permitted to flock into this country in order that they might come under Christianizing influences, but the meagre results achieved in this direction during the last quarter of a century, when compared with the evils which the presence of the Chinese has spread among the laboring classes—shows how futile is the effort to wean the Asiatics from their pagan idolatry. "Self-preservation is the first law of nature," and the laboring classes on this coast, who have borne this injustice so long and so patiently, will hail with delight the passage of any measure which will give them relief; hence we hope the President's signature will complete the good work of Congress in this respect.

As there are many readers of the MONITOR who may not be familiar with the provisions of the Bill just passed by Congress, we append a synopsis of its provisions:

"That from and after the expiration of ninety days after the passage of the act and until the expiration of twenty years after its passage, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be suspended, and prescribed penalty of imprisonment not exceeding one year, and a fine of not more than $500 against the master of any vessel who brings any Chinese laborer to this country, during that period. It further provides that the classes of Chinese excepted by the treaty from such prohibition, such as merchants, students, travelers, diplomatic agents, and Chinese laborers who were in the United States on the 17th of November, 1880, shall be required, as a condition for their admission to produce passports from the Government of China, personally identifying them and showing that they individually belong to one of the permitted classes, which passports must have been endorsed by the diplomatic representative of the United States in China, or by the United States Consul at the port of departure. It also provides elaborate machinery for carrying out the purposes of the act. Additional sections prohibit the admission of Chinese to citizenship, by any United States Court, and construes the words "Chinese laborers" to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining."

As a faint idea of the extent to which Chinese competition has affected the best interests of the industrial classes, we may safely state that there are at least ten thousand Chinese employed in this city alone, whose wages will average a dollar a day, and whose presence keeps that number of white people out of employment. They are to be found by the hundred in cigar, clothing and shoe factories, canneries, and similar institutions where the labor of white boys and girls could be usefully employed to the benefit of themselves and the whole trading community, as the latter would spend all their earnings among the storekeepers, physicians, dentists, and other professions, while the Chinese spend scarcely a cent for any purpose, save the bare subsistence they derive from their native rice and the meagre clothing they wear—all of which comes from China. The hotels and boarding houses also swarm with Chinese servants whose places could be supplied by decent girls. In the Palaces and Grand hotels alone, we are reliably informed that nearly five hundred Chinese are employed, one hundred and forty of these doing laundry work while white women would gladly accomplish for low wages. Gangs of Chinese are also employed on the steamships and by the railroad companies, while in the mining regions of the North in many places they outnumber the whites. Yet these people build no churches, erect no schools, found no charitable institutions, raise no families, perform neither military nor jury duty, but are mere leprous leeches who suck the life blood out of our laboring classes and their children, who have to sigh and starve in silence, whilst they behold every avenue of industry monopolized by Mongolians who have no interest in the country save to make what money they can and then return to their Asiatic home and paganism.

This fact was very forcibly dwelt upon by Hon. John F. Miller, of this State, in his speech in the Senate on Chinese immigration, in the concluding portion of which he said:

"If you ask me how we may best insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare on the Pacific coast, I answer by passing this bill and enforcing its provisions to the letter.

"Let the Chinese! California for Americans and those who will become Americans.

"'If you would secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity,' then must the same place reserved in which, and upon which, posterity can exist. What will the blessings of liberty be worth to posterity if you give up the country to the Chinese? If China is to be the breeding ground for peopling this country, what chance of American posterity? That trust ought not to be betrayed. If the Chinese should invade the Pacific coast with arms in their hands, what a magnificent spectacle of martial resistance would be presented to a startled world! The mere infiltration of an element so foreign and of our Western shore by force would rouse the nation to a frenzy of enthusiasm in its defense. For years a peaceful, yet a strategic conquest has been in progress, and American statesmanship has been almost silent, until the people have demanded action.

The land which is being overrun by the oriental invader is the fairest portion of our heritage. It is the land of the vine and the fig tree; the home of the orange, the olive, and the pomegranate. Its winter is a perpetual spring, and its summer is a golden harvest. There the northern pine peacefully sways against the southern palm; the tender azalea and the hardy rose mingle their sweet perfume, and the maple vies rainbow tints with the myrtle. Its valleys are rich and glorious with luscious fruits and waving grain, and its hills

'Mountains like giants stand,
To sentinel the enchanted land.'

"I would see its fertile plains, its expatiated vales, its wine clad hills, its deep blue canyons, its forested mountain sides, dotted all over with American homes—the homes of a free, happy people, resonant with the sweet echoes of flaxen haired children, and ringing with the joyous laughter of maiden fair—

'Soft as her clime, and sunny as her skies.'

Like the homes of New England; yet brighter and better far shall be the home, which are to be moulded in that wonderful valley, the homes of a race from which shall spring

'The flower of men,
To serve as model for the mighty world,
And be the fair beginning of a time.'"

Edith O'Gorman Captured by Chief Crowley.

Nearly everybody has heard of that brazen-faced fraud who goes under the name of Edith O'Gorman, and who advertises herself as "the Escaped Nun." For the information of those among our readers who may not know her antecedents, we would state that this woman was originally a member of a Religious Community for a few months, but finding that she had no vocation for a religious life, she stated one night from her temporary domicile, and, after a few days run in the world, wrote back to her spiritual superior that she had made a fatal mistake, was heartily sorry for the unfortunate step she had taken, and asking to be received back again into the convent. The superior of the Community informed her that she could not be readmitted into the house at present, but perhaps, at some future time, when she had proved her vocation for a religious life by perseverance, penitence and prayer, she might again resume her position in the novitiate.

Finding that she had taken a fatal step in the wrong direction, poor Edith had not the grace to regain her position, so she went from bad to worse, through all the phases of sin in its most shameful form, and finally she fell into the hands of one of those sharps, who thought they discovered a big bonanza in the scheme of advertising her as "the Escaped Nun," printing a book containing "adventures" which never occurred, and relating "incidents in convent life" that had no foundation, save such as the scurrilous writer of the whole mess gave them.

Thus charged, primed and equipped, Edith O'Gorman was ready for business; she was then introduced to Preachers and screechers

And enlivening lectures,

Who were enthusiastic in her praise and ushered her on the lecture platform as the virago who was "to make Rome howl!" But poor Edith kept going from bad to worse all the time, until at last even the lantern-jawed preachers lost their grip on her, and Beecher wouldn't touch her with a forty-foot pole, so the unfortunate creature became a dagger to the public and her "lectures" were financial failures. In the meantime, however, Rome didn't "howl," but the Church kept on her way just as if such a person as Bridget O'Gorman had never been born.

Finding, at length, like many another paid-out calumniator of the Church, that her obscene occupation was waning in this country, Edith (as she calls herself since her perversion) went over to England and threw herself into the arms of the Evangelicals, who heralded her name over the land as a new arrival from America and one who was prepared to repeal all the "horrors" of the "Romish Inquisition in America." The bait took among the country bumpkins, where Edith coined money; but the Cockneys could not be so easily deceived; hence in London Edith did not draw a corporal's guard, so she repaired to the rural towns, and there she set society by the ears in consequence of the stupendous lies she manufactured to suit her sectarian spectators. Among other things, Edith wrote some letters to the press when she was "lecturing" in Paddington, and in one of these missives she detailed the following "yarn," which proves her to be a woman of remarkably vivid imagination, as well as a regular mystery regarding names, places and dates

"One of the most celebrated law suits of the time was Edith O'Gorman's great case in the courts of San Francisco, California, in June, 1872, when she brought suit against the Jesuits for libel. Judge Lounsbery was the judge of the court; her counsel, Judge Taylor, counsel for the Jesuits, Col. Dudley and Barnes, two well known lawyers throughout San Francisco. The Jesuits, knowing Edith O'Gorman to be four thousand miles away from New Jersey, where she lived a Nun, bribed sixteen men to perjure themselves by swearing her to be a woman from Melbourne, Australia, named Fanny Woodward, and not Edith O'Gorman at all. (Red raised my friends for her in a strange city in the person of Jesuits from Providence, R. I., who knew her and family intimately, two of the ladies even attended her here, and one of them her bosom friend before she entered the convent. The testimony of these ladies and two gentlemen from Australia who had known the woman Fanny Woodward for sixteen years before, to prove themselves the Jesuits, were fined seven thousand dollars for libel, and fifteen thousand dollars for perjury. Although the Jesuits of San Francisco thought to crush Edith O'Gorman by perjury and falsehood, they themselves were crushed, whereas her glory and triumph were greater than ever. This celebrated lawsuit was not only the great topic of the newspapers throughout the United States, but English and Scotch papers contained a synopsis of it," etc.

Reading such a straightforward story in the Paddington Mercury, of course the Paddingtonians believed every word of it, and the way they rejoiced over Edith's victory over the Jesuits and Bishops was a sight seldom equalled. But at length Edith's letter fell under the observation of a priest—a convert to the Catholic Church—and nothing loth, he wrote to the Archbishop of Paddington. This Reverend clergyman determined to discover the crookedness of Edith's story, so he quietly sent a message by cable across the Atlantic to New York, and thence by wire to this city, asking this brief but very important question

"Did Edith O'Gorman, ten years since, bring and gain libel action against the Jesuits?"

Then while Edith the Bad was dozing off her potations, and rejoicing over the shillings she had received from John Bull, an explosion equal to a dynamite bomb was being quietly prepared for her teetotal extinguishment.

The message in question was addressed to P. Crowley, Chief of Police, San Francisco, in whose hands it was placed one fine morning, and he, like a man of business, sent back this short but sufficient answer:

"Neither action nor judgment against Jesuits."

This dispatch was subsequently published in the Paddington Mercury over the signature of Rev. Lord Archbishop Douglas, and the unfortunate Edith the Bad, of Paddington and all the Paddingtonians deep in disgrace! And thus it came about that the evangelizing Edith the Bad was quietly captured by Chief Crowley and the Atlantic cable, and another story added to the intrigue received an electric shock that squelched it.

Brave Words from Bishop Dorrian.

The most important news from Ireland this week is the following extract from the Lenten Pastoral of Bishop Dorrian, of the Diocese of Down and Connor, who thus alludes to the Land Bill and the martyrs who are suffering incarceration because they dared to speak for Ireland's regeneration from English misrule. Speaking of the Land Bill, the Bishop says

"As far as the great majority of those interested are concerned, it might as well not be on the statute book at all. We grieve and condemn outrages; no language can depict a tragic pain and horror they excite; but as I blood that circles through the natural body becomes impoverished and leads to sickly eruptions, so we may not be surprised when we notice in the social or body politic, evidence of irritation in the crimes by which we are appalled. And as the cure in the one case is by soothing and purifying applications, so the cure in the other ought not to be irritation or coercion in the unpalatable and strange prescription of those who are looked upon and believed to be not only innocent of crime but as real and unselfish benefactors of their fellows. In the first place, would any remedy be yet offered? By all means let the "village suffice" be punished; and for this the criminal law is quite adequate; but to suspend the constitution, and to throw into prison men among the best in the land, who have not been convicted of any crime, and many of whom continue, we are informed, to do weekly communicate, even in jail, seems to be a remedy more to be feared than the disease. Let us be honest and consistent—whatever the result. We think this policy more than a mistake; for, to tell people they have been hawkly treated in the past, to give them more of it, is puzzle them by coercion seems not wise or just.

Bravo! Bishop Dorrian! True words and bravely spoken! The men who are "weekly communicants, even when in jail," are the very men whom Gladstone, Forster, and the other myrmidons of English injustice have cast into prison as "dangerous" to society! And right glad are we to hear that the patriots of Ireland in her present struggle are as true to the faith in the jail as they were out of it. Such patriots are artificial faith will lead Irishmen and Irishwomen everywhere, to renew again and again the prayer—"God save Ireland!"—and to add the petition that God may bless the patriots who are thus unjustly punished for loving her!

Good Bishop Dorrian, too, has heralded over the earth words that tell the Irish people everywhere that "the men in the gaol" are treated as they are because they are receiving; that they are not incendiaries or communists, but pure patriots, whose practical Catholicity is demonstrated, as the Bishop himself says, by being "weekly communicants, even in jail."

Insane Bigotry Against Catholic Institutions.

There are three papers on the Pacific coast that are envious of notoriety as "no-Popery" organs, and these journals take every opportunity to vent their spleen against Catholic institutions in order to gain the sympathy and the subscriptions of that class of narrow-minded bigots whose intense ignorance makes them hate a Church and a people of whose religion they know as little as a pagan does about the Christian religion.

One of these papers is published in this city, another in Sacramento, and a third in Portland, Oregon, from whence we received a marked copy last week. From the general make-up and tone of its article, in Polaris, as the journal in question is called, seems to be a very weak imitation of the Pickwyck of this city. The latter, however, has the merit of brains, which the former supplies by brass. The Polaris seems to be specially inquisitive about the management of St. Vincent's Hospital in Portland, which was founded by the Sisters of Charity, managed by them, and made a magnificent success through their excellent judgment and their untiring labors. The success thus achieved has set the cauldron of jealousy and bigotry boiling among a few political parsons and ex-preachers, who want a smelling committee appointed in order to investigate the affairs of an institution which does not receive a cent of the peoples' money, save such small donations as the charitable citizens of every creed donate to the Sisters of Charity through respect for them and for the love of doing good. To ask such an institution for an annual accounting of its income and expenditure has already been described by the Oregonian, the leading daily paper of Oregon, as "most impertinent and contemptible," and all unprejudiced people will agree with the Oregonian in its concise conclusion. But this does not suit the Polaris, as it asks a few additional questions which we propose to answer for the benefit of such people as may be of the same way of thinking as the Pecry-baiting organ of Portland. The replies to the interrogatories will also answer for all Catholic institutions of a similar character, just as they do for the hospital in question.

The queries propounded by the Polaris are:

"Since other benevolent institutions in this city, as well as elsewhere, make annual reports of their operations, why not the St. Vincent Hospital?"

"Has Romanism a kind of 'pre-emption right' to secrecy in all its operations?"

"Every business man in the city understands quite well how the St. Vincent Hospital usually appeals for annual support from our city. Will some one tell us where it all goes and what is the financial status of this institution?"

To say in reply to the first question that the action of one or more institutions in any direction has a binding force upon others, is sufficient rebuttal. St. Vincent's Hospital has no share-holders to gratify, it has no taxpayers to satisfy, and, inasmuch as it has never received a single cent of public funds from the city of Portland or the county of Multnomah, the citizens thereof have no claim whatever for an accounting, nor have they asked for it.

The second question asks if Romanism has a kind of "pre-emption" right to secrecy in all its operations? The answer to which is that "Romanism" neither asks nor accepts any kind of right save that which she is entitled to through the laws of God and under the American Constitution. These she must and will have, and neither the Pickwyck nor the Polaris can take a little thereof away from her.

There is no "secrecy" about Catholic hospitals, and St. Vincent's is no exception. But there is a great deal of secrecy about some other sectarian institutions in Multnomah county, that, if revealed, would show a state of revolting rottenness equal to anything ever depicted by Dickens. St. Vincent's Hospital is open to visitors every day in the week, patients have them daily; and let the Polaris—if it is so anxious for knowledge—send a representative to see for himself. He will be hospitably received, will be taken through all the apartments and wards, and, when he has seen all, he will leave his "prudence behind him at the portal of the hospital entrance.

The third question asks where all the money goes to that the people of Portland contribute to the support of the hospital. We can tell him that the people of Portland

The Pope's Encyclical Letter.

We publish this week, in a supplement, the recent encyclical letter of the Sovereign Pontiff, in which we call the special attention of our readers who desire to have correct information concerning the condition of the Holy See in its relations to the educational question and on the subject. The Pope clearly points out the sources from whence danger to the Church is to be apprehended, and gives a clue to Catholics in every country regarding the machinations of the secret societies of our holy religion. His Holiness also dwells upon the important necessity of sustaining the Catholic press as the strongest civil power by which to combat the evil designs of demagogues as well as the fearful defender of the dogmas of the Church against the assaults of her defamers. Catholics who read the Pope's letter carefully will gain much solid information that will give them fresh courage to fight the good fight which is destined to end in a glorious victory for our Faith.

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

Every true Catholic loves the Immaculate Mother of God, and the more we read about the earthly sorrows and the heavenly glories of the queen of Heaven, the more ardent our devotion and the greater purity of our lives; hence the Monitor has gladly accepted the kind proposition of a devoted priest to transcribe for our readers several beautiful extracts relating to the Blessed Virgin, from a periodical published in Munich, entitled "Bulletin des Sciences de la Religion et Moralisme" as carried out to its logical development by an American writer, himself a Agnostic of the most advanced type, in order to prove that the Christian religion has moved to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where a solemn Requiem Mass for the departed sang. Rev. Father King was chief celebrant; Father McSweeny, master of ceremonies; Father Coyle, deacon, and Father Smith, subdeacon. A considerable number of other clergymen, as well as a large congregation, assisted at the sacred ceremonies used by the Church on such mournful occasions. The choir was full and effective. The casket was profusely covered with floral decorations, the tokens of affection offered to the memory of the deceased by those by whom he had instructed unto justice. The couple of the Academy and two other institutions conducted the funeral, and the marble hearse in which would cause Spencer himself to blush, and I will allow Dr. Denslow to speak for him well, in order that your readers may judge for themselves what is the true tendency and objectionable character of the Monitor. The writer in Harper's Magazine thus speaks of the remarks to those subjects, number, lyme and theft, implying, moreover, that Father Gury has offended on another point, too "unutterably utter" to be mentioned in the pages of that chaste journal. Let us see what Freethinkers itself has to say on these points.

"It is generally believed," says Dr. Van Buren Denslow, "to be moral to tell the truth, and immoral to lie. And yet it would be difficult to prove that nature prefers the true to the false. Every bee she makes the honeyed nectar free, and only after years, or thousands of years, do we have ability to detect her in her lies. Nature knows almost every animal with the faculty of speech in order to sell it is designing from the broke force of its superiors. Why, then, should man be the only one who is guilty of lying? Why, when it is his interest to appear wise concerning the Church, the one great spiritual organization which is able to resent, and must, as a matter of life and death, oppose the progress of science and modern civilization. What "science and modern civilization" tend to we have already seen; it is simply the descent of Averno. Let us look at ever Christian man who reads these lines, be he Catholic or Protestant, be every father, husband and brother, who has regard for woman and the elevation of the race, whether, when they read those darling principles thus drawn out to their logical results, and in the subversion, the destruction and the demise of morality, are making a desperate endeavor to get control of the education of the rising generation for the declared purpose of indoctrinating them with the principles of bestialism and anti-Christianism, it is not time to pause and consider solemnly, mournfully, and honestly, whereunto this thing shall end.

The importance of the subject must be my apology for the length of this letter. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

AN ENGLISH CATHOLIC.

DEATH OF A CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

At St. Joseph's Academy, Oakland, on the 22nd inst., took place the death of Brother Fenton, one of the most amiable and respected members of the Order. He had occupied his connection with the world in 1870, when he attached himself to the community of Christian Brothers at St. Mary's College, and had from that time almost till the day of his death been assiduously, continuously and effectively in his holy vocation. He was 43 years of age, and was born in the County Derry, Ireland. For a considerable time past he was a martyr to inflammatory rheumatism, which he bore with patience and a murmur and manfully kept his post of duty. He was held in the greatest esteem by those who had daily opportunities of observing his merits. The day before his demise, he seemed to be advancing his claims as usual, and therefore himself call was unexpected. He was, however, found fully prepared for the dread occasion, and departed like the wise virgins to meet the bridegroom with our holy religion could bring him. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of persons, friends and other friends of the Christian Brothers. Forming at Mt. Joseph's Academy, with Brother Cleman and a brother of the deceased as chief mourners, and six of the Brothers of the Academy as pall bearers, the procession moved to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where a solemn Requiem Mass was duly celebrated sung. Rev. Father King was chief celebrant; Father McSweeny, master of ceremonies; Father Coyle, deacon, and Father Smith, subdeacon. A considerable number of other clergymen, as well as a large congregation, assisted at the sacred ceremonies used by the Church on such mournful occasions. The choir was full and effective. The casket was profusely covered with floral decorations, the tokens of affection offered to the memory of the deceased by those by whom he had instructed unto justice. The couple of the Academy and two other institutions conducted the funeral, and the marble hearse in which would cause Spencer himself to blush, and I will allow Dr. Denslow to speak for him well, in order that your readers may judge for themselves what is the true tendency and objectionable character of the Monitor. The writer in Harper's Magazine thus speaks of the remarks to those subjects, number, lyme and theft, implying, moreover, that Father Gury has offended on another point, too "unutterably utter" to be mentioned in the pages of that chaste journal. Let us see what Freethinkers itself has to say on these points.

"It is generally believed," says Dr. Van Buren Denslow, "to be moral to tell the truth, and immoral to lie. And yet it would be difficult to prove that nature prefers the true to the false. Every bee she makes the honeyed nectar free, and only after years, or thousands of years, do we have ability to detect her in her lies. Nature knows almost every animal with the faculty of speech in order to sell it is designing from the broke force of its superiors. Why, then, should man be the only one who is guilty of lying? Why, when it is his interest to appear wise concerning the Church, the one great spiritual organization which is able to resent, and must, as a matter of life and death, oppose the progress of science and modern civilization. What "science and modern civilization" tend to we have already seen; it is simply the descent of Averno. Let us look at ever Christian man who reads these lines, be he Catholic or Protestant, be every father, husband and brother, who has regard for woman and the elevation of the race, whether, when they read those darling principles thus drawn out to their logical results, and in the subversion, the destruction and the demise of morality, are making a desperate endeavor to get control of the education of the rising generation for the declared purpose of indoctrinating them with the principles of bestialism and anti-Christianism, it is not time to pause and consider solemnly, mournfully, and honestly, whereunto this thing shall end.

The importance of the subject must be my apology for the length of this letter. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

AN ENGLISH CATHOLIC.

DEATH OF A CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

At St. Joseph's Academy, Oakland, on the 22nd inst., took place the death of Brother Fenton, one of the most amiable and respected members of the Order. He had occupied his connection with the world in 1870, when he attached himself to the community of Christian Brothers at St. Mary's College, and had from that time almost till the day of his death been assiduously, continuously and effectively in his holy vocation. He was 43 years of age, and was born in the County Derry, Ireland. For a considerable time past he was a martyr to inflammatory rheumatism, which he bore with patience and a murmur and manfully kept his post of duty. He was held in the greatest esteem by those who had daily opportunities of observing his merits. The day before his demise, he seemed to be advancing his claims as usual, and therefore himself call was unexpected. He was, however, found fully prepared for the dread occasion, and departed like the wise virgins to meet the bridegroom with our holy religion could bring him. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of persons, friends and other friends of the Christian Brothers. Forming at Mt. Joseph's Academy, with Brother Cleman and a brother of the deceased as chief mourners, and six of the Brothers of the Academy as pall bearers, the procession moved to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where a solemn Requiem Mass for the departed sang. Rev. Father King was chief celebrant; Father McSweeny, master of ceremonies; Father Coyle, deacon, and Father Smith, subdeacon. A considerable number of other clergymen, as well as a large congregation, assisted at the sacred ceremonies used by the Church on such mournful occasions. The choir was full and effective. The casket was profusely covered with floral decorations, the tokens of affection offered to the memory of the deceased by those by whom he had instructed unto justice. The couple of the Academy and two other institutions conducted the funeral, and the marble hearse

MONITOR MENTION.

Archbishop McCabe has been made a Cardinal.

Father Shorky has gone to Paris to recuperate his health.

—Best Pictures taken at the Imperial, 724 Market street.

—The death of the Poet Longfellow, who died on the 24th inst. will be more fully noticed next week.

—Rev. Peter Healy, of St. John's Catholic church, who has been ill with typhoid fever for the past month, is now convalescing.

—We are compelled to crowd out several editorial articles this week in order to make room for matter that will not do hold over.

—London Truth says that Hon. Phillip de Hornbrook, second son of Count d'Aquila, is about to marry Miss Mackey, daughter of John W. Mackay.

—George Hass hereby informs the public that his elegant candy store, in the Phelan Building, is now open, with the finest display of home made and imported candies ever offered.

—Next week we will give our readers copious extracts from the two brilliant speeches delivered by Messrs. Sexton and Healy in Parliament upon the Land Act.

—Henry George lectured in Glasgow, Scotland, on St Patrick's Day. His theme was "A felon's cap is the noblest crown an Irishman can wear," and he had a great reception from an immense audience of enthusiastic Irish residents.

—The steamship City of Tokio, which arrived Sunday, from Hongkong, brought 1070 Chinese laborers. The arrivals by the Tokio make about ten thousand Chinese arrived this year, from January 1st, 1882.

—H. J. Sullivan, this capital, will guarantee to permanently cure Corns, Warts and Inflammation of the Bunion, Sore Eyes and Eruptions of the Skin. Satisfaction guaranteed. Office, 1017 Market street.

—Now that Lent is here, and fish diet the rule on certain days, our readers will find a very comprehensive list of fish, game, etc., in our advertising columns over the signature of Lechmann, 14 Sansome St., near Pacific.

—After twenty-five years of study and practical experience, Professor Loomis has put spectacles to all sights on examination of the eyes, which is free. N. Manasse, 211 Kearny street, Opposite Bank of California.

—P. J. Thomas, the well-known printer and publisher says he is now using P. Moses Bark's Eureka Cough Syrup for a severe cold and hoarseness which was permanently relieved. This celebrated specific is manufactured at 1211 Bryant.

—The court martial has sentenced Mason, who tried to shoot Sullivan, to five years' imprisonment in the Army, loss of all pay and allowances due or to become due, and eight years imprisonment in the Military penitentiary.

—My Dealy, M. D., it is said, is about to be entertained by the gentlemen who sit with him in Parliament at a Parliament house "dinner in the House of Commons." Place Lt. Gov. Mulalley, of the success of the member for Wexford's address.

—St Patrick's Day, in New York was appropriately observed by the Knights of the Sixty Ninth regiment to the Cathedral, to attend Pontifical High Mass, on the day of the patron Irish American present in honor of the great apostle. All honor to Colonel Savanagh, his officers and men.

—The custom of giving Easter cards has become quite general among Christian people. The well known art dealers, Messrs Sinn Gen. & Co., 11 Kearny street, have received Easter cards, together with art goods of every description, from the Eastern manufactories.

—John L. Burns, the popular traveler for the celebrated DAVENPORT whiskey is now visiting the trade in this city. Gentlemen, if you want your friends every where will use him well we give on the sixth page a picture of the premises where the celebrated DAVENPORT is made.

—W. Z. Tiffany & Co., 130 Ellis street between Powell and Mason sell Coal and Wood at the lowest rates. Where, then, should all your fuel weight, so that it is even one to purchase where you can get the full weight and be attended to.

—Joseph Gallard, for many years with A. F. Bernard, corner of Fifth and Howard street, has now left the firm of Bernard and Gallard, 1 Sixth street, between Howard and Folsom, with a fine stock of wines and liquors. Families supplied. Call on Joseph Gallard when you come to the city free.

—Such a law has been recently enacted by the colonial legislature of Victoria, Australia, restricting the number of Chinese in that colony to a prohibitory one, though its practical effect is that of a prohibitory one. The law limits to one more than one Chinaman for every hundred tons, and imposes a tax of £10 on every Chinaman so landed.

—The very crowded state of our columns compels us to leave over anything about the celebrated wood fire of Hilsby & Wise the popular dealer in wood, hay, etc., of which we have spoken so often, and has become so extensive that they have been compelled to remove to a larger and more commodious premises than they formerly occupied. Here, on and after April 1st, Corner Fifth and Townsend street and our readers will find every good thing in the line of wood, hay and jetties.

—The Indian Sun, edited by Hon. Will S. Greene, says: "The farmers of Colusa county are taking the right steps against Chinese immigration, which is what it promised to do when the planks of the Chinese. A meeting is to be held soon at Colusa, and which every one, be he Democrat, Republican or Independent, who has a home, should attend. The Indian Sun will be willing to work with any party, or with no party, in this matter, when he was a true Christian Brother, true to his God, and consequently true to his country, and of doing good to his neighbor. Inasmuch as the cup of his profane and vulgar, and, we may be quite a triumphant examination, and has already received an opening element, prize of a heavenly crown. But lest we should in sight exaggerate his merits, the Church has already given the world an other Saint, in the person of Brother Fenton, who by the strength of his prayers, and, we may add, fervent prayers that, should anything be lacking in his life, his term of purification may be shortened, and that he may at the proper moment enter into the eternal reward of the saints.

O'CONNOR'S FAREWELL SPEECHES.

Thomas Power O'Connor, will deliver a farewell and free address on the Irish question on Monday evening next, in Union Hall, and will leave for the Eastern States, on Tuesday, and the following places on route: Nevada City, April 8th; Virginia City, April 10th; Eureka, April 10th; Salt Lake City, 12th; Park City, April 15th, and Omaha, April 19th.

Alluding to the Chinese question, the Oakland Times says: If defense in this measure, Californians could do nothing more effectual than to raise a fund for a big Chinese lottery for the benefit of society, the overthrow of morality the entire extinction of the most elementary sense of the difference between good and evil, and the wholesale descent of the entire Asiatic rabble into a state of depravity and bestialism. It is a state of affairs aptly described by Pope in his "Essay on Man," in the lines, dealing thus of the Pariah:

"Religion blushing veils her sacred fires
And unawares morality expires;
Nor public flame, nor private dare to shine,
Nor human spirit feel the divine line
Lay thread empire, Chaos is restored;
Light dies before thy uncreating word;
Thy hand, great Anarch, lets the curtain fall,
And universal darkness buries all."

Now, the above extract from the Poet Deacon's work is not the mere expression of the views of the author of a single advanced and accomplished thinker; it is, in truth, the logical deduction of the Pariah philosophy, as it remains to time unto its morals. It simply and truthfully depicts what the Pariah would apply and apply to the adoption of that philosophy by every one. We know that the world has not never lie, the gates of hell cannot prevail against the Catholic Church. But we also know that it is important time to some such religion of darkness and hence will take place in the last days during the reign of the anti-Christ. There is only one equivalent existent which can successfully combat the evil ingot—the Catholic, Apostolic, Roman Church. This much is even admitted by the leaders of Pagan philosophy. Professor Huxley, in "Lay Sermons," speaks of "our great enemy" I speak as a man of science—the Roman Catholic Church, the one great spiritual organization which is able to resent, and must, as a matter of life and death, oppose the progress of science and modern civilization. What "science and modern civilization" tend to we have already seen; it is simply the descent of Averno. Let us look at ever Christian man who reads these lines, be he Catholic or Protestant, be every father, husband and brother, who has regard for woman and the elevation of the race, whether, when they read those darling principles thus drawn out to their logical results, and in the subversion, the destruction and the demise of morality, are making a desperate endeavor to get control of the education of the rising generation for the declared purpose of indoctrinating them with the principles of bestialism and anti-Christianism, it is not time to pause and consider solemnly, mournfully, and honestly, whereunto this thing shall end.

The importance of the subject must be my apology for the length of this letter. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

AN ENGLISH CATHOLIC.

DEATH OF A CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

At St. Joseph's Academy, Oakland, on the 22nd inst., took place the death of Brother Fenton, one of the most amiable and respected members of the Order. He had occupied his connection with the world in 1870, when he attached himself to the community of Christian Brothers at St. Mary's College, and had from that time almost till the day of his death been assiduously, continuously and effectively in his holy vocation. He was 43 years of age, and was born in the County Derry, Ireland. For a considerable time past he was a martyr to inflammatory rheumatism, which he bore with patience and a murmur and manfully kept his post of duty. He was held in the greatest esteem by those who had daily opportunities of observing his merits. The day before his demise, he seemed to be advancing his claims as usual, and therefore himself call was unexpected. He was, however, found fully prepared for the dread occasion, and departed like the wise virgins to meet the bridegroom with our holy religion could bring him. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of persons, friends and other friends of the Christian Brothers. Forming at Mt. Joseph's Academy, with Brother Cleman and a brother of the deceased as chief mourners, and six of the Brothers of the Academy as pall bearers, the procession moved to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, where a solemn Requiem Mass for the departed sang. Rev. Father King was chief celebrant; Father McSweeny, master of ceremonies; Father Coyle, deacon, and Father Smith, subdeacon. A considerable number of other clergymen, as well as a large congregation, assisted at the sacred ceremonies used by the Church on such mournful occasions. The choir was full and effective. The casket was profusely covered with floral decorations, the tokens of affection offered to the memory of the deceased by those by whom he had instructed unto justice. The couple of the Academy and two other institutions conducted the funeral, and the marble hearse

Day-Light!
has been thrown on the cure of disease of the kidneys and urinary organs by the Day Kidney Pad. $2, of druggists, or by mail post free. Children's Pad (cures "bed wetting") $1.50. DAY KIDNEY PAD CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

New Advertisements.

CHRISTY & WISE
WOOL
Commission Merchants
HAVE REMOVED
To their New and Commodious
WAREHOUSE,
N. E. cor. Fifth and Townsend Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Where All Wool, Hides, Skins, Etc., will be stored and Weighed, under their personal supervision, and correctness thereby guaranteed.

A LARGE STOCK OF
Glycerine Dip, Carbolic Dip, Sulphur Dip, Wool Bags, Twines, Shears, Lime, SULPHUR TOBACCO.
☞ And all other Dips and Supplies required by Wool Growers kept on hand and supplied to customers at the VERY LOWEST RATES.
CASH ADVANCED
On consignments at Low Rates of Interest, and prompt returns made.

☞ Post Office address Box 2211, San Francisco.

WAR. WAR. WAR.
E. S. BONELLI,
821 Market St., Up Stairs,
WILL SELL THIS NEW EASTERN PIANO AT $5 PER MONTH, and the purchaser will be entitled to receive or cause to be delivered, free of charge, to any place within a radius of 10 miles, one Piano, of the same make and value as the one purchased.

Dealer in Groceries and Provisions,
New and Second-hand
SAFES, SCALES AND TRUCKS
A SPECIALTY.
54 City st., bet. Drumm & East
SAN FRANCISCO.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
H. F. FREESE,
RUCHING FACTORY,
Have removed to the Spacious Store,
136 Third Street, two doors above Brannan St.
(IN SAME BLK MANUFACTURED TO ORDER.
(O elegant assortment of latest styles Ruchings and Dress Goods, full line of Silks and Velvets Underwear, remnants of Laces and Ruchings at less than wholesale prices.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS REWARD!
Information is wanted of the place where WILLIAM MICHAEL REILLY is buried. He was born in 1841 in Ballinasloe, County Galway, Ireland. He lived in Philadelphia until 1877, then went to Chicago, where his mother, Mary Reilly, and a short time in Cincinnati, Ohio, with his brother, James W. A. Reilly. He went to California in January, and died somewhere in that State. Any information will be gladly received by the above. Address MARY REILLY, P. O. Box 206, New York.

DIED.

HAIRT. In Killalkey, County Meath, Ireland, on the 12th of March, Patrick Hairt, father of Mr. Hairt, of this city.

MURPHY. In this city, March 28, 1882, Philip, Eldest Murphy, widow of Patrick Murphy, and mother of John T. Murphy, and Mrs. Mark Meherin, a native of County Meath, Ireland, aged 81 years.

[New Orleans papers please copy.

MOTTAY.
The deceased was esteemed and respected. Her loving kindness and charity were as household words in her native town. Her charity was all things and nirvie to woman, she wound around her being many ties of affection, and her death was a great loss to the suffering. Her life was a constant learning the high duties of woman, and her death was a fitting crown of that home beyond, where serene and suffering "shall be never more." Charmed by a distinct daughter and sister, she was independent, of a charming and entertaining character of hope and peace, the spirit of this noble woman has passed to the reward of the virtuous and enlightened and yet from the ashes of her dust, shall rise a new and more perfect Phoenix.

—Brock's Speed Cotton, soft finish as well as glace finish, is manufactured especially for sewing machine work. Try it on any machine and you will use no other. For sale by all dry goods stores.

—Estimate Inquirers.—Those who want artificial teeth which so closely imitate nature that they cannot be detected at a glance, should call on Dr. Spence, Dentist, 629 Kearny street, corner Commercial. His charges are quite reasonable.

CARPETS
at 117 Sixth street.
☞ Store and Window Shades

BAD TENANTS
EJECTED FOR $4.
COLLECTIONS MADE IN THE CITY OR COUNTRY
PACIFIC COLLECTION CO.,
508 California Street

Farm and Home.

Value of a Happy Home.

Go through the town any evening; and you will be surprised. If you have never given the matter any thought, at the number of boys and young men who make a practice of squandering their evenings, to say nothing about the day spent in the same manner. Squandering time is the great sin of the age. As a rule, the idle, indolent boy goes to the bad. He may have all the elements necessary to make a first-class business or professional man, but if he is not instructed and encouraged to form habits of industry, he will be a failure, almost inevitably.

There is one way this great evil of squandering time can be remedied, if not altogether obviated. Parents must take the matter in hand—must themselves set the example of industry and frugality, and must see that their children imitate the example. Make the home pleasant and attractive. If the boys love the street or the loafing place better than the home, you may rest assured that home is wanting in some important particular. Provide the boys with interesting reading matter and encourage them to love it. Permit them to employ their time in any harmless way that will keep them from idleness and prodigacy. When you see a boy or young man willing to trifle away a day, a month, or a year in doing the work of a disgusting street loafer, you may set it down that it would not take much to persuade that boy or that young man to become a full-fledged scoundrel.

Teach the boys that no success comes from squandering time, and that the better class of people have about as high a regard for a real industrious thief as for an ignorant, idle loafer. It is in the power of parents to regulate this matter, and we hope to see our army of trifling, loafing young men and boys diminish.

Make the home what it should be, and you have no need to fear the future of our boys.

Ask Mother First.

How many pleasant things we can hear and see every day, if we but watch and listen!

I was walking towards home late one afternoon in winter. The country all around was covered with a deep snow, that seemed of a purer white than ever, in the light of the departing day. I heard the voices of children behind me, and their little feet stepped fast over the hard crisped snow. They passed along beside, and I saw that one was a little girl of about eight years, and her companion was a boy somewhat older. The girl wore a pretty crimson hood, which was becoming to her cheeks, made rosy by the fine winter air. She was drawing a sled, and the boy was drawing a sled too.

"Come Annie," he said, "let's go to Pine Hill now; it's splendid coasting there, and we shall be in time for some first rate slides before it gets dark."

"I must go and ask mother first, Henry," said Annie.

She did not drawl the words out dolefully, as if she did not like to have to ask her mother; but she spoke in a very pleasant and cheerful tone. She hurried along with her sled, and Henry after her. I soon lost sight of them, but I could not forget Annie. I thought to myself how safe that child will always be if she only keep to her rule—"I must ask mother first."

I know children who have sometimes got into a great deal of trouble because they did not "ask mother first." Remember it is very unsafe to do anything your mother would not like to have you to do.

Children, I mean girls as well as boys, you will be saved a great deal of unhappiness, if at all times, you make it a rule to "ask your mother first."

Marriage Honorable in All.

Marriage among those who are not Christians is a natural and lawful union. It is a state ordained by Almighty God as the proper condition of this human race, though not absolutely obligatory upon each and every individual. It is plain that God intended man and woman to live under a strong bond of union, associated together in all the interests, cares, and duties of life, separated into distinct families, nurturing and educating their own children. This idea and the existence of the family go together, and upon the existence of the family depends the existence of all society. That marriage in itself, apart from the Christian sanction, is a sacred union, in that it is a positive ordinance of God and gives rise to numerous obligations which are binding upon the consciences, and for which an account is to be rendered, is evident from the history of the human race itself. All through the Old Testament we observe instances of marriage commanded by God, sanctioned and blessed by Him. And among the Jews, who held the true divine tradition, we find the single state regarded as disgraceful, and sterility in the marriage life not only as a reproach, but also considered as a mark of the displeasure of God. Parents were always held in honor, and considered themselves blessed according to the number of their children. "Blessed is the man," says the Psalmist, "who hath his desire filled with them; he shall not be confounded when he shall speak to his enemies in the gate." The blessing of a numerous and healthy offspring depend upon the sacred character and inviolability of marriage. So we see that where marriage is lightly esteemed, among those who practice the infamous and unnatural system of divorce, children are regarded as disagreeable impediments to their dissolution; and where a large family is not thought to be an honor or blessing from God, there you will find marriage degraded to a civil contract at will, and its most solemn obligations violated in the grossest manner.

By Universal Accord.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the product of long, laborious, and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them the best and most effectual purgative Pill that medical science can devise. Being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use. In intimate value and curative powers no other Pills can be compared with them, and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them, when needed. They keep the system in perfect order, and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are especially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild but effectual cathartic is required.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

— Inslet upon obtaining FLORENTINE COLOGNE. It is pre-eminently superior in perfumery and delicacy of odor.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the extraordinary character of the statements, as well as the power and value of the article of which they are the testimony, we publish herewith the "far-famed" signatures of parties whose veracity is beyond question. The truth of these testimonials is absolute, nor can the facts they announce be ignored.

CLINTON HOTEL,
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves in intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks discouraged me; kidneys to such an extent that great relief was hoped. I passed stones varying in size from the head of a pin to a good-sized pea. When the stones passed from the kidneys they would lodge in the ureters, causing such pain in the region of the kidneys, down the hip bone, down in front and along the course of the ureter. The discharge of the stone was usually attended with strangury of the neck of the bladder. The pains were very severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning from time to time until the stones were discharged, at times, the pains were so severe that they amounted almost to convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, who had had the care of Bright's disease a specialty, and they told me that I could never be cured. Fortunately, I learned through a friend, the good effects attending the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney diseases. I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed five stones without any pain, since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

C. B. Lillie
31st & Market Sts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 25, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pains in my back and loins, which proceeded from an unhealthy condition of my kidneys. My business that of railroading, is one that often induces such a warm aggravation any affection of the kidneys, so as to render life a burden. I was induced to try your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

H. H. Greene

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., March 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for sixteen years, and have been treated by physicians both allopathic and homœopathic, and never was relieved as I have been by Warner's safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Anna M. E. Sinsby

ELYRIA, Ohio, Nov. 4, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I can speak in high praise of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and find it all you claim for it in kidney trouble.

E. T. Farmer
President Santa Rosa Bank.

ALBANY, Cal., Nov. 27, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys, I commenced taking your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after taking two bottles the pains all left me, and I have had no returns of pains since.

Chas. S. Wiley

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 21, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with rheumatism for the past seven years, the effects of a severe cold, and could hardly walk at the time I began showing of friends, in the east, that had been cured by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, I concluded to try it, and it has proved in my case decidedly beneficial.

Geo. H. Hoggs
Twentieth and New Broadway.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 26, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering with kidney complaint for the past seven years. My symptoms were pains in the back, also a burning sensation in two places directly over the kidneys. This was more so when I had taken cold, as the cold always settled in my kidneys. I was treated by a physician who professed my case competent of the kidneys, but failed to cure me. I was induced to try your Kidney and Liver Cure, which I found to relieve me at once. Being a sufferer from long time before I had taken your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, advised me to try it. I have been taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for the past three months, and have been greatly benefited.

I remain, very truly yours,

M. C. Quenby
504 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Nov. 8, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: Was troubled with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took half a bottle, and a complete cure was effected. After having taken second bottle, never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was enabled to rest and sleep well.

Very truly yours,

Austin E. Allen

LOS GATOS, Cal., Nov. 16, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:
GENTLEMEN: I have much pleasure in saying, that after using two bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, I have been freed from pain in the back, from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials—many of them in verse—have been received by the proprietors, testifying to the wonderful curative powers of this great remedy in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any one who reads this has any physical trouble remembered by great danger of delay.

its every floor, from the cellar to the roof, has been used for commercial purposes. Its design is one of the handsomest in the city, and its architectural beauties have not been surpassed by any of the new and lately-built structures that have sprung up in the last few years all over the city.

The lower floor of this building is devoted to that excellent and justly popular beverage,

THE "DAVENPORT."

Here it is that "Davenport" is King. Here, in packages of all shapes and sizes, do we find the "Davenport" carefully packed ready for shipment to all parts of the coast. Here we find John L. Burns, the indefatigable, energetic, big-hearted Burns in his glory, and all confess that the "Davenport" is the greatest production of the age, and so is Burns. One moment we find him behind his desk, perusing letters from Mexico, from Utah, from Nevada, from Washington, from California; yes, even from Alaska, all ordering the "Davenport;" next we see him directing a corps of assistants in filling orders, shipping the "Davenport" and keep up with the orders. Next we find him seated in a buggy, hitching away to depot or to boat; we will know even eyes that each customer's orders are promptly started on their way; and next we find him seated upon his desk, in his private office, surrounded by boxes of friends, who are only too happy to impart information upon the successful line of goods to make the "Davenport" the leading whisky of the coast.

In an interview with Mr. Burns, the other day, we asked him in regard to the Trade-Mark of the "Davenport," and he kindly gave us permission to give the following for sample of

THE SOURCE

From Which the People of the Pacific Coast Receive their Support of that Favorite Brand of Whisky.

THE "DAVENPORT."

The Home of that Prince of Good Fellows and the King Bee of the Traveling Community.

GENIUS REWARDED.

JOHN L. BURNS,

Who Sits like a General at the Head of his Army, and Directs the Immense Trade, that is now being Developed in the "Davenport."

The Schultz & Von Bargen Block.

A FINE ILLUSTRATION.

We know that we cannot please our readers any better than by giving them a fine illustration of the well-known block located on the south east corner of California and Front streets, San Francisco. This block was erected several years ago by the firm of Schultz & Von Bargen, and who attempt to imitate my trade mark for the "Davenport."

We could not blame Mr. Burns for his warmth, and we expect to see the fur fly from the first unfortunate person who attempts to imitate this brand.

THE DAVENPORT.

The success of this brand, which is now assured, appears at once wonderful, and yet there is nothing strange about it, for first the whisky itself possesses great merit. It is the pure quill. It stands to-day among the pure straight whiskies. It comes direct from one of the largest distilleries in the blue grass region of Kentucky where the grain from which it is distilled is raised in a limestone soil, and the water used is as pure and fresh as ever came from Nature's great laboratory. It comes here in the purity; there is no doctoring of it, and the consumer when he receives it receives it in the natural purity. That is the one great secret of its success.

And he said, "I want you to remind the trade that any inferiority in this trade mark for the "Davenport" will be followed with instant arrest and prosecution, knowing as I do that every cask of whisky that possesses any merit I am at a loss to find some or less tampered with, or imitated, and putting the genuine article on record and chief would shrink from, and by the time such a thing could be found and convicted, I therefore give notice and fair warning to the world that I will go for the trade, and after I am through with him he will be prefer, to be identified with the "Davenport" trade mark." This strong language is called for by the fact that there is a great tendency now a days to profit by other people's industry, and to make reputations or enrich themselves they seek to profit by the honest labors of others, and I will make it deeply interesting to those

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,

MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF

Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.

767 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. Can refer to all the principal trainers and horsemen in the Pacific Coast.

N. B. My acknowledged superiority in this branch of business is largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the most skilled "trainers" in the United States. My Spring Saddle, patented Nov. 4, 1879, is the perfection of a spring saddle, every article being fully equal to the "Spring Saddle." Also, Agent for Dr. A. H. Dixon's Condition Powders and McKinney's patent "Eureka" and "Eclipse" Top Weights. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English ladies' and Gentlemen's Saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, bits and silk race saddles. JOHN O'KANE.

Prescriptions of delicacy is a prominent characteristic in our business. Orders from the interior filled at city prices. Paper Ruling and Book Binding executed to order. Black Books manufactured to order.

Cor. Clay and Sansome Streets, San Francisco.

WANTED AGENTS

TO SELL AN ARTICLE OF Daily Consumption.

Apply at the office of

UNCOLORED TEAS,

No. 845 Market street.

Sewing Machine Agency,

NO. 151 FOURTH ST.

Rev. Manning and Howard. — San Francisco.

ALL KINDS OF SEWING MACHINES CHEAP, ON easy installments. Machines rented for $2 a month. Repairing done. Needles and Oil.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE 610 CLAY STREET,

Opposite Clay Street Bank, and a few doors above Montgomery street.

HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Head Help, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Dairymen, Shepherds, Sawmill Hands, Blacksmiths, Harnesses, Coachmen, and married couples for private families and ranches, without any charge to employers.

DAWSON'S AMERICAN AGENCY

637 SACRAMENTO STREET,

Furnishes Male Help of any Nationality.

BRANCH OFFICE, 206 POST STREET. FEMALE department. Girls always in waiting for every class of work.

P. J. O'Brien & Sons,

Carriage Builders,

329 and 331 GOLDEN GATE AVE.

(Tyler Street,) near Larkin.

Carriages, Buggies and Wagons made of the Best Material, by the Most Workmanlike Manner, and Warranted to give Entire Satisfaction, at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing and Painting promptly attended to at Reasonable Rates.

Orders by Telephone No. 3143.

GOOD LIVING.

For Neatness, Cheapness and Stylishness, the

Arcade Restaurant

11 and 13 SIXTH STREET,

CAN'T BE BEAT.

JNO. BARTELS, Proprietor.

CHEAP VARIETY BAZAAR,

741 MARKET ST., opp. Dupont.

THE UNDERSIGNED WOULD RESPECTFULLY AN nounce to the Public that he has opened the above Bazaar, where he will keep constantly on hand every variety of Gentlemen's Furnishing and Fancy Goods, Stationery, Jewelry, etc. Ladies' work and embroidery, etc. Speaking and Musical Machines, and all other curiosities of modern manufacture. Am confident to sell cheaper than any other house in the city. N. B.—Ladies, please call and look (cost) before the number, 741 Market St. Please give me a call. Respectfully yours,

V. POLLACK.

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER

CAN BE CURED

By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

IN PROOF OF WHICH HE BEGS LEAVE TO REfer to the following well known persons who have been cured by him:

Andrew Lotze, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.

Jas. Lotze, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.

Mrs. Ann Eliza Pritchard, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the breast.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gibson, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the nose.

Martin Warner, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.

Robt. Walsh, Milpitas, cancer of the face.

Mrs. Fisher, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the breast.

Wm. Boyd, Fisherman's Bay, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.

J. C. McKinstry, Stockton Creek, Sonoma county, cancer of the face.

Mrs. Foley, 13 Market street, Room 34, San Francisco, cancer of the back.

Mrs. Tunwell, East Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip.

Stephen Dudale, Santa Rosa, cancer of the nose.

Hans Hanson, Eagleville, Modoc county, cancer of the neck.

Mrs. Byers, Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the lip, and two fronts of Charity, one of our benefactors, the other of Low Artful, and cured not herein mentioned.

The means by which these cures are performed mainly consist in a plaster, the recipe for which was left by my father at his decease, he being a well known practicing physician in both Ireland, England and the United States. Persons who have diseases to be labouring either this form of disease, who may wish to avail themselves of the cure, can call at the residence of Mr. Tighe, Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

THE EYES! THE EYES!

DR. E. H. PARDEE, OCULIST AND AURIST,

HAS RESUMED THE PRACTICE OF HIS PROfession, and will give personal attention to all who may call upon him at No. 704 Montgomery street, office. Large assortment of French artificial eyes constantly on hand. Office, 704 Montgomery street, San Francisco, office hours, 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. Over City street Bank.

DIPHTHERIA.

REMEMBER THIS—NO CARBOLIC PROVE A fatal whore RUCELLANDO'S DIPHTHERIA REMEDY. Sure, safe, a positive preventative and cure, and certain to stop the spread of Diphtheria. It will save any body. Price, 50 cents. Sold by Druggists. "Whooping Cough" It is directly a Throat and Lung Remedy. Sold by Druggists. Sole Agent, WILLIAM COOMBS, Market and Third, KEIL, corner Market and Fourth, San Francisco, and by all druggists. Office and Laboratory, 765 Minna street, San Francisco.

DENNIS REDMOND,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

No. 508 Hayes street.

$66 A suit in four one hours. Thousand $5 cards free by mail. A Gem $1 Hunter's Co., Portland, Me.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted to cure the most certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent Fever, Bilious Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In intermittent districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of nearly all the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The prejudices thus made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the material and their ever dreg poison in the system, producing quinine, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease, for which they intended to cure. Ayers Ague Cure thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above the certainty of its cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE is a decided action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy action.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists,

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

LITHOGRAPHERS. BOOKBINDERS

P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO., STEAM

BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,

412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St. Between Sansome and Battery.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,

IMPORTERS OF DRY GOODS,

And Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

.... OF THE ....

Veuve Xavier Jouvin Kid Gloves

Buck and Sansome Sts., San Francisco. aug2

B. & O. GREENEBAUM,

WHOLESALE MANUFACTURERS OF

MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

REMOVED TO

Nos. 1047 & 1049 Market st.,

Between Sixth and Seventh.

Piano, Singing, Guitar, Violin, Accordeon and Banjo

TAUGHT AT MODERATE PRICES BY

MRS. H. BENNETT,

145 Fourth St., near Howard.

Marble Works.

Monuments & Headstones

Marble and Scotch Granite.

MANTLES & GRATES.

Marble and Encaustic Tiles.

Designs sent on applying for them

W. H. McCORMICK,

827 MARKET ST. - - bet. Fourth and Fifth

RAZORS!

FOR $1,000

I WILL MAKE A BETTER RAZOR AND MORE OF them in the same time (can say) than IS THE WORLD

My own make (guaranteed)	$2 50
My Grand Razors warranted not to cut the flesh while shaving	$ 5
Good English Razors	1 00
Best English Razors	1 50

Sent C. O. D. or by mail.

M. PRICE,

415 Kearny Street.

Grinding and Repairing.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JOHN M. BURNETT,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

Rooms 1 and 2,

507 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento

San Francisco.

M. COONEY,

Attorney and Counsellor at Law.

606 Kearny street, cor. Pine.

Rooms 3 and 4. — San Francisco.

J. D. SULLIVAN,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

Rooms 8, 9, and 10,

235 MONTGOMERY ST. — San Francisco.

MRS. MARION TODD,

Attorney-at-Law,

Montgomery Block,

Room 35 — SAN FRANCISCO

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH,

Law Office,

N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

HALLETT, DAVIS & CO.,

AHEAD OF THE WORLD.

THE LARGEST STOCK OF THESE SPLENDID Pianos ever received. Call at the HALLETT, DAVIS & CO. warerooms, No 11 Sansome street, near Pine, or the agent, MR. O. BADGER.

CHICKERING PIANOS.

B. CURTAZ, AGENT,

No. 20 O'Farrell Street.

KNABE PIANOS

MEDICAL.

DR. J. F. GEARY,

At the Solicitation of His Old Patients has Resumed His Practice in San Francisco.

Office Hours: 10:30 A. M. to 2:30 P. M.

Consultation Rooms, Golden Gate Hotel, 121 Post St.

DR. MORTON,

987 Harrison street, S. F.,

Cor. Sixth.

Office Hours: 12 to 3 P. M. — SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

DRS. FRENCH & PETERSON,

Oculists and Aurists,

Graduates of N. Y. Opthalmic Hospital.

319 GEARY STREET, S. F.

DR. W. K. DOHERTY,

Physician and Surgeon,

No. 411 Kearny Street.

GIVES PARTICULAR ATTENTION TO THE TREATment and cure of Chronic diseases of the lungs, liver, kidneys, stomach, nervous and physical debility and all special diseases and female complaints; always accessible; patients in the country successfully treated at home.

DR. C. C. O'DONNELL,

Office and Residence:

N. W. cor. Kearny and Washington Streets, S. F.

DR. JORDAN'S

Educational Institution

OF

NATURAL HISTORY AND ANATOMY,

751 MARKET STREET, 751

Opposite Dupont street.

A valuable book in English, German, Spanish or Italian sent free to any address. Private office, 751 Every street.

DENTISTS.

COLTON DENTAL ASSOCIATION

925 and 927 Market street,

Cor. Fifth and Sixth, opp. Mint. — SAN FRANCISCO

Originators and Specialists of the scientific use and administering of Pure Nitrous Oxide Gas. Positively Extract Teeth Without Pain.

DR. W. C. WILSON.

LIVE AND LET LIVE

Splendid Set of Teeth, only $7.

THE DENTAL ROOMS OF T. BOLTON, 504 Howard street.

THOMAS MORFFEW,

DENTIST.

No 1 Montgomery Street, cor. Market.

(Over the Hibernia Bank.)

Take the Elevator — SAN FRANCISCO

$7 a Set for Teeth.

BOLTON & PERRY,

DENTISTS,

541 Market Street, (old Jenny Building)

UNDERTAKERS.

REMOVAL.

WM. J. MALLADY,

General Undertaker and Coffin Furnisher,

HAS REMOVED TO

733 MISSION STREET, 733

(Opposite Grand Opera House.)

Ladies embalmed and prepared for transportation to any part of the world. The trade supplied with all kinds of Undertaking Goods at the Lowest Prices.

Telephone connected in all hours, day or night.

ATKINS MASSEY,

UNDERTAKER

PRACTICAL FURNISHING UNDERtaker. Hearstone's Burial Caskets always on hand, and Agents for Fisk's Metallic Burial Cases.

Everything necessary for funerals kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges.

Office—631 Sacramento street, between Kearny and Webb

THOS. FLANAGAN, H. J. GALLAGHER.

FLANAGAN & GALLAGHER,

UNDERTAKERS,

No. 29 FIFTH STREET, Opposite the Lincoln School.

EVERYTHING NECESSARY FOR FUnerals kept constantly on hand. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, at moderate charges.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

JERRY LOWNEY & SON

HAVE REMOVED THEIR CARRIAGE FACTORY from corner of Dupont and Jackson streets, to Ninth street. All kinds of carriages and wagons made to order, and repairing promptly attended to.

JOHN A. LENNON,

Wholesale Grocer,

AND IMPORTER OF

Choice Brands

Japan and English Breakfast Tea.

Agent for Pure White Hennessy Cognac for Cheroots, use Pure Havanas, Antiquity Claret and for owners, and Pure Olive Oil for Sanitary Lamps.

Nos. 213 and 217 Clay Street — San Francisco

STOP TAKING DRUGS.

I Want Cases that Have Been Given Up.

CATARRH, CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHRONIC Diseases, oxygen treatment, $10; sent to any address. A Gem $1 Hunter & Co., Portland, Me.

CLOTHING, ETC.

SIXTH ST.

SUIT AND CLOAK HOUSE.

Ladies and Children's Underwear

AND FANCY GOODS.

Suits and Cloaks Made to Order at Short Notice

MRS. MULVEY,

No. 25 Sixth Street.

LADIES SUITS

Stylishly Made. $6 and upwards.

AT 207 O'FARRELL ST.

MISCELLANEOUS.

John Bergstrom, Organ Builder

29th and Mission Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Organs Built, Tuned and Repaired

AT MODERATE RATES.

REFERENCES—Most Rev. Archbishop Alemany, Very Rev. Vicente Virpoy, O. P., Rev. A. Garrigo, Rev. J. P. Harrington, and others.

SEE THREE OF WORKMANSHIP—The organs at the Metropolitan Temple, S. F., Spanish Catholic Church, S. F., First Presbyterian, Oakland, C. Cupin, San Leandro; Presbyterian Church, Powell street, Methodist Church, Portland, Or., and many others.

A Good Second Hand Pipe Organ for sale cheap. Original cost, $2,500.

Homœopathic Pharmacy for the Manufacture of all kinds of Silk and Bunting Flags

ROSETTES, REGALIAS, BANNERS,

Gold and Silver Trimmings, Wholesale and Retail

H. PASQUALE,

656 Washington and 907 Howard Street.

SOCIETY REGALIA!

Military and

NAVAL GOODS,

Guns and Fishing Tackle.

A. J. PLATE & CO.,

418 and 420 Market Street.

SAN FRANCISCO AND NORTH PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Commencing Monday, November 14, 1881, and further notice, Boats and Trains will leave San Francisco:

As follows:

9.20 A. M., Daily (Sundays excepted,) from San Quentin Ferry, foot of Market street, for Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Fulton, and way points. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 4 P. M.

2.30 P. M., Daily (Sundays included), Steamer Solano, Captain M. Donahue, from Washington street wharf, connecting at Sonoma Landing with cars for Sonoma, and at Donahue with trains for Fulton, Santa Rosa, Fulton, Windsor, Healdsburg, Geyserville, Cloverdale, Ukiah, Lakeport, Kelseyville, Soda Springs, Highland Springs, Kelseyville, Soda Springs, Lakeport, Ukiah, Cloverdale, Geyserville, Healdsburg, Windsor, Fulton, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Sonoma, Glen Ellen, Kenwood, Boyes Springs, Glen Ellen, Sonoma, Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Fulton, and way points. Returning will arrive in San Francisco at 10.20 A. M. Week Days and 11.00 A. M. Sundays.

A. HUGHES, General Manager.

PETER J. MOLLTON, General Passenger and Ticket Agent.

EXCELSIOR STRAW WORKS,

120 Fourth Street.

Ladies' Old Hats and Bonnets dye to look like new. Hats and Bonnets trimmed and blocked.

J. H. HARRITT, — Proprietor

FIRE!! FIRE!!

JNO. R. SIMS & SON,

Manufacturers of all kinds of Fireproof Doors and Window Blinds.

SHUTTERS, BURGLAR-PROOF BANK VAULTS AND Safes, wrought iron girders and beams, wrought and cast iron, and Balconies, Iron Fencing, Cresting, The Iron Anchor and other architectural iron work, at the Old Stand, established in 1855, by the present Proprietors.

All orders from the Interior, Oregon and Washington Territory, or any other San Pacific coast, attended to with promptness and dispatch.

Messrs. SIMS appreciate the past liberal patronage of their friends, and trust they may continue to merit it in the future. For the Manufacture of Fireproof Goods, would say that they feel confident that experience in this particular calling is their best recommendation. Also, Agents for the Iron Wire Rope Ladder, which is a most valuable invention for Factories, Hotels, Asylums, Seminaries, Convents, Private Dwellings, Steamers, Orphan Asylums, Victoria and Sandwich Islands, and in fact, in every house in the Pacific Coast, San Francisco, fully attest.

ALSO—A very large lot of second hand Shutters, in various dimensions, all at very low rates.

Nos. 125 and 135 Beale street.

A. KOCH,

HAS REMOVED TO HIS

NEW STORE,

No. 813 Market Street,

WHERE HE CARRIES A FULL LINE OF CROCKery, Lamps, Glass, Tinware, etc. Sales a specialty of the CROCKERY RANGE (the best Range in use). Will be pleased to have all his old customers come to him as well. You will save 25 per cent. by buying here.

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION WANTED OF MISS GEORGIE KELLY, of maiden name, Elizabeth Cassidy. When last heard of was residing at 213 Ellery street, San Francisco, Cal. Address her brother Thomas Cassidy, 1744 Grand street Milwaukee, Wis., she will hear something to her advantage.

STEIN'S BRASS SIGNS

BOOTS AND SHOES.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

JOHN SULLIVAN,

NORTHEAST COR. OF BATTERY AND JACKSON streets, offers to make to order the best French Calf Leather BOOTS, at from. $9 to $9 50

California Leather Boots $6 00

French Calf Oxford Ties $4 00

California $3 50

Boys' and Children's Boots and Shoes made to order. Persons in the country ordering Boots and Shoes to the amount of Twelve Dollars or more, will be allowed reduction of four per cent., so as to make the express charges light. All Boots and Shoes of MY OWN MANUFACTURE ONLY. Boots and Shoes sent C. O. D. Positively one price.

HOTELS, RESTAURANTS, ETC.

WESTERN HOTEL,

212-14 Broadway Street.

JOHN HIGGINS, : : Proprietor.

(Late Broadway Hotel.)

SWAIN'S

Family Bakery and Dining Saloon,

No. 636 Market street.

Wedding Cakes, Ice Cream, Oysters, Coffee, etc. Constantly on hand and made to order.

FAMILIES SUPPLIED.

C. E. PEARSON, Manager.

ST. DAVID'S,

715 HOWARD STREET, near 3rd.

A FIRST-CLASS LODGING HOTEL, CONTAINING 115 rooms; water and gas in each room; no better beds in the world; no guest allowed to use the linen once used by another; a large reading room; hot and cold water; baths free; price of rooms—per night, 50c. and 75c.; per week, from $1 upward. Open all night.

E. HUGHES, Proprietor.

THOS. J. BRAWER. M. C. DUFFEY.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

BUSH STREET,

Bet. Montgomery and Sansome ..... San Francisco.

BRANNAN & DUFFIGY, - Propr's.

TERMS, - - - $1.25 and $1.50 per day

FREE COACH TO THE HOTEL.

COLUMBIA HOTEL,

741 Market Street,

Bet. Third and Fourth Sts. ..... SAN FRANCISCO

This House is centrally located, 1 block of Street Cars passing the Door every Minute.

Merchants and Laborers of any Branch can be found here at short NOTICE, by inquiring at the Office.

The Tables will be Supplied with the Best the Market affords.

Board and Lodging, per week ..... $4 50 to $5 00

Eleven Meal Tickets $7 00

Single Meals ..... 25 cts.

Finest Brands of Wines, Liquors & Cigars.

OWEN BRESLIN, Proprietor.

GOLDEN EAGLE RESTAURANT,

917 Market Street,

Bet. Fifth and Sixth ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

F. G. McCLELLAND, Proprietor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

No Pay in Advance!

GREAT ELECTRIC HAIR TONIC.

Warranted to Cure Baldness!

120 TYLER STREET, S. F.

J. L. CAHILL,

Painting, Whitening and Paper Hanging.

209 POST STREET,

Between Dupont and Stockton streets ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

Decorative Paper Hanging and Wall Tinting a specialty.

DAVID DRADY,

230 Fourth Street,

Importer and Dealer in Fine Mouldings, Mirrors and Pictures.

Framing and Regilding done at Reasonable Prices.

VINEYARD LAND IN TRACTS TO SUIT.

Q. 45, 60, 65 AND 100 ACRES, ONE MILE SOUTH of City, the property and of Fresno county; a water right goes with each place, free of any charge. Maps and details at company's office, Fresno, or T. E. BUTLER & SONS, 218 Montgomery st., San Francisco. Parties writing please state you saw this in the MONITOR.

HEAR YE DEAF!

Garmore's Artificial Ear Drums

As invented and worn by him perfectly restore the hearing. Entirely cured in thirty days, by Drums with from two whispers distinctly. Are not observable, and remain in position without adjusting. Descriptive Circular Free. John Garmore, S. W. Cor. 9th & Mann Sts., Cincinnati, O.

WATCHES CLEANED,

$1.

Glasses - 10 cents.

ESTABLISHED IN SAN FRANCISCO 13 YEARS.

HAMMOND, 4 Sixth Street, San Francisco.

CHEAPEST PLACE

To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.

All kinds; rented $2 per month; needles for all machines, 15 cents per dozen.

P. McCANN, 37 Sixth street, Singer Office.

WINES, LIQUORS, ETC.

P. J. CASSIN & CO.,

WHOLESALE DEALERS IN

PURE KENTUCKY BOURBON WHISKIES.

AGENTS FOR—

O. K. Golden Plantation Whiskey.

And wholesale dealers in Foreign and Domestic Wine and Liquors.

633 BATTERY STREET, cor. Washington,

Opposite Post Office, San Francisco, Cal.

PHILADELPHIA BREWERY.

JOHN WIELAND - - - PROPRIETOR

SECOND STREET, NEAR FOLSOM,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Amount of Beer sold in 1881, 30,182 barrels.

Pacific Coast Agency

GENUINE

J. H. CUTTER WHISKIES,

A. P. HOTALING & CO.,

San Francisco, Cal.

NATI

Market Report.

COMPILED WEEKLY BY F. J. GALY, 305 and 307 WASHINGTON STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE,
422 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, March 28, '82.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The markets are quiet with a little more firmness in Wheat, owing to the late North winds. Hops show less firmness. Corn and Oats are dull and weak. Freights are quiet. The merchandise market is active at unchanged rates.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receivers prices for round lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $4 85@5 37½@5 50; City Superfine, $4 75@4 85; Interior brands, $4@4 25 for extra, and $4 50@4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 80@$1 82½; No. 2, $1 56½@$1 57½ per cental.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 65@$1 70; Standard Chevalier, $1 82½@$1 65; Feed, $1 50@$1 60 ⅌ ctl.

Oats—
Quotable at $1 60@$1 62½; for common; and $1 70@$1 75 ⅌ ctl for goods to choice; Surprise, $1 60@$1 62½ ⅌ ctl.

Corn—
Quotable at $1 60@$1 62½ for Yellow; White, $1 75@$1 80 ⅌ ctl.

Hay—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $15@$16; wild oats, $13@$14; volunteer and stubble, $9 50@$12; stock, $9 50@$11 ⅌ ton.

Rye—
Quotable at $2 00@$2 25 ⅌ cental for choice.

Buckwheat—
Quotable at $1 60@$1 70 ⅌ ctl.

Straw—
Quotable at 75c@80c ⅌ bale.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 15½@16c; California, 13@13½c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@15½c; Extra Clear Sides, 14½@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c ⅌ lb.
PORK—Extra Clear, ⅌ bbl, $24 50; do in half bbls, $12 50; Clear, ⅌ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12 00; Mess ⅌ bbl, $22@22½; do half bbl, $11 50@$12; Prime Mess, ⅌ bbl, $18@$19 50; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ⅌ bbl, $16@$16 50; Chuck Pig, ⅌ bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12; do 20-lb kegs, $2 50@$2 50.
BEEF—Mess Beef, ⅌ bbl, $10@$10 50; Extra Mess do, $10 50@$11; Mess Beef, half bbl, $5 50@$6; Extra Mess do, half bbl, $6 25@$6 50; Family do, ⅌ bbl, $13@$13 50; Family do, half bbl, $8@$8 25.
LARD—Eastern Refined, tcs, 16c; do in fancy pails, 16@16½c; do in 10-lb tins, 14½c; do in 5-lb tins, 15½c; do in 20-lb wooden buckets, 15c; California, in tcs, 13½@14c; half bbls, 14½@14½c; in 10-lb tins, 15½@16c; 5-lb do 14@14½c; Kettle Lard, in 10-lb pails, 15c; do in 5-lb do, 15½@15½c; Kettle Lard, in 5-lb pails, 15½c ⅌ lb.

Potatoes—
Quotations are: Early Rose, $2 00@$2 10; Garnet Chili, $1 50@$1 60; River Red, $1 50@$1 60; Tomatoes, $2 00@$2 10; Oregon Peerless, $1 75@$1 90; Burbank Seedlings, $1 80@2 00; Cuffey Cows, $2 15@$2 25; Petaluma, $2 00@$2 10; Peach Blows, $2 30@$2 37½; Sweet, $3 00@$3 50 ⅌ ctl.

Onions—
Quotations are: White, 75c@$1 00 ⅌ ctl.

Caraway—
Quotable at $42 00@$43 00 ⅌ ton; table meal, 5c ⅌ lb.

Beeswax—
Quotable at 22½@25c ⅌ lb.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 22@25c; Fancy, 25@30c; Medium do, 20@25c; Firkin, 18@25c; Pickled, 18@20c; Eastern Butter, 18@20c ⅌ lb.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 17@18c; Eastern, 18@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 17@19c ⅌ lb.

Poultry—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 14@15c; Dressed, 18@19c; Ducks, $5 00@$6 00; Broilers, $7 00@$7 50; Hens, $5 50@$6 00; Young Roosters, $6 00@$6 50; Old, $7 00@$8 00 ⅌ dozen; Geese, $1 75@$2 25 ⅌ pair; Pigeons, $1 50; Squabs, $3 50 ⅌ doz.

Eggs—
Quotable at 18½@19c for choice; 19@20c for Medium California; Lime, 25c; Eastern, 19@—c; Salt Lake, —@—c; Oregon, 22½@23c ⅌ doz.

Domestic Fruit—
Quotations are: California Oranges, $1 75@$2 50 ⅌ box; California Lemons, $1 50@$4 00; Malaga, $6 00@$7 00 ⅌ case; Mexican Oranges, $1 50@$1 80 ⅌ hundred; Mexican Limes, $10 00@$12 00; California Limes, 50c@$1 25 ⅌ small boxes, and $3 00@$4 00 ⅌ large, do; Bananas, $2 50@$3 00 ⅌ bunch; Pineapples, $6 00@$10 ⅌ dozen; Apples, $1 25@$2 25; Oregon, do, $1 75 ⅌ box; Pears, 75c@$1 00 ⅌ box; Cranberries, $15@$16 ⅌ bbl.

Vegetables—
Quotations are: Cabbage, 65@75c ⅌ ctl; Garlic, 14@15c ⅌ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@$12 00 ⅌ ton; Cauliflower, $1 ⅌ doz; Chile Peppers, dry, 20@25c ⅌ lb; Dry Okra, 20c ⅌ lb; Turnips, 50c ⅌ bag; Carrots, 60@75 ⅌ sack; Beets, 4@5c ⅌ sack; Green Peas, 12½@15c ⅌ lb.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 8@8½; second do, 6@7; third do, 5@6c ⅌ lb.
VEAL—Dressed, 6@6½c ⅌ lb for large, and 8@9c for small; 10c for choice.
MUTTON—Southers, 7½@8c; Ewes, 6@6½c ⅌ lb.
LAMB—6@7c.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain-Fed, on the hoof, 6½@6½; choice, 6½c ⅌ lb; soft, 5½@6½; Dressed, do, 8@9c; Roasting Pigs, alive, $5 00@$5 50.

Salada Made Easy.
Let your first complaint take the own course and don't take Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Sold by druggists.

Good Advice.
Our family for the past five years has been kept in good health by using Smith's Ginger Tonic. It prevents malaria, headache, and all nervous complaints. Cures more aches and pains than any known remedy. Depot 1029 Market st.

—Dr. Pierce's "Pellets," or sugar-coated granules—the original "little liver pills," (beware of imitations)—cure sick and bilious headache, cleanse the stomach and bowels, and purify the blood. To get genuine, see Dr. Pierce's signature and portrait on Government stamp. 25 cents per vial, by druggists.

—C. F. Wyer & Co., proprietors of the Pacific Coal and Feed Yard, 849 Mission street, between 4th and 5th) make it a rule to give their customers 2,240 lbs. to the ton of Coal, and yet they barge less than dealers who practice disputable tricks of short weight and slaty coal. This firm prides itself upon the quality and the quantity of the Coal they furnish their customers, and if you send them a trial order you will be convinced that it pays to deal with a firm who sells goods through honesty in all their dealings.

Faded Colors Restored.
Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and luster by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

—Save $150. Buy your piano direct from the manufacturers. Wheelock & Co., New York, have opened an agency at 332 Sutter street, F. K. Gleason, manager. Instruments sold on installments.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

—Get your large boxed leaves at R. Stein's 583 Fourth street, near Freelon.

☞ Ask your grocer for MERINO SOAP.

BOOTS AND SHOES!
MOORE & MURPHY,
Importers, Manufacturers and Dealers in all kinds of Ladies' and Gent's
BOOTS AND SHOES.
☞ Full Lines of the Best Eastern Manufacturers and Custom Workingmen's Boots and Shoes constantly on hand.
Remember the Number:
138 SIXTH STREET. 138
Bet. Natoma and Howard.
R. MOORE. J. D. MURPHY.

McDOWELL & ARCUELLO,
SAN FRANCISCO
CARPET BEATING
MACHINES,
1321 and 1323 Market Street, S. F.
(Between Ninth and Tenth Streets.)
Re-Fitting CARPETS a Specialty.
WE EMPLOY NONE BUT EXPERIENCED WORKMEN. Boxes for the reception of orders will be found at the following places: S. W. cor. Hayes and Gough streets; S. W. cor. Fourth and Market streets (Keith's Drug Store); N. E. cor. First and Minnie streets; Cor. Montgomery Ave. and Green street, (Joe Merry's Drug Store); Market street, next to Hibernia Bank, opp. Second street; S. E. cor. Post and Larkin streets.

PHOSPHATE SOAP.
—UNRIVALLED FOR—
Curing Skin Diseases and for Preserving a Healthy Skin.
ALL ROAD WORKS USE COOL WATER PHOSPHATE SOAP FOR BLEACHING. MADE BY THE SAN FRANCISCO SOAP CO.
☞ Beware of Imitations of both the above justly celebrated articles.
The genuine are made only by the Standard Soap Company, who also manufacture the largest assortment of Laundry and Toilet soap in the world. Office, 204 Sacramento street, San Francisco, Cal.

☞ WASHING.
Prices Reduced.
White's Laundry,
PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
No. 648 MARKET STREET.
Branch Office, 1168 Market Street.
LAUNDRY:
Thirteenth Street bet. Folsom and Howard.
Open from 7 a. m. to 9 p. m. Saturdays 11 ½ a.

Shirts	10c. each.
Night Shirts	10c.
Under Shirts	10c.
Drawers	10c.
Linen Coats	10c.
Pain Chemise	10c.
do Night Dresses	15c.
do Skirts	15c.
do Dresses	25c.
Bed Spreads	10 to 15c.
Table Cloths (ordinary size)	10c.
Sheets	5c. per line on 8.
Pillow Slips, Starched	5c.
Pillow Slips, not Starched	(At the rate of 25c.
Towels	per doz.
Handkerchiefs	per doz.
Hose	5c.
Collars	5c.
Napkins	10c. per doz.
Cuffs	20c. per doz. or 5c. per pair.
Blankets	50c.
Children's plain starched pieces	6½ per doz.
Children's plain pieces, not starched	5c. per doz. or 1c. each.

SINGLE SMALL PIECES.
THESE PRICES apply ONLY to plain pieces. Goods requiring extra time and labor will be charged accordingly.
WASHING CALLED FOR AND DELIVERED to any part of the city.
Orders will receive prompt attention.

THE NEW IMPROVED
WINTHROP PORTABLE RANGE!
(ALL SIZES.)

EVERY RANGE WARRANTED
SINGLE and DOUBLE OVENS.
CHAS. BROWN & SON, Agents,
38 CEARY ST.,
San Francisco, Cal.
These New Improved Ranges combine all Modern Improvements, are Beautiful in Design have Double Top, extra heavy Fire-Plates, Ventilated Irons, Reservoirs, Etc.
For Economy, Durability, Cleanliness and Convenience, the New Improved Winthrop Ranges excel all others, are the cheapest in the Market, and pay for themselves in a few weeks by the saving of Fuel usually wasted by other Cooking Stoves and Ranges.
New Designs in Parlor and Office Stoves at the lowest prices.
False Grates for the saving of the Fuel, fitted to any Range or Mantel Grate.
Hot and Cold Water Connections made by Experienced Workmen, and work warranted to give Entire Satisfaction. A large Stock of Tinware, Woodenware, and Kitchen Utensils embracing many novelties always kept on hand; made to order if desired, and sold at very low prices.
Orders filled from all parts of the country.
We are proprietors of the Winthrop Coal Oil Stoves, which are unequalled for cooking and heating purposes; they are convenient, having Cast Iron Wells, consequently are non-explosive, requiring no care.
CHAS. BROWN & SON, No. 38 Ceary Street, San Francisco, Cal.
☞ REMOVED FROM 18 DUPONT STREET. ☜

☞ CARPETS, OIL-CLOTHS, LINOLEUM,
COCOA MATTINGS, RUGS, LACE CURTAINS,
CORNICES, SHADES, ETC., ETC.
☞ An assortment of 150 Patterns, comprising the Latest and most Elegant Designs in all grades of goods sold at the very lowest prices for cash.
☞ A Few NEW Patterns of Parlor, Hall, and Stair Carpets with Borders to match. Just Received. Brussels Laid at 35c. and 90c.
ALEX. MACKAY,
715 MARKET STREET, San Francisco.

MRS. M. H. OBER, 326 SUTTER ST
BOSTON AND CALIFORNIA DRESS REFORM.
An Elegant CORTIL CORSET, to order, for $5. Worth Under Garments, (specialty), Children's Corset Waists, Cashmere and Merino Union Suits, Shoulder-Braces, Hygienic Corsets, Hose and Skirt Supports, Emancipation Waists, and Combination Suits. (SEND FOR CIRCULAR.)

JOHN STACK. GEO. LACOMBE.
STACK & LACOMBE,
Practical Hatters,
639 MARKET STREET,
Under Palace Hotel. SAN FRANCISCO.

HODGES
CLOAK
AND
SUIT ROOMS,
10 Fifth St., near Market St., S. F.
☞ We hands large variety of the Latest Styles Cloaks and Suitings at very low prices.
Ladies Suits from $4 00 up. A Full Line of Ulsters, Morning Wrappers, etc. Special attention to Orders for the coming anniversary at Lowest Rates.

REDUCTION IN COAL.
I AM NOW SELLING
Southport Coos Bay Coal at . . . $ 8 50 a ton
Eastport Coal at . . . . . 8 50 a ton
Seattle Coal at . . . . . 8 50 a ton
Scotch Coal at . . . . . 18 00 a ton
West Hartley Coal at . . . . . 10 50 a ton
and Wellington Coal at . . . . . 11 50 a ton
Coke at Gas House Rates. Delivered Free.
J. FLYNN,
1115 and 1115 Mission treet.

THE LAST BEST REMEDY FOR PAINS AND Pimples. Sold at present only by the manufacturer,
W. W. NEWELL, 516 Commercial St.

HEALD'S BUSINESS COLLEGE.
24 Post Street
San Francisco, Cal.
Opposite Mechanics' Institute.
CONTINUES TO IMPART SUCH BUSINESS EDUCATION as has made its graduates in demand for the past thirteen years in the Mercantile Community for Commercial positions. Pupils are fitted for the entire business by its novel system of ACTUAL BUSINESS TRAINING. For Circular address H. S. HEALD,
President Business College, San Francisco.

PACIFIC Business College,
320 POST ST.
SAN FRANCISCO.
Life Scholarships, ... $70
Paid in Installments, ... 75
SEND FOR CIRCULAR.

SPECIAL
GOLD MEDAL
Awarded in 1877, at Philadelphia.
For Excellence, Purity, and Evenness of Quality.
DAVENPORT
WHISKEY!
Pure & Unadulterated
Superior to ANY BRAND IMPORTED.
DAVENPORT
WHISKEY
IS UNRIVALLED
This is a WHISKEY of Superior Quality, as has never been on the market in any country.
This Article should NOT be classed with the so-called Compounds of this Coast, but is of a rich, rare flavor and full-bodied, and NO BLENDED or COMPOUNDS can COMPARE with it.
Distillation of 1875 and 1876 is EXCELLENT.
SCHULTZ & VON BARGEN,
SOLE OWNERS,
DAVENPORT.

KNABE
PIANOFORTES.
UNEQUALLED IN
Tone, Touch, Workmanship & Durability
WILLIAM KNABE & CO.,
204 and 206 West Baltimore St., Baltimore.
No. 112 Fifth Avenue, New York.

PACIFIC COAST
LAND BUREAU.
A CORPORATION.
President . . . WENDELL EASTON
Vice President and Gen. Manager . GEO. W. FLINN
Treasurer . . . ANGLO CALIFORNIAN BANK
Secretary . . . F. H. WILLIS
Board of Directors:
J. O. FLORIDA, GRANT I. TAGGART,
G. W. FLINN, F. H. WILLIS,
WENDELL EASTON.
Principal Place of Business:
22 Montgomery Street, S. F.
Sub Agencies at each county seat of the State.
Agency for Sale and Exchange of Farming Lands, Large Tracts subdivided and sold at Auction or Private Sale.
☞ Colonists and Immigrants located. Careful appointments made for Banks, Courts, Administrators, Trustees, etc. Legal Forms complied with. Full records of sales in each county on file at the General office. Assume entire charge of property, pay taxes, insurance, etc., etc.
MONEY TO LOAN.

NEW DRUG STORE!
VAL SCHMIDT & CO.,
(Late with Wakefield & Co.)
—HAVE OPENED A FIRST CLASS—
DRUG STORE
On the cor. Pine and Polk Sts.
(ESTABLISHED IN 1850.)
WOOL
Commission House,
MOODY & PARISH,
219 Davis street, San Francisco.
Wool Bags, Hop-cloth, Twine, Sheep Shears, Carbolic Sheep Washes and Tobacco for sale. Cash advances made on Consignments.

A Trial Will Convince You that
DR. J. D. MITCHELL'S
Eureka Cough Syrup
—IS THE—
MOST RELIABLE REMEDY FOR THROAT AND All Lung Diseases, and all Pulmonary complaints. For sale by all Druggists.
NOTICE. The Eureka Cough Syrup is now manufactured at No. 1211 Broadway, San Francisco, Cal., and for sale by all druggists. CHAS. E. BIXBY, Proprietor.
MANUFACTORY:
1211 Broadway, ... San Francisco
DR. WEBB
—HAS REMOVED TO—
1023 MISSION STREET,
Bet. Sixth and Seventh.
☞ One of Mr. John Sullivan's rows of houses

GEO. H. FULLER,
—MANUFACTURER OF—
Settees, School and Office Furniture.
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

☞ C. CURTIN, ☜
GRAND DRY GOODS STORE
911 and 913 MARKET STREET.
SPRING IMPORTATIONS ☞
ARRIVING DAILY!!!
NEW STYLES! NEW GOODS! LOW PRICES.
DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT.
10 Cases NEW French Wash Fabric, choice Designs and new colorings.
500 pairs New Designs in Antique, Guipure, Nottingham and Swiss Lace CURTAINS.
New Designs in PIANO and Embroidered TABLE COVERS.
DRESS DEPARTMENT.
500 Pieces Bordure Suitings, in all the latest Colors, at 20 Cents per yard; regular price 37 1-2 cents.
100 Pieces All-Wool English Serge, 48 inches wide, at 50 cents per yard.
CLOAK DEPARTMENT.
Just Received a few SAMPLE LOTS of the NEW SPRING STYLES of ☞ ULSTERS and DOLMANS, ☜
Also a Choice Lot NEW SPRING CLOAKINGS, at very LOW PRICES.
Country Orders Promptly Filled. Samples on Application.
Goods Delivered FREE in Oakland, Alameda, Brooklyn, Berkeley and Fruit Vale.
The Hayes Valley and Market Street Cars, and Central Railroad Cars pass the door.
C. CURTIN,
911 and 913 MARKET STREET.

JOE POHEIM
The Tailor,
Makes the Best-Fitting SUITS IN THE CITY.

Business Suits made to Order from	$20 00
do Pants do do	5 00
Fine Dress Pants from	8 00
Fine French Beaver Suits from	40 00
Overcoats from	20 00

☞ PROMPT ATTENTION AND HONEST DEALING.
PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED
☞ OR NO SALE.
☞ Samples and Rules for Self-measurement sent FREE to any address.
203 Montgomery St. 724 Market St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
DEVOTED TO THE PROPAGATION AND DEFENCE OF CATHOLIC PRINCIPLES.
By THE MONITOR PUBLISHING CO. Office: 522 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Mail (if paid in advance)	$1 00
Mail (if not paid in advance)	1 50
Office (if paid in advance)	1 50
Office (if not paid in advance)	2 00
Any of the British Provinces (if not paid in advance)	3 00

All communications, remittances, checks, and postal orders to P. J. McCOLGAN, Editorial Manager.
Post-Office Box 2353 P. O., San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post-Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR
is now in its twenty-fifth year of publication, and is universally acknowledged to be a staunch and reliable Religious Newspaper, has none of the taint and sectarian influence which make THE MONITOR a valuable medium for Advertisements.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.
Communications, to secure insertion, should be handed in on Saturday of each week.
No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the name of the writer. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the welfare of the Church, by the Journal. Correspondents should be as brief as possible, legible, and on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return Mss. of unused articles.
All contributions and communications, whether on business or for publication, should be addressed to the Manager.

For thy Soul be not ashamed to say the Truth.....Strive for Justice for thy Soul; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Ecclesiasticus iv. 34)

VOL. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1882.

MISCELLANEOUS.

POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.
DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
B. SLAVEN,
Baldwin Building.

PLATING.
GOLD PLATING,
SILVER PLATING,
Japanning and Bronze.
WORK PLATED WORN A LIFETIME.
ESTABLISHMENT
Pacific Coast
Gold, Silver and Nickel
Plating Works.
Proprietor.

J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
Kearny & Post Sts.,
Entrance, 39 Post St.

KANE & HEANEY,
Butter, Cheese,
EGGS, ETC.
Stand 40 Centre Market.

STATHAM
PIANOS
Unsurpassed in Tone,
Touch and Durability.
EASY PAYMENTS OR INSTALLMENTS
At the Factory:
MISSION STREET, 765
Repairing a Specialty. Send for Circular.

N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
Sacramento Street.
EMBALMING.
Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.

GEO. G. GERE, M. D.
and Surgeon,
304 Sutter St., San Francisco.

COAL!
Full Weight and Low Prices.
JULIUS TABLA'S,
Cor. Sutter & Battery Sts., San Francisco.

HALL'S PULMONIC
PRICE
AN IMMEDIATE AND PERMANENT CURE FOR COLDS, ASTHMA, CROUP, INFLUENZA, LOSS OF VOICE, Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. California Pulmonary Balsam, take no other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors,
417 Sansome Street, S. F.

The Land Act Criticised in Parliament.

STIRRING SPEECHES BY SEXTON AND HEALY.

Figures that Prove the Act to be a Fraud and a Failure.

Only 1,313 Cases Decided Out of 70,000.

SEXTON'S STARTLING FIGURES

HEALY'S FORCIBLE FACTS

MR. SEXTON ON THE LAND ACT.

We take the following passages from the speech delivered on Thursday week by Mr. Sexton:

Mr. Sexton, at a quarter before six o'clock, rose to resume the adjourned debate on the motion of the Prime Minister regarding the Lords' committees on the Land Act. He said he believed he could speak on behalf of the Irish tenants, who, he believed, would welcome the result of any inquiry into the working of the Land Act by any body of persons who at least professed a desire for the public good. He claimed, for example, that it is necessary inquiry should be made as to how far the Land Act secures that the tenantry within its operation shall not be rented in respect of the improvements effected by themselves or their predecessors in title; and he said, without hesitation, that the action of the land courts has hitherto resulted in the fixing of a rent in which nothing was allowed for the tenant's improvements or his legal interest (hear, hear). Mr Sexton then proceeded to show how adversely the recent decision of the Judges of Appeal would work for the tenants. In order to show tenants who had applied to the court how they might be saved from rack-renting pending the decision of their cases it would be useful to remind the House what has been the actual scope of the operations of the land courts since their first establishment. The Land Commission has been in active operation for over four months, and most of the subcommissions had been in operation for the greater part of that time.

HOW MANY CASES HAD BEEN DECIDED?

It appeared by a Parliamentary paper that up to the 26th of January there had been 1,313 cases decided, and these cases affected only 42,081 acres of land. In over four months they had only been able to apply their operations to an area equal to an ordinary parish. Although the Government assured the sub-commissioners reductions should be made, yet it was very curious if they took the decisions, he cared not how, by provinces or counties, by any subdivision they chose, they would find that they generally came to this—that the sub-commissioners had generally kept two principles in view (hear, hear). Firstly, they took about one-four in of the existing rent, no matter what the rack-rent was (hear, hear). That was their first principle. Their second principle was, that they took care upon their decisions never to go below Griffith's valuation (hear, hear). The gross rental of the 1,313 cases decided was £28,486; Griffith's valuation being £26,066. Now, Griffith's valuation included, at the time it was made, the value of all the improvements made by the tenants (might hear, hear). It included all, and nine-tenths of the difference between the state of nature and the present state of the land in Ireland, so eloquently described by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He wanted to know how decisions kept above the line of Griffith's valuation could be said in any sense to have regard to Healy's Clause (cheers). How many cases had been lodged? Sixty nine thousand five hundred and ninety seven. That is to say, in three months the courts in the first instance had arrived at decisions

IN ONE CASE OUT OF EVERY FIFTY

Awaiting hearing or decision (cheers). Now let them proceed to a very simple sum in arithmetic (laughter). If the twelve sub-commissioners decide 1,313 cases in three months, how long will they decide in a year? (Laughter.) Five thousand; and it seemed reasonable to suppose that the sub-commissioners at the outset, anxious to create a favorable impression in Ireland, anxious to decide as many cases as possible, anxious to prove their utility to the Government, proceeded at the utmost possible speed (cheers). They were capable of deciding 5,000 cases in a year, but there were 70,000 cases waiting their decision. If the sub-commissioners decided five thousand cases in a year, how many years would it take to decide 70,000 cases?

IT WOULD TAKE FOURTEEN YEARS.

The important significance of this was that the lives of thousands of farmers in Ireland who had set their hope for a decision of their cases for an indefinite number of years would be subject during all those years to the rack renting of their landlords—rack-renting recognized with perfect impunity for all that time (cheers), for with a studious care for exceeding any bestowed upon the interest of the tenant, the Act had saved the legal right of the rack renting landlord. It was obvious from the language of the Act that the rack renting landlord could continue to exact arrears of rack-rent in the case of any particular tenant until his case was decided by the court (cheers). He further claimed that there should be an inquiry, in order to devise means to protect tenants from eviction and eviction in respect of accumulated arrears of unreduced rent (hear, hear). Some time ago he stated in this House that he thought the arrears at present existing in Ireland amounted at least to two millions sterling, but on reconsideration he was inclined to modify that estimate. He believed that

AT LEAST ONE TENANT OUT OF EVERY THREE

In Ireland was in arrear, and he believed that on the average the period during which the arrears had accumulated was two or three years. From all he had heard and thought on this branch of the subject he was inclined to say that a sum of not less than a half a year of the total rental of Ireland was at present owing, in the form of arrears, to the landlords. In other words, there was owing to the landlords not less than eight or nine millions. The Land Act contained a clause with respect to the payment of arrears. The vital defect of the clause was that it was optional and not obligatory. How many applications had been made by the landlords since the Land Court was opened in virtue of that arrear clause? There were nine thousand landlords in Ireland. How many applications had they made? Twenty-one (laughter). How many tenants joined in those applications, out of 700,000 in arrear? One hundred and thirty-eight, or about one in a thousand. How many applications were granted? Eighteen. How many tenants were affected by those grants? Ninety five; that was to say that out of 700,000 tenants in arrear the State made advances to 95 (ironical laughter).

AND WHAT WAS THE AMOUNT ADVANCED?

Out of the £8,000,000 or £9,000,000 in arrear? £500 (renewed laughter). A farce could not go further than it. It afforded a most striking illustration of what was called the drop in the ocean. He confessed he saw no improvement or signs of improvement. At the Michaelmas session of 1880 there were 920 ejectment decrees, representing arrears to the amount of £20,000. At the Michaelmas session of 1881 how many ejectment decrees were granted? Not 200, but 2,000, representing a rental not of £20,000, but of £47,000. He might be allowed to cite another striking fact in this connection. The evictions for the half year ending December, 1880—that is to say of persons who were neither allowed back as tenants or caretakers, but were thrown out bodily on the roadside and left there—amounted to 770 families, or 1,480 persons. Now, let them take the half year after the Land Act passed. Whereas in the half year ending December, 1881, 320 families—1,440 persons, were evicted, in the half year after the beneficent Land Act passed 877 families, comprising 4,000 persons, had been turned out of their holdings. The first effect, therefore, of this so-called measure of justice was the leveling of hundreds, he might say

THOUSANDS, OF HUMBLE HOMESTEADS

In Ireland. Further, he claimed that it was necessary to inquire how far the working of the Land Act enabled the tenants of small holdings under £7 annual value to live and thrive. In this connection he made special reference to the condition of the small Western farmers of Connaught. That province was made up of poor farms and of small farms. He did not think he went too far when he said that in Connaught the improvements made by the tenants were generally worth more than the fee simple. In the province of Connaught there were 7,060 holdings under one acre in extent; there were 14,000 holdings between one and five acres, and there were 70,000 holdings under fifteen acres, and he believed these 70,000 holdings constituted the running sore and open wound upon the body of the Irish tenantry. How had the Land Act applied it? Out of those 70,000 holdings, in four months the Land Commissioners had decided

IN THE PROVINCE OF CONNAUGHT

221 cases. These 221 cases covered 5,000 acres, showing plainly that the average size of the Connaught holdings dealt with by the Land Court was 23 acres, and leading to the irresistible inference that the small farmers holding between five and fifteen acres, the men who had the greatest claim on the Land Court, the men who put into the soil some of their labor, the men who had not been discouraged by the proceedings of the Land Court, and were remaining outside in other words, that the Land Act had failed to apply a salve to the running sore and open wound on the body of the Irish tenantry. The former rent in those 221 cases was £2,866, the judicial rent was £2,056; the treasury valuation £1,560. The House would observe the peculiar tenacity with which the sub-commissioners, in the absence of instructions, had always taken off one fourth of the existing rack-rent, and had never cut below the line of Griffith's valuation.

THE AVERAGE RENT

In these cases before the Act was passed was £12 for the future it would be £9. Would any man tell him that a deduction of £3 in each case constituted such a decrease as ought to be made in the cases of men who had multiplied the value of the land by improvement? Would such a difference enable those men to face the terrible ordeal of a parallel famine which must always be expected? He then asked what had been the operations of the Land Act in respect to the sale of farms. The Land Act had sold, in the four months of its existence, out of nine thousand properties in Ireland, only one small property of the tenants (hear, hear). That was the property of Jane McDonnell, in the county Down. The smallness and inconsiderableness of that property may be estimated from the fact that only £1,547 was advanced by the commissioners. They had also advanced £7,817 to five other landlords, whilst a sum of £16,000 had been sanctioned but not given. Thus it would be seen that the whole operation of these clauses of the Act had been confined to advances amounting to £25,000 to 22 landlords and £1,000 for the benefit of 70 tenants out of 574,000. (Irish cheers.) He would regret if as

A GRAVE AND CRIMINAL OVERSIGHT

On his part if before he sat down he neglected to say the Land Act has proved, among its many other impotencies and inefficiencies, most impotent and most efficient in respect to the miserable case of the miserable Irish laborer (hear). In one case out of a thousand, he would venture to say, the judges under this Act had ordered the farmer to provide the laborer with a cottage and a bit of ground, but the provisions of the Act in regard to the purchase of land and the erection of the laborers' cottages had remained absolutely null, and had not been carried into effect in a single case (hear, hear). On these grounds he claimed a free inquiry into the working of the Land Act.

MR. HEALY ON THE LAND ACT.

From the speech delivered by Mr. Healy on Thursday week on Mr. Gladstone's resolution condemning the Lords' committee we take the following passages:

Mr. Healy and the Irish members opposed the resolution of the right Hon. gentleman for this reason, it was a resolution not directed, as they read it, against the House of Lords—it was a resolution which declared that any inquiry into the Land Act, 1881, was premature and opposed to the interest of the good government of Ireland (hear). For that reason, and no other, he was opposed to it (hear, hear). The Hon. member denies that the Irish members had not complained of the appointments under the Land Act, as stated by the Hon. member for West Surrey, and referring to a statement made by the Hon. member, to the effect that valuators were prevented from going upon the lands because they were afraid of being shot, asked if that were true how was it that the evidence of the valuators that had given evidence was unsatisfactory to the tenants? (Hear, hear.) If those valuators were in such dread of their lives, how was it that they never got the rent smacked down more than 25 per cent? (Laughter and cheers.) He called the attention of the House and of the Hon. member for Tyrone, and the senior member for the county of Cork, who objected to an inquiry, to the character of Mr. John Barrett, of Carrignanus Castle, who had been appointed a valuator under the Act. Mr. Barrett was a man hated and detested by the people. For years he had gone about with a double barrelled gun, and for a very considerable period he had been guarded by the police. His rack-renting on the estate of Lord Rennmare was simply intolerable. When he was appointed agent on that estate he immediately raised the rents in some cases 300 per cent. In one case he raised a poor man's rent from £14 to £42 without ever having walked the land. Those were the sort of gentlemen of whom they were told they should make no complaint (hear, hear). The Hon. gentleman, replying to the observations of the Prime Minister accusing the party of having attempted to defeat Irish party of having attempted to defeat and discredit it in Ireland, asked the right Hon. gentleman was it not the fact that when this bill was superbilled in the House it was saved by the [illegible] of himself and his friends sitting near him? (Cheers.) The Prime Minister told them the Irish party was a very jealous conspiracy against land and other class interests in Ireland. The Hon. member pointed out that the conduct of the Irish party was [illegible] cases, and several of those cases which he had prepared had since been brought into court, and considerable reductions of rent had been made. Last Week Mr. Shea, of Bantry, a tenant on Lord Kenmare's estate, brought a case into court. The court set it aside, Judge O'Hagin characterizing it as one of the most stringent and unreasonable that ever came under his notice (hear, hear). This was one of the cases which he had prepared (hear), and yet the Prime Minister referred to them as a conspiracy against law, order, and property in Ireland (hear, hear). He (Mr. Healy) was delighted at

ONE OF THE WORST RACK-RENTERS,

THE SUPPRESSION OF THE LAND LEAGUE;

He thought it was the best thing that ever happened in Ireland, because he knew that the right Hon. gentleman was going to try to suppress the Atlantic ocean as to suppress the Land League (cheers), and there had been discouraged by the proceedings of the Land Court, and were remaining outside in other words, that the Land Act had failed to apply a salve to the running sore and open wound on the body of the Irish tenantry. The former rent in those 221 cases was £2,866, the judicial rent was £2,056; the treasury valuation £1,560. The House would observe the peculiar tenacity with which the sub-commissioners, in the absence of instructions, had always taken off one fourth of the existing rack-rent, and had never cut below the line of Griffith's valuation.

THE AVERAGE RENT

In these cases before the Act was passed was £12 for the future it would be £9. Would any man tell him that a deduction of £3 in each case constituted such a decrease as ought to be made in the cases of men who had multiplied the value of the land by improvement? Would such a difference enable those men to face the terrible ordeal of a parallel famine which must always be expected? He then asked what had been the operations of the Land Act in respect to the sale of farms. The Land Act had sold, in the four months of its existence, out of nine thousand properties in Ireland, only one small property of the tenants (hear, hear). That was the property of Jane McDonnell, in the county Down. The smallness and inconsiderableness of that property may be estimated from the fact that only £1,547 was advanced by the commissioners. They had also advanced £7,817 to five other landlords, whilst a sum of £16,000 had been sanctioned but not given. Thus it would be seen that the whole operation of these clauses of the Act had been confined to advances amounting to £25,000 to 22 landlords and £1,000 for the benefit of 70 tenants out of 574,000. (Irish cheers.) He would regret if as

A GRAVE AND CRIMINAL OVERSIGHT

On his part if before he sat down he neglected to say the Land Act has proved, among its many other impotencies and inefficiencies, most impotent and most efficient in respect to the miserable case of the miserable Irish laborer (hear). In one case out of a thousand, he would venture to say, the judges under this Act had ordered the farmer to provide the laborer with a cottage and a bit of ground, but the provisions of the Act in regard to the purchase of land and the erection of the laborers' cottages had remained absolutely null, and had not been carried into effect in a single case (hear, hear). On these grounds he claimed a free inquiry into the working of the Land Act.

MR. HEALY ON THE LAND ACT.

From the speech delivered by Mr. Healy on Thursday week on Mr. Gladstone's resolution condemning the Lords' committee we take the following passages:

Mr. Healy and the Irish members opposed the resolution of the right Hon. gentleman for this reason, it was a resolution not directed, as they read it, against the House of Lords—it was a resolution which declared that any inquiry into the Land Act, 1881, was premature and opposed to the interest of the good government of Ireland (hear). For that reason, and no other, he was opposed to it (hear, hear). The Hon. member denies that the Irish members had not complained of the appointments under the Land Act, as stated by the Hon. member for West Surrey, and referring to a statement made by the Hon. member, to the effect that valuators were prevented from going upon the lands because they were afraid of being shot, asked if that were true how was it that the evidence of the valuators that had given evidence was unsatisfactory to the tenants? (Hear, hear.) If those valuators were in such dread of their lives, how was it that they never got the rent smacked down more than 25 per cent? (Laughter and cheers.) He called the attention of the House and of the Hon. member for Tyrone, and the senior member for the county of Cork, who objected to an inquiry, to the character of Mr. John Barrett, of Carrignanus Castle, who had been appointed a valuator under the Act. Mr. Barrett was a man hated and detested by the people. For years he had gone about with a double barrelled gun, and for a very considerable period he had been guarded by the police. His rack-renting on the estate of Lord Rennmare was simply intolerable. When he was appointed agent on that estate he immediately raised the rents in some cases 300 per cent. In one case he raised a poor man's rent from £14 to £42 without ever having walked the land. Those were the sort of gentlemen of whom they were told they should make no complaint (hear, hear). The Hon. gentleman, replying to the observations of the Prime Minister accusing the party of having attempted to defeat Irish party of having attempted to defeat and discredit it in Ireland, asked the right Hon. gentleman was it not the fact that when this bill was superbilled in the House it was saved by the [illegible] of himself and his friends sitting near him? (Cheers.) The Prime Minister told them the Irish party was a very jealous conspiracy against land and other class interests in Ireland. The Hon. member pointed out that the conduct of the Irish party was [illegible] cases, and several of those cases which he had prepared had since been brought into court, and considerable reductions of rent had been made. Last Week Mr. Shea, of Bantry, a tenant on Lord Kenmare's estate, brought a case into court. The court set it aside, Judge O'Hagin characterizing it as one of the most stringent and unreasonable that ever came under his notice (hear, hear). This was one of the cases which he had prepared (hear), and yet the Prime Minister referred to them as a conspiracy against law, order, and property in Ireland (hear, hear). He (Mr. Healy) was delighted at

ONE OF THE WORST RACK-RENTERS,

THE SUPPRESSION OF THE LAND LEAGUE;

He thought it was the best thing that ever happened in Ireland, because he knew that the right Hon. gentleman was going to try to suppress the Atlantic ocean as to suppress the Land League (cheers), and there had been discouraged by the proceedings of the Land Court, and were remaining outside in other words, that the Land Act had failed to apply a salve to the running sore and open wound on the body of the Irish tenantry. The former rent in those 221 cases was £2,866, the judicial rent was £2,056; the treasury valuation £1,560. The House would observe the peculiar tenacity with which the sub-commissioners, in the absence of instructions, had always taken off one fourth of the existing rack-rent, and had never cut below the line of Griffith's valuation.

THE AVERAGE RENT

In these cases before the Act was passed was £12 for the future it would be £9. Would any man tell him that a deduction of £3 in each case constituted such a decrease as ought to be made in the cases of men who had multiplied the value of the land by improvement? Would such a difference enable those men to face the terrible ordeal of a parallel famine which must always be expected? He then asked what had been the operations of the Land Act in respect to the sale of farms. The Land Act had sold, in the four months of its existence, out of nine thousand properties in Ireland, only one small property of the tenants (hear, hear). That was the property of Jane McDonnell, in the county Down. The smallness and inconsiderableness of that property may be estimated from the fact that only £1,547 was advanced by the commissioners. They had also advanced £7,817 to five other landlords, whilst a sum of £16,000 had been sanctioned but not given. Thus it would be seen that the whole operation of these clauses of the Act had been confined to advances amounting to £25,000 to 22 landlords and £1,000 for the benefit of 70 tenants out of 574,000. (Irish cheers.) He would regret if as

TO BE MERCIFUL TO THEIR TENANTS,

He pointed out that there were a number of bad years, and he asked them not to put him in the position of a man having to execute injustice. Two years afterwards the Chief Secretary was only too alert in sending the forces of the Crown to carry out evictions for those very arrears of rack-rents which formed the subject of his appeal for mercy to the Irish landlords a short time before. Having referred to the promise of the Prime Minister to inquire into the question of town parks during the recess as furnishing another proof of the necessity for inquiry, he briefly alluded to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Dublin a few days ago, and remarked that the clause which had been associated with his name might now be left to the tender mercies of the lawyers and the Hon. members who represented Ulster in that House. He also thought that a very proper subject for inquiry by the noble lords would be to ascertain how far it was desirable that this statutory term of say fifteen years should be continued. For his own part, he thought the tenant who accepted a statutory term of fifteen years at present was little better than a fool (hear, hear). He wished, in conclusion, to make a remark upon a subject personal to himself. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in addressing his constituents at Birmingham, referred to him as having stated in the House of Commons that the Land League had knocked into a cocked hat, and that such vulgar audacity in the House justified the course the Government has taken. He wished to say that he never used the expression in the sense stated by the right Hon. gentleman. He was speaking between five and six o'clock in the morning at the end of an all-night sitting, and he stated that it was true, as alleged by the Prime Minister, that the executive in Ireland had been superseded, after seven hundred years' English rule in that country, by an association which had been but two years in existence. If it was knocked into a cocked hat by this association, then it was an extraordinary admission on the part of the Government. He made the same denial six months ago in a letter to the Hon. member for Leeds, and yet the Chancellor of the Duchy, who ought to be aware of that denial, thought proper to go before his constituency and charge him with vulgar audacity. He could certainly say that in point of vulgarity or audacity, whatever his speeches might be, he was not in the habit of referring to his opponents as dolts, as fools, and as asses (Opposition cheers).

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE COUNTRY

Irish "Suspects."

HOW THEY ARE ARRESTED.

SHOCKING SCENES OF GOVERNMENT SECRECY.

How the Peelers Pounce on Innocent People.

The Pall Mall Gazette gives the following sketch by an Irish correspondent of how men are "reasonably suspected" in Ireland, and how their arrests are effected:

"You see in your favorite newspaper that "ten suspects were conveyed to jail" to Naas, say or Monaghan, or Kilkenny—and you simply are conscious if the fact of the arrest and lodgment. But that tells nothing. This is but the consummation, as it were, of many and sometimes intricate processes. To take an instance from the West of Ireland. A certain area is selected by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant to be "proscribed" that is, placed under a new will and pretty generally understood, under the Act for the Better Protection of Persons and Property (Ireland) Act, 1881. Let us see what follows. The county inspector of constabulary and the resident magistrate of the district pay hurried visits to one another. The latter probably asks the district sub-inspector his opinion as a form, but not attaching any weight to it, and seeks, though as probably not, the advice which he has already determined to reject. The real advisers of the resident magistrates are the constables (commonly called sergeants) of the police sub-districts. To these men is entrusted in their particular jurisdiction; and it is hard to realize what this power means. It may mean the power of ruining an honest man for the gratification of a petty spite; it may mean the break up for months of a happy domestic circle; it may mean an odious tyranny, which is all the more keenly felt that it works like an immunity—secretly, swiftly, stealthily. A resident magistrate calls together some three or four sergeants, and on their statements the names of ten or a dozen persons are jotted down as "reasonably suspected." Of course, in many instances, strong suspicion, derived from time, proximity, identity of habits and haunts, and circumstances of a kindred character do exist; but the great majority are reasonably suspected of nothing, connected with no overt act, and simply liable to a recommendation for arrest as being of bad repute. The constables have now departed; the resident magistrate's note-book is full; it is determined by him that a 'batch' shall be taken, and he posts off to Dublin Castle. Cipher telegrams now begin to cross and recross the wires, and the district sub-inspector is suddenly summoned to an interview with the Chief Secretary.

THE ABSOLUTE FATE OF EVERY MAN

THE RESIDENT MAGISTRATE IS PRESENT and he, having stated that such a one is "reasonably suspected of intimidation," on reference to the sub-inspector, who confirms with a kind of circular reasoning this statement, by saying, "Yes; that man; because he is reasonably suspected," the Chief Secretary sighs, shakes his head, and signs the warrants. It is here the preliminaries end, and the sub-inspector returns with the warrants in his pocket with the accompanying responsibility of their speedy and successful execution. He returns by the late mail, cipher messages flying down the wires before him. An hour after midnight, say, he arrives, when a dozen cars are ordered to the barrack doors, and half that number of unlucky men are dispatched to put the ex-policeman constables on the qui vive. The parade of the arresting force is quickly held in the barrack day-room; ammunition and handcuff cases are scrutinized, the order to file out and get on the cars is given, and in the dead darkness of a moonless night the long prepossession gets under way. The central point for the succeeding operations is reached after half an hour's short run; a halt is called along the cars, and the party clinate round their officer in charge. Small companies of three and four are then told to go and

PERFORM THE SUSPECTS FOR ARREST,

so that when the sub-inspector arrives, warrant in hand, no delay may arise. Again the cars are filled, but now they scatter just peep as dawn is faintly struggling with the retreating night. The first house is within half a mile, and thither the sub-inspector goes. Everything is very still, and the stalwart men in great coat, cape, and rifle in hand loom up larger than the life against the gray morning mist. Two men are sent quietly to the rear, and after a pause a loud knock breaks the silence, succeeded by a cough perhaps, or an old man's curse, or a wife's sharp alarmed tones. These sounds are muffled, the occupants being huddled in the farther room of what is at best but a shed. Immediately at the door however, there comes the questioning, "Who's there?" "Police," is returned, and upon the word a muttered oath arises in the interior. Every ejaculation, anxiety, suspicion of the object of the visit, that a too well founded premonition of the facts can furnish is heard while the door is being unbarred. The police enter and briefly state their object. "Jim, or Tom, or Pat, as the case may be—father, son, or husband is "suspected of intimidation," and is desired to get up and dress, as he has to go to jail. That is for the fortitude of the suspect is in marked contrast to the terror and lamentation of the family. Worst of all is it when a husband has to be parted from a young wife and a couple of hardly weaned children. "Come on a clean shirt," he says "and hould yer whisht." "Ohone, ohone, gudjen, gudjen, woe, woe, woe!" is the only answer of a grief most painful to witness. "Hould yer whisht, I tell ye!" he again repeats, though the tears are in his eyes; while the sub-inspector, often a sharper to the full in some of these saddest domestic scenes, reminds both, with an attempt at consolation that seems but a mockery, that it is but for a short three months; that, all being quiet, the accused will surely return; and that every care will be taken of him while in prison. The consolation falls on deaf ears. The lamentations only become more intense, until, with their charge among them, the party disappears down the road, leaving in their dare the form of a wife whose bare foot and semi-nudeness are hindrances to her following in a drizzling rain the footsteps of her husband for many a hundred yards.

THE WORST FEAR OF THE ARREST,

And this is but one of the many scenes in which it must be said the person least affected is the suspected one; nay, cases occur where pleasure is expressed that they have been chosen

MARTYRS IN THE GOOD CAUSE,

and many are the congratulations exchanged at a convivialship which an arrest some little distance further on has brought about. "The hotel is got together at some central point, the order for the nearest railway station is given, and the suspects, with the escort, are safely lodged in a half-dozen second class carriages. Until the journey's end is reached, and the officer in charge takes from the jail governor a receipt for the bodies of his prisoner, with a ticket of their sobriety when delivered, that he can feel free of a responsibility which the agrarian circumstances of the time have placed upon him.

WHAT T. P. O'CONNOR SAYS ABOUT HIS SISTER'S ARREST.

A dispatch in the Sunday papers contained a brief account of the arrest at Athlone, of Mary Power O'Connor, sister of Hon. T. P. O'Connor, for whom a the country of Parish Hyne, County Roscommon, to cease having rent. To see for their particulars as "dangerous suspects." A call upon an agitator who said: "Mr. Power O'Connor, my younger sister, has for the past two years been the Secretary of the Dublin branch of the Land League, and, as stated in the dispatch was arrested for advising the tenantry not to pay rent."

He says her sister taken an active part in the Land League." asked the reporter.

"Oh, yes; she and my elder sister, who is Chairwoman of the same branch. My sister Mary is 27 years of age, fair and delicate, and does not look strong. For the past two years her health has been very poor, but notwithstanding this drawback she has interested herself to a great measure to assist and lenitent the poor. I am very much worried over her action in going to jail, instead of accepting bail, for the women in Ireland never were treated in prison than do the men, being compelled to spend twenty-two out of every twenty four hours in solitary confinement, not to speak of the plank bed they are forced to sleep on. This treatment is meted out to them more to intimidate them in the direction of their work when freed, and to serve as a wholesome lesson to others of the female sex.

"What is the condition of the tenants in Dunmore parish?"

"Without exception I believe they are the poorest and most oppressed in the Irish people, and I think the principle reason for their deplorable condition lies at the door of an Irish landlord named Thomas Naghten, whose early education was neglected by his father. He led a life of dissipation, drink, derby and devise a stable of fast horses, and at the age of 25 years dropped into a miserable grave, leaving behind him a record of brutal treatment and the name of being a drunkard, a libertine and a blackguard. At his death his estate fell to his widow, who has since made life bitter to all who serve her tenants, namely, those whom my sister was trying to help. A number of years ago this same landlord evicted my father

— The First Battalion of the Cheltenham Guards have returned to London from Ireland. They say they would rather be sent to India or South Africa than go back to the Emerald Isle. "The Irishwhich, you know, is not an easy one, able to tell English characteristics."

Saint Patrick and the Island of Lerins.

HISTORIC MEMORIES.

A Very Ancient Island of Saints.

What Father Hughes Laugher Saw in Ea

Interesting Sketch of the Island of the Mediterran

THE HOSPICE WHERE ST. PATRICK STOPPED ON HIS VOYAGE FROM ROME TO IRELAND.

The March number of the [illegible] contains a very interesting [illegible] tion under the above [illegible] of Father Hugh P. Gallagher [illegible] deceased. We have not room [illegible] tirely entire, but give extracts [illegible] from which will be read with [illegible] interest by the Catholics of this [illegible]

A Priest from the Archdiocese of San Francisco, California, [illegible] count of health, on the advice of [illegible] terranean in the vicinity of Nice [illegible] attention directed to a small island [illegible] Cannes, a most remarkable spot [illegible] in some historical pleasure and [illegible] recollance to his own Erin [illegible] island, most illustrious in all the [illegible] ted to shed lustre, was no other than [illegible] memoirs to him, as a [illegible] most of his fellow-countrymen [illegible] known as the Island of Lerins [illegible] Vincent wrote his celebrated [illegible] known Commonitory, and which [illegible] upon him the title of St. Vincent [illegible]

About 370 of the Christian era [illegible] orates, with his director, St. Honorat [illegible] some companions, left the [illegible] mans of his brother Venantius [illegible] died on the voyage, arrived at [illegible] little spot almost unknown to [illegible] writers at that time, but destined [illegible] come notorious and a lasting [illegible] sterility of the soil and its be[illegible] with huge and venomous serpents [illegible] have repelled any but the sorrowing [illegible] But He, by His sweet inspiration [illegible] courage to grapple all difficulties [illegible] scenes, reminds both, with an attempt at [illegible] consolation that seems but a mockery, that it is but for a short three months; that, all being quiet, the accused will surely return; and that every care will be taken of him while in prison. The consolation falls on deaf ears. The lamentations only become more intense, until, with their charge among them, the party disappears down the road, leaving in their dare the form of a wife whose bare foot and semi-nudeness are hindrances to her following in a drizzling rain the footsteps of her husband for many a hundred yards.

And this is but one of the many scenes in which it must be said the person least affected is the suspected one; nay, cases occur where pleasure is expressed that they have been chosen and many are the congratulations exchanged at a convivialship which an arrest some little distance further on has brought about. "The hotel is got together at some central point, the order for the nearest railway station is given, and the suspects, with the escort, are safely lodged in a half-dozen second class carriages. Until the journey's end is reached, and the officer in charge takes from the jail governor a receipt for the bodies of his prisoner, with a ticket of their sobriety when delivered, that he can feel free of a responsibility which the agrarian circumstances of the time have placed upon him.

MARTYRS IN THE GOOD CAUSE,

WHAT T. P. O'CONNOR SAYS ABOUT HIS SISTER'S ARREST.

A dispatch in the Sunday papers contained a brief account of the arrest at Athlone, of Mary Power O'Connor, sister of Hon. T. P. O'Connor, for whom a the country of Parish Hyne, County Roscommon, to cease having rent. To see for their particulars as "dangerous suspects." A call upon an agitator who said: "Mr. Power O'Connor, my younger sister, has for the past two years been the Secretary of the Dublin branch of the Land League, and, as stated in the dispatch was arrested for advising the tenantry not to pay rent."

He says her sister taken an active part in the Land League." asked the reporter.

"Oh, yes; she and my elder sister, who is Chairwoman of the same branch. My sister Mary is 27 years of age, fair and delicate, and does not look strong. For the past two years her health has been very poor, but notwithstanding this drawback she has interested herself to a great measure to assist and lenitent the poor. I am very much worried over her action in going to jail, instead of accepting bail, for the women in Ireland never were treated in prison than do the men, being compelled to spend twenty-two out of every twenty four hours in solitary confinement, not to speak of the plank bed they are forced to sleep on. This treatment is meted out to them more to intimidate them in the direction of their work when freed, and to serve as a wholesome lesson to others of the female sex.

"What is the condition of the tenants in Dunmore parish?"

"Without exception I believe they are the poorest and most oppressed in the Irish people, and I think the principle reason for their deplorable condition lies at the door of an Irish landlord named Thomas Naghten, whose early education was neglected by his father. He led a life of dissipation, drink, derby and devise a stable of fast horses, and at the age of 25 years dropped into a miserable grave, leaving behind him a record of brutal treatment and the name of being a drunkard, a libertine and a blackguard. At his death his estate fell to his widow, who has since made life bitter to all who serve her tenants, namely, those whom my sister was trying to help. A number of years ago this same landlord evicted my father

— The First Battalion of the Cheltenham Guards have returned to London from Ireland. They say they would rather be sent to India or South Africa than go back to the Emerald Isle. "The Irish which, you know, is not an easy one, able to tell English characteristics."

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
PUBLISHED BY THE PROPRIETOR AND DIOCESE OF CATHOLIC PRESS CO.
OFFICE: 437 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
All communications, remittances, etc., should be addressed to the Publication Office.
P. J. McCORMICK, Editor and Manager.
P. O. Box 2153. Entered at the San Francisco Post-Office as Second Class Matter.

The Monitor.

THE MONITOR
is now in the twenty-fifth year of publication, and its well-established reputation as a faithful and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes it a valuable medium for advertisers.
Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates.
TO CORRESPONDENTS.
Communications to secure insertion, should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.
No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.
Communications will be plainly marked MSS. All intended for the editor should be addressed to the Publisher.
For the Boys to be not ashamed to say the Truth. Strive for Justice for thy Soul, and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee. (Lesson in the Liturgy.)
Vol. XXV. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1882. NO. 26.

MISCELLANEOUS.

POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA,
DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
B. SLAVEN,
Baldwin Building
CARPETING.
GOLD PLATING,
SILVER PLATING,
Repairs and Varnish.
GOLD PLATED ... Warranted for Years.
ENGRAVING ESTABLISHMENT
Gold, Silver and Nickel Plating Works.
G. DENNISTON, Proprietor.
J. J. DYER,
DENTIST,
Cor. Kearny & Post Sts.,
Entrance, 27 Post St.
KANE & HEANEY,
Choice Butter, Cheese, Eggs, ETC.
Stand 40 Centre Market.
STATHAM
PIANOS
Unsurpassed in Tone, Touch and Durability.
EASY PAYMENTS OR INSTALMENTS
At the Factory:
NISSION STREET, 765
Warerooms a Specialty. Send for Circular.
N. Gray & Co.,
UNDERTAKERS,
Sacramento Street,
EMBALMING.
Metallic Burial Cases and Caskets.
GEO. G. GERE, M. D.
Surgeon,
304 Sutter St., San Francisco.
COAL!
Will Weight and Low Prices.
JULIUS TABLA'S,
Cor. Sutter & Stockton Sts., San Francisco.
HALL'S PULMONIC SYRUP
PRICE $1.
AN IMMEDIATE CURE FOR COLDS, ASTHMA, CROUP, INFLUENZA, LOSS OF VOICE, CONSUMPTION, and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs. California Pulmonary Balsam, take no other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
J. R. GATES & CO., Proprietors, 417 Sansome Street, S. F.

The Land Act Criticised in Parliament.

STIRRING SPEECHES BY SEXTON AND HEALY.

Figures that Prove the Act to be a Fraud and a Failure.

Only 1,313 Cases Decided Out of 70,000.

SEXTON'S STARTLING FIGURES

HEALY'S FORCIBLE FACTS

MR SEXTON ON THE LAND ACT.

We take the following passages from the speech delivered on Thursday week by Mr. Sexton:

Mr. Sexton, at a greater length than any other speaker, dwelt on the failure of the Prime Minister to redeem the promise contained in the Land Act. He had no believed he could show, on behalf of the Irish tenants, who, he feared, would wake up one fine morning to find in spite of the wording of the Land Act, they had not secured the benefit of it, and that it was not for the public good. He claimed that there were 70,000 applications made for the benefit of the Act. He had no hesitation in saying that if the Act had been worked in the spirit in which it was framed, and with ordinary legal intention, it would have afforded relief to the great mass of the Irish tenantry, who, he feared, would be disappointed to find that it was not for their benefit. He had no hesitation in saying that the tenantry within its operation should not be forced in respect of the improvements effected by themselves or their predecessors in title, and he said with our knowledge, that the act is of the land commission, that the intention of the framers of the act was that nothing was to be forced in respect of improvements. (Hear, hear.) He (Mr. Sexton) then proceeded to show how adversely the recent decision of the Judicial Appeal would affect the tenants. In order to show tenants who had applied to the court how they ought to stand from rack renting pending the decision of their case it would be just fair to bound the House what had been the actual usage of the commissioners of the Land Commission in the matter of fixing the period of their sanctions. The Land Commission has been in active existence for over four months, and most of the sitting judicial rents had been in operation for the greater part of that time.

HOW MANY CASES HAD BEEN DECIDED.

It appeared by a Parliamentary paper that up to the 20th of January there had been 1,313 cases decided, and these cases affected only 42,000 acres of land. In over four months they had only been able to apply their operation to an area equal to an Irish barony.

Although the unfortunate assured the House that they gave no direction to the sub-commissioners to reduce an should be reduced, yet it was very curious if they took the decisions, he cared not how, by precedent or counsel, by any authoritative they should find that they generally fixed a rent which had been the actual usage of the tenants for a long period. That was their first principle. Their second principle was, that they took care to fix their rent within twenty-one years of the date of the valuation (hear, hear). It becomes evident of the 1,313 cases decided was 32,000, certainly a very long period. Now, further, a very thin method, at the time it was made, the value of all the improvements made by the tenants (hear, hear). It included also some measure of the difference between the state of matters at the present time in Ireland, as generally described by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He wanted to know how does an Irish tenant get a valuation could be set aside in any sense to have regard to Healy's Cases (cheers). How many cases had been lodged? Sixty nine thousand five hundred and ninety seven. That is to say, in three months the courts on the first instance had arrived at decisions.

IN ONE YEAR, OUT OF 70,000 APPLICATIONS

Awaiting hearing or determination. Now let them proceed to very simple sum in arithmetic (laughter). If the earlier sub-commissioners decide 1,313 cases in three months, how many will they decide in a year? (Laughter.) Five thousand, and it seemed reasonable to suppose that the sub-commissioners at the outset, anxious to create a favorable impression in Ireland, and to decide as many cases as possible, anxious to put them off in the first instance, proceeded at the utmost possible speed (cheers). They were capable of deciding 5,000 cases in a year, but there were 70,000 cases waiting their decision. If the sub-commissioners decided five thousand cases in a year, how many years would it take to decide 70,000? (Laughter.)

IT WOULD TAKE FOURTEEN YEARS.

The important significance of this was that the action of thousands of farmers in Ireland who could not keep their rents or their cases for an moderate number of years would be subject during all those years to the rack renting of their landlords, rack-renting recognized with perfect impunity for all that time (cheers), for not only was there no for executing any judgment upon the interest of the tenant, the Act had saved the legal right of the rack renting landlord. It was a fallacious from the language of the Act that the rack renting landlord could compel the tenant to pay rent in the case of any particular tenant until his case was decided by the court (cheers). He further claimed that there should be an inquiry, in order to devise means to protect tenants from eviction and evicting in respect of accumulated arrears of unreduced rent (hear, hear). Some time ago he stated that it was that he thought the arrears at present owing in Ireland amounted at least to two millions sterling, but on reconsideration he was inclined to modify that estimate. He believed that

AT LEAST ONE TENANT OUT OF EVERY THREE

In Ireland was in arrear, and he believed that on the average the period during which the arrears had accumulated was two or three years. From all he had heard and thought on this branch of the subject he was inclined to say that a sum of not less than a half a year of the total rental of Ireland was at present owing, in the form of arrears, to the landlords. In other words, there was owing to the landlords not less than eight or nine millions. The Land Act contained a clause with respect to the payment of arrears. The vital defect of the clause was that it was optional and not obligatory. How many applications had been made by the landlords since the Land Court was opened in virtue of that arrear clause? There were nine thousand landlords in Ireland. How many applications had they made? Twenty one (laughter). How many tenants were in arrear? Six hundred and thirty eight, or about one in a thousand. How many applications were granted? Eighteen. How many tenants were affected by the grants? Ninety five. That was to say, out of thirty tenants in arrear the State made advances to two (ironical laughter).

AND WHAT WAS THE AMOUNT ADVANCED?

Out of the thirty cases in arrear, the Land Commission had only advanced £1,000 (laughter) for further clearance. It afforded a most striking illustration of what was called the drag in the mine. He confessed he saw no more chance of signs of improvement. At the Michaelmas sessions of 1881 there were 526 ejectment decrees, representing arrears to the amount of £20,000. At the Michaelmas sessions of 1881 there were 1,000 decrees were granted. Not 500, but 2,000, representing a rental not of £20,000, but £42,000. He might be allowed to cite another striking fact in this connection. The ejectments for the half year ending December, 1880, that is to say, of those who were allowed back as tenants or caretakers, but were thrown out money on the Saturday and left there numbered 320 families, or 1,600 persons. Now, let them take the half year after the Land Act passed. Written in the half year ending December, 1881, 320 families, or 1,600 persons, were evicted, in the half year after the beneficent Land Act passed 877 families, comprising 4,350 persons, had been turned out of their holdings. The net of it, therefore, of this so called measure of justice was the feeling of hundreds, he might say

THOUSANDS, OF MORTGAGE IN IRELAND.

In Ireland. Further, he claimed that it was necessary to inquire how far the working of the Land Act enabled the tenants of small holdings under £4 annual value to live and thrive. In this connection he made special reference to the condition of the small Western farmers of Connaught. Has province was noted for the poverty and small farms. He did not think the Government made any the fair use of the cases, and several of those cases which had prepared had all been brought into court, and considerable reductions of rent had been made. Last Week Mr. Shaw, of Hanfry, a tenant on Lord Kenmare's estate, brought a lease into court. The court set aside, Judge O'Hagan characterizing it as one of the most stringent and unreasonable that ever came under his notice (hear, hear). Too was one of the cases which he had prepared (hear) and yet the Prime Minister referred to them as a tremendous conspiracy against law, order, and property in Ireland (hear, hear). He (Mr Healy) was delighted at

THE SUPPRESSION OF THE LAND LEAGUE.

He thought it was the best thing that ever happened in Ireland, because he knew that the right Hon. gentleman might as well try to suppress the Atlantic ocean as to suppress the Land League (cheers), and there is no moral suppression of the Land League would only lead to insanity to a greater extent than the excesses of the people. He (Mr Healy) was of opinion that he could not blame the people for what he believed his remedy for Irishmen living near home. The Prime Minister had referred to the Irish party as a band of lawless men who had been encouraged by the proceedings of the Land League, and representing outside in other words, that the Land Act had failed to supply a salve to the running sore and open wound in the body of the Irish tenantry. The former rent in these cases was £2,800, the judicial rent was £2,600, the tenement valuation £1,500. In 79 Alone the failure of the potato crop represented a total loss to the tenants of nine millions sterling. In the four years ending 1880 the total loss from the failure of the potato crop must have amounted to something like £8,000,000 sterling. The potato being the chief crop of the tenants, they were obliged to purchase bad meal out to this loss. Therefore it was fair to assume that during the four years he had mentioned there must have accumulated in arrears an amount equivalent to the loss which the people had sustained by the failure of the potato crop of ninty that time. A million and a quarter had been distributed by the Relief Committee for Indian meal, and how could the Hon. member for Tyrone reconcile that fact with his statement that the arrears due at present amounted to only £2,000,000? He believed the arrears of rent which the land did not earn, taking the amount at a very moderate estimate, reached 20,000,000 sterling at the present moment. Referring to the question of arrears, Mr. Healy said that he had proposed an amendment during the last session of Parliament providing that the judicial rent should have a retrospective effect as regards arrears, so that if a man's rent was reduced from £100 to £50, and if he owed three years arrears, the amount he would have to pay would be £150 instead of £300. He did the benevolent Mr. Secretary, receive that proposal? He did not think it worth while to say a single word on its merits, for he objected to it on a point of order. He wished the Chief Secretary joy of his point of order. In his opinion that point of order was likely to be heard of by his Government for some time to come, because the arrears which they had refused to deal with in a proper spirit would hang like a millstone round the necks of the unfortunate tenants. What was the action of the Chief Secretary in 1881, before he became tainted with the corrupt influences of Dublin Castle? In 1880, when supporting the Disturbance Bill, he appealed to the landlords of Ireland

TO SE MERCIFUL TO THEIR TENANTS,

He pointed out that there were a number of bad years, and he asked them not to put him in the position of a man having to execute injustice. Two years afterwards the Chief Secretary was only too alert in sending the forces of the Crown to carry out eviction for those very arrears of rack-rents which formed the subject of his appeal for mercy to the Irish landlords a short time before. Having referred to the promise of the Prime Minister to inquire into the question of town parks during the recess as furnishing another proof of the necessity for inquiry, he briefly alluded to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Dublin a few days ago, and remarked that the clause which had been associated with his name might now be left to the tender mercies of the lawyers and the Hon. members who represented Ulster in that House. He also thought that a very proper subject for inquiry by the noble lords would be to ascertain how far it was desirable that this statutory term of say fifteen years should be continued. For his own part, he thought the tenant who accepted a statutory term of fifteen years at present was little better than a fool (hear, hear). He wished, in conclusion, to make a remark upon a subject personal to himself. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in addressing his constituents at Birmingham, referred to him as having stated in the House of Commons that the Land League had knocked

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE COUNTRY

Into a cocked hat, and that such vulgar audacity in the House justified the course the Government has taken. He wished to say that he never used the expression in the sense stated by the right Hon. gentleman. He was speaking between five and six o'clock in the morning at the end of an all-night sitting, and he stated that it was true, as alleged by the Prime Minister, that the executive in Ireland had been superseded, after seven hundred years' English rule in that country, by an association which had been but two years in existence. If it was knocked into a cocked hat by this association, then it was an extraordinary admission on the part of the Government. He made the same denial six months ago in a letter to the Hon. member for Leeds, and yet the Chancellor of the Duchy, who ought to be aware of that denial, thought proper to go before his constituency and charge him with vulgar audacity. He could certainly say that in point of vulgarity or audacity, whatever his speeches might be, he was not in the habit of referring to his opponents as dolts, as fools, and as asses (Opposition cheers).

Irish "Suspects."

HOW THEY ARE ARRESTED.

SHOCKING SCENES OF GOVERNMENT SECRECY.

How the Peelers Pounce on Innocent People.

The Pall Mall Gazette gives the following sketch by an Irish correspondent of how men are "reasonably suspected" in Ireland, and how their arrests are effected:

"You see in your fashionable newspaper that "ten suspects were conveyed to jail—to Naas, say or Monaghan, or Kilkenny, and you simply are conscious of the fact of the arrest and judgment. But this tells nothing. This is but the outside, as it were, of many and sometime intricate workings. To take an instance from the West of Ireland. A certain area is declared by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant to be "proscribed—that is, placed, as it were, well and pretty generally under ban, under the Act for the Better Protection of Persons and Property (Ireland) Act. Let us see what follows. The constabulary inspector of constabulary and the resident magistrate of the district pay barrack visits to one another. The latter probably asks the district sub-inspector his opinion as a born, but not attacking any weight to it, and seeks, though as probably not, the advice which he has already determined to reject. The real advisers of the resident magistrate are the constables (commonly called sergeants) of the police sub-districts. To these men is entrusted in their particular jurisdiction, and it is hard to realize what this power means. It may mean the power of ruining an honest man for the gratification of a petty spite; it may mean the break up for months of a happy domestic circle; it may mean an odious tyranny, which is all the more keenly felt that it works like an impenetrable secrecy, stealthily. A resident magistrate calls together some three or four sergeants, and on their statements the names of ten to twenty persons are jotted down as "reasonably suspected." Of course, in many instances, strong suspicion, derived from time, proximity, identity of handwritings, and circumstances of a kindred character do exist; but in many instances, plenty are reasonably suspected of nothing, connected with no overt act, and amply liable to a recommendation for arrest as being of bad repute. The constables have now departed; the resident magistrate's note-book is full, it is determined by him that a "batch" shall be taken, and he posts on the part of the Government. He made the same demand six months ago in a letter to the Hon. member for Leeds, and yet the Chancellor of the Duchy, who ought to be aware of that denial, thought proper to go before his constituency and charge him with vulgar audacity. He could certainly say that in point of vulgarity or audacity, whatever his speeches might be, he was not in the habit of referring to his opponents as dolts, as fools, and as asses (Opposition cheers).

THE ABSOLUTE FATE OF EVERY MAN

Irish "Suspects."

HOW THEY ARE ARRESTED.

SHOCKING SCENES OF GOVERNMENT SECRECY.

How the Peelers Pounce on Innocent People.

The Pall Mall Gazette gives the following sketch by an Irish correspondent of how men are "reasonably suspected" in Ireland, and how their arrests are effected:

"You see in your fashionable newspaper that "ten suspects were conveyed to jail—to Naas, say or Monaghan, or Kilkenny, and you simply are conscious of the fact of the arrest and judgment. But this tells nothing. This is but the outside, as it were, of many and sometime intricate workings. To take an instance from the West of Ireland. A certain area is declared by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant to be "proscribed—that is, placed, as it were, well and pretty generally under ban, under the Act for the Better Protection of Persons and Property (Ireland) Act. Let us see what follows. The constabulary inspector of constabulary and the resident magistrate of the district pay barrack visits to one another. The latter probably asks the district sub-inspector his opinion as a born, but not attacking any weight to it, and seeks, though as probably not, the advice which he has already determined to reject. The real advisers of the resident magistrate are the constables (commonly called sergeants) of the police sub-districts. To these men is entrusted in their particular jurisdiction, and it is hard to realize what this power means. It may mean the power of ruining an honest man for the gratification of a petty spite; it may mean the break up for months of a happy domestic circle; it may mean an odious tyranny, which is all the more keenly felt that it works like an impenetrable secrecy, stealthily. A resident magistrate calls together some three or four sergeants, and on their statements the names of ten to twenty persons are jotted down as "reasonably suspected." Of course in many instances, strong suspicion, derived from time, proximity, identity of handwritings, and circumstances of a kindred character do exist; but in many instances, plenty are reasonably suspected of nothing, connected with no overt act, and amply liable to a recommendation for arrest as being of bad repute. The constables have now departed; the resident magistrate's note-book is full, it is determined by him that a "batch" shall be taken, and he posts on the part of the Government. He made the same demand six months ago in a letter to the Hon. member for Leeds, and yet the Chancellor of the Duchy, who ought to be aware of that denial, thought proper to go before his constituency and charge him with vulgar audacity. He could certainly say that in point of vulgarity or audacity, whatever his speeches might be, he was not in the habit of referring to his opponents as dolts, as fools, and as asses (Opposition cheers).

THE ABSOLUTE FATE OF EVERY MAN

THE SUSPECTS IN IRELAND.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—The Irish Land Bill has passed the Commons, and the Irish Land Leaguers are in prison. The Government has taken the power to arrest and detain without trial any person whom it may think fit to arrest and detain, and it has exercised the power to the extent of locking up about a hundred persons. The Government has taken the power to suppress any newspaper it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League organ, the United Ireland, and the Irish Times. The Government has taken the power to suppress any meeting it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League meetings. The Government has taken the power to suppress any association it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League association. The Government has taken the power to suppress any money it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League money. The Government has taken the power to suppress any letter it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League letters. The Government has taken the power to suppress any telegram it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League telegrams. The Government has taken the power to suppress any speech it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League speeches. The Government has taken the power to suppress any man it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League men. The Government has taken the power to suppress any thought it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League thoughts. The Government has taken the power to suppress any hope it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League hopes. The Government has taken the power to suppress any fear it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League fears. The Government has taken the power to suppress any wish it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League wishes. The Government has taken the power to suppress any prayer it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League prayers. The Government has taken the power to suppress any tear it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League tears. The Government has taken the power to suppress any sigh it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League sighs. The Government has taken the power to suppress any groan it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League groans. The Government has taken the power to suppress any Land League, and it has exercised the power to the extent of suppressing the Land League. The Government has taken the power to suppress any Land Leaguer, and it has exercised the power to the extent of locking up about a hundred Land Leaguers. The Government has taken the power to suppress any Land Leaguer it may think fit to suppress, and it has exercised the power to the extent of locking up Mr. Parnell.

Saint Patrick and the Island of Lerins.

HISTORIC MEMORIES REVIVED

A Very Ancient Island of the Saints.

What Father Hugh P. Gallagher Saw in Europe.

Interesting Sketch of the Ireland of the Mediterranean.

THE HOSPICE WHERE ST. PATRICK STOPPED ON HIS VOYAGE FROM ROME TO IRELAND.

The March number of the Catholic World contains a very interesting historical article under the above caption from the pen of Father Hugh P. Gallagher, recently deceased. We have not room for the article entire, but give copious extracts therefrom which will be read with additional interest by the Catholics of this coast.

A Priest from the Archdiocese of San Francisco, California, sojourning, on account of health, on the shores of the Mediterranean in the vicinity of Nice, had his attention directed to a small island opposite Cannes, a most remarkable spot, presenting in some historical phases a most striking resemblance to his own native isle. The island, most illustrious in all that is calculated to shed lustre, was nevertheless a terra incognita to him, as it doubtless is to most of his fellow countrymen. It is known as the Island of Lerins, where St. Vincent wrote his celebrated and widely known Commonitorium, and which bestowed up in him the title of St. Vincent of Lerins.

About 370 A.D. the Christian era St. Honoratus, with his director, St. Capraisius, and some companions, bearing the precious relics of his brother Venantius, who had died on the voyage, arrived at Lerins, a little spot almost unknown to Christian writers at that time, but destined to become most illustrious and celebrated. The sterility of the soil and its being infested with huge and venomous serpents would have repelled any but the servant of God. But He, by His sweet inspirations, gave courage to ignore all difficulties and obstacles to His grand designs, destined in time to bring forth such abundant spiritual fruits. St. Honoratus, it is related, by his prayers banished the horrifying monsters from the isle, and also caused to spring from the earth a copious flow of sweet water, which is used by the monks at the present day. This is the more remarkable in that hitherto no water was found there, while in the adjoining island of St. Margaret, much larger in extent and much nearer the mainland, fresh water has never yet been found. The latter island is still also infested with serpents and snakes. It is easy to conclude from all this that St. Patrick, who was one of the first disciples of St. Honoratus, having been some nine years, as we stands the record, his pupil, may have here imbibed his faith and his zeal for Ireland.

Such was the brilliancy of spiritual light diverging to all parts from the monastery of Lerins that saints and doctors were attracted from every region to this terrestrial paradise of St. Honoratus. Amongst these we may mention the youthful St. Maximus from the East; St. Hilary of Arles, the historian of Lerins; St. Patrick, St. James of Tarba, St. Apollinaris of Valence, St. Venan of Marseilles, Eustacius of Narbonne, and a host of others, so that all the glory of the fifth century seemed to be enclosed in the little isle of Lerins. Such was the reputation of this sacred spot, designated from its introduction to Christianity the Isle of Saints and Martyrs of the Mediterranean, that almost every nation, down to the French Revolution, called for their bishops from the monastery of St. Honoratus or Lerins. It is noteworthy that Vigil of Arles, the consecrator of St. Augustine of Canterbury, Gregory the Great's first missionary to England, was a child of Lerins. While speaking of the connection between Lerins and England we may also mention that St. Augustine, when on his way from Rome to England for the great work of its conversion, was the bearer of a letter from St. Gregory the Great to the abbot of Lerins, at which monastery he called on his way. St. Bennet Biscop, a great founder of religious houses in the early history of the church in England, was also a monk of Lerins, while the third abbot of this celebrated monastery, Faustus, was likewise an Englishman.

This same Lerins being the home of the great apostle St. Patrick for so many years, and where he performed the austerities and mortifications that rendered him worthy of the graces poured out upon him in such profusion in his wonderful mission in Ireland, an interest naturally arises to learn something of the sacred spot. This interest is enhanced by the fact that at Lerins are still preserved memorises of him and his successor, St. Malachy.

Lerins is about three-fourths of a mile long and a half mile wide. It may reached in less than two hours' rowing from Cannes, as it lies in the sea just opposite it. It is very rocky, bearing the precious remains

Poetry.

THE IRISH WIDOW'S MESSAGE TO HER SON

Remember, Denis, all I bade you say
Tell him we're well and happy, thank the Lord;
Rich of our treasure since he went away
You'll mind, arrah, and never say a word
Of sickness, nor troubles, now, we're all our
Of sorrow.
The finest summer ever I always saw.

Tell him the spotted heifer calved in May
She died, poor thing, but that you needn't mind;
Nor how the constant rain destroyed the hay;
But tell him that was ever kind,
And when the fever spread the country over,
His energy kept the "sickness" from our door.

Be sure you tell him how the neighbors came
And cut the corn and stowed it in the barn!
"I would be as well to mention this to him by name,
Pat Murphy, Neil M'Clade, and James Carn,
And big Tom Daly from behind the hill;
And say, arra—oh, sar I know him still.

They came with ready hands our toil to share
"Twas there I missed him most—my own right hand;
I felt, although kind hearts were round me there,
The kindest heart best in a foreign land.
Strong hand! brave heart! true soul! far sepered far from me
By many a weary league of shore and sea.

And tell him she was with us—hell know who;
Mavourneen, hasn't she the winsome eyes?
The darkest, deepest, brightest, beautiest blue
I ever saw, except in summer skies!
And curly black hair! it is the black-hest hair
That ever rippled over neck so fair.

Tell him old Pincher frisked many a day
And moped, poor dog! "Faw well he didn't
Crouched by the wayside, how he watched the way,
And sniffed the travellers as they past him by.
Hail, rain, or sunshine, over he was all the same,
He listened for the foot that never came.

Tell him the house is lonesome like and still,
The few itself seems robbed of half its light;
But may he his sorrow are grieving sick,
And things look dim before my failing sight.
For all that, tell him I was myself that spoke
The skirts you bring, and stitched them every one.

Give him my blessing, morning, noon, and night,
Tell him my prayers are offered for his good,
That he may keep his Maker still in sight,
And firmly stand, as his brave father stood.
True to his name, his country, and his God,
Faithful at home, and steadfast still abroad.

Literary Miscellany.

Kathleen of the Glen.

AN IRISH STORY FOUNDED ON FACT.

CHAPTER IV.

Seated between her two admirers, each grasping a hand of hers, Kathleen recounted her adventures by sea and by land. Many ejaculations were uttered at her providential escape from each succeeding danger; and many wishes were poured forth that their faithful arms had been there to aid in the rescue of herself, her friends, and the other unhappy sufferers. She then learned the good news that Lord Glenard had actually returned home, and that there were good hopes of her mission proving successful, since he had already recognized her foster-brother amongst the crowd, and had desired that he might soon see him again, and receive from him every intelligence respecting his nurse.

It was agreed therefore, that the next day Maurice should, with Kathleen, call at the Castle, and request an interview with its master; and, whatever might be the result of their application, that Maurice should be the bearer of it to his father and mother, who he longed most ardently to reach; leaving Kathleen under Hannah's care, to recruit her strength, until the return of all the party to Glenard.

Time sped—and it was a late hour when Kathleen retired with Hannah to her sleeping apartment for the remainder of the night, while the two young men stretched themselves beside the kitchen fire, the next morning was far advanced ere her kind host and hostess would allow the weary traveller to be awakened; and when she entered the kitchen she found there a neat and comfortable breakfast prepared by Maurice for all their party. With thankful hearts they partook of the welcome repast, and directly after, Kathleen tied on her cloak and bonnet, and with her two faithful attendants proceeded to the village. At the entrance to the park, Connor left his companions and walked round to meet them at another gate; whilst the cousins pursued their way with anxious hearts and eager wishes as to the success of their petition. They were not made to wait long for an interview with the young nobleman; and when announced to his presence, they were ushered by his open manly countenance—his kind yet dignified demeanor.

"You have not been tardy in fulfilling your promise, my good foster-brother," he said. "But whom have we here? Not my nurse most assuredly?"

"My lord, Maurice replied, "my mother is too far distant from her native land to appear before you in person, but as her representative she sends you her heart, her child to plead with me her cause, and to submit a patient hearing from your lordship, while we state to you the hardships to which an aged couple and a young and single girl, have been exposed; in order and hope to rid your estate of tenants whose only fault was their poverty. Two years back, I was assisted to send them according to custom, a remittance of money which I saved from my daily pay as a soldier. Since then, being removed to the West Indies, I was in imminent danger of falling a victim to the climate. My parents received tidings of my death. They could no longer pay the rent of the farm. My father made an offer of giving up a part of it to a neighbor, who would willingly have joined it to his own, and the remainder my father could himself have managed. He had your honored father's word that so long as he lived he should never have his house parted from him; but that word was not sufficient for those who came to act in your lordship's name. My parents were told that they must leave their place; and that by way of compensation, their passage money should be given them, as was next to transportation; but they could not content with power, backed by seeming justice; they were thus their homes, they gave up their cottage in the Glen."

"What" replied his sublime, "the pretty cottage near which I have often strayed with you, and whence, prevailing circumstances with fishing rods we have gone to spend the day on the river's margin, watching the trout as they played round us, and oh! what delight there was when we could bring one to the bank?"

"The same, my lord; and as I was saying, they left their home and their country, to betake themselves to exile in a foreign land. They had not been gone many hours, when their cottage was by ruthless hands torn down, and reduced to ashes; and, as if this were not enough, even the heavens seemed adverse to their cause, and to send forth the elements to fight against them. The tempest drove them back. The storm, which they had sailed was driven a wreck upon this coast and some score of the passengers narrowly escaped a watery grave. My father lies near the scene of his rescue, dangerously ill; my mother is in attendance on him; and Kathleen, my cousin, came yesterday a journey of upward of twenty miles, on foot, to pray for redress at your lordship's hands, and to solicit aid for my suffering parents. Placed in any even the meanest spot on your estate my sire is now able to work for them, and they shall not want the means of support. We only ask for the shelter of a home, and from protection from the arms of the oppressor."

"For some months past Fred Glenard used to reply His face flushed with resentment at the injuries sustained by a helpless family, mingled with self reproach as he recollected how truly his own absence might be deemed of the leading cause of those injuries. Then turning to Kathleen "And you, fair suppliant," he said, "have you nothing to add to this affecting appeal?"

"No, my lord," she replied timidly, whilst her eyes beamed with eloquence; "I have nothing to add, except that I can, as an eye-witness, vouch for the truth of every word which Maurice has spoken."

"I well remember," said Lord Glenard, "a little girl who would come and sit by side us on the grass, while we followed our sport, and sang us wild songs to beguile the time, and, when we had been out late, would bring us bread and butter and milk for supper. The form is changed, and the features too, in some degree, but the name of Kathleen is familiar to me as well as the silver sounds of that voice. I have travelled over many lands; I have visited many nations, but, though long abandoned, my own country has never been obliterated from my memory, and dearer for to me are the plaintive tones of her mountain children, than the most voluptuous melodies of the south. Believe me, my friends, the injustice of which you complain was totally unknown to me and though I do not say no illegal attacks, to stir from its being unknown, yet had I been on the spot, it should never have occurred. Let your father and mother be brought back to Glenard, Maurice, as soon as the former is able to undertake the journey. Take a lodging where you think he can be made comfortable, for the present; and we shall see about providing him with a house. In the meantime, let everything be done, in the way of medical aid, or otherwise, that can hasten his recovery."

He put into the hands of Kathleen a purse containing ample means of accomplishing wishes; and then dismissed them, after they had poured forth, as best they could, the overflowing gratitude of their hearts.

They talked of the unlooked for bounty of their patron, until they came near the gate where Connor was to meet them—when Maurice, stopping suddenly, addressed his companion in a tone of solemn inquiry "Kathleen," he said, "I hope as to further, answer me this question. Is it not true that Connor Connellan loves you?"

"Why should I deny the truth?" she replied, while the color mantled to her cheek; "he does love me."

"And you love him in return!"

"Maurice," she answered, "you know well that I was never bound to you by any tie but that of relationship; you cannot then think me to have been sighting your affection, when, knowing as I did, that we might never be united—that yourself had vowed it on leaving the country—I allowed myself to form an attachment for one whom I considered in every way worthy."

"So, Kathleen; I acquit you of any blame. I only wished to know the whole truth of my—" he checked himself, then taking her hand—"Come, sister," he said, "it grows late, and I have far to go to night."

At the park gate they met Connor, and gave him an account of their reception at the castle. It was the wish of Maurice that they should accompany him as far as the chapel, and of Kathleen also, for she could thus return by the time. The latter was silent during the remainder of the walk, and, arrived at the chapel, his friends were anxious to bid him good-bye. "Let me, he said, "inside of the gate at your mother's grave, Kathleen, with her two faithful attendants proceeded to the village. At the entrance to the park, Connor left his companions and walked round to meet them at another gate; whilst the cousins pursued their way with anxious hearts and eager wishes as to the success of their petition. They were not made to wait long for an interview with the young nobleman; and when announced to his presence, they were ushered by his open manly countenance—his kind yet dignified demeanor.

"You have not been tardy in fulfilling your promise, my good foster-brother," he said. "But whom have we here! Not my nurse most assuredly?"

"My lord, Maurice replied, "my mother is too far distant from her native land to appear before you in person, but as her representative she sends you her heart, her child to plead with me her cause, and to solicit a patient hearing from your lordship, while we state to you the hardships to which an aged couple and a young and single girl, have been exposed; in order and hope to rid your estate of tenants whose only fault was their poverty. Two years back, I was assisted to send them according to custom, a remittance of money which I saved from my daily pay as a soldier. Since then, being removed to the West Indies, I was in imminent danger of falling a victim to the climate. My parents received tidings of my death. They could no longer pay the rent of the farm. My father made an offer of giving up a part of it to a neighbor, who would willingly have joined it to his own, and the remainder my father could himself have managed. He had your honored father's word that so long as he lived he should never have his house parted from him; but that word was not sufficient for those who came to act in your lordship's name. My parents were told that they must leave their place; and that by way of compensation, their passage money should be given them, as was next to transportation; but they could not content with power, backed by seeming justice; they were thus their homes, they gave up their cottage in the Glen."

"What" replied his sublime, "the pretty cottage near which I have often strayed with you, and whence, prevailing circumstances with fishing rods we have gone to spend the day on the river's margin, watching the trout as they played round us, and oh! what delight there was when we could bring one to the bank?"

"The same, my lord; and as I was saying, they left their home and their country, persecuted, and O'Reilly fell in the cheapest which he merited.

Amongst the daily rambles of the young nobleman, the Glen was not forgotten; and he personally visited the parents of his child hood, and called to mind its varied pleasures, he was moved to indignation as well as grief at the destruction of the pretty cottage, once the habitation of Derald and Lucy Kathleen's parents. He was struck by the appearance of the neat white walls and well-kept garden of a second cottage near the river. He entered it, and found an old kind woman sitting alone, and busily engaged in knitting a stocking. The inside of the dwelling corresponded with the exterior in neatness. He sat down, and, entering into conversation with the old woman, learned that she was supported by her son, who, since he had been turned out of employment at the "great house," would only get work occasionally as a day labourer; that he was betrothed to an amiable young girl, but had been prevented by poverty and other unmerited circumstances from making her his wife. He inquired where he was staying with them, and would be back shortly from the well, where she was gone to fetch some water. Lord Glenard asked her name.

"You'll be a stranger, I reckon, in these parts" You'll not have heard of Kathleen of the Glen?"

"Yes, I have, he replied, starting at the name "Stranger though I be here, I have learned a part of her story, but I am not acquainted with the whole of your story, mother."

Soon after the subject of their conversation re entered the cottage, and laying down her pitcher, advanced with smiling face, and curtsied to her lineage.

"Come, Kathleen, Kathleen," he said, "that you were gone with Maurice in search of his parents, but I had there a strangers to here which enchain you to the Glen. Well, I must see this old woman's son, and have a talk with him myself."

Very soon Connor was ushered in his mother, and the cabin where his favorite employment was to keep the strawberries in order, was placed in front of the window, the usual order.

The joyful meeting with his mother, he had believed, far from all sensibility, rare and sympathise, went further towards curing the wounds of Connor's heart than aught of medical skill could effect, and before many days had passed, he was able to avail himself of his parson's bounty, and to take possession of a lodging engaged for him in the village. Who can paint a mother's feelings on the restoration of a lost child? The amazement, the transport of Nelly, knew no bounds. Her beloved son her long and early treasure restored to her as if by miracle! She could not believe her senses. Yet there he stood—as beautiful as ever, though he didn't look so bright altogether as before he went soldiering. Her joy was too deep, too heart felt to be more remarkable of its disciples viz., St Maximin, second abbot of Lerins and Hilarion, bishop of Arles. The latter, in his life of St. Patrick, confirms this fact, and adds that St. Patrick performed with this chance the same miracle as his brother

ST. PATRICK AND THE ISLAND OF LERINS.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

Mahmond "The patrons of these holy men, who scarcely at times interrupted their devotions, was rewarded by the chief of the country, who had a son lying dead. They were entailed to pair their rains and build their church, which, began the present basilica of St. Honoratus, was several times transported to the place Lérin, and subsequently. The Sabadini incense during the French Revolution paralyzed for a time the energy of these saints of God. The father of an actress of Paris purchased the unoccupied monastery the consecrated home of St. Honoratus, and presented it to his daughter as a country residence. It subsequently fell into the hands of an Anglican minister named Jones, who, impressed with admiration for these saints, though much dilapidated monuments, designed to restore them in a manner, but died before his generous intention was accomplished.

About seventy years had passed since the desperation of the monks of Lerins. The Island of Saints had become a general ruin. But just when all hope seemed lost all, the cultious and unpretentious pioneer of the Cross appeared. St. Patrick found the holy island in a state of desolation and ruin. The cells of other black robes under which he rested at one time, he entombed. The cells, which, in the time, by the wonderful saints never ceased to ring with the sweet sounds of the Divine Office, and with the ceaseless chanting of the Psalms, he found in ruins. Amongst the ruins of these cells, he found a number of monks, who, in the rage of persecution, had fled the Island of Saints and Martyrs, which the Romans had left in ruins. Amongst these fugitives, was the Abbot Hilarion, who, in the time of persecution, had fled from

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, 1882.

Enlargement of the Monitor.

Such has been the constantly increasing patronage received by the Monitor in its advertising department during the past year, together with the daily demands made on us for space thereon, that we have been obliged to add eight additional columns in order to give our subscribers a full, sharp and interesting reading matter every week. It is also a source of great satisfaction to witness the steady and constant growth of our subscription list, week after week, not alone from the city or the State, but from every portion of the Pacific Coast where there are Catholics who desire to patronize a Catholic journal that permits no assault upon either our race or religion to pass unrebuked.

There is no portion of America where Catholics are more willing or better able to support a Catholic journal than on the Pacific Coast. But, like the people themselves, the press that represents them must be courageous in conflict, constant in vigilance, and prepared at all times to hurl back upon the enemies of the Church the foul missiles of calumny which they cast at her. In this respect, the Monitor has made its mark; it has in a great measure spiked the guns of sectarianism, it has met the enemies of Erin and the calumniators of the Church upon every issue they have made, and we can say that amidst the shattered debris upon the battlefield of thought

The Angel Truth stands supreme alone!

This is the mission of the Monitor. To repel the invasion of error with the logic of truth, to defend the dogmas of our faith against designing demagogues, to battle bravely for the freedom of that lovely land that is the common heritage of Irishmen the world over. In a word to struggle and strive—week after week—to spread the truth and to crush error. In this cause every Catholic in the land should be in full sympathy with the Monitor, they should show their appreciation of our labors—in a cause as much theirs as ours—by enrolling their names among our subscribers, and thus build up on this coast a paper that will penetrate into every portion of the Pacific shore, a paper that will expose Protestant error and defend Catholic truth in such a way that it will become a terror to men of evil designs.

This is the horizon of our hopes in extending our circulation, and in doing this we again ask the renewed assistance of Catholics, and the similarity which exists in the peculiarity of the island of Lerna and Ireland cannot fail to strike all who peruse this valuable addition to Catholic literature.

That Sunday Law Meeting in San Jose and its Triplet of Preachers.

We are thankful to the unknown friend in San Jose who sent us a copy of last Wednesday's Herald containing the ravings of the raving parsons at the pro-Sunday law meeting in that city. We quote from the Herald in order that Christians of every denomination may discover the political confusion of the ranters who hold themselves hearers for the mere purpose of turning Bible-pounders into political bullies.

These crazy cranks are more likely to hurt to cause they espouse than to help it. Pretending to be preachers of "peace to men of good will," they hurl the vilest vituperative epithets at the heads of Irish and German citizens simply because they dare to differ from these voragons of the vestry in their opinions upon the Sunday law.

The Rev. Otis Gibson, who is a Great Mogul among the Chinese, called those who differed from him "fools," but if Rev. Otis Gibson will consult the New Testament he will read that whosoever calls his brother a fool "shall be in danger of hell fire." The Rev. gentleman, therefore, had better take a seat on the mourner's bench of his meeting house for a month, as a suitable penance for that transgression against the law of God.

Rev. Dr. Creary, editor of the Christian Advocate, followed Dr. Gibson in a red-hot harangue filled "with sound and fury and signifying nothing." His remarks were a compound of brimstone and billingsgate, bad language and buncombe. Here's a specimen wherein he screeches like a mad salamander:

"The League of Freedom is not the Sink of freedom, but from the same relation it may as the sharks do to the fishes in the sea. They are crocodiles and we can be fishes of crocodiles, and we will eat the fishes of the League of Freedom. They are wolves and we will hunt them like wolves."

Now language this from the lips of a professional "minister of the gospel" which commands us to love our neighbor as our self. Descending from his pink-eyed Pegasus to sublunary affairs, Dr. Creary thus vented his vituperah wrath upon his fellow-men who happened to be descended from European stock:

"Let us see to it that when the next municipal election comes of that the drunken winter solder shall not elect a Patrick O'Shaughnessy of Jacob Snyder as Mayor of this city."

This sentence shows the bile's and horns of the demon of discord which controls this clerical clown whose slur upon the nationality of any people stamps him as a disgrace to the clerical coat that covers his political carcass. Not satisfied, however, with belching forth his billingsgate against Irish and German citizens, this Fear-God-Hence-Bible-pounder must even insult the sanctuary of justice and apply the dirty epithet of "dogs" to a class of men who are as superior to him in decency as the lily is to the manure that produces it. Read his words and remember them:

"Those judges who drink whisky and are run by whisky men we will drive from the bench like the dirty pack of dogs they are. The American mind take this matter in hand. These fire-eaters we must obey your accursed Sunday law. That is the task of ministers, elders and exhorters."

Such scandalous sectarian slang as this we never read before in all our journalistic experience, and the howling Pharisee who uttered it should change a cowhide for horns in his name and call himself Crazy instead of Creary. By "Americans," we presume this preacher means Hirelaw Bible-pounders because we know he would revive the Connecticut custom of casting men imprisoned because they kissed their wives on Sunday. And right here we want to call the attention of our readers to a few extractions from the laws passed by the Puritanical preachers of Massachusetts and Connecticut in the seventeenth century when Protestant preachers had full sway in those regions. Here are a few of the enactments which were made by mad-cap preachers under the plea of "liberty":

"Sec. 21. No one shall run on the Sabbath day, or walk in his garden, or elsewhere, except reverently to and from meeting."

"Sec. 22. No one shall travel, cook, shave, make beds, sweep house, cut hair or shave on the Sabbath day."

"Sec. 23. No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or fasting day."

"Sec. 38. If any man shall lie in wedlock with his wife on the Lord's day, the party in fault shall be punished at the discretion of the Court of Magistrates."

We could produce a whole page of just such passages from the proscriptive laws passed by persecuting preachers of hatred against their fellow men, but these few sections will be sufficient to show how far these hide-bound hirlaws would go to curb and curtail the liberty of conscience of every man who refused to worship by the creed of hypocrisy and rant which controlled these Connecticut ancestors of the modern Cross bells of America!

Of course the men who made the Blue laws, from 1639 to 1656, just like their modern madements hated Popes, Papists, priests and Papists with that intense disgust which the devil is said to entertain against holy water. In order, therefore, to show how far these fractious falsifiers of the gospel of God went in their intense bigotry we will quote another enactment made by these hypocritical ranters of Zion:

"Sec. 16. No priest shall abide in this dominion, he shall be banished and never return on his return. Priests may be served by any one suffered a sermon."

This was New England justice under the persecuting rule of Protestant preachers! And the descendants of these worthies would refurbish this cruel law to-day if they had the power to do it. But Almighty God is stronger than Satan, the Church grew and flourished like a green bay tree all over the land, notwithstanding the great killing cause of the Connecticut Yankees, and it must be almost sudden death to such creatures as Crary to witness the progress and prosperity of the Church in a land where only a short time ago it was death to be a priest.

Yet it was not alone against priests that these Puritanical Pharisees directed their proscriptive measures, as they even declared it illegal for any person to read the book of Common Prayer used by the Episcopalians. This seems incredible, but as the Monitor never makes an assertion it cannot prove, here is the section showing it

"Sec. 36. None shall read Common Prayer, book's Divinities of mass, Latin service, Popish dirge, prayers, or plays on any instrument of music, except the drum, trumpet, and jew's-harp."

Those laws show what a pretty state of society we would have if political parsons could control the consciences of the people. In that case liberty would be dead, freedom a mere myth, and Methodism would be the car of Juggernaut which would crush the people into atoms beneath its Wesleyan wheels.

Political parsons of the Gibson-Creary type are the most dangerous element in the community, for the reason that under the guise of this good will which should mark the character of every preacher of the gospel they stir up strife among the people, they inflame the worst passions of the multitude, and they do more harm to Christianity than "one dead human" in an open fox like Holzebub we can guard against, but these canting, crooking Bible-lords of evil omen who are steeped to the lips in the gospel hate, have done more to multiply the forces of infidelity in our land than all other causes combined.

We have said as much on this branch of the subject that we have but little room left for some brief reflections on Dr. Creary's rantes rant, as we will simply give a few more extracts from his spiteful speech as printed in the Herald:

"No sugar-candied the bitter Jew, with good opinion of the law, as it begins to chew and swallow its bonnet, and we will dine it and choke these crocodiles, sharks and sharks. The Chinese are all Christians, and how can we build nations that we can not live in with half a chance in their lives, and if it is necessary we will pile them up like cord wood. We have the power, and we are going to take advantage of it. We are going to make a Christian nation out of the State, and we are going to make them do, whether they like it or not. We are the leaders of the League of Freedom, and that he was—Gibson—is only a rendezvous for the parties against these crocodiles, and that once life in the redoubt we will see who will be compelled to go under—Gibson, or the crocodiles."

"Gibson, I say, is a good man, and I am his friend, and I am for the Sabbath, and I am for the law, and I am for the Christian Sabbath, and I am for the Christian Sabbath, and I am for the Christian Sabbath

Farm and Home.

An Old Man's Lecture to a Young Lady.

Gardners, Sit, and down beside me, and let me give you a little talking to. That is right. Sit clear at the other end of the sofa. It makes more room for my gout and corns, besides being a good habit for a young lady to become addicted to. Always pander to the habit, and you will be surprised yourself walking through green meads, we and beside the still waters of self respect. You may be walking alone to be sure, but you will have fewer lame excuses to do up on Monday morning. I wish to speak to you of your mother. It may be you have noticed a careworn look upon her face lately. Of course it has not been brought there by any act of yours, still it is your duty to chase it away. I don't mean for you to turn at her and shake your skirts and tell it to "shoo," as you would a hen, nor do I expect you to be on the other side of the fence and throw old oyster cans and pieces of barrel staves at it, as you did the cow yesterday. But I want you to get up to-morrow morning and get breakfast, and when your mother comes down and begins to express her surprise, go right up to her and kiss her in the mouth. You don't imagine how it will brighten her face. Besides you owe her a kiss or two. Away back when you were a little girl she kissed you when no one else was tempted by your fever-tainted breath and swollen face. You were not as attractive then as you are now. And along through those years of childish sunshine and shadows she was always ready to cure by the magic of a mother's kiss, the little, dirty, chubby hands whenever they were injured in those first skirmishes with this rough old world. And then those midnight kisses with which she has rocked so many bad dreams, as she leaned above your restless pillow, have all been on interest these long, long years. Of course she is not as pretty as a kissable as you are, but if you had done your share of the work for the past ten years the contrast would not appear so marked. Her face has more wrinkles than yours, for more, and yet if you were sick that face would appear to you to be far more beautiful than an angel's, as it hovered over you, watching every opportunity to minister to your comfort, and every one of those wrinkles would seem to be bright wavelets of sunshine chasing each other over the dear old face. She will have you some of these days. Those hardened, if not lifted from her shoulders will break her down. Those rough hard hands that have done so many unnecessary things for you will be crossed upon her lifeless breast. Those neglected lips that gave you your first baby kiss will be forever closed and those sad tired eyes, will have opened in eternity, and then you will appreciate your mother; but it will be too late.

There, there, don't cry; she has not lost you yet. She is down in the kitchen stirring beans for dinner and if you feel so badly you might go down and wash them, and let her change her dress and rest an hour before dinner. And after dinner you might do up the dishes while she takes a little nap. Then you might take down her hair and do it up for her. You need not wind it over your finger and fuss to make spit curls as you used to do with yours, but give it a brushing and wind it up gently and tenderly, as if you enjoyed doing it for her. The young man in the parlor can wait until you have performed these duties. If he expresses any impatience you may explain to him that you feel under more obligation to your mother than you do to him. If this does not seem to satisfy him, ask him how many times he got up in the middle of the night to warm peppermint for you when you were dying of colic, or how many hours he has carried you up and down just because you would not be quieted any other way! Ask him to repeat Mother Hubard backwards, and if he is unable to do it, it will be a proof positive that he is not the boy that has repeated and explained it to you 1,700 times. Catechise him to find out if he is the one who gave you the new black silk dress, and sat up all night to make it while you were off having a good time. Corner him up and make him admit that he went without a new bonnet last winter that you might enjoy a $12 one that you admired so much. Wring from him a confession that he has a stich in his side brought there by doing your up finery week after week. Then show him the fruit door, put on a calico apron, and go and help your mother pick currants for jelly, and I guarantee you will think more of yourself, and the world will think more of you, and you will be happier and better for having done so.

The Danger of Disobedience.

There was once a rosebush in a garden, and on its topmost branch a full-blown rose was growing. A close observer, however, could see that it leaves had lost some of the freshness, none of the softness and fragrance that make this flower such a favorite. Down below it, on the same branch, a young rose-bud was just emerging from its cradle of green leaves. The morning was chilly and the full grown rose, knowing by sad experience that the tender bud would be injured by the biting air, bent down and whispered, "Little one, wait awhile. Do not early as yet. Come not forth till the sun warms you with his beams." But the bud had caught a glimpse of the world and thought it beautiful, so, rearing its little head, it said proudly, "you old dotard, the sun will come and bid me blooming and ready to receive him." And so it came forth in all its infant beauty, only to be nipped by the frosty air. Soon the chill were away, but before it was time for the sun to come a heavy fog had gathered and shut out its revivifying light. At last, when the beams of golden light came through the clear air and fell upon the garden, they found the bud withered and dead, and the old rose mourning over it.

How many little rose-buds have we in the world who are just as foolish, and often cause both themselves and others such unhappiness by their disobedience.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Fits, Nervous Neuralgia, Headache, Nervous Prostration caused by excess of alcohol or tobacco, Excessive use or abuse of the Brain, which leads to Premature Decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. $1 a box, or six boxes for $5; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received for six boxes accompanied with $5, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by Frank Stevens, Druggist, Agent, 767 Market and 767 Market Sts., Opp. Palace Hotel, San Francisco. Orders from country druggists promptly attended to. Beware of spurious imitations.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the power of the great remedy, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, we publish the following testimonials, which, in consideration of the character of the parties who have signed them, and the fact they attest to a well-known and universally-esteemed remedy, must be read with interest.

Oakland, Cal., Nov. 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for two years with congestive chills, or the sickness, which manifests itself by intense pain and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks deprived me of my ability to work, and I tried all the medicines I could procure, but without avail. Hearing of your celebrated Stomach Bitters, I determined to try them, and the result was, that after the second bottle I was free from the region of the kidneys, from the high fever, and from the chills, being now entirely relieved of the disease. I cheerfully add my testimony to the many others, coming as it particularly does,

Market Report.

COMPILED WEEKLY AT P. J. MALY, 202 MARKET ST., (OVER HAYES' STORE)

MONITOR OFFICE,
22 (Up) St., Tuesday Evening, April 8, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Prices have changed very little in the general marketwhile staples during the past week. The Spring showers have had a weakening effect on Grain. Several vessels arrived on Monday, but as the fleet had been expected for some time the effect on the Grain Market was slight.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent realizable prices for cash. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Butter
Quotations are: Fresh, firm, fancy roll Butter, 22@25c; Fancy, 20@22c; Medium do, 20@22c; Fair do, 18@20c; Pickled, 16@20c; Firkin Butter, 16@20c per lb.

Cheese
Quotations are: California Cheese, 13@14c; Eastern, 16@20c; Dairy Imitation Eastern, 12@13c per lb.

Eggs
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 16@18c; Dressed, 18@19c; Ducks, 15 @16 c; Geese, 90 @95c; Hens, $5.50@6.00; Young Roosters, $6 @6.50; Old, $5.00@5.50 per dozen; Geese, $1.50@1.75 per pair; Pigeons, $2.50 @3.00; Eggs, 20 @22c per dozen.

Hops
Quotable at 20@22c for choice; 18@20c for Medium California, Lane, Eastern, 19@ 20c; Bulk Lake, 20 @ 22c; Oregon, 19@20c per lb.

Domestic Fruit.
Quotations are: California Oranges, $3.50@ 5.00 per box; California Lemons, $7.50@8.00; Sugar Pears, $2.50 per box; Mexican Limes, $1.50@2.00 per box; Pineapples, Mexican Limes, $10.00@ 12.00; California Limes, $8@10.25 per box, and $4.00@6.00 per large box; Bananas, $3.50@5.00 per bunch; Pine Apples, $6.00@8.00 per dozen; Apples, $1.25@2.25, Oregon, $4.00 @5.00 per barrel; Cocoa, $1.00 per box; Cranberries, $13.50@15 per bbl.

Vegetables
Quotations are: Cabbage, 60@75c per cwt; Beets, 1c per lb; Carrots, 1c per lb; Turnips, 1c per lb; Cucumbers, 75 c per doz; Chili Peppers, 10c per lb; Tomatoes, $3.50 per Tempe box; Sweet Potatoes, $2.50 per box; Garlic, 7@8c per lb; Green Peas, 12@15c per lb.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 8c; second do, 6@7c; third do, 5@6c per lb.
VEAL—Dressed, 8@9c per lb for large, and 9@10c for small; live for stock, 3@4c.
MUTTON—Southern, 6@7c; Esq. 8@9c per lb.
LAMB—10@12c.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain-fed, on the hoof, 7@8c; Corn-fed, 8@9c; Corn-fed, Dressed, 9@10c; Roasting Pigs, extra, 10@12c per lb.

DIED.

DONNOLLY—In this city, April 1, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs K. J. Tobin, 609 Fast street, Thomas Donnolly, retired manufacturer, a native of Ferns, County Wexford, Ireland, aged 80 years, 1 month and 25 days.
CLARKE—In this city, April 1, at the Eden House, Alice Clark, a native of the Parish of Donaghmore, Castle Jordan, County Tyrone, Ireland, aged 42 years.
FARRELL—In this city, April 1, Michael, beloved husband of Margaret Farrell, a native of Castlereagh, County Roscommon, Ireland, aged 55 years.
LEMBRUCK—In this city, March 30, Mary, beloved wife of Christian Lembruck, a native of Laughsland, County Galway, Ireland, aged 70 years and 3 months.
FLANNELLY—In Identity, March 31, Isabella, beloved daughter of Myles and the late Mary Flannelly, a native of San Francisco, aged 13 years and 9 months.
CRININ—In this city March 31, Johanna Kelsey, daughter of Patrick and Catherine Crosin, a native of New York City, aged 3 years, 11 months and 28 days.
DOHERTY—In this city, March 30, Anna, beloved husband of Hannah Doherty, a native of the Parish of Donemanny, County Donegal, Ireland, aged 60 years.
MAGUIRE—In this city, March 30, at St. Mary's Hospital, Thomas Maguire, a native of San Francisco, aged 12 years and 5 months.
FERRILLY—In this city, March 30, Peter O'Reilly, a native of the City of Dublin, Ireland, aged 52 years.
MOONEY—In this city, March 28, Hugh Mooney, a native of Ireland, aged 45 years.
CONNELLY—At Lower Lake, March 25, Hugh Connelly, oldest son of Owen and Annie Connelly, aged 2 years, 6 months and 21 days.
KNOLL—In Richmond, March 31, Bridget Knoll, wife of Richard Knoll, a native of Ballycastle, County Tipperary, aged 25 years, 4 months 17 days.

—Brock's Speed Cotton, soft finish as well as glace finish, is manufactured entirely for sewing machine work. Try it on any machine and you will use no other. For sale by all dry goods stores.

MONITOR MENTION.

I see nothing else but Mission Sunday.

H. D. Metcalfe who has been for years partner of Dennis Mahoney, Tailor, has moved to 215 Montgomery St.

Lots of merchants are taking at Sacred Heart College, and an amount of an entertainment at Santa Clara College are crowded over to next week.

In consequence of enlarging we are one day behind this week. Hereafter, however, we will be on time as usual.

Dennis Carroll to Dublin that Mr Parnell has declared his intention of entering Kilmainham to Armagh, a very clever one, which compelled by force.

Notwithstanding the enlargement of the paper we are compelled to lay over last week several editorials and the continuation of the articles on the Blessed Virgin.

St. Joseph's Benevolent Society will hold their first complimentary literary and musical entertainment on next Thursday evening in the basement of St. Mary's Cathedral.

Next week Messrs Lecouvreur and Kenelle will open the parlors of St Mary's Cathedral and St. Francis, where we expect to really exhibit the number of Masses subscribers in the city.

Sisters Has been at work on the parlors of his elegant study store, in the Flood Building, to now open, with the finest display of luxuries and imported candies ever offered.

A Chicago clergyman had occasion to refer in a sermon to the prophet Jonah, and he recently says that he delicately spoke of him as having passed three days in the whales abode, meaning.

The Rev. Clergy and others interested in organs, will find the advertisement of Mr Mayer in our columns, and he is one of the well-known organ builder and repairer a share of their patronage.

—Sure $150. For your piano, direct from the manufactory. Mehrer Ed. Bro. 127 Post st. have opened an agency at 502 Sutter street. J. H. Gilbard, manager. Pianos, organs, melodeons.

In M. J. Sullivan, Chiropodist, will guarantee to permanently cure Corns, Warts and Ingrowing Toe Nails, Moles, Tetters, Chapped and Eruptions of the Skin. Satisfaction guaranteed. 1004 Market street.

The largest and most select stock of millinery in this city is now open in perfection at Madames Hoefler & Hevener Baldwin Block. The most fashionable can be suited at the establishment.

Prince Leopold is to be married in tartan, and the English papers suggest that the Prince Heir-apparent wear a special dress of cotton, in order to show her appreciation of that branch of English handicrafts.

A friend said to us the other day when we remarked upon the improved health that it was entirely owing to his having followed the advice of his friend, Hostetter, in the use of Hostetter's Bitters, 7 Stockton street.

—After twenty five years of study and practical experience, I am enabled to adapt my spectacles to all sights, to examine eyes free of charge, which is free. N. Sussner, 211 Kearny street, scientific optician.

—W. Z. Tifany & Co., 130 Billy street between Pacific and Mason will lose and West at the lowest rates. They give both good quality and full weight, so that it is worth while to purchase from them. Postal card orders promptly attended to.

Dr. J. E. Keeny, who as medical attendant of Mishe Dish before retiring from street, has a special permission to visit him for medical purposes. He received a letter from the Secretary of State declining to accede to such a request.

The St. Patrick's Benevolent Literary and Dramatic Society will give their third entertainment on next Thursday evening in the new Odd Fellow hall, in which occasion a designed and well selected programme will be presented.

—Dr. Jerome's Pimple Pills are the best and most reliable remedy for Pimples, Blotches, Blotches, Boils, Tetter, Ringworm, Scald Head, Nursing Sore Eyes, Sore Nipples, Barber's Itch, Blotches on the Face, Ulcers, Old Sores, Scurvy, Mercurial Eruptions, Syphilitic Eruptions, Blotches, Boils, Tumors

Poetry.

THE ALTAR OFF CROZEN.

The spice of old St. Malo makes a bacon trus and brave,
Where round the granite islets foame the angry Breton wave;
Far away lovely Dinan, in St. Sauveur's shadow cool,
Where Du Guesclin's fiery heart is laid, in peaceful rest at last.

At Coetsaves, and at quiet Jhil, the great cathedral towere
Speak still, in solemn beauty, of a holier age than ours;
And worship for all time and life, the glory of Saint Michael's
St. Michael's shrine still crowns the rock, that reigns o'er sea and land.

Yet where the hole of Cresson coach upon the rock girt coast,
A sadder lesson than them all it is for her to boast;
When with allowed rite, and darkened lamp, each threatening altar stood,
And from the force to Rome, "the Terror" drowned all fair Brittany in blood.

Through whispering word, by still cliff paths, from town and chalmy camp,
Prescribed, "suspect," and fugitive, noble, gentle, and peasant, fled;
Silent as Ocean's rocks and beach, calling where the dead
Lie in the sea, leaving leagues of sea, a light planed fleet sail to

With lowered sails and muffled oars, upon the tide, the hoists went gliding
Through the night, leaving the shore, that light that shone
Where, drinas from dedicated shrines, at dead-eight's solemn hour,
For her true children holy Church could still put forth her power.

Calm as the calm lea by the bank; calm rose the after three;
Calm as the calm lea the crossed moon; for none, Heaven's lids shut Thrilled star ocean's ceaseless chime; while rustling shroud sail shed,
The soft winds to the chanted prayer made answer the sea's sweet.

There came the babe for baptism; three hacks the bride to wed;
There came the unclothed corpse the funeral rite was said;
And the soul of fearless faith arose in the imploring cry;
Ah, mark the dome so man hal built, the Hand was raised on high.

Lingering where the glittering bay sweeps the Dinan, ceasing swift,
The piano Breton willingly will stay this tale to lift;
And grander Temple of the Cross on earth will never be,
Than the ship that through "the Terror" lay, off Cresson, on the sea.

Literary Miscellany.

The Priest's Adopted Niece.

BY PRA GIOVANNI.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN TWO PARTS.

PART I.

It was a calm, quiet evening in the autumn of '46.

The departing beams of the setting sun lingered lovingly on the rugged mountain scenery, the abode of the shepherd, or the bark of his dog, was the only sound to break the death-like stillness.

In this quiet evening, Father Tom, a curate in a solid district in the west of Ireland, was going to attend a sick call.

Gentle reader, let us accompany the good priest; we shall find him doing a work of mercy, which will be the source of many a kind and heroic act. His stout bid pony carried Father Tom slowly but safely over the old mountain road. The pony started for the human path, as if frightened at the sight of something unusual. The priest, shd his dumb companion, and was about to pass onward in a brisker pace, when a low, piteous cry broke on his ear. Looking cautiously around, he spied a little girl of eight or nine summers, lying under the shelter of a large rock, about fifteen or twenty yards before him. Throwing the reins from his hand, he dismounted, and approached to where the child was lying. The poor creature pushed back the straggling ringlets of her jet black hair from her eyes, and stared into the face of the priest. And then she began to cry again more piteously.

"What is your name, where is mother, where is your father?" asked the priest.

"Dead," replied the child, "and Mary had Willie to dead too."

"Where have you come from?"

"Oh! 'tis far away in the mountains; down, don't leave me here."

The priest answered her appeal to his protection by gently lifting her into the saddle, and holding her on by the arms, while he walked himself to the cabin of the sick person whose he had been called to attend.

It was night when he reached the place, and the wife of the poor, sick peasant was standing at the door awaiting the priest. Placing the child in the arms of the woman, the priest hastened into the cabin. The child, having fallen asleep soon after Father Tom had placed her on the pony, began to cry as soon as she awoke, and found herself in the arms of a stranger. The countrywoman soothed the child as well as she could, and having made her somewhat calmer, she asked her who she was and many other questions.

"Who are you, father? I paster aw you when."

"I am Rosie."

"Yes have a nice, sweet name; but where is your father and mother."

"Father and mother is dead, and Mary and Willie."

"Don't cry, sathere.

"You are cryin' the priest was cryin', everyone is cryin' now; what is the raison?"

"They are cryin' for you, sprite, and 'tis isn't but they have raison enough to cry for themselves; but God's holy will be done. Lest no stop spakin'. Did you come down from my poor sick man."

"Well, your reverence; what do you think of how Mick is?"

"You'll have him well again in a few days."

"God's blessin' off you for the consolin word."

"Amen! Biddy, did you ever see that child before?"

"No, your riverence; the poor darlin', she looks poorly, and she has neither father nor mother."

"Well, we must try to find her a home. What is your name, child?"

"Rosie, sir."

"Will you come with me, Rosie?" said the priest.

"I will, sir," answered the child.

"Come on, then." The priest, taking the child again in his arms, placed her on the pony, and bent his steps toward home, where he arrived at a late hour in the night.

* * * * *

Half hidden by tall, old poplars stood the priest's humble cottage.

It looked down pittingly on the wretched houses in the neighborhood. Its door was always open to the poor, and often they came to it to get consolation and encouragement from the priest, or a morsel of food from his sister, to who m we shall take the liberty of introducing the reader.

Father Tom's sister, Ellen O'Brien, or as she was more familiarly called by her poor neighbors, Miss Ellen, was the priest's housekeeper. Tall, slender, and pensive-looking, her mien and countenance gave token of early sorrow. The spring and the summer of her life had passed, she was now in the autumn of her years. Her parents died while she was still young, and her brother was the only one to whom she would look for protection, companionship, and love. He was a student, in a strange land; she yearned for his return. He came at last, and hastened to his sister, when he was appointed curate by the shores of "Corrib's wild and misty lake," she went with him to enjoy his society, to cheer him in his loneliness, and to enrich him with one of the choicest blessings which fondly may have—a sister's love.

It was about a year after when the priest reaches the pathway leading to his cottage. His sister awaits his return, and hastening out to meet him she anxiously inquires why he is on foot, and if any accident has befallen him.

"No accident, Ellen," replies her brother, "but I had to assist a distressed little damsel."

"And like a good knight and true, you gave up your steed to the fair wanderer."

The little girl, accustomed only to the language of the peasantry, did not understand those words, and thinking there was little kindness awaiting her, sobbed in shame and vexation.

"Shame on me," said the priest, "we seem to mock the child's distress. Take her into the cottage, Ellen; you are better able to quiet her troubles than I am."

The night had passed; morning was come again; the trees, the hills, and the plains again looked fresh and beautiful in the beams of the rising sun.

Rosie had slept the peaceful sleep of childhood. She dreamt of the mother whom she had so lately lost; she thought she was one of a group of happy children; merry laughter and pleasant voices were ringing in her ears, but the merry laughter ceased, the pleasant voices "melted away," and she awoke with sorrow in her young heart. Her waking thoughts nearly paralized her. How had she come there, and where was she?

Last night she was out on the wild moor; her feet were cut with the sharp stones, and her hands were torn with the rough briers bites. She at last remembered the kind words of the priest and his sister, and all the scenes of the day before were recalled to her mind.

The bright light of the rising sun is streaming through the small window into her little room. She sees the painted floor, she looks at the whitewashed walls, and the neat rests on the sacred picture, the only ornament in the apartment. What a sad picture it is! What speaking eyes are the sorrowful eyes! The sadness of the Mother of Sorrows is the sadness of those gazing into hers. She looks at it again and again, then turns away, but the spell is upon her, she cannot help looking at it, and she bursts into tears.

"What ails you, child?" asks Ellen O'Brien, who, having overheard the sobbing of the child, came to inquire the cause of her distress.

"Oh! the picture, miss."

"Well, what about the picture?"

"I thought it was cryin', and it made me cry."

"Crying! So you might well indeed be frightened. It is the picture of the Mother, her Son was taken from her amy by wicked men; they dragged him all bleeding sore along, a weary, dusty road on to a hill, where they nailed Him to a cross, and got Him to death—but you are crying more than ever, I must take away the poor child you are distressing.

"Oh! don't, 'tis the picture of the Blessed Virgin."

"Yes, child, 'tis the picture of the Mothr of Sorrows.

The child's unrest was allayed by Miss O'Brien's soothing words. The fatigue she had borne and the quiet of the place and its tage threw herself into a peaceful slumber and the lark had bounded heavenward and poured forth his cheerful song many a hour that forenoon before she awoke from her refreshing sleep.

* * *

In spite of the sorrows she had borne, Rosie was a pleasant, handsome child. Her obedience and gentleness won the good priest's heart. The priest and his sister loved the quiet and retirement of their humble home. Rosie was a kind friend; long there was a spare nook in the cottage which she could occupy; she would be a companion to Miss O'Brien, perhaps she might some day be a help and a solace to the priest. Be that as it might, Father Tom, pitying her helplessness, resolved to befriend her, and to take care of her temporal and eternal welfare. The child became the priest's adopted niece. She was taught to regard the priest as her uncle and his sister as her aunt. These names were a little strange to her at first, but, with a child's easy power of adapting itself to circumstances, she learned to speak to her new friends as if she had known them all her life by the names she was told to address them.

She was no longer disfigured by the rags of a beggar. Her blue eyes beaned with light and joy and her flaxen ringlets danced to the wind, and she looked, as indeed she was, a specimen of happy child. And fervently did she thank her Virgin Mother for her priest, happy home. She prayed to her helper in every work of mercy; whenever there was an errand of kindness to run, her willing feet flew on it.

Quickly, quickly days and years glided by. As Rosie grew older and strong, her spheres of usefulness became wider. Her young heart was the home of patience and love. It was the joy of the good priest and his sister to form her mind to noble and generous aims, to a pure and earnest love of her creator and faith. When tired with reading in the long winter nights, she would sit at the feet of the white-haired priest, and listen with trobbing heart to the strange stories he told of home and foreign scenes, when the priest was scorned and insulted by freethinkers abroad, and disturbed and hated by the minions of a bad government at home.

Rosie laid up in her heart of hearts the suffrings of Ireland's priests and people, and she vowed in her inmost soul that all her strength should be spent in relieving the wants and in soothing the sorrows of the poor. Many a noble heart has made the same resolve, and many a strong and has been shattered for the same holy end. yet for, perhaps, relieved so many wants or soothed so many sorrows as the lowly heroine of our story.

Again the cold, bright moon and chilt twinkling stars are pouring their mild soft, light down the world.

Three years have passed since Rosie was a homeless, homeless child on the lonely moor. She has made herself a wide circle of friends. Wherever she goes the prayers of the people go with her, wherever she comes patience and love come with her. Every day was her day of some work of charity. On Sundays she gathers the children about her, to teach them the catechisms. She centers on the little ones to a knowledge of the mercy of Jesus, and the kindness of Mary. Every neighborhood she is entrust. The words she speaks to the children are caught up by their parents, and are repeated at among a western breadth. A child and her love of her simple and sa manner, the long hours of the wintry night.

Close by the moor where Rosie was once a friendless child, stands a poor cabin. Its owner, hard but a woman in lying ill of fainne fever. The poor creature will never recover. Rosie, who has been all day and from time to time she moistens the lips of the dying woman with a cooling drink. There is not a sound to break the word repose of nature except the raving of the sick man. At times her voice grows stronger and her words plainer. She speaks of a child she had left by her parents, and of a young mother, who, in the frenzy of illness, cast her newly born babe from her arms, and crushed out to death in the storm. In the pauses of her ravings she gathers fresh courage to tell the husband of her young mother, the father of that child. She at last awakes and as consciousness returns, stil watching beside her, says to her,

"Are you easier, Mary?

"I'll soon be well. Miss Rosie, but tis night, sit; you're still here? Ah! tis better, I have much to tell you, but what's the use?

"Why, yes, Mary, do tell me."

"What should I yet your mind with what can do you no good to know! You are happy with your uncle, the priest, but the priest is not your uncle

"I am aware of that, Mary, but I love him well; he has all the love my parents should have if they lived."

"Your parents! You never saw them."

"My poor Mary, your mind is wandering again.

"No child, tis my wandering's gone, you are safe now; your parents. Listen, I'll tell you all I know while I am able. Your father was a Protestant.

"And my father a Protestant."

"Yes, you. Your mother married against her father's will, she was an only child, and had her on account of her disobedience, he died and I was said to mother her; she never saw him from the day she left his house to get married. Your father was a wild man an, I am afraid, a bad man. He married your mother, she left her, an went no one knew where. She couldn't stay where she lived; she came to this part of the country; when she came first, she used to wander all day by herself in the fields, she used to shun the people, she was always cryin' and mutter a curse was on her, for I know there was trouble in her lonely heart. She began to like me and let me come near her; I pressed her to tell me one day what was ragging her and the poor creature cried when I axed her, but she told me all, much as I have given it to you.

"A little before you were born she used to say it was better for you never to hear of your mother's misery, as it might make you hate your father. The day you were born your mother was wild and raving, we had to watch her very closely; I sat watching her all night and a wild night it was, loud, moaning of the distressed souls made me fall asleep. I took fright when I never woke again. I awoke, however, and the day was dark and cold, and I went in to see if she had come—your mother was gone; half-idiotism of the village people ran out to search for her; they couldn't find her, but the next day she was found dead. It was my sister nurse I was, I was far away when my father an her children died of a sudden, an deadly sickness, and I was there with the priest and his sister.

"May God bless them."

"Amen, child, an they have God's blessing.

"Does the priest know what you have told me?"

"No does, I told him all, an now here is the last thing, your mother gave it to me to give to you when she got off."

Here the dying woman handed Rosie a beautiful wrought locket. It opened the moment she touched it with her finger; within there was a miniature picture of a beautiful woman on one side, and on the other there was the likeness of a man.

"Whose pictures are these, Mary?"

"They are your mother's and father's."

Rosie kissed the faint likeness of her mother, but the moment her eye fell on the mamento of her father, she thought of his wickedness, and hurriedly closing the locket she hid it from her sight.

"It is the moon goes away, Rosie?"

"No, Mary."

"Is the fire and the candle out?"

"No, Mary, no."

"Ah! 'tis the darkness of death comin' over me; blessed be God! I've seen the priest; I an he would your hand, Rosie; I am dyin'; maybe I'll see your mother in heaven; Rosie, Rosie! oh! holy Virgin, pray for me."

In another moment poor old Mary was dead. Her death seemed so like a quiet sleep that it was not until her friends began to stiffen and grow cold that Rosie could believe that she was indeed dead. Rosie laid flowers on the damp floor of the cabin, she prayed the Almighty to have mercy on the soul of her mother's humble but faithful friend.

All that long, long night, Rosie watched beside the dead. The darkness was losing itself in the grey dawn when Rosie pale and haggard, reached the house of the priest. Early though it was he was standing outside the door, as if he could not be enervated by luxurious; he was too watchful to sleep when his people needed the comforts of religion.

Rosie turned to him and drew him within the cottage. Were with the sister the news of her mother's and story had rested, as well as with the fatigue of a long, sleepless night, she sank exhausted into the nearest seat.

"Uncle! uncle. I know all; Mary has told me all about my poor mother's history.

"It was right." said the priest, "that you should know all, and I would have told you everything some day myself, but Mary came again to our place, and I knew she could tell you the sad, sad story better than I could. I advised her to tell you all. I know she would do so last night. Do now to your room child, you need rest and quiet; is there any one to look after poor Mary's remains?"

"Yes, uncle."

Rosie went to her room, and the priest went to attend to the spiritual wants of his flock.

[Concluded next week.]

The New Irish Cardinal.

With reference to the announcement of the raising of Archbishop McCabe to the Cardinalate, the Dublin Irish Times says: The Most Rev. Dr. McCabe was born in James' street, Dublin, outside the close of the last quarter of the present century, of highly respectable parents. At an early age he went to Maynooth, where he pursued his studies for the priesthood with that zeal and energy for which he was ever distinguished in after life. At the termination of his college career he was ordained by the late Dr. Murray, after which he was appointed curate in the parishes of Donnybrook and Donnycarney, on which duty he remained for a short time, when he was appointed to the parish of Rathmines, where he remained for a period of about three years, when he was appointed curate to the parish of Rathfarnham, in the Wicklow district, amongst the poor, and owing to his great and untiring energy, and his talents display, he did not accept much notice, and he was appointed to the parish of Donnybrook, where he was soon called to the episcopal bench, and he was consecrated Bishop of Ardagh, in succession to the late Dr. Gillooly, in the year of our Lord 1866. Since his elevation to the episcopal bench, he has displayed the same energy and talents that he displayed in the parish of Donnybrook, and he has made himself a great favorite with the people of the diocese of Ardagh. He was one of the Bishops who signed the address to the Pope in 1867, and he was one of the Bishops who signed the address to the Pope in 1867, and he was one of the Bishops who signed the address to the Pope in 1867, and he

THE MONITOR.
PRESS YEAR OF PUBLICATION.
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1882.

A Catholic Tribute to the Poet Longfellow.

There is no class of the reading community in this country who will lament more sincerely over the demise of the poet Longfellow than those Catholics who have learned to love him through the perusal of his sublime poetic creations. The frequent allusion which he makes in many of his more elaborate poems to Catholic devotion, ceremonies and customs, makes us look upon him as one who—although not a Catholic—has contributed much of his genius towards propagating Catholic faith by clothing many of the beautiful devotions of the Church in the attractive garb of genuine poetry. Thus, for instance, in his "Children of the Lord's Supper" translated from the Swedish, we have a lovely description of the first communion and confirmation services of the Church, and in the "Ladder of St. Augustine" we are presented with a pretty example whereby we can make our sorrows as many steps that lead up to heaven. In "Evangeline" we have many references to Catholic faith which throws a religious glamour over the poetic beauties of that superb poem of Longfellow's creation. His touching allusion therein to the Sister of Mercy and the many virtues that adorn her holy life, are also sweetly suggestive of a Catholic corner in the poet's heart. Again, in "The Golden Legend" we find a Catholic chord reverberating through occasional stanzas that makes us revere the poet for his love for the beautiful and true in religion.

The great respect which the poet paid to the Blessed Virgin is another reason why Catholics will reverse the name of Longfellow even after being forgotten by those who looked upon him merely as an American poet. But to us Longfellow was a Catholic poet, a title which elevates him to the highest niche in the temple of fame. His poetical paraphrase upon the "Hail Mary" in "The Golden Legend" is touchingly beautiful, but the climax of Catholic imagery is reached by the poet when he puts this sublime and sweetly Catholic language into the mouth of Prince Henry, in allusion to the Mother of God

"This is indeed the Blessed Mary's land,
Virgin and Mother of our dear Redeemer!
All hearts are touched and softened at her name.
A fire has burned with the bloody hand
The priest, the prince, the scholar and the peasant,
The man of deeds, the visionary dreamer,
Pay homage to her as one ever present,
And even as children, who have much offended
A too indulgent father, in great shame,
Penitent, and yet not daring unattended
To go into the presence, at the gate
Speak with their sister, and confiding wait
Till she goes in before and intercedes
Be mute, repentant of their evil deeds,
And yet not entirely unable to draw near
Make bold approaches, and at last with courage,
And she for them in heaven makes intercession,
And if any Faith had given to nothing more
Than this example of all women,
So solid, so manful, so strong, so good,
So patient, peaceful, loyal, loving, pure
This were enough to prove it higher and truer
Than all the creeds the world had known before.

This sublime tribute is worthy of presentation in the hearts of those who love the Mother of Mercy for the many beauties that adorn her sacred character. And thus it was that Longfellow—the Protestant—venerated in lovely verse the holy name of Mary.' Yet, and to say, there are of the "household of faith" who do not give to the Immaculate Queen of Heaven half the homage bestowed upon her by the greatest poet American ever gave birth to, whose place in the literary empyrean it will be difficult to fill, and over whose past greatness and future fame death can place no pall. In a word we know no better epitaph to place over the tomb of the American bard than to inscribe thereon his own lines slightly altered

"Take him O Death! and bear away
Whatever thou canst call thine own
Thine image stamped upon his clay
Felt give thine but—but that alone."

Death of a Patriotic Irish Poet.

"Denis Florence MacCarthy, the poet, is dead," was the simple announcement in Monday's dispatches conveying to the world the demise of one of Ireland's most gifted bards. Deceased was born in the south of Ireland in 1817, and was one of that brilliant galaxy of Irish writers who contributed to make the Dublin Nation glitter with gems of thought both in prose and poetry. Thirty years ago McCarthy's first volume of poems was issued, and he at once leaped into fame in consequence of the patriotic spirit infused into his creations.

Like Lady Wilde, Mangan, and several other Irish poets, MacCarthy translated freely from the language, among his most successful efforts in that line being a translation of Calderon's dramas. He also wrote a life of Shelley which gained for him both fame and fortune. His latest work was an Ode, written for the Centenary of Thomas Moore, in 1879. Among the more popular poems of this gifted bard may be mentioned his lovely poems of "The Pillar Towers of Ireland, in which occurs this beautiful allusion to these chronicles of the past:

"Here was placed the holy chalice that held the sacred Host,
And the gold cross from the altar, and the relics from the shrine
And the mitre shining brighter with its diamonds than the first.
And the cruizes of the Font[illegible], and the vestments of the Priest!
"Where blazed the sacred fire, rose out the vesper bell,
Where the fugitive found shelter became the hunted chase
And hope hung out the symbol to the innocent and good,
For tithe Cross for the moss of the pointed sword and shoot
"There may it stand forever, while this symbol doth impart
To the mind one glorious vision, or one proud throb to the heart!
While the broken shaft rest may these grey old temples last,
Fitful prophets of the future, as preachers of the past."

"Birds of a Feather Flock Together."

There must be a natural affinity between Henry Ward Beecher and the Chinese, for the reason that both have his instincts, depraved morals and corrupt natures. The well-known prurient character of Beecher, as shown just during the notorious and nasty exposure of his liaison with Elizabeth Tilton, is sufficiently known to every reader of the Monitor, hence we will not notice that part of our subject any further, but proceed at once to the consideration of Beecher's sentiments on the Chinese question, a matter which is attracting much of his attention of late. Beecher has contributed much of his genius towards propagating Catholic faith by clothing many of the beautiful devotions of the Church in the attractive garb of genuine poetry. Thus, for instance, in his "Children of the Lord's Supper" translated from the Swedish, we have a lovely description of the first communion and confirmation services of the Church, and in the "Ladder of St. Augustine" we are presented with a pretty example whereby we can make our sorrows as many steps that lead up to heaven. In "Evangeline" we have many references to Catholic faith which throws a religious glamour over the poetic beauties of that superb poem of Longfellow's creation. His touching allusion therein to the Sister of Mercy and the many virtues that adorn her holy life, are also sweetly suggestive of a Catholic corner in the poet's heart. Again, in "The Golden Legend" we find a Catholic chord reverberating through occasional stanzas that makes us revere the poet for his love for the beautiful and true in religion.

The great respect which the poet paid to the Blessed Virgin is another reason why Catholics will reverse the name of Longfellow even after being forgotten by those who looked upon him merely as an American poet. But to us Longfellow was a Catholic poet, a title which elevates him to the highest niche in the temple of fame. His poetical paraphrase upon the "Hail Mary" in "The Golden Legend" is touchingly beautiful, but the climax of Catholic imagery is reached by the poet when he puts this sublime and sweetly Catholic language into the mouth of Prince Henry, in allusion to the Mother of God

"This is indeed the Blessed Mary's land,
Virgin and Mother of our dear Redeemer!
All hearts are touched and softened at her name.
A fire has burned with the bloody hand
The priest, the prince, the scholar and the peasant,
The man of deeds, the visionary dreamer,
Pay homage to her as one ever present,
And even as children, who have much offended
A too indulgent father, in great shame,
Penitent, and yet not daring unattended
To go into the presence, at the gate
Speak with their sister, and confiding wait
Till she goes in before and intercedes
Be mute, repentant of their evil deeds,
And yet not entirely unable to draw near
Make bold approaches, and at last with courage,
And she for them in heaven makes intercession,
And if any Faith had given to nothing more
Than this example of all women,
So solid, so manful, so strong, so good,
So patient, peaceful, loyal, loving, pure
This were enough to prove it higher and truer
Than all the creeds the world had known before.

This sublime tribute is worthy of preservation in the hearts of those who love the Mother of Mercy for the many beauties that adorn her sacred character. And thus it was that Longfellow—the Protestant—venerated in lovely verse the holy name of Mary.' Yet, and to say, there are of the "household of faith" who do not give to the Immaculate Queen of Heaven half the homage bestowed upon her by the greatest poet American ever gave birth to, whose place in the literary empyrean it will be difficult to fill, and over whose past greatness and future fame death can place no pall. In a word we know no better epitaph to place over the tomb of the American bard than to inscribe thereon his own lines slightly altered

"Take him O Death! and bear away
Whatever thou canst call thine own
Thine image stamped upon his clay
Felt give thine but—but that alone."

Death of a Patriotic Irish Poet.

"Denis Florence MacCarthy, the poet, is dead," was the simple announcement in Monday's dispatches conveying to the world the demise of one of Ireland's most gifted bards. Deceased was born in the south of Ireland in 1817, and was one of that brilliant galaxy of Irish writers who contributed to make the Dublin Nation glitter with gems of thought both in prose and poetry. Thirty years ago McCarthy's first volume of poems was issued, and he at once leaped into fame in consequence of the patriotic spirit infused into his creations.

Like Lady Wilde, Mangan, and several other Irish poets, MacCarthy translated freely from the language, among his most successful efforts in that line being a translation of Calderon's dramas. He also wrote a life of Shelley which gained for him both fame and fortune. His latest work was an Ode, written for the Centenary of Thomas Moore, in 1879. Among the more popular poems of this gifted bard may be mentioned his lovely poems of "The Pillar Towers of Ireland, in which occurs this beautiful allusion to these chronicles of the past:

"Here was placed the holy chalice that held the sacred Host,
And the gold cross from the altar, and the relics from the shrine
And the mitre shining brighter with its diamonds than the first.
And the cruizes of the Font[illegible], and the vestments of the Priest!
"Where blazed the sacred fire, rose out the vesper bell,
Where the fugitive found shelter became the hunted chase
And hope hung out the symbol to the innocent and good,
For tithe Cross for the moss of the pointed sword and shoot
"There may it stand forever, while this symbol doth impart
To the mind one glorious vision, or one proud throb to the heart!
While the broken shaft rest may these grey old temples last,
Fitful prophets of the future, as preachers of the past."

Our Consul at Cardiff.

The American Consul at Cardiff, Wales, has the misfortune to be husband "No. 2" of that well known literary lady who styles herself Olive Logan, and whose letters appear regularly in one of our Sunday papers. We had to hand Olive over the coals a short time since in consequence of her libel upon the Irish race, and now we have to chastise her husband for the very same cause. It will be discovered that no matter how this woman and her husband may disagree in many things, they are "birds of a feather in their hatred of the Irish.

Our Consul, at Cardiff is named Wyt Sikes, so he must be a kind of Dutch-English, the name Wyt being German and Sikes being a corruption of Saxon Dials in London. Yet he is the American Consul at Cardiff, and as such he acts as a kind of go-between for some fashionable families in New York and elsewhere who desire to have Welsh servants. These scoundrels [illegible] Will vented his spite bitterness in the knowledge of what should constitute a good servant that he—with Olive's assistance—has given a book wherein he describes Welsh girls to be everything that the most heart-broken housekeeper could wish for, and then adds this scorchin-as-any "In short their characteristics are the direct opposite to those of the Irish." This is intended as an insult to the Irish servant girls, but Sikes—as far from shandering that mushabused element—has actually libeled the characters of the Welsh working girls. Thus, for instance, even their wears are clothed with a little brief authority that they cannot wipe out the military spirit of the Irish-American race by having recourse to any such cowardly subterfuge.

We are glad to learn that quite a number of the best soldiers of the brave old Third Regiment are resigned from their former companies sooner than become participators in the wrong perpetrated against their organization. These men, no doubt, will assist in forming another and a thoroughly independent Irish regiment so that no Knownothing Captain, Colonel or General can cause it to be disbanded because its members do not give their conscienses into the keeping of every evangelical crank that happens to be on speaking terms with the superior officers.

Organize, then, at once! Let no divisions or dissensions deter a single soldier from taking his place in the ranks, and then we will prove our manhood and be enabled to defend our adopted country from foreign foes and domestic traitors.

Beautiful Tribute to the Blessed Virgin.

The Catholic Review translates the following edifying paragraph from the Journal de St. Malo:

During last year, the ship Alfred, coming from Newfoundland, was overtaken by a violent storm; suddenly a severe crash occurred, and a huge wave swept the deck. The crew were promptly at work, but their exertions seemed unavailing. Horror-stricken, upon their knees, and made a vow to her so beautifully called the "Star of the Sea." Their prayer is heard, the peril disappears, the vessel is saved. Wednesday, November 9th, early in the morning, eighty seamen, young and robust-looking, met at the church of the Cathedral of St. Servan. These were the Alfred's crew. They were simply clothed with white duck pants, and shirts, but without shoes or hats, they took up the line of march, bare-footed and bare-headed, and went from St. Malo to Dinan, towards St. Louan. After an hour's walk they reached the altar of the Madonna of St. Louan. A solemn Mass was celebrated, when all received Holy Communion, and evinced their gratitude for their very remarkable preservation. This pious custom, remarks the Revue, is not unknown in Brooklyn, where frequently foreign sailors visit the Catholic churches to thank Heaven for their preservation from the perils of the sea, through the power of the Queen of Heaven.

Why was the Third (Irish) Regiment Disbanded?

There is more beneath the subject of this whose foul, and by money, has contributed the answer thereto will reveal the fact that the diabolical scheme, "No Irish need apply," was one of the fundamental principles which animated the action of those military martinets who unmerciful and manipulated the measure which led to the disbandment of the Third Regiment of the California State Militia.

The suggestion that Irish flags should not be seen on our streets nor Irish military companies be permitted to organize, must come from a well known political crank who lives in an atmosphere of hate against all things with an emerald tint, and whose belief of Popery is potential. Acting upon the infamous suggestion of this despicable demagogue, certain Captains and Generals that we know of acted to work in order to perfect their Knownothing programme of proscription by turning the companies of the Third Regiment into Orange First and Second Regiments, and thus [illegible] them of their national arms. The plan worked well. Yes, knownothing is in command of the ascendant, and the Orange Third Regiment handed over to the tender mercies of men who hated the very name the Irish Hibernian bore. These narrow minded Knownothings could not bring a single charge against the Irish-American soldiers as an excuse for disbanding the regiment, so they set to work, on the paltry plea of economy, to disrupt the Irish Regiment in order to keep up the military companies where the men belonged to the oath-bound, anti-Catholic organization which was fathered and fostered by some of the very men most prominent in this movement.

The Third Regiment never was called upon for duty that it did not respond promptly and efficiently in the cause of law and order. Its services during thousand of excitement are fresh in every citizen's mind. Its other services are as a on record, hence, the only way the anti-Irish conspirators could circumvent the Third Regiment was by reducing the regiment to a battalion by concentrating three companies into one. This was accordingly done, and the men now was to transfer the McMahon Guard into the First Regiment, thus leaving but two companies distinctly Irish. But these were an eyesore to certain Colonels and generals of the State militia whose realm was more prominent than their military authority, and hence a combination was formed that the last remnant of the Third Regiment should be attached to the First and Second Regiments. Thus ended a conspiracy against a regiment of American citizens unmoulded [illegible]. They succeeded in driving the green flag out of the city streets, and depriving them of bearing good soldiers and depriving them of [illegible] arms in the million of this world. Will vented his spite bitterness in the knowledge of what should constitute a good servant that he—with Olive's assistance—has given a book wherein he describes Welsh girls to be everything that the most heart-broken housekeeper could wish for, and then adds this scorchin-as-any "In short their characteristics are the direct opposite to those of the Irish." This is intended as an insult to the Irish servant girls, but Sikes—as far from shandering that mush-abused element—has actually libeled the characters of the Welsh working girls. Thus, for instance, even their wears are clothed with a little brief authority that they cannot wipe out the military spirit of the Irish-American race by having recourse to any such cowardly subterfuge.

We are glad to learn that quite a number of the best soldiers of the brave old Third Regiment are resigned from their former companies sooner than become participators in the wrong perpetrated against their organization. These men, no doubt, will assist in forming another and a thoroughly independent Irish regiment so that no Knownothing Captain, Colonel or General can cause it to be disbanded because its members do not give their consciences into the keeping of every evangelical crank that happens to be on speaking terms with the superior officers.

Organize, then, at once! Let no divisions or dissensions deter a single soldier from taking his place in the ranks, and then we will prove our manhood and be enabled to defend our adopted country from foreign foes and domestic traitors.

Beautiful Tribute to the Blessed Virgin.

The Catholic Review translates the following edifying paragraph from the Journal de St. Malo:

During last year, the ship Alfred, coming from Newfoundland, was overtaken by a violent storm; suddenly a severe crash occurred, and a huge wave swept the deck. The crew were promptly at work, but their exertions seemed unavailing. Horror-stricken, upon their knees, and made a vow to her so beautifully called the "Star of the Sea." Their prayer is heard, the peril disappears, the vessel is saved. Wednesday, November 9th, early in the morning, eighty seamen, young and robust-looking, met at the church of the Cathedral of St. Servan. These were the Alfred's crew. They were simply clothed with white duck pants, and shirts, but without shoes or hats, they took up the line of march, bare-footed and bare-headed, and went from St. Malo to Dinan, towards St. Louan. After an hour's walk they reached the altar of the Madonna of St. Louan. A solemn Mass was celebrated, when all received Holy Communion, and evinced their gratitude for their very remarkable preservation. This pious custom, remarks the Revue, is not unknown in Brooklyn, where frequently foreign sailors visit the Catholic churches to thank Heaven for their preservation from the perils of the sea, through the power of the Queen of Heaven.

IRISH VIRTUE AND VALOR VINDICATED.

A Reply to "Irish Pretensions to Ireland and America."

THIRD ARTICLE.

The selection which we have chosen this week from the pen of Fenton of Philadelphia contributes to the delight of the Queen of the Sacred Heart of Mary. We are compelled to admit that the best manner of making atonement to the Sacred Heart of Mary was from the moment of the appearance of Simon, a time and home to plan. Fenton said: Mary might then be have at least, in the mean time, pick a warrant for Dolore will freely entertained a charitable and compassionate, since it was her maternal love to so that transfixed her heart let a sword become profoundly serious her cries were the crucified children by which she brought to birth to eternal life. Thus then, much more than Simeon's prophecy, the sorrowful sword of the left all behind. "The shall leave my mother, etc. Still further, as the divine Redeemer, the most efficacious significant of sorrow, refer to the highest sanctuary of grace and mercy, as the heart of Mary has become to us the mother of all the living, and the mother to which in other affairs the heart of Jesus has a claim to be

Farm and Home.

A FAITHFUL WIFE.

Some years ago there lived in Philadelphia a thrifty pair. The husband's business was one that the wife could assist in, so she was in every way his helpmate, besides being his housekeeper and his savings-bank. They were happy and prospering in their own little home—the Philadelphia patent idea of comfort. After a time the man grew ambitious to have a more showy footing. He took to politics—as is the duty of all citizens when this means politics and water. Unfortunately it was politics and whiskey in his case—the sort of ward politics that is carried on in the liquor saloons. He grew to be such an important man in his "combination" that he could not attend to his private business any more. If this were the story of "Mollboy," the rest of it would be that, in spite of his empty shop and unfinished orders, he went on getting rich. But X was not a high politician of that kind. He was of the sort that is used—not master in the political trade. His wife left alone in the shop, did her best; cut for the very fact that she was alone, that he was never seen customers began to suspect something. Orders that he had taken went wrong; complaints were made of lost goods that were intrusted to him. She had to make them good. Here again the story ought to turn that she built up the business herself again, and put up her own name as sole trader. She wanted to reclaim him, and not even the business was as important to her as what had become of her husband all the days and nights that he staid away from her. They were half starved, but she kept up a decent appearance still, kept her children clean and herself tidy. One day a strange thing happened. This respectable, neat, woman with her two pretty children, made her appearance in the tavern where that man spent his days. She did not make a scene; she did not come for that. She quietly took her seat there and waited for him. People came to her and urged her to go home, saying that this low drinking house was no place for her and her children. "Wherever the father stays," she replied, "is the place for his children and for me." Of course he was ready soon to go home. Some men would have been brutal—have struck or cursed at her for interference—but this man was only weak, not cowardly. The next day he went to another place. She followed presently with the bright little children. They was kept up for some weeks. The tavern keepers grew uneasy, they could not stand the mute witness of the man's weakness. They could not complain of her, for she did nothing, said nothing—only sat and waited. She did not cry or entreat while her husband lounged up to the bar to drink. She simply sat by patient and intent, with the two of dress kept very close to her, as if she would shut out from their eyes and ears such talk and such sights. No tavern-keeper could stand it. One after another refused to sell liquor to a man so guarded. Finally it began to tell on him—this gentle, faithful watch. He stopped drinking, dropped his "political" associates that had led him to it, and began to turn over a new leaf. He picked up his old business again, but finally concluded to move to another place and make a clean start. He is now prosperous, and his experience is not the least part of his gains. This is the way one woman reformed her husband; with never a spoken word, she fairly shamed him out of his ruin by letting him see that whatever he took to there she and the children were bound to be, and that she was in danger of foulness she still looked to him to protect them. For better, for worse, she had married him, and even when he took the worse then would she and his children be. It was an appeal to his manhood, and a very uncomfortable appeal to the manhood of all who stood around, or who dropped in to drink. Not a crying woman, not even a praying one as any one could see, but, by the mute appeal of his presence there, finally conquering for decency and happiness.

Farm Notes.

A writer in the Country Gentleman tells us how the process of ripening cream is performed. At this season, he says, there is often great difficulty found in obtaining butter without churning a long time. To prevent this the cream should be ripened. Set the full jar of cream before the kitchen fire and frequently stir the contents with a wooden spoon or stick kept for the purpose. When quite warmed through carry the jar to a cool place to stand all night. In the morning the butter is obtained at a lower temperature and it will less churning than if the cream had not been previously warmed, while the color and flavor are improved.

—The great majority of ringbone in young horses cause the failure to shorten the toes. To this may be added, that ringbone is apt to be formed if colts are allowed to stand on plank floors, or anywhere else where the footing is hard, during the first eighteen months of their age. Whether in stable or yard during this period let them have earth for standing or walking, free from gravel or stones. If their summer pasture is a gravelly soil, or even stony, it is not objectionable, because the colt will always pick out springy sod enough to stand and walk on without injury to his feet, legs or joints.

—Anybody can have grape vines by cutting them properly. Trim off a portion of the old vine and leave a bud at each end. Stick one end in the ground and it will take root.

—Strawberry plants should be set out as early in the season as possible in order to secure a dry spell. Nothing is so fatal to young plants as lack of moisture after being transplanted.

—In breeding fowls for eggs, use the Leghorns, Houdans, Black Spanish and Hamburgs—not setters. For market chicks the Plymouth Rocks, Brahmas and Cochins should be tried.

—Those feeding bran should not lose sight of the fact that when ground by the "new process" converts the best part of the bran into flour, and wheat is left in of but little value as cattle food.

—One now well fed and comfortably cared for will produce quite as much milk and butter as two that are allowed to run at large, in the wet ground and be subjected to the exposure of the weather.

—An application of 100 pounds of nitrate of soda to an acre of wheat, where the crop looks weak, not only improves it in growth but largely increases the yield.

—Onions are the best vegetables that get in the ground. The land should be very rich. They can be grown in the same place every year, as they are very nearly equally proportioned in the constituent elements derived from the soil.

A DELICIOUS, fragrance of freshly gathered flowers and violets is a distinguished charm of Florator Cologne.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the statements, as well as the power and value of the medicine of which they speak, we publish between the "Testimonials" a portion of the testimony on file in the office of the Warner Brothers, which testimony is admitted, but not the last (very numerous in quantity).

Curtis Hafer

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which sometimes would last for days, and I was confined to my room and bed. The frequency of these attacks (it seemed to me) was hastened by such an article that great Bloom Compound, I procured some, taking it one bottle, but found it to be a good and pure. When the stones passed from the kidneys, I used your Kidney and Liver Cure, which from the region of the kidneys inside the ribs down in front and along the course of the ureter. The discharge of the stone was usually attended with astringency of the neck of the bladder. The pains were very severe, and I was confined to my room and bed. Your Kidney Cure, and the stones were discharged at times, the pains were so severe that they caused spasms in convulsions. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which made kidney diseases a specialty, and they told me that I could never be cured. Reading through a friend the great Kidney and Liver Cure, I procured a bottle of your Cure in Kidney disease. I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed the stones without any pain, since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

S. O. Lewis

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 11, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and sides. My urine would scarcely stand, and when I did it was very dark colored, and I was obliged to get up from my bed at least three times a night to urinate. I was so lame and lame, and I had taken so much medicine without any benefit, that I had concluded I would die sooner than try it. I was certainly low down. I was induced to try your Kidney and Liver Cure, and I have taken so much medicine that I feel it would be of no use to try it. I can certainly say that I feel as well as any man of my age, and I owe my life to the wonderful curative virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure.

G. A. Lillie

516 & Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with severe attacks of kidney disease, which gradually weakened me so that I was confined to my room and bed. My urine was very scanty, and was very dark colored, and was very painful in passing it. I suffered so much that I was obliged to be off for some time. The use of your Kidney and Liver Cure, commenced taking it, and in a very short time I was able to be up and around. I feel quite strong. I can do a day's work. I think I have done I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and I cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

J. P. Green

SANTA ROSA, Cal., March 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the last two years, and have used all the different medicines advertised for said disease, as well as the medicines prescribed by physicians, but without ever reaching my mark. I have used two bottles of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and am now perfectly well. I can cheerfully say that it has done all you advertise it and claim for it.

A. M. Van Winkle

STOCKTON, Cal., April 27, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been sick with kidney disease for eighteen years, and have been treated by physicians and have taken many patent medicines, but never found any thing that did me any good until I commenced to use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Mrs. M. E. Finley

SANTA ROSA, Dec. 4, 1880.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been afflicted with rheumatism in my shoulder, and severe pains in my kidneys. I commenced taking your Safe Cure, and after taking two bottles the pains all left me, and I have had no return of pains since.

Chas. F. Miles

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 11, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have suffered with pains in my back and in my kidneys for the past two years, the effects of which were stricture and gall contracted at the same time. Having read much, in the papers, of the cures made by using your Kidney and Liver Cure, was induced to try it, and it has proved in my case decidedly beneficial.

Geo. H. Hogg

Twenty-third and Dolores

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 28, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidneys and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and sides. My urine would scarcely stand, and when I did it was very dark colored, and was very painful in passing it. I was so lame and lame, and I had taken so much medicine without any benefit, that I had concluded I would die sooner than try it. I was certainly low down. I was induced to try your Kidney and Liver Cure, and I have taken so much medicine that I feel it would be of no use to try it. I can certainly say that I feel as well as any man of my age, and I owe my life to the wonderful curative virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure.

G. A. Lillie

516 & Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 2, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me. Took two bottles, a complete cure was effected. It has also cured my wife of kidney complaint, and restored her appetite perfectly, and she was enabled to walk and sleep well. It is a very fine medicine.

Jno. Carroll, Cal., Nov. 19, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have much pleasure in saying that after using two bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, I have been freed from pain in the back, from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials many of them in cases where hope was almost over-have been voluntarily given, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any reader who read this has any physical trouble remember the good design of today.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,

MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF

Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.

767 MARKET ST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Special attention given to the manufacture of "Boots" of all kinds for horses. This refer to all the principal horse men of California, who have used my "Boots."

N. B. My known logical superiority in this branch of business largely due to careful observation and the valuable suggestions of the best skilled "horsemen" in the United states. The benefit of which accrues to the public in the shape of a superior, AH, perfect article, not equal for it. A. H. Dunn's Condition Powders are for sale at my store, 767 Market St., San Francisco, Los Angeles, Sacramento and Stockton. Always on hand with the finest assortment of English, Jackson and Gridiron saddles, bridles, whips, spurs, tins and fifty race saddles.

JOHN O'KANE.

W. L. SAVAGE,

GREAT BONANZA OIL

AND

Excelsior Soap Co.

STORE AND FACTORY, 1034 Howard St.

Between 20th and Seventh.

MANUFACTORY OF THE CELEBRATED LIQUID OIL Wonder Family and Laundry Soap, Lemon, Glycerine and Burnett's Cocoaine of Lime, Soda, Starch Boxes, retailed at wholesale prices. Orders by mail promptly filled and promptly attended to. Goods delivered free. Compare and last place to buy all kinds of oil.

P. J. DALY,

FRUIT AND PRODUCE

Commission House,

305 & 307 Washington St.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Goods shipped to all parts of the State of Price supplied at Wholesale Rates.

P. T. FLINN & SON,

S. W. cor. Howard and Eighth Sts.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

HAY, GRAIN, GROCERIES, PROVISIONS, Wines and Liquors.

Orders from the country solicited and promptly attended to.

GOOD LIVING.

For Neatness, Cheapness and Stylishness, the

Arcade Restaurant

11 and 13 SIXTH STREET,

NEW MARTIN, SAN FRANCISCO.

CAN'T BE BEAT.

JNO. BARTELS, Proprietor.

McNALLY AND HAWKINS

Are Selling

CHANDELIERS

Of the Latest Patterns

In NICKEL and GOLD, SILVER and GLASS, GOLD and GLASS.

And Dealers of all descriptions Lower than ever before offered.

ALSO DEALERS IN

Sun Burners and Ventilators

For lighting Churches, Halls, Theatres, etc.

Old Chandeliers Re-bronzed to look as good as new.

Orders for Plumbing, Gas and Steam fitting promptly attended to.

TELEPHONE connecting with all parts of the city.

607 Market street, Grand Hotel Building.

P. J. O'Brien & Sons,

Carriage Builders,

329 and 331 GOLDEN GATE AVE.,

(Tyler Street.) near Larkin.

Carriages, Buggies and Wagons made of the Best Material, in the Most Workmanlike Manner, and Warranted to give Entire Satisfaction, at Greatly Reduced Prices.

Repairing and Painting promptly attended to at Reasonable Rates.

Orders by Telephone No. 8145

INSURANCE.

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE.

UNION INSURANCE COMPANY

OF SAN FRANCISCO,

THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS,

ESTABLISHED IN 1861.

Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.

CAPITAL ..... $250,000 GOLD

PAID RATES.

PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES, SOLD SECURITIES.

DIRECTORS:

SAN FRANCISCO.

B. Hewster, R S Floyd, Moses Heller, N G Little, M J O'Connor, I Steinhart, Daniel Meyer, Adam Grant, Antoine Borel, Charles Kohly, Joseph Seligman, Barthold Dias, J Lawrence Phelps, A Hall, N D Stone, A S Hallidie, Gustave Touchard, Nicholas Lessing, John Parrott, James Mehrtens, J Fauth, M H Sweeny, Joseph Brandenstein, Gustave Touchard, J. G. Kittle, Geo. H. Hinckes, William Sebelle, John Conly, W H Ellis.

A. S. HALLIDIE, President.

GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, President.

N. G. KITTLE, Vice-President.

JAS. D. BAILEY, Secretary.

GEORGE THOMSEN, Surveyor.

F. J. WHITE, Pres'k. SAN PEDRO, Vice-Pres't

R. G. BRUNE, Sec'y

WESTERN

Fire and Marine Insurance Co

409 California St., San Francisco.

CAPITAL STOCK - - $200,000

Board of Directors—James Phelps, W. H. Dodge, Thos. Jennings, Henry Hasenjager, F. J. White, Martin Leid, Wm. Sharp, J. Mailliard, N. S. Lubeck, John Foy, W. D. Gunnison.

Losses Promptly Paid.

Risks taken on as safe a property as any company.

THE STATE INVESTMENT

INSURANCE COMPANY.

Of San Francisco, California.

FIRE AND MARINE.

ESTABLISHED 1871.

Statement, January 1, 1882.

Cash Capital	$300,000 00
Reserve for Reinsurance	155,475 33
Reserve for Losses and Lossing	15,000 00
Net Surplus	75,000 00
Total Assets	$545,475 33
Income for Year 1881	$294,206 40
Losses paid during Year 1881	120,000 00
Losses paid since organization	1,150,000 00

Board of Directors.

Peter Donahue, James Irving, Chas. Mayne, Harrison H. Walker, M. Fried 1881, Jas. Phelps, Robert Ross, Richard Ivers, L. Gerstle, Jas. Lick.

J. J. DEVLIN, President.

GEO. H. FRAZIER, Secretary.

EASTERN ADVERTISEMENTS

MONARCH LINE.

CHEAPEST Crossing the At. Ladies.

Passengers Taken To and From All Parts of

IRELAND,

England, Scotland, & the Continent.

Tickets to California, Australia and New Zealand.

DRAFTS FOR ANY AMOUNT.

FARE: Cabin, $60. Steerage, $25.

APPLY TO

P. SHEAHAN,

229 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH MUSIC.

For Sopranos, Alto, Tenor, Bass and Organ. No. 1 Anthem, 25 cts. 2 Kyrie, 25 cts. 3 Jubilate, 25 cts. 4 Venite exultemus, 25 cts. 5 Credo, 25 cts. 6 Te Deum, 25 cts. 7 Gloria in Excelsis, 25 cts. 8 Gloria Patri, 25 cts. 9 Sanctus and Benedictus, 25 cts. 10 Agnus Dei, 25 cts. Complete in one book, Gilbert Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 2 Mass in D, 50 cts. 3 Mass in F, 50 cts. 4 Mass in G, 50 cts. 5 Mass in C, 50 cts. 6 Mass in A, 50 cts. 7 Mass in B flat, 50 cts. 8 Mass in E, 50 cts. 9 Mass in F, 50 cts. 10 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 11 Mass in F, 50 cts. 12 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 13 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 14 Mass in F, 50 cts. 15 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 16 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 17 Mass in F, 50 cts. 18 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 19 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 20 Mass in F, 50 cts. 21 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 22 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 23 Mass in F, 50 cts. 24 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 25 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 26 Mass in F, 50 cts. 27 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 28 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 29 Mass in F, 50 cts. 30 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 31 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 32 Mass in F, 50 cts. 33 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 34 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 35 Mass in F, 50 cts. 36 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 37 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 38 Mass in F, 50 cts. 39 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 40 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 41 Mass in F, 50 cts. 42 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 43 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 44 Mass in F, 50 cts. 45 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 46 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 47 Mass in F, 50 cts. 48 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 49 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 50 Mass in F, 50 cts. 51 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 52 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 53 Mass in F, 50 cts. 54 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 55 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 56 Mass in F, 50 cts. 57 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 58 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 59 Mass in F, 50 cts. 60 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 61 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 62 Mass in F, 50 cts. 63 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 64 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 65 Mass in F, 50 cts. 66 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 67 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 68 Mass in F, 50 cts. 69 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 70 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 71 Mass in F, 50 cts. 72 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 73 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 74 Mass in F, 50 cts. 75 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 76 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 77 Mass in F, 50 cts. 78 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 79 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 80 Mass in F, 50 cts. 81 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 82 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 83 Mass in F, 50 cts. 84 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 85 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 86 Mass in F, 50 cts. 87 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 88 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 89 Mass in F, 50 cts. 90 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 91 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 92 Mass in F, 50 cts. 93 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 94 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 95 Mass in F, 50 cts. 96 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 97 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts. 98 Mass in F, 50 cts. 99 Mass in E flat, 50 cts. 100 Mass in C, 50 cts. Complete in one book, 25 cts.

THE GREAT CONVENIENCE

of the NEW YORK CATHOLIC AGENCY is that by the writing of one letter, another one remittance, keeping an account, making out bills or express charge, one can get any kind of goods wanted, and never pay more than is asked by those who advertise with the dealer. It also has facilities for transacting any private business in connection with the purchasing of goods, at no extra cost. The advantage to all parts of the country and also outside of cities, of having an agent who sells more reliable than ever. Address

THOMAS D. EGAN,

New York Catholic Agency, 22 Barclay street, and 38 Park Place.

JOHN MOLLOY,

Commission Merchant

Dealer in Groceries and Provisions.

New and Second-hand

SAFES, SCALES AND TRUCKS

A SPECIALTY.

54 Clay st., bet. Drumm & East

SAN FRANCISCO.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

6 New Montgomery Street.

PALACE HOTEL, S. F.

The Making of Clergymens' Cassocks a Specialty.

JOHN HICKEY,

Merchant Tailor.

933 Market street,

Between Fifth and Sixth streets

Business Suits to order from $20

Pants " 5

Fine Dress Suits " 35

Black Doeskin Pants " 7

D. LETER & CO.,

Merchant Tailors.

69 Fourth Street, S. F.

GREAT BARGAINS FOR NEXT SIXTY DAYS.

Business Suits to Order, from	$30 00
Pants " "	5 00
Fine Dress Suits " "	35 00
Black Doeskin Pants " "	7 00

Fer'fect Fit Guaranteed Or No Sale.

M. FITZPATRICK

THE

The BOSS Tailor.

Of the Pacific Coast.

36 1-2 FOURTH STREET.

Cutting of Ladies' Dresses a specialty. San Francisco.

THOMAS DRADY,

MERCHANT TAILOR

No. 6 Third Street,

Near Market, S. F.

EXCELSIOR.

CHRISTIAN ZINNS,

DRAPER AND TAILOR,

5 Montgomery St.,

BALDWIN TEMPLE, SAN FRANCISCO.

DENNIS REDMOND,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

No. 506 Mayes street.

Perfect fit and style guaranteed.

BELLS ETC.

MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY.

Established 1826. Celebrated for the purest and sweetest bells and superior chimes. Address MENEELY & CO., WEST TROY, N. Y.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Bells of Pure Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Clocks, Chimes, etc. VANDUZEN & TIFT, Cincinnati, O.

Church & School Bells.

Bells of Copper and Tin for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Clocks, Chimes, etc.

	Price of Bell	Price of Bell with Mounting
No. 4	$75 00	$100 00
No. 2	150 00	200 00
No. 1	250 00	350 00
No. 0	350 00	500 00

Address E. ALLEN, Boston Falls, N. Y.

BLYMYER MF'G CO.

BELLS.

Church, School, Factory, Chime, Chime, Tower, Fire Alarm, Plantation, Steamboat, Locomotive, Hand, Door, Gong, Bells, Chimes, Tubular Chimes, Chime Hammers, Etc.

CINCINNATI, O.

LINFORTH, RICE & CO.

Sole Agents, 322 and 302 Market Street, S. F.

Clinton H. Meneely Bell Company,

Successors to Meneely & Kimberly, Bell Founders, Troy, N. Y., manufacture a superior quality of Bells. Special attention given to Church Bells. Illustrated Catalogue free. Address

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

MANUFACTURE THOIF CELEBRATED BELLS for Churches, Academies, Fire Alarms and other purposes.

HENRY McSHANE & CO., Baltimore Md.

LITHOGRAPHERS. DOCKBUILDERS

P. E. DOUCHERTY & CO.,

STEAM

BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,

412 Commercial St., and 411 Clay St.

Between Sansome and Battery.

BAD TENANTS

EJECTED FOR $4.

COLLECTIONS MADE IN THE CITY OR COUNTRY

PACIFIC COLLECTION CO.

806 California Street. Room 5.

(Over German Savings Bank.)

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

CANCER

CAN BE CURED

By Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, Cal.

IN PLACE OF WHICH PERSONS HAVE TO BE treating following, named persons, who have been cured by Kelly Tighe, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, cancer of the

A. Cowell, Petaluma, cancer of the neck.
Mrs. Cowell, Petaluma, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Fisher, Petaluma, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Fisher, Petaluma, cancer of the breast.
Mrs. Fisher, Petaluma, Sonoma county

Market Report.

[illegible] Monitor Office.
Clay St., Tuesday Evening, April 11, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The markets are fairly quiet and prospects are not promising. At the close of the past week Food and Produce became firm at an advance Butter and Eggs commanded better prices. Poultry also advanced. Meat and Potatoes fell to lower rates.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receivers prices for retail lots and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—
Quotations are: City Extras, $5 40@5 50; City Superfine, $4 75@5; intake brands, $5@5 25 for extra, and $4 50@4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—
Quotations are: Standard No. 1, Shipping, $1 [illegible] 60 No. 2, $1 [illegible] 55 per cental.

Barley—
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 70@$1 75; Standard Chevalier, $1 50@$1 55; Feed, [illegible] 51½ ctl.

Oats—
Quotations are: $1 90@$1 95 for common; and $2 10@2 20 for good to choice; Surprise, $1 90@$1 70 ⅌ ctl.

Corn—
Quotations are: $1 00@$1 02½ for Yellow; White, $1 [illegible] 30 ⅌ ctl.

Rye—
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $1 [illegible]; wild oats, $1 [illegible]; volunteer and stubble, $1 50@$1 [illegible] ⅌ ctl.

Buckwheat—
Quotations are: $2 00@$2 25 ⅌ cental for choice.

Buckwheat—
Quotations are: $1 65@$1 75 ⅌ ctl.

Provisions—
HAMS—Eastern, 15½@16c; California, 13@14c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@16c; Extra Clear Sides, 14@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c ⅌ lb.
PORK—Extra Clear, of bbl, $24 50; do in half bbls, $13 50; Clear, of bbl, $23 50; do half bbl, $12 50; Mess ⅌ bbl, $22@22½; do half bbl, $11 50; Prime Mess ⅌ bbl, $19@19½; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, ⅌ bbl, $16@16½; do half bbl, $8 50; Prime, ⅌ bbl, $15; do half bbl, $8; Pigs Feet, ⅌ half bbl, $2 12½@$2 25; Sweet, $3 00 ⅌ half bbl ⅌ ctl.

Sausages—
Quotations are: White, $9@$11 00 ⅌ ctl.

Cornmeal—
Quotations are: $42 00@$43 00 ⅌ ton; table meal, $5 ⅌ ⅌.

Honey—
Quotable at 25@28c ⅌ ⅌.

Butter—
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 36@37½c; Fresh Firkins, 30@32½c; Old Firkins, 20@25c; Pickled, 18@20c; Eastern Butter, 18@25c ⅌ ⅌.

Cheese—
Quotations are: California Cheese, 13@13½c; Eastern, 13@20c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 12@12½c ⅌ ⅌.

Eggs—
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 14@15c; Dressed, 15@16c; Ducks, 37 00@38 00; Brollers, $3 00@3 50; Hens, $6 00@6 50; Young Roosters, $6 00@7 50; Old, $5 00@5 50 ⅌ dozen; Geese, $1 00@1 75 ⅌ pair; Pigeons, $2 50 Squabs, $3 00@3 50 ⅌ doz.

Potatoes—
Quotable at 70@75c for choice; 100@[illegible] for Mashes; Early Rose, 75@80c; Eastern, [illegible]; Salt Lake, 60c; Oregon, 75@75c ⅌ ctl.

Domestic Fruit—
Quotations are: Cabbages, 60@75c ⅌ ctl; Beets, $1 25 ⅌ ctl; Turnips, $1 25 ⅌ ctl; Carrots, $1 50 ⅌ ctl; Cauliflowers, 75 ⅌ dozen; Onions, 3½@4½c ⅌ lb; Asparagus, 20@25c ⅌ bunch; Green Peas, 12@15c ⅌ lb.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 7@8c; second do, 6@7c; third do, 5@6c ⅌ lb.
VEAL—Dressed, 8@9c ⅌ lb for large, and 10@12c for small; live for choice.
MUTTON—Wethers, 6@6½c; Ewes, 5@5½c ⅌ lb.
LAMB—6@7c.
HOGS—Dairy and Grain Fed, on the hoof, 7@7½c; choice, 8@8½c; Small, 8@9c; Dressed, 8½@9c; Roasting Pigs, 40c; [illegible] 10@12c.

Wheat in New York.

New York, April 10.—The ocean steamship lines are now carrying wheat from this port to Liverpool and London for 4½d; and from Chicago to Liverpool and London for 5½d; and for a penny (2½ cents) per standard bushel more to Glasgow. The steamship company is going to Liverpool has lately been carrying free as ballast, what crain they could get, and this week a penny a bushel has been offered in Boston for 60,000 bushels of wheat for that purpose. A member of a prominent firm in the Produce Exchange today said that the movement of wheat from the West to the seaports had been so light that speculators had been able to get up most of the supply and hold it at prices at which it could not be placed in Europe. Speculators who are "long" of wheat are hoping, it is stated, to hold it at high figures until the new crop begins to be available, and in the meantime to compel the "shorts" to come in and settle. It is reported on good authority that on Thursday a clique of speculators in this city sold out from 100,000 to 200,000 bushels of wheat at 2 cents a bushel below the market price in order to get the actual wheat out of market, so that they might manipulate the options to better advantage.

DIED.

HARVEY—At Cherokee, Butte county, March 26, Hugh Harvey.
McCAFFREY—At Cherokee, Butte county, April 5, John Edward McCaffrey.
CONNLEY—In this city, April 9, Thos Connley, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years and 3 months of three days.
WILTON—In Portland, Oregon, April 8, Mr. J. D. Wilton, daughter of the late Edward Martin, a native of San Francisco, aged 18 years and 3 months.
FLYNN—In this city, April 9, Michael Flynn, a native of Upper Ballymore, county Cork, Ireland, aged 50 years.

—Rich and fullness bonbache, and all derangements of stomach and bowels, cured by the Planta "Pellets" or anti-bilious vegetable 25 cents a vial. No cheap boxes to allow waste of virtues. By druggists.

—Best Pictures taken at the Imperial, 724 Market street.

MONITOR MENTION.

T. O'D., Vallejo, next week.
M. C., Virginia City, next week.
—Get your large Scent bottles at H. Stein's 535 Fourth street, near Freelon.
T. F. O'Connor lectures in Virginia City, Nev., to a very large and enthusiastic audience on last Sunday night.
—It will be hideously interesting to the patients of Dr. A. Shaw to know that he has removed his office and residence to 652 Market street.
—Right Rev. H. P. Northrop, the newly consecrated bishop of Wilmington, N. C., is the youngest prelate in the American episcopate.
—Carpet beating and whitening, 333 Tyler, Oakland branch, 2148 and Telegraph avenue; telephone, 2138. Vomiting Row.
—The press we publish this week is from an unknown writer, but it is sublime in tone and horrendly Catholic in conception.
—Lulse desiring the latest spring style of hats or bonnets will find Mrs. Swanson, of 1217 Stockton street, prepared to supply them at low prices.
—Mayor Beatty shipped one thousand and three-score hogsheads of Bethlehem Bitters during March amounting to 1,062,000. Beatty is only 35, self-made and very enterprising.—Washington Star.
—Four Fathers will shortly sail from England for Mauritius, to assist the zealous Bishop of the Island, Dr. Scarisbrick, in his missionary labors.
—Gus Moe Hans hereby informs the public that his elegant candy store, in the Phelan Building, is now open, with the finest display of bonbons and imported candies ever offered.
—Persons requiring badges or regalia will find it to their advantage to call on R. Schanfeld, 13-19 Tinelo street, who is also prepared for the plating of all kinds. See advertisement.
—The Fathers of the Society of Jesus are about to open a new college of higher studies in Mount Temple avenue, Dublin, with the approval and support of the Archbishop.
—For twenty-five years of study and practical experience, I am enabled to adapt my spectacles to sights on examination of the eyes, which is free. N. Massaro, 211 Kearny street, scientific optician.
—The Rev. Theo Bruner, of St. Boniface Church, has recently purchased a Protestant church, which is to be used for the colored Catholics of the city of Quincy, Ill.
—Dr. M. J. Sullivan, Chiropodist, will graciously be permanently cure Corns, Warts and Ingrowing Toe Nails, Moles, Tetters, Pimples and Eruptions of the Skin. Satisfaction guaranteed. Office 1005 Market street.
—It is quite probable that Rev. E. Keough, of the London Oratory, will be appointed Catholic Bishop of Southwark, England, to succeed the late Right Rev. Dr. Grant.
—E. T. Wilkes, Merchant Tailor, 12 Stockton st., near Market, is prepared to furnish gentlemen with suits of clothing warranted to outwear any ready made clothing in the market. Give him a trial.
—"John" Arthur, "the Mandarin President," is what some of the indigenous Pacific Coast papers call him, the President. "No sailor on Chester, tailor on John" is another slang device used by Coast people to show their opinion of the twin maker.
—We call the special attention of both city and country readers to the column advertisement of Shanahan & Co., 511 Washington street. The firm advertises freely in the Monitor, they give good value for every dollar expended with them, and we ask for them a liberal share of patronage.
—The Provincial of the Alexian Brothers, we learn, is at all to establish a private lunatic asylum in Rome, under the auspices and encouragement and support of Chicago and of Cardinal Jacobini.
—The Provincial of the Alexian Brothers, we learn, is at all to establish a private lunatic asylum in Rome, under the auspices and encouragement and support of Chicago and of Cardinal Jacobini.
—We are glad to learn that the Brooklyn Hotel is flourishing as it deserve under the excellent and courteous management of Messrs. Pearson & Hoffing. Persons who want a comfortable stopping place will find the Brooklyn Row hotel.
—On the 7th page will be found the resolutions of condolence adopted by the Board of St. Patrick over the decease of M. F. Lynch, also the resolutions passed by the St. Patrick's Association in memory of Rev. Hugo E. Hagen, deceased, and the resolutions of the deceased's fellow-students attending Santa Clara College.
—Daughters, attention! Mrs. Ann Nelson, formerly, never wears a silk dress or a silk bonnet, she lived a Christian life, bequeathed large sums in charity, and received high honors after death. Her memory will be long cherished in the hearts of the people of New Orleans, and possesses still juor for the cause of her sex.
—W. Z. Tiffany & Co., 130 Ellis street between Kearny and Montgomery, are in Wonderful Silver values. They give both good quality and full weight, so that it is sensible to purchase from them. Postal card orders promptly attended to.
—In this country very many non-Catholics are sent by their parents to be educated in the Catholic Convent schools, but there are very few non-Catholic children in our Catholic Parochial schools. In England it is different. We notice that another lot of the children of parochial schools in the Diocese of Birmingham, the respective members of which are Protestants, of children attending these schools, are 13,700 and 1,300.
—Spring is here and everybody who wants a stylish hat instead of a Lenox hat will save money by sending their orders to J. Heavey, 111 Fourth street, who is prepared to do well-made and imported candies ever offered.
—Persons requiring badges or regalia will find it to their advantage to call on R. Schanfeld, 13-19 Tinelo street, who is also prepared for the plating of all kinds. See advertisement.
—The Fathers of the Society of Jesus are about to open a new college of higher studies in Mount Temple avenue, Dublin, with the approval and support of the Archbishop.
—For twenty-five years of study and practical experience, I am enabled to adapt my spectacles to sights on examination of the eyes, which is free. N. Massaro, 211 Kearny street, scientific optician.
—The Rev. Theo Bruner, of St. Boniface Church, has recently purchased a Protestant church, which is to be used for the colored Catholics of the city of Quincy, Ill.
—Dr. M. J. Sullivan, Chiropodist, will graciously be permanently cure Corns, Warts and Ingrowing Toe Nails, Moles, Tetters, Pimples and Eruptions of the Skin. Satisfaction guaranteed. Office 1005 Market street.
—It is quite probable that Rev. E. Keough, of the London Oratory, will be appointed Catholic Bishop of Southwark, England, to succeed the late Right Rev. Dr. Grant.
—E. T. Wilkes, Merchant Tailor, 12 Stockton st., near Market, is prepared to furnish gentlemen with suits of clothing warranted to outwear any ready made clothing in the market. Give him a trial.
—"John" Arthur, "the Mandarin President," is what some of the indigenous Pacific Coast papers call him, the President. "No sailor on Chester, tailor on John" is another slang device used by Coast people to show their opinion of the twin maker.
—We call the special attention of both city and country readers to the column advertisement of Shanahan & Co., 511 Washington street. The firm advertises freely in the Monitor, they give good value for every dollar expended with them, and we ask for them a liberal share of patronage.
—The Provincial of the Alexian Brothers, we learn, is at all to establish a private lunatic asylum in Rome, under the auspices and encouragement and support of Chicago and of Cardinal Jacobini.

C. CURTIN,
GRAND DRY GOODS STORE
911 and 913 MARKET STREET.
DRESS DEPARTMENT.
A MAMMOTH PURCHASE
—FROM—
GREENEBAUM & CO.'S
RECENT AUCTION SALE
250 PIECES
1,500 DRESS LENGTHS 48-INCH ALL-WOOL HEATHER
SUITINGS.
Owing to the large quantity purchased, I will be able to offer them on Monday and the following days at the following low prices:
5-yard lengths, originally sold for $6 25, will be sold for $3 75.
6-yard lengths, originally sold for $7 50, will be sold for $4 50.
7-yard lengths, originally sold for $8 75, will be sold for $5 25.
8-yard lengths, originally sold for $10, will be sold for $6.
☞ Come early and secure your choice, as, at these prices, they will not last long

C. CURTIN,
911 and 913 MARKET STREET.

JAMES T. NOON,
Attorney & Counsellor
AT LAW.
No. 630 Kearny Street,
ROOMS 1 AND 2.
Rel. Sutter and Bush. San Francisco.
Will Practice in Civil and Criminal Courts.

M. DOWELL & ARCUELLO,
SAN FRANCISCO
CARPET BEATING
MACHINES,
1321 and 1323 Market Street, N. F.
Between Ninth and Tenth Streets.
Re-Fitting CARPETS a Specialty.
WE REPEAT NOW, AS WE HAVE FREQUENTLY DONE, that we are the only Carpet Beating Machine Company in the City. Our Machines are the largest, most powerful, and most effective, and are the largest in the Market, and pay for themselves in a few months. Our Machines are in use in San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda, San Leandro, Sacramento, Marysville, Stockton, Los Angeles, San Jose, Santa Cruz, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Napa, Vallejo, Oroville, Virginia City, Gold Hill, Carson, Reno, Winnemucca, Salt Lake, Denver, Omaha, Cheyenne, Portland, Oregon, Olympia, Walla Walla, Victoria, Nanaimo, New Westminster, Honolulu, Hong Kong, Yokohama, Shanghai, Melbourne, Sydney, Auckland, Wellington, Christchurch, Dunedin, Invercargill, Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Natal, Durban, Pietermaritzburg, Kimberley, Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Valparaiso, Lima, Panama, Havana, Paris, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Havre, Lisbon, Oporto, Madrid, Malaga, Cadiz, Barcelona, Genoa, Leghorn, Naples, Palermo, Messina, Catania, Trieste, Vienna, Pesth, Prague, Berlin, Hamburg, Bremen, Frankfort, Leipsic, Dresden, Munich, Stuttgart, Cologne, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Brussels, Antwerp, Ghent, Liege, Milan, Turin, Florence, Rome, Venice, Verona, Geneva, Lausanne, Zurich, Basle, Berne, Lucerne, Copenhagen, Christiania, Stockholm, Gothenburg, Malmo, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Odessa, Riga, Warsaw, Lodz, Athens, Smyrna, Constantinople, Beirut, Jerusalem, Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said, Aden, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Colombo, Penang, Singapore, Batavia, Manila, Canton, Foochow, Amoy, Shanghai, Yokohama, Hiogo, Nagasaki, Pekin, Tientsin, Newchwang, Port Louis, Port Darwin, Port Adelaide, Port Pirie, Port Augusta, Port Lincoln, Port Elizabeth, Port Natal, Port Alfred, Port Nolloth

Poetry.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

THE FUTURE.

BY PROFESSOR RACHAEL.

When another life is added
To the hearing, troubled man;
When another breath of being Fills upon creation's plan;
When the first cry, weak and plaintive,
Heralds long enslaving pain
And a soul from sorrow's prison
Springs, that soul to win its gain;
When the world's cold indifference welcome,
Sympathies, forsook forth in tears,
And upon a self gratulation
Dwelling of future years—
"Poh! is well we cannot see
What shall the future be.

When the boy, upon the threshold
Of his all conquering home,
Puts aside the arm maternal
That unfolds him ere he roam:
When the caresses of his vessel
Failures to the fostering gale,
Years of solitary exile
Hill behind the many sail;
When his pulses beat with ardor,
And his sinews stretched for toil,
And a hundred bold empries
Lure him to Pacific soil—
It is well we cannot see
What shall the future be.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

"HUSH NOT THE HARP!"

(Written in honor of Father Prohan, who was inspired need in demand for reading at a meeting an address by Bishop Kenrick in Virginia City.)

Hush not the harp! oh maiden fair!
Let its tones, in pure and sweet,
Softly steal with the morning breeze,
Father Prohan's praises greet.
I'd have you wake the sweetest strains,
And let your merry lay
Reach the lone Augerite prison-cell
Ere the day dawn's gray.

II.

England's laws, which dare not take
Its harp for words he spoke,
Have rendered poor Erin's proud spirit
Beneath the cruel tyrant's yoke.
But Ireland's holy cause is ours,
Wherein Ireland's priests have proved
Their love for freedom every time
They died for the land they loved.

III.

The fire, so long smouldering,
In brightest flames we see.
Now gaining mighty headway in
Its march to victory.
The Emerald Island, proud, and
By portal full hope
Shall see dawn at last, until we hail
"The green above the red."

The flame-a, now spreading fast and wide,
Will ere long reach the of isles
That bind our spotless Erin to
The land of many stains.
Then the chains will melt and run,
Like a mountain to the sea,
While we bless the flames of the cause
That set our Erin free.

MARY C. COPPER.

VIRGINIA CITY, NEV.

Literary Miscellany.

The Priest's Adopted Niece.

(Continued from our last.)

PART—II.

[illegible] is dead; and Rose is listening eagerly to the whispered accents of the good old priest. He is dying; Rose is losing her best and now her only friend in the wide world.

"Rosie, my child, you will soon be alone."

"I am alone once before uncle."

"You were, child, but God sent you a protector. I hope I have not betrayed the trust Heaven placed in my hands. Rose I have no wealth to leave you; but if you will follow my counsel, you will never want riches. Leave the world do what you heart prompts you to do; give yourself wholly to Almighty God. He makes no mistake—if you trust Him He will take care of you; enter the convent of which we were speaking; happily I was able to make the necessary arrangements with the Superiress. When I am dead hasten to her."

Those were the last words Rose heard from her kind, old friend. Worn out with the toils of a long, useful life, his wasted body could no bear a long struggle; his lamp flickered for a little while, then fled out to burn brighter in the sunlight of God's presence.

Rosie's heart is hardened with the keenest grief. She sadly misses the smile of the white haired priest; everyone she speaks to murmurs a prayer for the repose of his sister's soul. Every day she goes to visit the grave of the priest and his sister; she cannot tear herself away from the place; but her conscience is not at peace; for the whispered counsel of the dying priest is yet unfulfilled. At length she comes to visit the cloistered for the last time; she bids an affectionate farewell to the grave of her friend.

A trembling hand pulls the convent bell. A female figure deeply veiled waits outside the door. Another moment a lay sister asks "Whom do you seek?"

"The Reverend Mother," the stranger replies.

The Superioress appears, and Rose at once unfolds the nature of her visit.

"You are come from the world; you are Father O'Brien's adopted niece! Then rest assured you shall be welcomed by all the sisterhood. You know the duties of a Sister of Mercy. You saw the better effects of the famine fever; there will be barely any change in your life; follow the same course as you have followed hitherto, and you shall be worthy of your vocation."

The novitiate is ended. Rose has taken the name of Mary, and Sister Mary is known where there are disease and suffering. Cheerfully and quietly she goes to the squalid haunts of poverty and sickness. She is not the poor white slave was a child, she grew up loving; she understands them well—their longings their sorrows; she has a rare talent for nursing them; the fiercest paroxysms gentle under her soothing care; the curse dies away on the lips of the hardened sufferer when Sister Mary appears, she is a messenger of mercy, an angel of peace.

A room in one of the Dublin hospitals is darkened. After a fierce struggle a maiden of sufferer is overpowered by the warders, and taken to her bed. But great illness soon weakens the strongest. The hands are removed, and the sufferer is no longer as a child; but his soul is not at rest; many a muttered oath and curse bear witness to his disquiet. Sister Mary has charge of him; while he raves forth his blasphemies she prays for his recovery. She minds him well. She does simply what she is told to do by his medical attendants. She makes no suggestions, she changes nothing, she advises nothing, she is silent, thoughtful, obedient; and therefore, a skillful nurse.

The patient has grown used to the sound of her voice, and he curses when he hears it. She has discovered that he curses when she speaks, so she attends him in silence. Many a weary hour has she sat by his bedside listening to his wild raving. What are they? Some of them awake the tenderest yearnings in her heart and make her forget her fatigue.

Day by day she sink man calls for Sister Mary. She has not been in his room all day. A rough warder answers him. "It is all you deserve to have your oaths and curses are enough to shock the worst; how dare you vent your foulness so before one of the sisters! You shan't see her for some time if I can help it; lie down there now when you are left to yourself you'll be seen tame enough."

The sick man falls back on his weary bed. For the first time in his life he feels he is abandoned. It is hard for him to think he is left alone. He is very quiet, but his weary loneliness presses heavily upon him; he would give all the pays of his former life for the sound of a footfall in his room.

It is in the solemn hour of twilight, when silence is truly waird. His loneliness is too much for him. He remembers the words of the warder, and fearing there is a long night of unbroken silence before him, he becomes helpless, unhappy and bursts into tears. It is a long time since a tear dimmed his eyes before. No one was "there to care that may become a man" need blush that his eye has wept; a tearpdrop has often changed the course of recklessness into a course of penance. Tears are sall, but there is in tears that which is better than the world's best joys.

The sun of the lonely man's strained to catch the slightest sound. Oh! for a kind voice to break the stillness of that twilight hour. He hears a light step approaching, it comes nearer and nearer, it pauses at his door, the pause seems an age, will the door never open? It opens at last and Sister Mary enters. She approaches the bedside of the sick man and asks if she can do anything for him before leaving the hospital.

"Yes, yes, let me hear your voice speak to me for a little while!"

"You feel much easier if your voice seems to have regained its natural tone."

"My heart and soul are changed. I have been a brute, and I have never thanked you. I have never felt weary in my life before. How many weary hours you have watched beside me! how many wicked things I have said. Can you forgive me? say I was mad, anything but say you forgive me."

"I forgive you, indeed, but is it not better to ask God to forgive you?"

"Oh, may God help me!"

"And He will if you ask Him."

"I have done wrong, wrong."

"But you may repent."

"If I thought so!"

"Thought! be sure of it."

"How much more time have you sister, before you go to the convent."

"Half an hour."

"If they were my last words I would ask you to stay that little while longer."

Anxious to relieve him Sister Mary sat down beside him.

"I want to tell you what I was, what a life I have led. If I were a Catholic I would gladly make my confession. It must be such a relief to speak out without fear of betrayal, what is eating away your life. I am so consoled and cheered. My mother died when I was very young. My father never denied me a single indulgence. I almost his kindness again and again, I grew older and wiser. I was expelled. I soon grew quarrelled with my father; he sent me abroad. I went to Paris; there I fell my self out of from my family. I was more wretcher than ever. I drank in the lesson of revolutions; they seemed to me the only teachings worth learning, they were preached under the guise of advancement, and enlightenment; but the unbridled liberty they advocated was their only recommendation.

I was wounded severely in a duel. I was carried through my illness by a religious. She was not like you, but she, too, was very good. I was disgusted with the world's weakness, because my wound had shut me up in the hospital, and forced me to reflect. As long as I was able to share in the revels, and contribute to the mirth of been companions, they fattered me, and welcomed me amongst them. During the long weeks I lay on a sick bed not one of them caused me a moment. If I was then I saw for the first time the untiring goodness and self-sacrifice of Catholic religious. The sister who nursed me gained some influence over me, she attained me to return to my father and ask his forgiveness. I returned to him as soon as I was able; he saw my pale and sickly, he pitied me; he regarded me as the prodigal son coming back to his father's house, but on my knees he happened which unforeseen him. I was born to thwart him. When I was quite well I married a Catholic lady against my father's will. I could hardly have done anything to give him greater offence. He was reared in the prejudices of a narrow creed, though always friendly to his Catholic neighbors, he hated their doctrines with a hate of which no one could have thought him capable. We quarrelled; I insulted at religion generally, I broached the worst and most offensive teachings of the times; he was shocked, he drove me from his presence for ever. I laid my young wife what had happened. She advised me to go back and ask my father's pardon. I fancied she was spoiling my fathers quarrel; my will, unreasonable temper, which had been the curse of my life, overcame me; I left the house, I abandoned her. I came back a few hours later to repair the wrong I had done; I could not find her; I went to seek her at her father's house, but her father's door had been long closed against her; from that hour I have never seen her. I did my best to get some tidings of her; I got none; I despaired of ever meeting her again."

"Oh, my mother!" murmured Sister Mary.

"Your mother!"

"Her story is the same."

"Child, who, are you?"

"I am a nameless child, this locket—"

"Was mine! how came you by it? he asked, hastily, while his eyes shot forth an angry glance at the frightened nun.

"A few hours before my birth, and my poor mother's death, she gave it to one of the kindhearted women who attended her in her illness."

"Then your mother was—"

"Your wife, and you are—"

"Your father!"

The sick man waited in breathless suspense the effect of this announcement; would she disown him, would she cast him off as soon as she had found him? Sister Mary's pale cheeks grew paler, her bosom heaved in pain. She rose without a word, and in a moment father and child were locked in each other's arms.

"By what name shall I call you? Alas! do not know even the name of my child."

"Rosie."

"Rosie, you will now stay with me."

"Yes, dear father.

"Rosie, the peace and the sorrow which I feel are purely the peace and sorrow which a merciful God sent to a dying sinner; I have done deep wrong; say that you forgive me.

"I do forgive you, dear father, but you'll to forgive you.

"Come nearer, child, nearer; I will die a Catholic; send for a priest; when he leaves, come and remain with me. Pray for me, Rosie."

The priest and the penitent remained alone for an hour. When the priest left the penitent's room, the child returned to her father. All that long night Sister Mary's hands were clasps in the hands of the dying man. She felt his pulse grow weaker and weaker, till at last it ceased to beat; she placed her hand upon his heart, but his heart was stilled forever, and Sister Mary knelt down to pray for the repose of her father's soul. Sister Mary was not one to put her hand to the plough and look back; she kept her virgin's lamp well filled with oil, and brightly burning; like her Divine Master, all her works were works of mercy and love; her name was not known on earth, but it was written in the "Book of Life" in HEAVEN.

Who Kissed Away the Tear?

Is anything stranger than the human heart? Nature sends a frail green vine creeping across the earth to cover a grim wall and cover its ugliness—to reach a dead branch and cover it with life. We blame nature as we see these things, and yet we do not realize that human hearts are ever doing the same. One day, months ago, a gray-faced child, looking from a window saw a poor old man go limping past. He was the grim wall—the child was the green vine. He passed again and again, the child was changed the course of recklessness into a course of penance. Tears are sall, but there is in tears that which is better than the world's best joys.

The sun of the lonely man's strained to catch the slightest sound. Oh! for a kind voice to break the stillness of that twilight hour. He hears a light step approaching, it comes nearer and nearer, it pauses at his door, the pause seems an age, will the door never open? It opens at last and Sister Mary enters. She approaches the bedside of the sick man and asks if she can do anything for him before leaving the hospital.

"Yes, yes, let me hear your voice speak to me for a little while!"

"You feel much easier if your voice seems to have regained its natural tone."

"My heart and soul are changed. I have been a brute, and I have never thanked you. I have never felt weary in my life before. How many weary hours you have watched beside me! how many wicked things I have said. Can you forgive me? say I was mad, anything but say you forgive me."

"I forgive you, indeed, but is it not better to ask God to forgive you?"

"Oh, may God help me!"

"And He will if you ask Him."

"I have done wrong, wrong."

"But you may repent."

"If I thought so!"

"Thought! be sure of it."

"How much more time have you sister, before you go to the convent."

"Half an hour."

"If they were my last words I would ask you to stay that little while longer."

Anxious to relieve him Sister Mary sat down beside him.

"I want to tell you what I was, what a life I have led. If I were a Catholic I would gladly make my confession. It must be such a relief to speak out without fear of betrayal, what is eating away your life. I am so consoled and cheered. My mother died when I was very young. My father never denied me a single indulgence. I almost his kindness again and again, I grew older and wiser. I was expelled. I soon grew quarrelled with my father; he sent me abroad. I went to Paris; there I fell my self out of from my family. I was more wretcher than ever. I drank in the lesson of revolutions; they seemed to me the only teachings worth learning, they were preached under the guise of advancement, and enlightenment; but the unbridled liberty they advocated was their only recommendation.

I was wounded severely in a duel. I was carried through my illness by a religious. She was not like you, but she, too, was very good. I was disgusted with the world's weakness, because my wound had shut me up in the hospital, and forced me to reflect. As long as I was able to share in the revels, and contribute to the mirth of been companions, they fattered me, and welcomed me amongst them. During the long weeks I lay on a sick bed not one of them caused me a moment. If I was then I saw for the first time the untiring goodness and self-sacrifice of Catholic religious. The sister who nursed me gained some influence over me, she attained me to return to my father and ask his forgiveness. I returned to him as soon as I was able; he saw me pale and sickly, he pitied me; he regarded me as the prodigal son coming back to his father's house, but on my knees happened which unforeseen him. I was born to thwart him. When I was quite well I married a Catholic lady against my father's will. I could hardly have done anything to give him greater offence. He was reared in the prejudices of a narrow creed, though always friendly to his Catholic neighbors, he hated their doctrines with a hate of which no one could have thought him capable. We quarrelled; I insulted at religion generally, I broached the worst and most offensive teachings of the times; he was shocked, he drove me from his presence for ever. I laid my young wife what had happened. She advised me to go back and ask my father's pardon. I fancied she was spoiling my fathers quarrel; my will, unreasonable temper, which had been the curse of my life, overcame me; I left the house, I abandoned her. I came back a few hours later to repair the wrong I had done; I could not find her; I went to seek her at her father's house, but her father's door had been long closed against her; from that hour I have never seen her. I did my best to get some tidings of her; I got none; I despaired of ever meeting her again."

"Oh, my mother!" murmured Sister Mary.

"Your mother!"

"Her story is the same."

"Child, who, are you?"

"I am a nameless child, this locket—"

"Was mine! how came you by it? he asked, hastily, while his eyes shot forth an angry glance at the frightened nun.

"A few hours before my birth, and my poor mother's death, she gave it to one of the kindhearted women who attended her in her illness."

"Then your mother was—"

"Your wife, and you are—"

"Your father!"

The sick man waited in breathless suspense the effect of this announcement; would she disown him, would she cast him off as soon as she had found him? Sister Mary's pale cheeks grew paler, her bosom heaved in pain. She rose without a word, and in a moment father and child were locked in each other's arms.

"By what name shall I call you? Alas! do not know even the name of my child."

"Rosie."

"Rosie, you will now stay with me."

"Yes, dear father.

"Rosie, the peace and the sorrow which I feel are purely the peace and sorrow which a merciful God sent to a dying sinner; I have done deep wrong; say that you forgive me.

"I do forgive you, dear father, but you'll to forgive you.

"Come nearer, child, nearer; I will die a Catholic; send for a priest; when he leaves,

QUEER FOOD.

Some Peculiarities of Different Nationalities Tabled.

The Germans in New York have stores in which specially Teutonic delicacies are vended. Dried, or rather, smoked, goose is an odd feature of these. Smoked geese come from Pomerania, where their living organs are ripened in big beech forks. Fruit are plucked for their flavor, and then killed, cut in sections, very slightly salted and smoked. Some goods have grown, years, twenty-five cents a pound, and is esteemed a great dainty among German epicures.

The are a couple of stores here where Spanish edibles are dealt in. These consist chiefly of nuts and dried fruit. Dried good meat forms a favorite feature. It is prepared very much like "dried beef in The Spanish seem to rely more on their peculiar methods of cooking what they eat than on any popularity of the food itself. The peculiarity of the French food stores are less pronounced. The question in regard to them is not what they do, but what they do not sell. There is probably nothing from a section of boiler iron or oil-fish stone down to a crooked pin or a broken horseshoe nail that a Frenchman cannot provide a dressing for to make it appetizing. A Frenchman's idea of a good thing for an American is the horsemeat department. They all deal in horseflesh, fresh, dried and salted. Horse-flesh sausages are a favorite. Some of the shops have, called Lyons sausage, a very popular. Sausages [illegible] of sorts fish [illegible] and veal, are in great demand. The defence has [illegible] imported from China. There are three kinds, of which the best is the tiny [illegible] white shark. These are worth $15 to $20 a pound. The poorest kind, which is known as black shark fin, is sold for half as much, and even less. Shark's fin is a popular dainty among Chinamen. It is salted and dried for export, and looks like a section of whalebone when it is put boiled in soup. The flavor and substance is extracted which is esteemed very savory. A species of tree snake of shark's size, dried oysters, rice and birds'-nest are a champion Chinese dish. Dried oysters are sun-ordinary brackets, extracted from the shell, dipped in salt, and strung on strings to dry in the air. They come from China, and look for all the world like tigs. John Chinaman infinitely prefers them to the freshest of fresh oysters. Birds'-nest for Mitsuda, cooks and claims are preserved by them in the same way.

The famous bird's-nest is also a feature of any respectable shop in Mott street. It is a queer stuff to look at, for it rather resembles gravel than anything regetabler or animal, and tastes a little like glue. The nests, it seems, are dried and rubbed down into fine powder in the Indies, when they are packed for transportation. Bird's nest is worth from $10 to $15 a pound for the best. It is essentially a luxury, for a pound of it will only make soup for a most forty people, a dish that it takes higher than turtle soup in the estimation of a Celestial. Bird's-nest soup has to have imported all the way from China is dried cabbage.

Some score or so of contributors to a recently-published cookery book, gave us a hint and heart of a then killed by Clement Scott in "The Daily Telegraph." Mr. Scott said that the same class in England. The Celt has an instinctive chivalry towards the dears of which Nothing so makes the Irish blood boil as the calling of a sweetheart a "dear." Let a man in the streets, as has happened more than once, "Ave the 'ot 'ot 'ot

THE MONITOR.

TWENTY FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 1882.

A PROVINCIAL COUNCIL.

The following letter, announcing the holding of the Second Provincial Council of San Francisco, has been issued by Archbishop Alemany, and was read in St Mary's Cathedral on Sunday:

Rev. Dear Sir: As you are doubtless already aware, the second Provincial Council of San Francisco will be opened, with God's blessing, on the third Sunday after Easter, the 30th inst, according to the due announcement at our Pontifical Mass on the feast of last Epiphany. In accordance with the custom upon such occasions, and especially with the holy spirit and prescriptions of the Church, you will at once and repeatedly have the celebration of said council announced from the altar to the faithful under your charge, exhorting them to implore the light and graces of the Holy Ghost by their devotion, prayers, fasts, the receiving of the sacraments of Penance and most Holy Eucharist and other good works, in order that Almighty God may grant us worthily to commence the celebration of said Synod, and to conduct it and bring it to a happy end, with advantage to our souls and the advancement of religion. To better obtain this end the clergy of the diocese are directed to say at all masses the prayer "De Spiritu Sancto" until the ending of the Synod. Your humble and devoted servant in the Lord,

J. JOSEPH S. ALEMANY, O. P.
Archbishop of San Francisco.

San Francisco, April 9, 1882.

"Studies of the California Missions.

When we read the article under the above caption in the Californian for May, we were forcibly reminded of an ancient proverb which declares that "The Lord sends meat, but the devil sends cooks." And so we might say regarding literature. Heaven sends subjects, but the devil sends writers. The California Missions is one of the most sublime themes that could attract the attention of any writer, no matter how gifted by nature or accomplished by culture. What a sad pity, then, to see such a sublime subject spoiled because of the unskilful setting of the gems of thought from other minds in this base composite of brass and bigotry. Filled with the wonderful achievements of a small band of missionaries, rich in historical incident, located in sections of our own State where stands the venerable ruins to mark the labors of Christian teachers and Indian neophytes—there could been subject more interesting for a qualified writer to dilate upon, nor one in which the shortcomings of an unqualified scribe are more easily detected.

With these impressions in mind, we perused the pages of the Californian, expecting to find therein at least truthful treatment of a subject of such magnitude and so important in the local history of California, but ere we had read two pages we discovered the work to be scant and scrappy, bungling in conception and high and dry in expression. In fact, it seemed as if the fair writer designed to detract from the character of the Catholic missionaries every subject wherein the Priest of the living God is the central figure in achieving the grand result which was derived from missionary labors on this coast. Did these self-sacrificing missionaries work for worldly wealth or for the propagation of the Christian faith? A host of historical witnesses say that the Fathers were moved solely by the desire to carry the good seed of Christianity into the land occupied by pagans. But Mrs. Victor asserts that the Fathers "Gallant Gaels became the subjects of an eager to discover infidel wealth to bestow upon the Church, as infidel souls to bring within its saving influence." And this is history! Home-made history from the hotbed of heresy against truth!

Was it to seek "infidel wealth that led Father Tierra, the Jesuit, and his companions to Lower California in 1697? In the thirty years during which the Jesuit Fathers labored in California they erected no less than sixteen prosperous Missions and brought under the banner of the Cross all the Indians of the peninsula. They found these people untutored savages—they taught them habits of industry, trained them in agriculture and mechanical operations, had left them prosperous and happy. How much "infidel wealth" did these pioneer Jesuit missionaries carry away with them from the land they had redeemed from paganism and sterility? They left it paupers in purse but rich in the reward which God has promised to those who propagate His principles. And the prayers and tears of the poor Indians the fifteen Jesuit Fathers left the shore reciting the Litany of the Blessed Virgin, and their farewell words were "Adieu, dear Indians; adieu, California; adieu, land of our adoption; sit solvatar Jes."

Does Mrs. Victor say anything about this great work of the Jesuits? No! She dismisses them with a single paragraph, in which it is alleged that "the Governments, becoming jealous of their influence in politics, as well as religion, decreed their expulsion from the Spanish dominions in 1767." This unjust decree, of course, carried with it the expulsion of the pioneers of the Cross from the Northern coast—an act of injustice only equalled by the awful injustice which cry to heaven for vengeance.

Father Junipero Serra, the Apostle of Upper California, and President of the Franciscan successors to the Jesuit missionaries is introduced by Mrs. Victor in this rather bungling manner

"Serra, by his own account, was an enthusiast, and enjoyed nothing so much as reading the lives of the saints and exciting their examples of self-sacrifice and devotion. By others he is said to have been a man of splendid physical appearance and possessed of both learning and genius, though his Order was one lowed if not envied for its learning and scholarly pursuits."

According to Mrs. Victor, therefore, a man may read the lives of the saints and not pass above being an "enthusiast" he may possess even learning and genius, and yet be a member of "an order not given to scholarly pursuits." What unadulterated nonsense! If Mrs. Victor knew anything about Christianity she ought to know that no one who is the possessor of the same just merits zeal and piety in the heart of a true Catholic, be he priest or layman. As Longfellow beautifully puts it

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

And what indelible footprints have not the Catholic missionaries and martyrs left on the shores of the Pacific? Not even Mrs. Victor's zeper can wash them out, not even the point of prejudice prick their noble deeds from the pages of the historic past! Yet these apostolic men were only "enthusiasts" Just like Peter or Paul, Stephen, Patrick, or Ignatius, Francis, Dominic, or Francis Xavier. These illustrious saints, to the average non-Catholic writer, were merely "enthusiasts" this, and nothing more, yet their "enthusiasm" worked miracles, converted whole nations, formshed the seed of the Church, spread Christianity, and opened the gates of Heaven for thousands and many millions of souls! Ah Mrs Victor, if the world only possessed a few such "enthusiasts" now-a-days, how the glory of God would shine resplendent and the demons of evil be driven from the souls of men!

The writer of the article in the Californian is possessed of the not unusual non-Catholic prejudice concerning the power of prayer, as may be discerned in the following inner at miracles:

"The 20th of March arrived, being the festival of St. Joseph, and Serra celebrated Mass in unusual pomp and solemnity, still relying upon the intercession of the Virgin, who had so often rewarded his faith, and made a clear impression, for years, when he there appeared to him in the vision of a vessel, which again came, But as such a vision had been vouchsafed them, even the lowest accepted it as a sign that he was to wait, and, accordingly, the day of departure was postponed. Four days afterwards the San Antonio made the harbor, having been beaten about unable to make headway three four days."

This is Mrs. Victor's version of a circumstance which is plainly set forth in reliable historical works in this simple manner

"They found that the provision on hand was sufficient only for two or three weeks at the further, and the settlement was wholly dependent upon the arrival of a vessel which was expected from the coast of New Spain with provisions. The Governor, who was now here, was anxious to leave the country, and was more than once very reluctant to depart and urged necessity that the longboat for some days might be guided safely to port. On the 19th of March the San Antonio hove in sight with a large cargo of provisions."

These two passages eminently illustrate the difference between plain Saxon truth, as depicted by an honest Catholic writer who understood his subject, and a non-Catholic who owing to prejudice, and was covers with the tinsel gloss of skeptical thought the insufficient act of a benign God in response to the fervent prayers His faithful missionaries said during a Novena"

Mrs. Victor next proceeds to criticise the manner in which christian baptism was forced upon the Indians, and she she relates some more romantically constructed stories regarding the mission and missionaries, to the further exposure of which we will devote a couple of columns next week.

Will Archbishop Croke be Arrested?

A correspondent of an Eastern paper, writing from Ireland, says that great excitement exists there in Government circles over the recent speech delivered by Archbishop Croke in Kildare (published in the Monitor a last week), and that it is surmised that he will be arrested as a "dangerous" act coat into prison. All the Government organs are urging the English Minister to call the Bishop to account for his "treasonable" speech, and even the English Catholic party have joined in the hue and cry, for the reason that they are deeply incensed at the exposure of their cherished conservatism at Rome, which the Archbishop of Cashel (God bless him!) so fearlessly exposed in his Kildare speech There is also a third party who desire the arrest of the Archbishop of Cashel, upon the ground that his language is far more seditious than any sentiments expressed by Parnell, Dillon, Davitt, or the other patriots who languish in prison, and these people demand that the Archbishop shall be dealt with in the same manner as the laymen who are languishing in jail for language less criminable.

But Gladstone and Forster, although anxious and willing to wound the heart of the Irish nation by casting Archbishop Croke of Cashel into prison, feel the great responsibility and the odium which would attach to such an inquity, hence they shrink from plunging the country into a more disturbed state than at present exists. But if they refrain from laying hands of violence upon the consecrated prelate of Cashel, the minions of the Government are taking ample revenge by sentencing to prison the priests and the defenceless women of Ireland.

The case of Father Thomas Feehan shows what a bright testimony of a professional informer a priest who has spent a lifetime in guiding the people in the paths of peaceful virtue, may be cast into a felon's cell with one a moment's warning. Here are a few of the particulars to prove our assertion:

"At a special session held at Castlebaney, in the County of Roscommon, Mr Mulhaney, Mr Mitchell, D. J., and Mr Vere Hunsell, R. M., were hearing of the summons which was issued from the previous Tuesday at the suit of Head constable Richard Tilson, against Rev. Thos Feehan, P.P., was prosecuted for charge set out in the summons was that Father Feehan on the 19th March, 1882, endeavored to excite discontent on the minds of her Majesty's subjects, and to incite them not to pay their lawful debts, and to combine together to injure and intimidate persons who would not obey orders of an unlawful society called the Land League. After a spirited speech lasting half an hour Father Feehan, accompanied by the Rev. Thos O'Keeffe, P.P., Father Quigley, Rev. M. Murphy, Parnell, Mary Yates, and several representatives of the Tablet, Enniskillen, and Anglo-Celt, drove land League branches, amidst deafening cheers, from the Castlebaney Court House to the court. The magistrates above mentioned took their seats shortly afterwards when the proceedings were opened. Mr. Boylan (Crown solicitor) prosecuted, and Mr. A.J. Nelson, B.L., and Mr. Mc Smith, Roscrea, appeared for the defendant. Head constable Richard Tilson deposed that on the 19th March he was present at Castlebaney and heard the defendant Feehan make the speech complained of. He was accompanied by the principal witness produced in support of the prosecution. His evidence was taken down in writing. Cross examination of Richard Tilson—Witness was present at Castlebaney on the 19th of March, 1882, I attended a meeting held in the open air, I was in the place, I attended house at Rathdowney; that between 200 and 300 persons were present; I was there a quarter of an hour; attending and meeting; I was there; I was there; I was there

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.

[FROM THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.]

Science has even revolutionized the method of making buckwheat cakes. The old way, setting to raise over night, souring, fermenting, decomposing, and destroying the nutritious part of flour, carbonic acid gas was produced and the cakes made light. But a well-founded suspicion has always existed that buckwheat cakes made in this manner are unwholesome and indigestible, because the chemical action that makes place to abuse the flour from its original character that the souring or decomposing process continues in the stomach and gives rise to dyspepsia and kindred troubles.

The new way does away with all the objections, all fermenting or souring, and places upon the tables smoking hot buckwheat in less than 15 minutes. The leavening element, the Royal Baking Powder, which is the "Royal Baking Powder," being mixed with the flour and moistened with milk, evolves the leavening gas, and in no way changes the strength from its original sweet and nutritious condition.

The fact of healthfulness it is a positive fact that buckwheat and griddle cakes made in this way with the "Royal" powder are very healthy, and can be eaten with insanity by dyspeptics and invalids without disorderly.

Various preparations and mixtures have been put on the market from time to time to take the place of the "Royal Baking Powder," such as "self-raising," or "griddle-cake" flour, but analysis shows many of them to be made from inferior unhealthy substitutes and strong acids, which have a corroding effect upon the membranes of the stomach. It is much safer for all consumers to provide for themselves that they know to be good and reliable, and add the baking powder at a comparatively trifling cost, than purchase any of the so-called "self-raising" flours which are usually compounds of the most noxious, poisonous alum or phosphates. It is stated that three-fourths of the "self-raising baking powders," the market is nothing more than the cheapest and most adulterated article of commerce, and largely made from refuse in the manufacture of the higher grades of flour.

The following is a good recipe and most economical:

FOR BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—To one pint of buckwheat flour, while dry, add two heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, a heaping spoonful salt, one scant tablespoonful brown sugar or Nut Orleans molasses to make them brown, mix well together, and when ready to bake add one pint cold water or sufficient to form a batter, stir but little, and bake immediately on a hot griddle.

As pure buckwheat is very rich, some prefer a little flour and Indian meal added, and the recipe given below will be found an excellent one:

One cup pure buckwheat, one quarter pint cob Indian and wheat flour, three heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, one and a half teaspoonful salt, one tablespoonful brown sugar, mixing as directed in the recipe for "cakes."

☞ Remember always to mix the baking powder with the flour dry.

MARRIED.

LYON—SLAVEN—In this city, April 9, by Rev. Father Gallacher, William J. Lyon and Miss Sissie Slaven, both of San Francisco.

MEAD—RYAN—In this city, April 16, by the Rev. Father Scherer, Oscar E. Mead to Miss Mary Ryan, both of San Francisco.

John Mead, of Napa, to Miss Lizzie Carolan, a native of the Parish of Bansha, County Tipperary, Ireland, aged 20 years.

HANNAHAN—In this city, April 16, by the Rev. Father Sol. Hannan to Miss Lizzie Carolan, both of San Francisco.

WIRE—WEBER—In this city, April 6, by the Rev. Father Wolf, Herman Wire, of Hoxter, Germany, to Anna Theresia Weber, of San Francisco.

DIED.

SULLIVAN—In this city, April 11, Florence May, the only and beloved daughter of James and Mary Sullivan, aged 1 year, 1 month and 11 days.

BRANNAN—In this city, April 10, Michael Brannan, brother of Hon. C. P. Mulvey.

DOOLAN—In this city, April 12, Daniel brother of Patrick and Thomas Doolan, a native of County Tipperary, Ireland, aged 38 years.

OWENS—In this city, April 12, Patrick Owens, a native of the Parish of Borough, County Tyrone, Ireland, aged 31 years.

CULLINAN—In this city, April 13, James Cullinan, a native of Ireland, aged 22 years.

KELLY—In this city, April 13, Mary E. Kelly, a native of Ireland, aged 10 years.

KANE—In this city, April 8, Cornelius Kane, a native of Ireland, aged 36 years.

McDONAL D—In this city, April 16, Annie McDonald, a native of Ireland, aged 25 years.

RUMLEY—In this city, April 16, Thomas Rumley, a native of Ireland, aged 42 years.

HANRAHAN—In this city, April 16, Catherine Hanrahan, a native of Ireland, aged 36 years.

GAVVIN—In Vina, April 3, Thomas Gavvin, aged 45 years.

JOHNSON—In Colusa, Cal., April 13, Maude, wife of David Johnson, a native of Ireland, aged 26 years.

DALEY—In Sacramento, April 11, John Daley, a native of Ireland, aged about 60 years.

TURNER—In this city, April 15, Thomas Turner, a native of Ireland, aged 36 years.

EARS—In this city, April 19, Garrett Sears, a native of the Parish of Lack, County Kerry, Ireland, aged 27 years.

CULLINAN—In this city, April 13, James Cullinan, a native of the Parish of Dunel, County Limerick, Ireland, aged 75 years.

ROACH—In this city, April 14, Mary Roach, a native of Ireland, aged 50 years.

KELLY—In this city, April 14, Mary E. Kelly, beloved daughter of M. and Katie E. Kelly, aged 14 years.

McANDREWS—In this city, April 13, John P. McAndrews, a native of Ireland, aged 52 years.

DUFFY—In this city, April 15, Emmet, infant son of Believed and Bridget Duffy, aged 1 year and 8 months.

C. M. B. A.

Father McNally, the President of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, lectured on last Sunday evening in St. Mary's Cathedral, giving a lucid explanation of the object of this Association and its steppest rising on the mortal. A very thousand congregation listened to the lecture, and, from the large number of new members since, they were well and favorably impressed.

After the lecture quite a congregation assembled in the basement, most of whom then and there joined the Association, while many more received further information, and took away hundreds of copies of the constitution. This organization is doing well in San Francisco, and heartily wish it a "God speed." We will say, for the information of our readers, that the Secretary, Mr. Edward Dillon, will answer any inquiries. His address is 1117 Montgomery Avenue. Applicants in Marin, Sonoma, Napa, and Solano will address the Secretary, Mr. Montgomery street, under the Occidental Hotel.

LOCAL NOTES.

The Easter Entertainment will take place at Sacred Heart College on the evening of the 20th inst., at 8 p. m. The programme will consist of literary compositions, recitations, dialogues and musical selections by the best talented pupils in attendance.

The gentlemen's Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary attached to St. Ignatius Church will give another of their very enjoyable entertainments in their hall on Thursday evening the 27th inst. Tickets will be distributed to all the members next week. Those who are desirous of attending will do well to secure them in season.

ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST SOCIETY.

The St. John the Baptist Literary and Dramatic Society will give their third entertainment at Saratoga Music Hall, Ivory street, on next Friday evening, the 28th inst., at which a programme will open with the farce entitled "Rob Roy," in which will be represented the characters: Rob Roy, Peter Portrigo, H. W. Hagelin; Rittopole, J. Ryan; Rose Macgregor, Miss F. Jordan; Tranks, H. F. Batten; Graff, H. R. Sullivan; Sergeant, Sim M. Brannan; Vocal Duet, Miss S. Medlow, Recitation, by request, Miss Marlenas, Mr. Marcus Mayer; Violin Solo, Miss Edith and Rose Stanley.

The Rob Roy will be followed by amusing farce, "Lend me Five Shillings," which will be given with the following characters: Tom Tiddler, Sally, W. H. Hughes; Captain Flamingo, Mr. Sullivan; Mr. Sutton, F. J. Sullivan; Mr. Moreland, H. R. Sullivan; Sam, Master Sullivan; Mrs. Sutton, Miss Sullivan; Mrs. Flamingo, Miss A. Rice; Mrs. Captain Phobbs, Miss M. Meagher.

The officers of the Society are W. H. Hughes, President; Miss M. Rodier, Vice President; Miss M. Meagher, Secretary; Miss E. Rice, Treasurer; J. J. Sullivan, Sergeant at arms; W. H. Hughes, Stage Manager; G. A. Rice, Property Man.

Market Report.

MERCANTILE BUILDING, 222 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, April 18, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

During the latter part of the past week quite a change took place in the market quotations. Wheat became active at advanced rates. Flour commanded higher figures all good sales. Butter advanced and Poultry was in good demand at high prices.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receipts given for month's sales and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour
Quotations are: Star Extras, $6 @ $7 50; Star Superfine, $4 75@$5; interior brands, $4@$4 25; Extras, at $4 50@$4 75; Superfine, $4 25.

Wheat
Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 30@$1 40; No. 2, $1 25@$1 35 per cental. Extra Choice, $1 45@$1 65.

Barley
Quotations are: Brewing, $1 50@$1 75; Standard Feed, $1 30@$1 35; Feed, $1 30@$1 35 per ctl.

Oats
Quotable at $1 50@$1 60; for common and $1 75@$1 80 for good to choice; Surprise, $1 90@$1 70 p ctl.

Corn
Quotable at $1 00@$1 05 for Yellow; White, $1 10@$1 15 per ctl.

Hay
Quotations are: Wheat, old, $15@$16; wild oats, $13@$14; volunteer and stable, $9 50@$12; Rock, $9 50@$11 p ton.

Rye
Quotable at $2 00@$2 25 p cental for choice.

Buckwheat
Quotable at $1 60@$1 75 p ctl.

Provisions
HAMS—Eastern, 15@16c; California, 13@14c.
BACON—California, 13@13½c; Eastern, 15@15c; Extra Clear Sides, 14@14½c; California Shoulders, 9@9½c p lb.
PORK—Extra Clear, p bbl, $24 50; do in half bbls, $12 50; Clear, p bbl, $22 50; do half bbl, $12 00; Mess, p bbl, $22@23; do half bbl, $12 00; Family Prime Mess, p bbl, $20@21; do half bbl, $10; Extra Prime, p bbl, $19@20; do Prime Pig, p bbl, $22 50; do half bbl, $12 50.

Butter
Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 25@27½c; Fair, 20@22½c; Pickled, 20@25c; Firkin, 20@25c; Pickled, 18@20c; Eastern Butter, 25@30c.

Cheese
Quotations are: California Cheese, 14@15c; Eastern, 16@18c; Gilroy Imitation Eastern, 17@17½c p lb.

Poultry
Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 16@18c; Dressed, 17@19c; Ducks, $4 50@$5; Brollers, $3 50@$3 50; Hens, $6 50@$7; Young Roosters, $6@$6 50; Old, $5@$5 50; Geese, $2@$2 50 p pair; Pigeons, $1 25@$1 50 p dozen; Turkeys, $2 50; Squabs, $3 00@$3 50 p doz.

Eggs
Quotable at 20@22c for choice; 19@20c for Western California; Lower, 20c; Eastern, 19@—; Salt Lake, 9—; Oregon, 21@22c p doz.

Domestic Fruit
Quotations are: Navel Oranges, $2 50@$3 50 p box; California Lemons, $4@$5 50 p box; Sicily Lemons, $4 50@$5 50 p case; Mexican Oranges, $3@$3 50; Sonoma and Mexican Limes, $10@$12; do, $4@$5 50 p box; Bananas, $3@$3 50 p bunch; Pineapples, $4@$5 p dozen; Apples, $2@$3 p box; Pineapple Apples, $2 50@$3 p dozen; Apple, $1 25@$2 50; Cocoanuts, $4 75@$5 per hundred; Figs, 15@20 p lb; Dates, 10@12½c p lb.

Vegetables
Quotations are: Cabbages, 60@75c p ctl; Carrots, $1@$1 25 p ctl; Turnips, $1@$1 25 p ctl; Beets, $1@$1 25 p ctl; Garlic, 6@7c p lb; Dry Onions, 2½c p lb; Green Onions, 75@100c p doz; Tomatoes, $1@$1 50 p box; Cucumbers, 40@60c p doz; Asparagus, 25@40c p lb; Dry Peas, 2c p lb; Green Peas, 6@8c p lb; Beans, 6@8c p lb; Cauliflower, 60@75c p doz; Marrowfat Squash, $1@$1 50 p ctl; Hubbard Squash, $10@$20 per ton; Pumpkins, $15@$20 per ton; Sweet Potatoes, $1 50@$2 p box; Rhubarb, 5@6c p lb; Asparagus, 25@40c p box; Horseradish, 12½@15c p lb; Mushrooms, 25@40c p lb; Cucumbers, 40@60c p doz; Tomatoes, $1@$1 50 p box.

Onions
Quotations are: White, 7½@8c; Silver Skin, 7½@8c p lb.

Potatoes
Quotations are: Early Rose, $2 00@$2 12½; Garnet Chili, $1 60@$1 75; River Red, $1 50@$1 60; Burbank Seedlings, $1 60@$1 75; Burbank Seedlings, $1 50@$1 60; Oregon Russets, $1 75@$2; Oregon Peerless, $1 60@$1 75; Sweets, $2 25@$2 50; Sweet Spanish, $3 00@$3 50 p box.

Grain
Quotable at 200@225c for choice; 190@200c for Medium California; Lower, 20c; Eastern, 190@—; Salt Lake, 9—; Oregon, 21@22c p doz.

Domestic Fruit
Quotations are: California Oranges, $2 50@$3 50 p box; California Lemons, $4@$5 50 p box; Sicily Lemons, $4 50@$5 50 p case; Mexican Oranges, $3@$3 50; Sonoma and Mexican Limes, $10@$12; do, $4@$5 50 p box; Bananas, $3@$3 50 p bunch; Pineapples, $4@$5 p dozen; Apples, $2@$3 p box; Pineapple Apples, $2

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1882.

IRISH VIRTUE AND VALOR VINDICATED.

A Reply to "Irish Pretensions in Ireland and America."

FIFTH ARTICLE.

Fortunately for the cause of truth, the American people, as a rule, are not so entirely ignorant of the history of their own country as to be imposed upon by fabricators of falsehood like Pixley when he undertakes to assert that it was the "descendants of Englishmen who achieved the Independence of America," this being the climax of the falsehoods contained in the following paragraph, which we propose to adopt as our text for this week's punishment of Pixley

"Let us hope of another Irish boast before long. We will consign it to the martial obituary, now the burial a million other lying memories of bragging Irishmen. This one, more effusive than all others, is in the mouth of every Irish orator, and is caught up and repeated by unreflecting Immigrants all over our land. The Irish fought the battles of our Civil War. This lie, with the seven-legged horse, has been actively thrust around the world, and, unless arrested, it will soon become an accepted fact, that we owe our independence to the gallantry of Irishmen in the war of the Revolution, and the preservation of the American Union to the Irishmen in the Civil War. With a few exceptions there were no Irishmen in the war matter which, also the 97th Article of Peace signed in somewhere. It was the descendants of Englishmen who achieved the independence of America.

Men who take delight in maligning the Catholic religion or the nationality of the Irish people, seem to be a kind of necessary evil out of which good sometimes comes, because it presents us with the opportunity of proving what dunces our detractors are, and it affords us the pleasure of producing reliable historical data, which serves the double purpose of disproving the falsehoods of our enemies and of asserting the proud prominence which the children of Erin have always occupied upon that portion of the American Continent over which floats the flag of the Republic.

In the present article, we intend noticing merely that portion of Pixley's poisonous prejudice which relates to the American Revolution, and the first event we present thereat is the fact that the flag float on the side of American liberty, in that disreputable conflict, was struck by an Irishman—General John Sullivan, of Durham, New Hampshire. Here are the historical facts, which may prove useful enough for preservation.

"To John Sullivan, lawyer of Durham, and Major-General of the Continental army, Chief Justice Peter Livius wrote in 1772: 'You were the main active rebellious, and drew with you the previous yes five men. You will come of the first sacrifice for it.' Sullivan was proscribed by government, his family will be robbed and put to the sword, if they can get at them. Governor Wentworth, Sullivan's brother-in-law, in Portsmouth harbor, to which the threat of the Chief Justice referred, and it was with the defiance inspired by the knowledge that fort and of carrying away its powder and cannon, in aid of Washington's army, that John Sullivan and his men sailed from Durham on the night of December 13, 1774, four months before the battle of Lexington and six months before Bunker Hill.

Thus we have punctured Pixley with the proof that the American Revolution was begun by an Irishman! Now let us see what share the Irish had in achieving the glorious Independence they so happily inaugurated.

First, we will give a very brief list of the Irishmen who were prominent in the American army of the Revolution, and who helped to form the nucleus of the American navy, and then we will cite some names of Irishmen who helped with the weight of their intellect to educate the American mind in Republican doctrine, and gave their influence and their wealth to sustain the Revolutionary forces in the field.

Here, then, is a galaxy of Irish names held up men whose memories will be handed down to the very sunset of liberty throughout the world. A roll of patriots, any one of whom—had Pixley lived in their day—would have correctly ranked him among the turbulent Tory allies of England.

"John Barry, a native of Ireland, the first Commodore of the American navy, appointed by Washington.

"Ephraim Blaine, a native of Ireland, a whose officer in Washington's army, from whom the late Secretary of State traces his pedigree.

"Richard Butler, a native of Ireland, one of the five brothers who rendered distinguished service to Washington's army.

"John Dunlap, a native of Ireland, a brave officer under Washington, and publisher of the first daily paper in the United States; also the first printer and publisher of the Declaration of Independence. In 1780 he subscribed twenty thousand dollars to supply Washington's army with provisions.

"George Ewing, a brave soldier in Washington's army, of a distinguished Irish family, resident in Cumberland county, New Jersey. His brother was an officer in the New Jersey line, and fought his way through Red Bank fort, and was with Washington at Trenton and Princeton. His sister married Richard Stockton, one of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence.

"Richard Montgomery, a native of Ireland, a President Harrison's and President Taylor's Cabinet. His grandfather is the wife of Gen. Sherman, the head of our army. John Gibbon, a native of Ireland, a renowned Indian fighter and Major-General in our army. His brother George penetrated the Creeks from Fitzburgh to New Orleans to supply Washington with powder from the latter city, then under Spanish rule. He fought in all our battles with England from Trenton to Yorktown. His sons were rifle sharp shooters, and were known as "Gibbon's Lambs." The younger was Major-General of the United States army for forty years, and his son, John H. Wilson, was Chief Justice of Pennsylvania for twenty-five years. Jeremiah Fitch Black, another son of Ireland, describes as "the most illustrious judge of his time."

"James Graham, who commanded in Gibson Dragoons in our war with England, before he was twenty three years of age. The youngest of his twelve children, whose mother was the daughter of John Davidson, another Irishman, whose grandson was Governor of Independence, and was William A. Graham, a member of President Polk's Cabinet, and a candidate for Vice-President on the ticket with Winfield Scott.

"Edward Hand, Washington's Adjutant-General, a native of Ireland.

"John Redditt, a native of Ireland, who fell with Morgan at Princeton, and whom Jas was Governor of Delaware.

"Thomas Fitzsimons, of Ireland, shipbuilder with Wayne under him. Thomson Mifflin Irish; in Canada, commanded the advance troops at Monmouth, stormed Stony Point with "Mad Anthony," and was trusted and praised by Washington everywhere.

"Henry Knox, Major-General, and Washington's Chief of artillery, and also Secretary of War and of the Navy in Washington's Cabinet.

"Andrew Lewis, who was born in Ireland, but had to fly with his father, John, who shot an Irish landlord for evicting himself and family from their home. This John who saw his Irish landlord had five sons, all of whom distinguished themselves in our war with England. When Washington assumed command of the army he requested that Andrew Lewis should be made one of his Major-Generals.

"Andrew McGary, the giant patriot, a Major commanding at Bunker Hill, where he fell.

"David Porter, a naval officer of merit in the war of the Revolution, father of David Porter, whose career was "a blaze of heroism, and grandfather of Admiral David D. Porter, the head of our navy, who had charge of the naval display at Vicksburg.

"Stephen Moylan, brother of the Catholic Bishop of York, one of Washington's favorite officers, and one of his brothers who fought in our Revolutionary army.

"Daniel Morgan, a native of Ireland, "who won something at Bunker Hill, where he fell.

"David Porter, a naval officer of merit in the war of the Revolution, father of David Porter, whose career was "a blaze of heroism, and grandfather of Admiral David D. Porter, the head of our navy, who had charge of the naval display at Vicksburg.

"Stephen Moylan, brother of the Catholic Bishop of York, one of Washington's favorite officers, and one of his brothers who fought in our Revolutionary army.

"Daniel Morgan, a native of Ireland, "who won the victory of the Cowpens over Tarleton, helped to defeat Burgoyne and fought under Washington at Yorktown.

"Andrew Pickens, who fought at the Cowpens and elsewhere, and whose son and grandson were Governors of South Carolina.

"Hugh Mercer, who fought and died with our first Generals, and whose son and grandson were famous in Virginia.

"Philip Schuyler, a native of Ireland, "who fought in the Revolutionary war, and gave to this country one of its most illustrious families of naval heroes.

How likely does the picture, Pixley! You say, in speaking of the American Revolution, "that with a few exceptions there were no Irishmen in the war with England," but in the present "boast" you assert "there were Irishmen in the war with England." Which of these two lies is the truth? Pixley lies for their gallantry and against their bravery in beating the Irish into the last.

It must also be borne in mind that the American mind was educated to the idea of independence by Irishmen. Thus Lord Mountmorris, Irish Peer, who was in the British army, and was a friend of Washington, and who was imprisoned by his brother officers for his sympathy with the American cause, in anticipation of the pending war, John Sullivan and his men sailed from Durham on the night of December 13, 1774, four months before Bunker Hill and eighteen months before Lexington.

The American army of the Revolution 72 days contained within its ranks, or was inherred among its officers, nearly every man of Irish birth in America. There was more idle boast, as American writers show that fully one-third of the American army were men of Irish birth or Irish descent. The large majority of the troops sent from France were also Irish, who came out to the country, of the "descendants of the British." They were Lauzun's Legion, Rochambeau's Regiment, Dillon's Regiment, Rochambeau's Regiment, Walsh's Regiment, Lauzun's Legion, and Dillon was second in command, and had under him 2,500 men, all Irish, part Irish.

The first general order issued to the army was an Irish Catholic order, and the first publisher of a newspaper in the army was an Irishman, who helped to the cause of liberty with his pen, and the signers of the Declaration of Independence. The first printer of the Declaration of Independence was an Irishman, and that great document was first read in public by an Irishman, Fallon, the inventor of the steamboat, Morse, the discoverer of telegraphy, and McCormick, of reaping-machine fame, was an Irish Catholic. The new flag of the United States was written by the Irishman Hamady, and thus might we go through every department of war, commerce, science, literature, invention and discovery, and still find Irishmen occupying prominent places in the van of each.

"Let us hope of another Irish boast before long. We will consign it to the martial obituary, now the burial a million other lying memories of bragging Irishmen. This one, more effusive than all others, is in the mouth of every Irish orator, and is caught up and repeated by unreflecting Immigrants all over our land. The Irish fought the battles of our Civil War. This lie, with the seven-legged horse, has been actively thrust around the world, and, unless arrested, it will soon become an accepted fact, that we owe our independence to the gallantry of Irishmen in the war of the Revolution, and the preservation of the American Union to the Irishmen in the Civil War. With a few exceptions there were no Irishmen in the war matter which, also the 97th Article of Peace signed in somewhere. It was the descendants of Englishmen who achieved the independence of America.

"Westward the course of empire takes its way;
The first acts already day;
A fifth shall close the drama with the day;
Time's noblest offspring is the last."

Where American commerce began by national enterprise, Irish Commerce began by the first voyage to China was sought by an Irishman; the most eminent and successful merchant was an Irishman, the most eminent of those who gave Adam Smith his first lesson in the prosecution of the art was an Irishman; Their names were Cathcart, Dunlap, Ewing, Gilchrist, Maxwell, Nicholson, Stewart, Thomson, Wilson, Wallace, Dunlap, Maxwell, Wilson, Nicholson, Gilchrist, Ewing, Dunlap, Cathcart.

1 McClanachan, Philadelphia	John Fitzsimons	Irish
2 Nicholson, do	Thomas Fitzsimons	Irish
Richard Stockton,	Richard Stockton	Irish
Richard Stockton,	Richard Stockton	Irish
James Wilson,	James Wilson	Irish
Thomas Wharton,	Thomas Wharton	Irish
Hugh Mercer,	Hugh Mercer	Irish
John Dunlap,	John Dunlap	Irish
Robert Morris,	Robert Morris	Irish
George Campbell,	George Campbell	Irish
Michael Hillegas,	Michael Hillegas	Irish
Hanson, Maryland	Hanson, Maryland	Irish
Total	Total	9 Irish

These Irishmen, by their generous donations, helped Washington to carry out his plans, to secure volunteers, clothing for them and munitions of war with which to place them in the field.

Thus Washington was able to do his duty in the discharge of their duty, but they were deeds. The claim of finding "excuses," in order to leave poor missions and secure rich ones, is a peculiarly Protestant invention introduced into the world subsequent to Luther's leaving aside the ascetic life of a monk in order to revel in the luxury of a mandolin life and the lust of a secretary nun with a fallen woman. Thus was Luther's "excuse" for leaving the hard life of a Catholic monk, and so his followers have been scouring themselves ever since whenever their plethoric purses were pinched too tightly by their Protestant association. Catholic missionaries have never required "to be excused," preferring glorious martyrdom to a dastardly deserter's death.

The writer who interpolates into authentic documents of historical value his or her own sentiments, and pretends that they are part of the original, deserves to be regarded as a most unscrupulous and unreliable chronicler. Thus, Mrs. Victor has done frequently. She also tells us that baptism was administered by force, and that baptism in the Catholic faith meant being baptized into slavery to the missionaries themselves. These are purely the inventions of Mrs. Victor's Puritanical mind, as neither pagan nor Protestant will be received into the Catholic Church if force has to be used. The Church Christianizes just as our Blessed Redeemer's Church, through the grace of God and the gifts of the Holy Ghost acting upon the soul. Besides, every authority on the subject says that the means used for the conversion of the Indians of California were those of prayer, piety, gold example and the practice of Christian kindness towards them. This is what made the Indians love the first Catholic missionaries, and to respect and revere their successors, simply because they were the same garb and represented the same Church. Writing to Father Palou, Father Serra alludes thus to the manner in which he was received by the Indians, who saw in him the first white man they ever beheld.

"Yesterday we arrived at this place, and at the time of our arrival of the Pacific ocean to make some observations in various ways, we have seen no Indians. They are very timid. We have spoken to them, and they have given us to understand that they treated us with as much good will as if they had known us all their lives.

This is entirely different from Mrs. Victor's rendering of the same document, in which she makes Father Serra say, "The people are thirty mantained by the Indians and they have, God knows how." This sentence the lady has italicized so as to give it the force necessary to impress it upon the minds of all who may be misled by her faulty translation and her fraudulent "facts."

Mrs Victor says that in the three years spent in Mission Carlos Monterey no efforts had been made at farming, and that the Catholic missionaries and Spaniards lived off the provisions of the Indians, who lived, "God knows how," being deprived of their own scanty subsistence. Now let us hear how fatty Father Serra letter contradicts this piece of home-manufactured malice

"Mission of San Carlos,
Monterey, August 9, 1772.

DEAR FRIENDS: Thanks be to God, I am in good health, and suffer little from sickness. There is no fear of being obliged to abandon any of the Missions established. The soil of the valleys and the gardens vegetables have been the great source of subsistence. These languor now begins to grow worse. But of this I do not complain, but rather thank God for the good health I am with new Missions. All of us feel the cold, the fatigue, and the sickness which we have to encounter, yet we think of turning the Mission.

To an ordinary intelligent and impartial non-Catholic writer, the extract from Father Serra's letter would convey the ideas he intended; that is he was in good health, as nearly as at 176, we make an extract from the American Archives, which tells this sad story regarding Sister Island

COPY OF A LETTER FROM GENERAL HOWE TO LORD GERMAINE.

"AMERICAN OFFICE, August 10, 1776.

"By a letter received this day from Virginia I find Lord Stirling, Mifed Stirling, Mifed, near New York, the 6th of July last, it appears that he lately arrived there on the 5th of that month, with his Majesty's ships under his command. Lord Stirling, Mifed Stirling, Mifed, near New York, the 6th of July last, it appears that he lately arrived there on the 5th of that month, with his Majesty's ships under his command. Lord Howe were landed on that island the next day, Staten Island, without any opposition or interruption, the inhabitants having, from their superior force, been totally overmastered, and put themselves under the protection of his Majesty's arms; that 200 of the inhabitants were quaintance that the whole number of the island, which is said to be 1,000 men, had joined them; that a party of sixty men, with their arms, had made their escape from the province of New Jersey and joined the King's troops.

This is the kind of "patriotism" displayed by the pro-British Paleyfamiacs in 1776. They were traitors then, they are traitors now, and only awaiting a fitting opportunity to put a price upon their dereliction of duty and sell their miserable services for British gold.

Next week we will take up another paragraph from Pixley's poison fountain, and show how sadly mistaken this misleading maligner is in all he says regarding the Civil War.

"Studies of the California Missions."

SECOND ARTICLE.

In the article under the above caption in the Conformists for May, Mrs. Victor seems to become more and more inspired with the facility for creating history as she proceeds in her narration of events, which are colored, changed and falsely presented for the sole purpose of detracting as much as possible from the sacred office of the Catholic missionaries and the Sacraments of the Catholic Church which they administered.

We have so far noted a few of the errors into which Mrs. Victor has fallen in the results of her article left for consideration this week, we will bunch the principal blunders and the bigotry together and then very briefly notice them

We are told by Mrs. Victor—and by her alone—that some of the Franciscan missionaries who accompanied Father Serra to Northern California "deemed to be excused," and, as a consequence, retired from active service, or, as she expresses it, "left the Church to do in the discharge of their duty, but they were deeds. The claim of finding "excuses," in order to leave poor missions and secure rich ones, is a peculiarly Protestant invention introduced into the world subsequent to Luther's leaving aside the ascetic life of a monk in order to revel in the luxury of a mandolin life and the lust of a secretary nun with a fallen woman. Thus was Luther's "excuse" for leaving the hard life of a Catholic monk, and so his followers have been scouring themselves ever since whenever their plethoric purses were pinched too tightly by their Protestant association. Catholic missionaries have never required "to be excused," preferring glorious martyrdom to a dastardly deserter's death.

The writer who interpolates into authentic documents of historical value his or her own sentiments, and pretends that they are part of the original, deserves to be regarded as a most unscrupulous and unreliable chronicler. Thus, Mrs. Victor has done frequently. She also tells us that baptism was administered by force, and that baptism in the Catholic faith meant being baptized into slavery to the missionaries themselves. These are purely the inventions of Mrs. Victor's Puritanical mind, as neither pagan nor Protestant will be received into the Catholic Church if force has to be used. The Church Christianizes just as our Blessed Redeemer's Church, through the grace of God and the gifts of the Holy Ghost acting upon the soul. Besides, every authority on the subject says that the means used for the conversion of the Indians of California were those of prayer, piety, gold example and the practice of Christian kindness towards them. This is what made the Indians love the first Catholic missionaries, and to respect and revere their successors, simply because they were the same garb and represented the same Church. Writing to Father Palou, Father Serra alludes thus to the manner in which he was received by the Indians, who saw in him the first white man they ever beheld.

"Yesterday we arrived at this place, and at the time of our arrival of the Pacific ocean to make some observations in various ways, we have seen no Indians. They are very timid. We have spoken to them, and they have given us to understand that they treated us with as much good will as if they had known us all their lives.

This is entirely different from Mrs. Victor's rendering of the same document, in which she makes Father Serra say, "The people are thirty mantained by the Indians and they have, God knows how." This sentence the lady has italicized so as to give it the force necessary to impress it upon the minds of all who may be misled by her faulty translation and her fraudulent "facts."

Mrs Victor says that in the three years spent in Mission Carlos Monterey no efforts had been made at farming, and that the Catholic missionaries and Spaniards lived off the provisions of the Indians, who lived, "God knows how," being deprived of their own scanty subsistence. Now let us hear how fatty Father Serra letter contradicts this piece of home-manufactured malice

"Mission of San Carlos,
Monterey, August 9, 1772.

DEAR FRIENDS: Thanks be to God, I am in good health, and suffer little from sickness. There is no fear of being obliged to abandon any of the Missions established. The soil of the valleys and the gardens vegetables have been the great source of subsistence. These languor now begins to grow worse. But of this I do not complain, but rather thank God for the good health I am with new Missions. All of us feel the cold, the fatigue, and the sickness which we have to encounter, yet we think of turning the Mission.

To an ordinary intelligent and impartial non-Catholic writer, the extract from Father Serra's letter would convey the ideas he intended; that is he was in good health, as nearly as at 176, we make an extract from the American Archives, which tells this sad story regarding Sister Island

COPY OF A LETTER FROM GENERAL HOWE TO LORD GERMAINE.

"AMERICAN OFFICE, August 10, 1776.

"By a letter received this day from Virginia I find Lord Stirling, Mifed Stirling, Mifed, near New York, the 6th of July last, it appears that he lately arrived there on the 5th of that month, with his Majesty's ships under his command. Lord Howe were landed on that island the next day, Staten Island, without any opposition or interruption, the inhabitants having, from their superior force, been totally overmastered, and put themselves under the protection of his Majesty's arms; that 200 of the inhabitants were quaintance that the whole number of the island, which is said to be 1,000 men, had joined them; that a party of sixty men, with their arms, had made their escape from the province of New Jersey and joined the King's troops.

This is the kind of "patriotism" displayed by the pro-British Paleyfamiacs in 1776. They were traitors then, they are traitors now, and only awaiting a fitting opportunity to put a price upon their dereliction of duty and sell their miserable services for British gold.

Next week we will take up another paragraph from Pixley's poison fountain, and show how sadly mistaken this misleading maligner is in all he says regarding the Civil War.

DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

THE SOURCES OF MARY'S SORROWS.

Translated for the Monitor from the French "Ta Croix."

The Catholic Church, in speaking to Mary the words of the Prophet of the Lamentations, compares her sufferings to the ocean; Magna est enim Maria Contritione. "Thy great as the sea is thy destruction." If, when on the high sea, we look all around us, we behold, as it were, an immense waste of water but we must not, even for a moment, suppose that the planet, by any means, gives us an adequate idea of even the surface, the vast, and, still less of the whole ocean. For what we see by such a glance is only a small portion of the ocean, and, indeed, only the surface of that small portion, which bells up nothing of the countless living beings, nor of the wonderful secrets it, we can say, so entirely unknown world, which has hidden in its unfathomable depths—Such is with the Sea of Sorrows which fills the vast ocean of the heart of the Mother of Holy Virgin. What we see is, indeed, well calculated to fill us with astonishment, but, after all, it is but a small portion of the immense ocean of the fruitful tribulations by which the sword whose blade of Divine Justice Heart were pierced. However, in order that we may have even an imperfect idea of the anguish endured by the Mother of Jesus, let us consider the sources from which the immense sea of her sorrows was formed.

The first one was produced from those sources from the earth went out all the water contained in the deep, when was rolled in waves and billows and Heaven opened wide its cataracts to the waves of Mary's sorrows. The second one was produced from those sources from which the waters of the sea, the sea, that is, the great waters, which are contained in its depths, and from Heaven, that is, from Jesus Christ himself, for only Him, Godhe first sorrow of the thousand of sorrows of Mary, the Mother of Jesus, Christ, and the perfection of holy charity, and its and perfection to which alone was worthy of the Mother of God, the consolation in a life of sufferings. The Son of Man was a Man of Sorrows, and it was the consolation of Mary to be the Mother of this man Jesus come under this law, the more closely they approach the Son of Man, the more closely they shall be united to the Divine plan, plunged into the ocean of the sufferings, and the more they partake of the bitterness of his trials. The promise consolation is most true. The holy footsteps of the Son of Man are marked with blood, and that Saviour was equally true when He let Christ and sub-mary commanded unto the Mother of Jesus, and Mary, the Mother of Jesus, Christ, and the Farm and Home.

"Well Begun Half Done."

This is true of most kindred farm work. Previously well considered plans, and a careful reply, with need, implements, teams, harness, ect., so as to strike right into the work in hand, are large elements of success. We know some farmers, who are always operating in a hurry, and never, unfortunately, seasons, etc. We have seen them start from the breakfast table at 6½ to 7 o'clock, and frequently the sun climbs half up the meridian before the teams and other working apparatus are all get together, and then, very often there is a missing link, or a bolt, or screw. Thinking, planning, arranging beforehand, taking the time by the forelock, are just as important to the tillers of the soil, as to the men in any other business. Active spring work is upon us, or close at hand; be always ready to strike the most effective blows at the very start. "Well begun—half done."

Salt for Stock.

This is absolutely necessary for the health and thrift of all domestic animals, and it should be so placed that they can get it to lick at pleasure, and then they never take an excess. The best method of giving this is in the form of Liverpool rock salt, in lumps of a large size which may be placed in the manger of each animal, or in an open box, from which water will leak freely, in a yard or pasture, so that it is not to be obtained at a moderate price, then take a wooden trough of requisite length, smear the bottom half an inch or so thick with tar, and sprinkle fine sheep salt on this, so as thicker than to make it adhere close to the tar. Thus with this, as well as with the rock salt, no animal can take an excess; and the tar licked in with the salt is also healthy. This box should have a cover over it in the yard or field to keep out the rain, and so high that the animals can get their heads under it and lick the salt at pleasure.

Recreations of the Great.

Swift relived his tense and tragic moods by harnessing his man with cords—on one occasion he insisted on harnessing his learned friend Dr. Sheridan—and driving them up and down stairs and through the rooms of the deanery. Twiggle-Twat sought to unbend himself by being wheeled over the flower-beds and the neat parts of his host's garden in a wheelbarrow, as poor Sir William Temple found to his cost. The accomplished diplomat seems to have felt his chagrin at the failure of the Triple Alliance more akin to play to his feelings at beholding the Roman monarch riding rough shod over the righteous helps of "Lambkin and Albemarle," and the same disagreeable weakness, though, not being safe in the "Spirituals which doth hedge a king," has plebian back received on more than one occasion infuriated cudgelings at the hands of insulted horticulturists. Cardinal Mazarin is said to have been shutting himself up in a room and jumping over the chairs arranged according to the degrees of difficulty in clearing them. Of this weakness on the part of his excellency, an amusing anecdote is told. On one occasion, while engaged in these athletics, he forgot to lock the door. A young courtier inadvertently entering the room surprised the great man in his undignified pursuit. It was an embarrassing position, for Mazarin was he knew as haughty as he was accomplished. Assuming the interest interest in the proceeding, he exclaimed with well-feigned earnestness, "I will bet your eminence two gold pieces I can beat that jump." He had struck the right cord, and in two minutes he was mounting his leaping powers with the Prime Minister, whom he took care not to beat. He lost his two gold pieces, but he gained before long a miter. Samuel Clarke achieved his theological pursuits in the same way, and on one occasion seeing a pedantic fellow approaching, said to the pupil who was sharing his amusement, "Now we must step, for a fool is coming in."

Is Catarrh, Bronchitis or Consumption Curable?

Dr. Fowler says it is, and he has grown gray in the practice of his profession, has held the Chair of Heart, Throat and Lungs in one of the best medical colleges of the East. This investigator has been patient on so apparent for instance in the use of a few simple herbs and a high, and even scan. Still apparently some help he has in this direction in the shape of medicine. He gives it to the sick with the consumptive of long diseases. Send for his pamphlet, if the large one, write to him also the condition of your case; it will cost you nothing. He has furnish you hundreds of testimonies of cures given up by their friends before he came into his hands that are well to day. Address 127 Kearny street, Room 7, San Francisco, California. H. H. FOWLER, M. D.

Beauty Required.

The hair and color of the hair may be safely restored by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is elegant for its perfume, cleanliness and healthful conducing properties.

Successful Because Legitimate.

We notice that the career of the Pacific Bank, corner of Pine and Sansome sts., will as a rule of the long run neither have a successful business prosperous to accept and legitimate business principles. After nearly a quarter of a century's experience with a policy, the Pacific, and stands at the office and permanent business of the Coast in the future. Business men know it and appreciate fair dealers facilities conjoined with absolute stability and security, and that fact accounts for the success of the Pacific Bank.

Nothing Short of Unfathomable Benefits

Conferred upon the tens of thousands of sufferers will originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable alteratives, with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its remedial effects, it produces rapid and complete cures of Scrofula, Scrofula, Humors, Pimples, Eruptions, Salt Rheum and all disorders rising from impurity of the blood. By its invigorating effects it always relieves and often cures Liver Complaints, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, and is a most reliable remedy for Dropsy. For purifying the blood it has no equal. It tones the system, restores and preserves the health, and imparts vigor and energy. Long and well it has been in extensive use, and is to-day the most available medicine for the suffering sick, anywhere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

A CURE GUARANTEED.

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Premature Old Age, caused by over exertion of the brain, self-abuse or over indulgence. One box will last month for $1, or six boxes for $5, sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order for six boxes, accompanied by $5, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only when the treatment is ordered direct from our Address C. F. RICHARDS & CO., wholesale druggists, 637 and 639 Sacramento street, San Francisco, wholesale agents Pacific coast.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

Be assured that the public may fully realize the entire confidence in the statements of the gentlemen whose testimonials are published in connection herewith. The "far-seeing" capitalists of parties whose name stands the "far-seeing" capitalists of parties whose testimonials abroad, are not the least in the testimonials abroad, nor are the least their assurance for approval.

STEVENS HOUSE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 29, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for both years with a complicate attack of kidney, which manifested themselves in intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The kidneys of the secretion were in a state so painful as to be almost unbearable. I was induced to try your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after using the first bottle I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys and loins, which broke down in front and along the course of the ureters with discharge of the secretion in question. The pain was stronger of the kidneys, and I continued the use of the medicine for a period of three weeks, during which time the pain gradually subsided, and I was able to be about the house. I consulted a physician of this city, who pronounced my case Bright's disease, and I feel that I owe my life to your Kidney and Liver Cure. I have been in the habit of using your Kidney and Liver Cure for the last three months, and have been greatly benefited. Respectfully yours,

J. C. LEWIS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 12, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: The last summer I was greatly troubled with a complicate attack of kidney, which manifested themselves in intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The kidneys of the secretion were in a state so painful as to be almost unbearable. I was induced to try your Kidney and Liver Cure, and after using the first bottle I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys and loins, which broke down in front and along the course of the ureters with discharge of the secretion in question. The pain was stronger of the kidneys, and I continued the use of the medicine for a period of three weeks, during which time the pain gradually subsided, and I was able to be about the house. I consulted a physician of this city, who pronounced my case Bright's disease, and I feel that I owe my life to your Kidney and Liver Cure. I have been in the habit of using your Kidney and Liver Cure for the last three months, and have been greatly benefited. Respectfully yours,

J. C. LEWIS.

WELL-FOUNDED ALARM.

The Press and Scientists on the Unholy Question of Food Adulteration.

The frightful and dangerous adulterations practiced by baking powder manufacturers are telling an honest and well-merited alarm among consumers. The evil has attained proportions that the most extreme alarmist could have imagined.

The San Francisco Daily Bulletin, commenting on the subject, gives the following:

"In a city like New York, a Government Chemist makes an analytical examination, and finds that in spite of the very large proportion of powders sold there are made of alum. The action of alum on the stomach is precisely the same as on the mouth; it draws and puckers it all up, proverbially. In Germany, England and Continental Europe, where food manufacturing or selling from a low grade is subject to a heavy fine and imprisonment, but in this State of California may be found hundreds of brands made of this poison and chemical. Pure baking powders should be made of grape cream tartar in some form, wholesale from thirty to forty-five cents per pound. Many irresponsible and reckless manufacturers make this important domestic article from alum, which costs but three cents a ton! The Royal Baking Powder Company of New York, a wealthy and honorable corporation, the largest consumers of grape cream tartar in the world, in their efforts to introduce their goods into this market were confronted by so many cheap, low-priced, alum powders, that they commenced the health of this community. If the average citizen were told that his chief food attack of dyspepsia, constipation, heartburn, etc., arose from using an impure and poisonous baking powder, he would probably pass it by as a fine, educational sensation; yet such is the fact.

"Did any one of our lady readers, in her purchase of domestic supplies, ever notice that her grocer had 'SODA BIRTS?'

"If she had, her analysis from a competent chemist it would tell her that in nearly every case she would find a cream tartar powder to be much wholesomer and safer form; not poison that would kill—but the dose is not large enough—but poison that will slowly and surely undermine the health of her little one. The good up-country grocers have their pure powders up under lock and key, and only produce them on some well-known, pure article inquiry of purchaser. It is true they charge their profit is larger this way. The baking powder made of alum at one-sixth the cost of a cream tartar powder, and they are enabled to sell it in competition with an honest article like the Royal Baking Powder, and make an enormous profit. Nearly all the powders sold by the grocerymen of this city, under their own name, are made by premium manufacturers here, and are composed of alum, and the only safeguard a housewife has is to buy an honest cream tartar powder made by some responsible manufacturer.

"A series of researches in San Francisco on the part of Professor Hasks, the State Chemist, show that out of ten different private examples, four were selected at random every one contained alum and other impurities, and slight underweight, some of them thirty-five per cent. The names of these powders are not here given, for it is enough believed that the grocers were aware of what they were buying and having put up under their own names, but the alum and other impurities are in the possession of Mr. Hasks.

"We make the suggestion to every reader to ascertain if her grocer is selling arising from the purchase of a cheap baking powder composed of alum, the cause of health incurred. After the exposure of the analysis of Science, any mother who continues the use of these poisonous compounds must be as with a fearful penalty hanging over her head. We can very fairly doctor it alum baking powders are dangerous, and be guided by the advice of the Sun.

"In the East where this subject is exciting the interest, Dr. Hall's Journal of Health says, in a recent issue:

"Before commenting ourselves, however, we need note of a sufficient number of baking powders to satisfy ourselves that the substitution of alum for cream of tartar in their composition has not been over-estimated, while a careful examination of the Royal Baking Powder confirms our belief that Dr. Mott, the former Government Chemist, when he singled out and commended this powder for its wholesomeness, did it wisely and with proper discrimination.

"Improvement in the quality of food products has been the grievance of the community whom they are endeavoring to protect.

DR. EDWARD G. LOYE, the present Analytical Chemist for the Government, says the New York Tribune, December 17th, 1880, has recently made some interesting experiments as to the comparative value of baking powders. Dr. Loye's tests were made to determine what brands are the most economical to use. And as their analysis lies in their superior value, we have deemed safety to ascertain the available (as we call it) power.

It is proper to state that all the powders on the market were from the open market, and that the original labels were in every case broken by Dr. Loye himself.

NAME OF POWDER.	AVAILABLE CARBONIC ACID PER OUNCE.
"Royal" (Cream tartar powder)	187 c.
"Snow" (Cream tartar powder)	165 c.
"Cleveland's" (Cream tartar powder)	165 c.
"Dr. Price's" (Cream tartar powder)	165 c.
"Hanford's" (phosphate)	165 c.
"Cleveland's Super-phos"	165 c.
"Hanford's Super-phos"	165 c.
"Dr. Price's" (phosphate powder)	165 c.
"Cottolene" (alum powder)	115 c.
"Cottolene" (powder in cans)	115 c.
"Dr. Price's"	105 c.
"Dr. Price's" (Graff, N. York)	105 c.
"Congress" (alum powder)	95 c.
"Congress" (Graff, Milwaukee, alum powder)	95 c.
"Andrews' Food" (Milwaukee)	95 c.
"Andrews' Food"	95 c.
"Magnolia"	95 c.

In the report the government Chemist says:

"I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Tartaric and Tartaric acid cream of tartar are quite fair, as far as I know, in the process of baking, or by any chemical changes can be produced in them."

Dr. H. A. Mott, the former Government Chemist, after a careful and elaborate examination of the various baking powders compared, reported to the Government in favor of the Royal Baking Powder manufactured by the Royal Baking Powder Company.

An extract from the horse's report is given below:

"It is not only my opinion, but a scientific fact, that the Baking Powder known as the 'Royal' being free from Ammonia or Calcium, chemically analyzed from all other Phosphates, Alum, such as Alum, Terra Alba, etc., which are so extensively used, and which are all more or less injurious.

A VALUABLE BOOK ON CALIFORNIA.

We have recently been reading "A Picture of Pioneer Times in California," by a well-known author who writes under the nom de plume of "Inkersley," and we find it to be a very entertaining facts which should be known to every resident in the state. The book is a World for the month speak very highly of the work, and the author is an elaborate volume of many pages. The author has aimed at exposing and bringing into contrast the pioneer life of the early settlers especially those of ignorance and reckless and religious work of one enthusiasm, courage and religious work of the early days of San Francisco." We have endeavored to give a brief outline of the early history of California, including the year 1849. He has treated the subject graphically both the romantic incidents and chapter of history. Many biographical events and anecdotes crimes are recorded, which lend a fearful interest to the narrative. Other characters and scenes, equally dramatic, all of which are set forth in bold relief in contrast with those. Many well-known and honored names, such as Gillespie, Montgomery and others, figure in the pages, together with others of discreditable character. It is endowed by the descriptive talent and spective humor of the author.

To the strictly historical narrative he has appended a chapter on the Chinese question, and that the original labels were in every case broken by Dr. Loye himself.

NAME OF POWDER.	AVAILABLE CARBONIC ACID PER OUNCE.
"Royal" (Cream tartar powder)	187 c.
"Snow" (Cream tartar powder)	165 c.
"Cleveland's" (Cream tartar powder)	165 c.
"Dr. Price's" (Cream tartar powder)	165 c.
"Hanford's" (phosphate)	165 c.
"Cleveland's Super-phos"	165 c.
"Hanford's Super-phos"	165 c.
"Dr. Price's" (phosphate powder)	165 c.
"Cottolene" (alum powder)	115 c.
"Cottolene" (powder in cans)	115 c.
"Dr. Price's"	105 c.
"Dr. Price's" (Graff, N. York)	105 c.
"Congress" (alum powder)	95 c.
"Congress" (Graff, Milwaukee, alum powder)	95 c.
"Andrews' Food" (Milwaukee)	95 c.
"Andrews' Food"	95 c.
"Magnolia"	95 c.

Market Report.

CORRECTED WEEKLY BY C. J. SALT, 506 and 507 WARD STREET.

MONITOR OFFICE,
622 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, April 25, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The firmness holders of grain display checks business, and the week opened yesterday with a full market for all descriptions of cereals. The freight market is firm with a tendency to advance. Face continue dull, although there is every prospect of a good crop. Jobbers complain of the dullness of the general merchandise market, which they attribute to the lateness of the season.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent receipts from first hands and are made up from actual transactions. Extreme quotations can only be realized for Produce that comes up to the standard of choice in every respect, and the quality, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour

Quotations are: City Extras, $4 50 @ $5 00; Superfine, $4 75@$5; inferior to choice, $3 50 @ $3 75; extra, and $4 50@$4 75 for superfine.

Wheat.

Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 30@$1 60; No. 2, $1 25@$1 40 for ordinary; Extra Choice, $1 61@$1 65.

Barley

Quotations are: Feeding, $1 10@$1 20; Standard Chevalier, $1 [illegible]; Brewing, $1 50@$1 60 c'l.

Oats

Quotable at [illegible]

Corn

Quotable at [illegible]

Rye

Quotations are: Winter, $1 [illegible]; Spring, $1 [illegible]; Rye, $1 [illegible]

Buckwheat

Quotable at [illegible]

Hay

Quotable at [illegible]

Provisions

HAMS—Eastern, [illegible]; California, [illegible]

BACON—California, [illegible]; Eastern, [illegible]

Lard, Eastern Choice, [illegible]; Superior, [illegible]; Common, [illegible]; California, [illegible]; Choice, [illegible]; Common, [illegible]; Choice, [illegible]; Common, [illegible]; Choice, [illegible]; Common

Poetry.

(For the Monitor.)

THE PATHWAY OF LIFE.

While wearily passing the pilgrimage
We meet on the highway of life,
Each morning will find fresh joy for some to Fight his own way through the strife.
For there are many roads to the pathway—
Many roads speed out to our right;
The wrong will meet cursing and scolding,
While ragged and ragged the right.

The wrong road will be always to us,
The most natural and easy to go;
We are but weak in our nature,
And always through life will be so.
The right road will seem to be narrow,
The most difficult one to pursue;
For ever since the fall in Eden Eve,
It is hard to our faith to be true.

The wrong road will tempt us to follow,
A course that our Father does forbid;
And when once with the wicked we've drifted,
We'll struggle of the bad to be rid.
When first we push on in the pathway,
That leads us to heaven so fair,
We'll find it most painful to travel on
The rocks and the thorns we find there.

And demons are there, and they'll tempt us,
They'll try to persuade us to sin;
And they'll do what they can, all our lifetime,
To turn us from the right path we are in.
But angels there'll be there to guide us,
And show us the ways we should go,
And they'll always be ready beside us,
To help us to fight gallant our foe.

If we fall on our journey of sorrow,
If we yield to our tempters and sin,
We'll be dropped in the end of salvation,
To that which the fallen are in.
And there we'll be left till our last hours,
Of repentance and sorrow full sore,
Then we'll be swept come to the Reaper,
And whisper "Your Father forgives you at last."

"Then come back to the Fold, to the Shepherd,
The Shepherd that loves all His sheep!
And He will ever help you and guide you,
And turn from evil your feet.
I shall be glad to shout praise Him,
Who on Calvary's Cross for you died;
And when this last journey is over,
He'll give you a throne by His side."

NORA TUOHEY.

Literary Miscellany.

The Skeleton Abbot.

A CATHOLIC LEGEND OF BRIGOWN.

BY JOHN J. NORWIX, PERMOY.

Situated in a fertile and well cultivated valley, sheltered from the cold north winds by the now undulating and now serrated peaks of the Galtee range, the thriving village of Mitchelstown lies nestling at the foot of the brown and rugged elevation known as Galtymore. Having occasion to stop at this place some time ago, I was impelled partly by going and partly by curiosity, to visit an ancient churchyard containing the crumbling ruins of what had once been an abbey, and known by the name of Brigown. Starting one fine evening from the house where I was staying I reached Brigown just as the sun was sinking in a blaze of glowing golden radiance over the old abbey-churchyard.

Entering the narrow gateway, I walked quietly through the tall rank grass, ever and anon pausing to decipher some curious inscription, or to watch the effect of the sunset on the crumbling ruin before me. At last I came to what appeared to be the great gable end of the church, the sunset streaming perpendicularly through it to the centre of the chancel, and terminating at the east end. There were handsome and fat tombs scattered above the nave in all directions, some half buried in the grass, others standing upright like tall white ghosts, and on the last we sit at least a part of it which was still standing, was fixed a tablet in memory of one of the Kingsmills, the well-known possessors of that splendid pile, Mishelstown Castle.

Immediately before this monument was a high flat stone nearly overgrown with moss and grass on which the last beams of the setting sun, streaming through the broken shafts of the west window, cast a mellow light. Seating myself on this, I began through sheer inadvertence, to amuse myself with my penknife the grassy matter which obscured the surface of the stone. After working for a few moments I came upon an inscription in the old English characters, which ran as follows:

"Here lyeth ye bodys of Abbot Stephen," and some figures which I could not decipher. Rather rather tiredgue until it ceased my search. I was about to take my departure, when I felt a peculiar pillow in the part of the stone where I had been sitting, and on removing the stone, I found the impression of the bones of a human foot, just as if some being long mouldering in the tomb had stood there and left its ghastly mark.

"Evidently there is some quaint old story connected with this," I mused as I examined the prints, and after sketching them in my pocketbook, I left the churchyard just as the shade of night were falling solemnly over the old abbey ruin. On reaching he house I drew out the marks on the stone, at which my friend gave vent to a hearty laugh.

"Why," he exclaimed, "did you never hear of the Skeleton Abbot, and how he left the footmarks at Brigown?

"No," I answered, "I did not."

"Well, we have an old woman here who will tell you about it."

Accordingly, I was introduced to a yellow, wrinkled old hag, the base idol of a wide, so much so, in fact, that one would involuntarily expect to see the inevitable broomstick appear from beneath her cloak, or the black cat crouched hissing on her shoulder. From her I elicited the following legend which I will give in my own words and under title of

THE SKELETON ABBOT.

CHAPTER II.

It was in the spring of the year of our Lord 1650. A dark and gloomy winter had just passed away, a winter when the snow piled knee-deep on the roads and fields and the driving sleet and rain darkened the sky and destroyed vegetation, when the piercing wind howled mournfully over the frozen earth, as if chanting requiem for the thousands of Christians who had fallen beneath Cromwell, or driven into exile by him to end their lives, not under the clear sky of the old land, but under the sickly sun of the Indian sun or in the noisome swamps of Florida. The winter was just over, and spring had stolen over the land like a gentle mother over a restless child.

With in the delicate buds and green leaves to the trees, bringing the soft winds and sunny showers from the warm bosom of the Atlantic to fertilise once again the fair face of Erin. Cromwell had been suddenly summoned to England, and calm had fallen on the country, that deceitful calm which precedes a storm. But to my story.

The sun was slowly sinking in the west. Bars of golden light bursting through the purple clouds which obscured them, lit up the evening sky with an amber glow and tinged the lofty pine of the Galtees with fire. Away in the dim foreground the face of the lovely valley was becoming shrouded in the grey twilight as the sunsank lower and lower, and the white smoke began to ascend graceful spirals from the dark roofs of the little village which lay then, as it lies now, nestling at the foot of the sublime Galtymore. Ever and anon, through the calm air of the evening the bells of Brigown Abbey rang out the solemn peals inviting the peaceful inhabitants of the secluded vale to the praises of the great Creator of all things. Lower and lower sank the sun, till at last it disappeared behind the faint blue lines of the distant hills. Then the twilight shade crept softly up the valley and extended Gallymore in a dim mist; the ruddy lights began to twinkle in the snug cottages and homesteads, where the "household fire gleamed warm and bright," and over all the stillness of night seemed to throw a veil.

Through the long arched aisle of Brigown Abbey Church the strains of the pipe organ rolled in harmonious wave, accompanied by the deep voices of the monks, unusual in hand, they chanted a hymn of adoration. The interior was brilliantly lighted by waxen tapers set in silver branches against the wall, and depending from the hands of cherubs carved in the arched oak roof. In the body of the church which was set apart for the people, the villagers were decently telling their beads, while along the walls at the upper end were the mitred stalls, each occupied by its proper occupant, who on bended knee, was adoring before the tabernacle.

At the high altar, which was one blaze of light, the abbot himself officiated, clad in gorgeous vestments, and attended by the priest. As he swung the censer, the sweet odour of incense ascended in clouds, illumined every now and then by a jagged streak of red lightning. With the evening service a host of simple villagers received to bid farewell to the departing monks and receive a last benediction from their beloved pastor, the abbot. The captain of the troop of horse, according to the practice then in vogue amongst the Puritans, had taken the title of "Master of the Ceremonies" and drawn his men up in a line outside the church to await the passage of the brethren. On the clashing of the Miserere, unconcerned at the insults, the jeers and the hootings of the wild Puritans. Slowly they passed the abbey gates. Last of all came the old abbot assisted by the prior, and holding a golden crucifix in his hand. As he advanced into view the villagers fell upon their knees and implored his blessing. Raising the crucifix on high, he pronounced the benediction, then throwing back his cowl from his face and turning to Captain Smister-of-the-Guardsin Jobbing, who stood near the brethren, who had moved out into the center of the church.

"Open, or we will smash the door of this mass house," came the voice again louder than before.

The abbot replaced the Host in the tabernacle and, turning round, bade one of the lay brothers open the door. The order was obeyed, the door was thrown open, there was a clanking of swords on the pavement as a detachment of Cromwell's famous regiment marched into the aisle and took up positions as to guard the doors and windows. The leader of the ironsides strode with drawn sword up the body of the church and in a loud voice, demanded to see the abbot.

"I am here, friend; what means this unseemly intrusion?" said the calm voice.

"It means, old man, that I have been sent by the Lord Protector Cromwell to destroy the nest of idle shavelings, certify a work of the Lord. I will give you two days to be away from this, and if on the third day, I will find any of ye here, I will hang ye from the nearest tree."

"God's holy will be done," exclaimed the abbot, bowing his white-haired head as the other shouted.

"Clear this place, men. Then turn that altar upside down. I will serve as a horse trough. Smash these heathen pictures, the abominations of the Lord's worship! Let it is a work of grace," and the ruffian Puritan mountain-quoted a long text from the Lord.

"Place the—the crucifix before me," muttered the dying man in a faint whisper. "God forgive him, as—as I do. Lord Jesus,—have—have mercy—"

There was a gurgle in the throat, a livid greyish tint overspread the features, the damp of death stood on the wrinkled forehead, and with a convulsive shudder the abbot fell back in the prior's arms—dead.

Mournfully howled the bleak night wind through the deserted abbey, swiftly gleamed the moon through the broken shafts, and across the black night sky as Captain-Master-of-the-Guardsin Jobbing and his whole troop entered the aisle of Brigown on the night of the abbot's death, leaving one of their number outside on guard. The flickering light from the ride lanterns which they bore cast strange shadows on the now bare walls, and glimmered fitfully on the monumental brasses and quaintly carved effigies on the stone floor. Abroad in the night the wind still moaned through the tall trees, while now and again a flash of lightning would dart across the sky, filling the church with a lurid glare, and then dying away in a peal of thunder.

"Well, my men, said the captain as he seated himself on a large flat tomb, "we'll put the saying of that old mass monger, Mum I mean to the devil to-day, to prove. To-night we leave this cursed hole, but not before we have amusing up a few of those Irish swine as a mark of our visit. Has the property been removed?" he said turning to the second in command a lithe man with squint eyes, a tailor by trade.

"Verily, captain, what the Lord hath been pleased to deliver into the hands of the Lord's servants," said the man in this person in a nasal voice. "Very good. Now, man, I'll tell you what we'll do. We are tired of this place, and the Papish saints are buried with all their robes and trinkets on. Suppose we unearth some of these old mass-mongers, eh? We might find something to pay us for our trouble."

"Yea, yea," shouted his followers, whose cupidity was excited by the prospect of more plunder.

"Well, then, look about ye there. Hold your lantern, Jonas, and let us see who buried here."

One of the soldiers advanced and, holding his lantern close to the stone, they read:—

"Here lyeth ye bodye of abbot Stephen."

"Humph!, one of the old saints, I suppose. Well, we'll try him first. Crowbars here men, and move this stone," exclaimed the captain as the men came hurrying up. The men placed their bars to the stone and were about to exert their strength to raise it, when an awful peal of thunder broke over the abbey, accompanied by a flash of lightning, which caused the captain and his men to stagger back in wild affright. Slowly the bluish light began to darken into a mist and wave to and fro.

"What the devil is this I" was all the captain could utter Gradually the mist cleared away and covered in the end of the church. The soldiers were petrified with fear; their tongues clove to the roof of their mouths, and the cold sweat ran down their faces as great beads as they saw three tall dark figures standing out on the tomb which they lately attempted to raise.

At last the captain summoned courage to speak.

"Who and what are you?" he asked in a quivering voice.

The figure slowly lifted its arm and throw, unback its cowl, disclosed the sightless cheekbones, the eyeless sockets, the flesh less bones of a skeleton.

"I am Abbot Stephen," he said, in a hollow tone, whilst the dark wind moaned through the deserted aisles to echo the words. "Man, man, take heed the name of your Lord in vain. Your hour has come. The desecrated sanctuaries of God, the agonizing cries and curses of the wild victims, have ascended on high, have echoed through the highest courts of heaven calling for vengeance on you. They have been heard, and your hour has come.

"Spectre and leopard soared the wind through the deserted pile; robber and robber fled at the vivid lightning; through the sky yet the doomed men never stirred.

"Once again the phantom spoke.

"To-day was committed a crime at which the pure angels hid their faces and hell exulted. Ye, unmoved man, one of God's servants, was slain. He comes now to bear witness against the murderer at the Throne of the Most Holy.

"In dark figure at the right three back has stood, it was the murdered abbot. He pointed at the gaping wound and disappeared.

Again the phantom spoke.

"Mortals, you are now about to be summoned before the Throne of God. His mercy is great, but his avenging justice is terrible. In future years, when the grass shall grow on this spot, the people shall see the mark of God's vengeance in the impression of my feet which I leave behind me."

The dark figure on the left advanced. It was another skeleton, holding in his right hand a spade, in his left an hour-glass.

The mist thickened again. Dark forms glided to and fro backward and forward. Howled the wind outside; redder flashed the lightning, till at last one streak descended on Brigown. There was a noise of falling timber and stones, a loud crash, a lurid blaze, the roof had fallen in, leaving the doomed troop in the ruins."

The astonished trooper who had been left as a sentinel fled back to the village, where he told the story. On removing the debris the blackened corpses were found, as also the marks on the stone, which have remained ever since. So runs the legend.

The Queen of Virtues.

Whether in a monastic state or out of it, obedience is the queen of virtues; and the only way to win this grace is to recognize God's sweet will in little vexations, and to love it as well as submit to it. There are many things to learn in religion that a man may well be puzzled what to begin first, and what to go to next; but him at conformity to God's will, and in winning that you win all. Was it not the great Gerson who said, "Why did God come into the world at all? "No, I come to do Thy will, O God." Was not His food, His sacrament, if I may so call it, during those three and thirty years "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me," and what else were His Passion and Death, but an act of conformity to His Father's will! "Not as I will but Thou be done" was His prayer on the Mount of Olives—and what entes ne more closely and more dearly to our Jesus than to do God's will? Oh, think of these things, and pray for light in the Gospel! "The same is My brother, and My sister, and My mother, that hath done the will of My Father in Heaven." Only in order to His will, and we are all of us Marys, and angels will hail us, and Christ will be born of us, and through His cross may cause us seven, and yet times seven sorrows, yet at the last He will assume us into Heaven and crown us there, doing to us in our measure, what He has done to Mary in her measure, and if this be true, who would not earnestly strive to have a special devotion to the will, adorable will of God?—Father Ho.

WASHING THE FEET OF THE POOR.

A Beautiful Custom in Catholic Countries.

A correspondent at Vienna writes The grand ceremony of washing the feet of twelve old women was performed in the Hofburg Palace yesterday (Blood Thursday) by the Emperor and Empress. The ceremony was instituted by Ferdinand the Imperial empress as least once a year that Christ had humbled himself by doing this menial service to the disciples. At 11 o'clock the twelve aged, ing the poor old women were conducted into the grand hall of ceremonies, where they were seated at two long boards, decked in the splendid fashion customary for royal or imperial guests. The aged dames could hardly by told number; they were dressed almost alike in dark pilgrim gowns of cloth and large felt hats. If it were not for some heavy beards flowing down the breasts of a few of the old men, you could not distinguish their processes from that of the women. When they were all seated the high dignitaries of the Court took up their places along the marble walls, and the master of ceremonies gave a sign that their majesties, preceded by the clergy, were coming. The Crown Prince and all the Archdukes present at Vienna accompanied the Emperor. The Crown Princess and the Archduchesses preceded the Empress. Footbinding must be a means of preserving beauty, for Empress Elizabeth, notwithstanding her 46 summers, is still as lithe and graceful as a girl. Her feet and her graceful bearing was well displayed in a right black satin dress, with a train, as she had thrown down to her train. On her majesty's arm was a diamond star of decoration. Immediately behind the Empress entered the Imperial stewards and a number of pages, the latter carrying the silver, which they handed to the Emperor and Empress, who placed them on the board in front of their aged guests. It would strike you as somewhat strange to see the Emperor dipped in his fine Field Marshal's uniform, the Empress in all the majesty of her beauty and her unrivaled rank, standing behind their chairs of those poor peoples and waiting upon them. The Archduke chanted the tables, and when the viands were removed the real ceremonies began. The Emperor and Empress had the same task to perform, except that the latter washed the feet of the women, the former those of the men. The court marshals bore a golden ewer and two pages a golden basin and an embroidered towel, the Empress knelt down and spread a little water upon the feet of each old woman, dried them with the towel, the chief priest reading aloud the thirteenth chapter of St. John, in Latin. When the washing was over a golden tray with twenty-four silver pieces was handed, each of which were thirty silver coins, the price for which the Savior was betrayed. Each old woman each did woman, and the Emperor in a low placed round his or her neck by the Emperor, the latter being then with a rather the same ceremony as they entered. The old men and women are never permitted to go through the ceremony a second time. This year the oldest man was 99, the youngest 60, and the oldest woman was 94 years of age. They are always brought from their homes in the suburbs and taken back again in splendid imperial carriages.

Catholics and America.

At a time when the serpent of Know-Nothingism is lifting its ugly head, the following historical fact ought to be well pondered by every lover of truth and fair play with interest "Catholics are not a recent importation into this country. The very name of New Spain implies Protestantism and of the American Revolution—Catholics! The Catholic Church has precedence in the order of time and numbers. The very name of Catholic is synonymous with Spanish—the poetic name given to this Republic—Spain—Catholic Spain—Catholic America. All the great explorations in this country were made by Catholics. The names of Ponce de Leon, Cabeg Cabrillo, Cortez, Cartier, and Ballisa, the discoverer of the Pacific, are well known to all. But who generally knows who and what they were. Marquette, the father of the Mississippi, was a native of Quebec to San Francisco are still traceable the foot prints of the pioneers of Catholic faith—foot prints made in the wilderness which now long past. Of the States now under the Stars and Stripes all save thirteen were settled by Catholics. Half of the thirteen—Maryland—was peopled originally by Catholics. Baltimore is the metropolis of the Eastern Middle States, New Orleans, the metropolis of the Gulf States, Mobile, the metropolis of the Pacific States. St Louis, the metropolis of the middle Central States, were all built by Catholics. Even New York, if the thing is worth mention, was called in honor of the Duke of York, a Catholic King, and is, therefore, Catholic in its English origin. The oldest town in the United States, St. Augustine, is Florida, is Catholic. These are historical facts. No one will deny them, and therefore it is beyond that "this is a Protestant country"

The Tablet on Harper's Magazine.

The London Tablet, in an appeal in favor of Catholic literature, also as its text the article on Catholic literature in Harper's Magazine for March, entitled "The New Ecclesiastical Minister of Public Instruction of Paul Bert's book, which the magazine writer lauds as the production of one who is "fighting a fight for freedom of conscience and purity of morals," the man who corrupts the youth of France from "the demoralizing influence with which the Jesuits have poisoned most of her sources of learning," the Tablet says: "With the ignorance of a layman, with the incapacity of a Materialist a comprehend spiritual science, with the prejudice of a fanatical hater of the Church and her priesthood—by, selection, misinterpretation, and always by the most flagrant misrepresentation or any implied foundation of previous knowledge, strangely a book to accuse Catholic moral doctrine of being immoral, or at least permissive, every enormity from theft and perjury to unspeakable crime." And adds: "The writer of the article on Paul Bert does the cause in Paul Bert's French—a few cases are singled out and condemned with scorn at Catholic morality and roughcondemnation of the Society of which Pere Gury was a member." The conclusion is, thatthe Catholic literature and Catholic publishers should be earnestly supported, "if Christian morality is to stand, with their intimally varying contents, cannot be left to Catholic honorable, and whatever sacrifice of amusement, information, or of custom, the literature that is unsafe not be bought and, certainly the magazine whose contents are inclined like this should bear therein its own condemnation for the future.

Brook's Speed Thou, soft finish as well as the best of machine cotton, is the manufactured particularly for sewing machine work. try it on any finishing and you will use no other. Use only for all dry goods stores.

AN ENTERPRISING FIRM.

A Successful Wholesale and Retail Establishment. The True Way to Earn Success is to Deserve it.

In the year 1852 there came to this coast, M. R. Swanzone, from Genoa, Italy, a pioneer in search of a home and happiness. He was possessed of a good education and with a determination, if necessary, to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, he landed in San Francisco, with a few dollars in his pocket, and a good stock of good health and a determination to succeed. He was a good mechanic, and was soon employed at his trade, which was that of a shoemaker, and was soon employed at his trade, which was that of a shoemaker, and was soon employed at his trade, which was that of a shoemaker

THE MONITOR.

PAPER FIFTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1882

Shall Ireland be Goaded into Insurrection?

The Bill just introduced into the British Parliament for the alleged purpose of repressing crime in Ireland is a measure fraught with the worst elements of tyranny in its most utter form, because it places the lives, the liberties and the happiness of a whole people at the mercy of a few mercenary magistrates selected, paid and promoted—according to their efficiency in doing England's dirty work—by the very Government that only awaits a plausible excuse to turn loose its soldiery upon a defenceless people and to shoot them down like so many dogs.

There is no disguising the fact that the introduction of the Bill, following immediately upon the assassination of Cavendish and Burke, gives color to the growing impression upon the public mind that the murder of England's representatives in Ireland was suggested, concocted and carried out by British political agents when they found their Government folded in their policy of force against the Irish people. The publication of a proclamation signed "Irish Republican Brotherhood," and applauding the bloody deed, means simply nothing, because the British Government could append any name it pleased to a printed document and charge the crime against any portion of the community. Britain has been guilty of even lower acts than such as this in the past history of her horrible reign in Ireland; her hands are red with the innocent blood of bishops, priests and nuns whom she butchered at the shrine of her hatred against the Church of Christ; her records are red with the blood-stained tale of thousands of innocent men, women and children whom she caused to be ruthlessly murdered, merely because they were Irish; her prisons, vaults and dungeons resound with the cries of innocent victims whom she cruelly incarcerated, simply because they dared to whisper a prayer for peace and prosperity to the land that bore them; her books of statistics are filled with millions of pounds of "blood-money" paid by Government to spies and informers who were hired for the special purpose of swearing away the lives and the liberties of certain men whom England desired to crush. All these things are matters of history, familiar to all who are posted in the perfidy of a tyrannical Government which knows no remorse for its past brutality and feels no compunction for its present cruelty.

With the resources which the British Government possesses, its thousands of policemen, its secret detective force, its large army and the brigade of bailiffs and sheriffs' officers in Dublin, it would be a moral impossibility for murders, such as those recently perpetrated, to be so successful as to warrant the extreme measures of invasion on the part of British officials. The death of two such victims would not promote the cause of Irish Nationalism of any grade, either Conservative or Radical. The Land League has just achieved a victory unparalleled in history; its peace policy has proved more powerful than all the powder and ball which England sent to Ireland in the hands of an angry soldiery; hence the Land League could have no interest in the contemplated murder of these men—save to protect their own record for peace by preventing it. The British Government, on the other hand, found itself in such a demoralized state through the triumph of the Land League that some desperate act must be committed in order, if possible, to precipitate the Irish people into a hostile attitude towards the Government, and to give England an excuse for letting its 50,000 soldiers and its 50,000 police and patrolling spies loose upon the people so as to slaughter them without regard for age or sex. But the Irish people, both in America and Ireland, were equal to the emergency. With one voice they repudiated the foul deed, and thus threw the odium of the murder back upon the party whose interests alone were promoted by its perpetration. Failed again in its attempt to drive the Irish Minority, framed a bill which may well be styled the climax of cruelty against a civilized and a Christian people, reviving, as it does, all the horrible enactments of the worst penal code that crushed Ireland during the dark and bloody days of 1798, when the British minions were empowered to flog, torture and imprison the Irish people upon the most trivial pretext prompted by prejudice or passion, and a comparison of the present bill with the coercion laws in vogue will prove that the tactics of torture then resorted to have been re-enacted by the Gladstone Government.

According to the telegraphic reports, the present Bill confers the following powers upon "special judges," who will doubtless be selected in consequence of their British bias:

"The Government has, therefore, concluded it is necessary, in those places where the ordinary law is not observed, that special tribunals, consisting of three Judges, be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant to try without a jury, and the judgment of the Court would be conclusive, with an appeal to the Supreme Court, the judgment of the latter to be given by a majority of the Judges; the Supreme Court may diminish, but cannot increase, the sentence. In the Parliament will be asked to provide special remuneration for the special judges."

The Bill also contains the following provisions: It gives power to the Lord Lieutenant to arrest, imprison, search or seize, threatening letters, etc.; power to enter houses by day or night, under warrant of the Lord Lieutenant; power to arrest persons suspected of being about to commit a crime, on account of themselves, who are to be dealt with summarily; power to search suspicious places, which are generally committed by foreign travellers, the hospitality of England not being such persons as agents of Continental Kings, and power to remove foreigners considered dangerous to the peace. The Government, therefore, intends to revive the Alien Act. Secret societies will be dealt with summarily, and membership therein shall constitute an offence under the Act, classes of aggravated assault will be treated in a summary manner. Power is given to oppose intimidation and unlawful meetings, the latter to be dealt with summarily.

"Newspapers containing seditious and inflammatory matter are to be suppressed, and the proprietors required to enter into recognizances not to repeat the offence. Justices of the Peace, on affidavit of witnesses, are to be empowered, and the Lord Lieutenant, on report additional to the police, when necessary, at the cost of the district concerned, to compensate for murder and outrage within the proclaimed districts where they are not found, which now are to be dealt with summarily by the Courts, which are to consist of two stipendiary magistrates. The Government reserves for consideration any further alteration in the jury system.

Now let us turn to the penal code of eighty-four years ago and peruse the programme of persecution leveled by the British Government against the Irish people, and we see therein how faithfully history repeats itself in legislative cruelty. In 1798 martial law was proclaimed, thousands of English, German, Welsh and Scotch soldiers were imported into Ireland and permitted free quarters upon the people, who were compelled to house and feed them, as well as to meekly accept every injury and insult perpetrated by these marauding freebooters. The pitch-cap, the whipping-post, the branding iron and similar implements of torture were provided for the "croppies," as Catholics were designated who were "suspected" of harboring evil thoughts against the brutal rule of British injustice in Ireland. No man was sure of a day's tenure of life, and many were arrested without warrant and hanged without trial in the streets and market places. At Carlow, twenty-eight persons were murdered by (transgenial) and militia, and at Dunlavin thirty-four more were shot without judge or jury. Just as under the present law, the houses of the people, in 1798, were the public property of the magistracy, whose minions could enter them at any time, remove the furniture and turn the owners adrift under the pretence of searching for arms, illegal documents and "suspected" persons. In a word, the present law is nothing more than a revival of the statute of 1798 in all its enormity.

Thus it will be seen, that although England has advanced in material prosperity and also in enlightenment, during the past century, her policy of persecution towards Irland knows no progress. The same penal code is adopted, the same cruel persecution of the people is perpetrated in the same injustice still marks her conduct towards the Irish people. This fact cannot fail of causing serious reflections to arise in the minds of all who ponder on this subject, which is rich in fruitful results for all who ponder upon the eventful career through which Ireland is passing at the present moment.

Fate of the Persecutors of the Church.

There is a lesson for all who would learn wisdom by experience in the perusal of the fate which befel the prominent persecutors of the Church, not one of whom died even in that peaceful serenity which oftentimes characterizes the death-beds of ordinary sinners. Long before their judgment seat corruption which surrounded them, their bodies become loathsome living charnel houses so horrifying to behold, that, in some cases, suicide was cherished as a happy means of fleeing from an earthly hell. It is reasonable to conclude, therefore, that even in this life Divine Providence punishes the persecutors of the Church, as exemplified in the case of Julian, surnamed the Apostate, Maximian brought upon their heads Divine vengeance. The former, who had been the instigator of the persecution endured by the Christians under Diocletian, and the author of hideous atrocities under his own rule, was afflicted with a cancer in the abdomen, from the effects of which he died in miserable agony. Maximian, baffled in his attempt to assassinate by his own hand his son-in-law, Constantine, strangled himself to death. Diocletian, we had almost forgotten to mention—many of whose atrocities in regard to the Christians had been, as we have already stated, prompted by Galerius—became a victim, after his retirement from supreme power, of melancholy and despair, and terminated a sinister career by committing poison. The reign of Julian the Apostate, whose aim from his accession to the Imperial dignity was the abolition of Christianity, closed in miserable disaster in the wilds of Asia. Slain by an unknown hand in a religious conflict, the Imperial Apostate gave up the ghost with a blasphemy on his lips. A fate not less tragical befell the Arian Emperor Valens, who, after a ruthless persecution of the Church, was mortally wounded under the walls of Adrianople and burned alive amid the rout of his army by the Goths.

In the truthful pages of Dr. Lingard, the illustrious historian of England, may be read the sad, sombre story of the closing years of the life of Queen Elizabeth. Drunk like Jezebel with the blood of the martyrs, the wretched woman looked back with dismay and despair upon her guilty career, and cried in vain for another moment of time. To the thoughtful Catholic, so dreadful a death dims all the glories of the splendid dawn that ushered in the humiliation of Spain and the wide-spread renown of the British name. And the English Queen, in the agony of such a moment, like Herod Antipas and Herod Agrippa, doubtless discovered, even in this life, the never-failing, inexorable justice of God.

How the Church Prospers.

It is a gratifying reflection, when looking over our Eastern contemporaries, to find recorded in their columns reports of the progress of the Church, but we were more than usually impressed with this fact from the following statistics of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, which were published in the Catholic Standard on the occurrence of the Archbishop's Jubilee:

Number of Priests in the old Diocese in 1830 (first year), 26; in the new portion in 1880, 87; in the new portion in 1882, 94; in the new portion in 1887, 125; in the new portion in 1892, 160.

Number of Priests in the old Diocese in 1860 before division, 201; in the new portion in 1880, 79; in the new portion in 1882, 245.

Number of Seminarians in the old Diocese in 1830, 20; in the new Diocese in 1860, 104; in the new Diocese in 1882, 92.

Number of Churches in old Diocese in 1827, 19; in the old Diocese in 1857, 62; in the new portion in 1860, 76; in the new portion in 1882, 94.

Number of Chapels in old Diocese in 1857, 17; in the old Diocese in 1860, 24; in the new portion in 1860, 32; in the new portion in 1882, 94.

Number of Parochial Schools in old Diocese in 1857, 43; in the old Diocese in 1860, 42; in the new Diocese in 1860, 40; in the new Diocese in 1872, 56.

Number of Academies in old Diocese in 1857, 4; in the old Diocese in 1860, 4; in the new Diocese in 1860, 3; in the new Diocese in 1872, 26.

Number of Religious Orders of Women in old Diocese in 1857, 6; in the new Diocese in 1860, 8; in the new Diocese in 1872, 11.

Number of Religious of Women in new Diocese in 1860, 491; in 1872, 900.

Number of Christian Brothers in new Diocese in 1860, 29; in 1872, 51.

Number of Orphan Asylums in old Diocese in 1860, 4; in new Diocese in 1860, 3; in new Diocese in 1872, 5.

Number of Orphans admitted from 1860 to 1872, 2,614; St. Vincent's Home, Germantown, 1,000; Female Orphan Asylum, 109; St. Vincent's, Tacony, 497; St. Joseph's, 484; Total, 2,538.

Number of Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul in new Diocese in 1860, 18; in 1872, 47.

Number of Confirmations about 105,000.

Relics of a Red-Handed Murderer.

Those people who are in the habit of accusing Catholics of "idolatrous" homage in reverence the relics of saints, will find food for reflection in the following paragraph regarding the worldly effects of the notorious robber and murderer, Jesse James, whose relics were recently purchased at the following fabulous prices, as related by a Missouri paper: "James's household goods and personal effects in the house at St. Joseph were sold at auction on the 10th inst., and brought extravagant prices. The Christian Union chair on which he stood when shot was sold for $9, an old satchel brought $21, an old tin washbasin $4.75, an old jackknife $6.50; his dog, a worthless cur, $2.50. The entire lot was not intrinsically worth $10, but nearly $200 was realized."

A New California Novel.

"Sacrificed on the Living Dead," is the name of a novel just published by Alphonse Daudet, of Cultus. It was written by the well known Mrs. Frances Fuller Victor, of Oregon, and, so far as we have read the work we like it very much, but not having perused it completely, we are unprepared to pass judgment upon its merits. The story is based on a romance, Mr. Daudet is an experienced writer of book fiction and he's an accomplished gentleman, and an author who deserves success.

ENGLISH CIVILIZATION.

BY TRAVIS CASE.

PART I.

The claim advanced by unlettered newspaper writers that Ireland owes her civilization to England, is so absurd on the face, and so repugnant to history, that I ask your indulgence to give my views on the question, and shall endeavor to do so with candor and impartiality.

And in the first place I will briefly examine the Civilization which England possesses herself at the period of the conquest of Ireland in 1172, and see if it was of that high order which would warrant its introduction into any Christian State or nation. In so doing I shall simply refer the reader to her own learned writers, scholars and historians.

But at the outset we are met with a perplexity, if England's civilization was of such a beneficial character, why should it be so much in need of it, and why should she have sought to force it on Ireland, and why should Ireland for the love of God would God and all the saints forsake us, but we will be with the Queen of Martyrs in her sufferings? Mary will, indeed, be Queen now, without any consolation, and it is such a pity that she should be so, too, could we claim in all truth, as St. Paul—Mary is, we find, why has Paul assumed to her fruitful devotion some pleasantry from the fact that the Lord knows that he was only one, as well as those of his fellow-Jews, who had to constitute with. If Mary, at the sight of Jesus attached to the Cross, had foreseen that every sinner and all those of which He was about to die, would fall into the abyss of hell for eternity, and that the Lamento of His passion would be of no avail to them, would she have suffered as she did? Would she have suffered at the sight of Jesus, if she had foreseen that the Jews would be so wicked as to crucify Him

Farm and Home.

Household Work and Exercise Beneficial to Young Women.

By all means let the girls learn how to cook. What right has a girl to marry and go into a house of her own unless she knows how to superintend every branch of housekeeping, and she cannot properly superintend unless she has some practical knowledge herself. Most men marry without thinking whether the woman of his choice is capable of cooking him a meal, and it is a pity he is so short sighted, as his health, his cheerfulness, and, indeed, his success in life depend in a very great degree, upon the kind of food he eats; in fact, the whole household is influenced by their diet. Feed them on fried eatables, fried meats, hot bread and other indigestible viands, day after day, and they will need medicine to make them well. A man will take alcohol to counteract the evil effects of such food, and the wife and children must be physicked.

Let all the girls have a share in the housekeeping at home before they marry; let each superintend some department by turns. It need not occupy half the time to see that the house has been properly swept, dusted and put in order, or to prepare puddings and make dishes, that many young ladies spend in reading novels that enervate both mind and body, and unfit them for everyday life. Women do not, as a general rule, get pale faces by doing housework. Their sedentary habits in overheated rooms, combined with ill-chosen food, are to blame for bad health. Our mothers used to profit themselves on their housekeeping and fine needlework. Why should not we?

Let No Stinging Words Ever Come Out of Your Mouth.

Speak kindly in the morning; it will lighten the cares of the day, turn sorrow into gladness make household humming and all other affairs move along more smoothly, giving peace to the one who thus speaks, and grateful joy to the one who hears. Speak kindly at the evening hour, for it may be that before dawn of another day, some tendrils loved one may finish his or her span of life for this world, and that it will be too late to retract an unkind word, or even to seek forgiveness for an injury inflicted upon the heart of a loved friend departed.

Washing Made Easy.

I soak my clothes over night; in the morning I fill my washboiler half full of water, and place it on the stove to heat; throwing in a handful of soft soap, or about two ounces of hard; I then wring out the soaked clothes, scap the dirty parts, and by this time the water is hot; put them in and let them boil fifteen minutes, stirring often; I now take out and put them in cold water, wash out the soils; if any dirt remains, give it a few rubs and it is gone; I rinse them good in plenty of water, and my clothes are as white and clean as those that have gone through a long process of rubbing. I have washed my clothes this way for ten years, and they have never turned yellow.

An Old Maid's Opinion.

She had been called an old maid, and rather resented it. Said she: "I am past thirty. I have a good home. I think you know I have had admirers, but—(hesitating—I have NOT—I mean I have not married myself) when which one of the beautiful girls than I have seen take the marriage vow would I exchange to-day? Not one. Some are living apart from their husbands; some are divorced; some are wives of drunken men; some are hanging on the ragged edge of society, endeavoring to keep up appearances; some are toiling to support and educate their children, and these are the least miserable; some tread the narrow line beyond the boundary of which lies the mysterious land, and some have gone out in the darkness and unknown horrors, and some are dead. A few there are who are loved and honored wives, mothers with happy homes; but, alas! only a very few."

Advice to Commutative.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pain, chilly sensations, followed by night sweats and cough, prompt measures of relief should be taken. Consumption is a serious disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofulous or blood purifier and strength-restorer, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod Liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, shortness of breath it has no equal. Sold by druggists. For Dr. Pierce's treatise on consumption send two stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

—An old man and his wife died lately at St. Berthelemy-le-Pin, France, at the same hour of the same day. They were born on the same day and in the same parish, and had passed a singularly easy and prosperous life.

—If the mother is feeble it is impossible that her children should be strong. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a perfect specific in all chronic diseases of the sexual system of women. Send to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, 233 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass., for pamphlets.

A Valuable Addition.

Because it is both medicinal and pleasant, it has gained a world-wide reputation for its extraordinary powers in curing all kinds of disease, and is now recommended by the most eminent physicians as a valuable addition to the family medicine chest. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

TRUTH ATTESTED.

Some Important Statements of Well-known People Wholly Verified.

In order that the public may fully realize the genuineness of the statements, as well as the power and virtues of the testimonials about to appear, we publish herewith the "facsimile signatures of parties who have given their testimony to the world, that there can be no question as to the genuineness of the signatures.

CHARLES BRIGGS.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Oct. 29, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for ten years with congestive attacks of the kidneys, which manifested themselves by intense pains and weakness in the back and loins. The frequency of these attacks disabled me for my business, and I was compelled to seek a change of occupation, which I hoped would be a great relief to me. Whenever the pains passed from the kidneys into the bladder, I experienced intense pain from the region of the kidneys inside the hip bone, down in front and along the course of the ureter. The urine would at times be very dark-colored, and contain a copious deposit of the mucus of the bladder. The pains were severe, coming on in paroxysms, and returning from time to time until the severe pain would continue at times, the pains were so severe that they succeeded almost in overwhelming. I consulted some of the best physicians of this city, two of which made taking your Kidney and Liver Cure a condition of their service to me. Gradually, though, I found the good effects attending the use of your Kidney and Liver Cure in kidney diseases; I commenced taking it about six months ago. After taking the fourth bottle, I passed five stones without any pain, since which time I have had no symptoms of my former trouble.

J. O. Lewis

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been suffering for the past four years with disease of the kidney and inflammation of the bladder. I had pains in my back and loins. At times could scarcely urinate; and when I did, it was with great difficulty and pain. The urine was dark-colored, was in depth about concerning as large as a lead pencil. My back and liver ached, so I had taken so much medicine without obtaining any relief, that finally concluded it would do me no harm to try it. I was cheerfully told by that nothing has given me so much relief. I believe it to be a thorough cure for kidney and bladder troubles.

G. B. Lillie
Tist & Market St.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Nov. 25, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: This last summer I suffered with pain in my kidneys and loins, which prevented me from attending to my business. I was advised by a friend of mine to use Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, as he was then suffering from a severe attack of kidney disease, and was very sparing in my selection of the kidneys, as all relieved men know. I suffered so much that I was obliged to lay off for some time. Hearing of your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, I commenced using it, and after taking three or four bottles, found my health rapidly returning. I never felt better in my life than I now do. I am fully satisfied of the virtues of your Kidney and Liver Cure, and cheerfully recommend it to all persons suffering with kidney affections.

A. M. Van Winkle

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have been troubled with liver complaint for the past seven years. My symptoms were pain in the back, side, and shoulder, and in the place directly over the kidneys. This was never in my life before, and I was at a loss to know what it was, as I was healthy. I was induced by a physician, who prescribed my case, to try your Kidney and Liver Cure. I have found several remedies, but none to obtain relief until a friend, whose father had been cured by your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, advised me to try it. I have been taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure for the past three months, and have been greatly benefited.

I remain, very truly yours,

M. C. Connoy
104 Stockton Street.

SAN JOSE, CAL., Nov. 8, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: Was afflicted with yellow jaundice very badly. Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to me by a friend, and I feel bound to say that it has effected a cure. After having taken several bottles, never felt better in my life. Appetite perfected, and was troubled by pain and sleep only.

Very truly yours,

Austin E. Allen
Los Gatos, Cal., Nov. 10, 1881.

MESSRS. H. H. WARNER & CO.:

GENTLEMEN: I have much pleasure in saying that your Kidney and Liver Cure has done me more good than any other thing. I have been from drug store to the best, from which I have suffered for several years.

Thos. Gray

Thousands of equally strong testimonials speak of them. In case where hope has abandoned hope, they triumphantly attest, showing the remarkable power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, in all diseases of the kidneys, liver, or urinary organs. If any one who reads this has any physical trouble remember the great danger of delay.

Cough—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ask for Ammen's Cough Syrup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. O'KANE,
MANUFACTURER AND IMPORTER OF
Harness, Saddles, Whips, Blankets, Boots, Etc.
767 MARKET ST.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Oct. 29, 1881.

INSURANCE.

COMMERCIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA.
FIRE AND MARINE.
Capital fully paid $200,000 00
Assets January 1, 1882 377,457 85
Losses paid since organization 600,000 00
PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
105 California Street, S. F.
JOHN H. WISE, President.
CHAS. A. LATOS, Secretary.
F. J. WHITE, Treas. JAS. FORMAN, Vice-Pres't.
H. C. BURNS, Sec'y.
WESTERN
Fire and Marine Insurance Co
OF CALIFORNIA.
460 California St., San Francisco.
CAPITAL STOCK - - $200,000
Board of Directors—James Phelan, W. W. Dodge, Thos. Jennings, Henry Cannon, F. J. White, Wm. H. Mills, Geo. W. Wright, Chas. Mason, N. C. Ludeke, John Tait, W. H. O'Donnell.
Losses Promptly Paid.
Risks taken on line as any responsible company.
FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE
UNION INSURANCE COMPANY
OF SAN FRANCISCO,
THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS,
ESTABLISHED IN 1861.
Nos. 416 and 418 California Street.
CASH CAPITAL - - - - $250,000 GOLD
PAID LOSSES, PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES, SOLID SECURITY.
DIRECTORS: SAN FRANCISCO.
D. Bewsher, R. S. Floyd, Moses Heller, N. G. Kittle, M. J. O'Connor, I. Steinhart, Daniel Meyer, Adam Grant, Antonio Rocca, Charles Kohler, Joseph Seligman, Charles Tom, Barthelt Dier, I. Lawrence Pool, A. Weill, N. P. Sharp, Nicholas Luning, John Parrott, Jacob Stadtmuller, J. Hamm, M. H. Sherwood, J. G. Kittle, Geo. C. Hicks, J. H. Hazel, Charles Baum, W. M. Hinz, William Sebella, John Craig, J. D. Eldridge.
A. H. Phippen, GUSTAVE TOUCHARD, President.
N. G. KITTLE, Vice-President.
JAS. D. BAILEY, Secretary.
GEO. T. BOIVEN, Surveyor.

TAILORS.

John Kavanagh, MERCHANT TAILOR, 6 New Montgomery Street, PALACE HOTEL, S. F.
The Making of Clergymens Cassocks a Specialty
JOHN HICKEY, Merchant Tailor, 933 Market street, Between Fifth and Sixth streets. SAN FRANCISCO.
Business Suits to order from $20
Pants 5
Fine Dress Suits 35
Black Doeskin Pants 7
D. LETER & CO., Merchant Tailors, 619 Fourth Street, S. F.
GREAT BARGAINS FOR NEXT SIXTY DAYS.
Business Suits to Order, from - - - $20 00
Pants " " 5 00
Fine Dress Suits " " 35 00
Black Doeskin Pants " " 7 00
Perfect Fit Guaranteed Or No Sale.
M. FITZPATRICK, The BOSS Tailor, 30 1-2 FOURTH STREET, Corner of Jesse. San Francisco
THOMAS DRADY, MERCHANT TAILOR, No. 6 Third Street, Near Market, S. F.
E. F. WILTON, MERCHANT TAILOR, 12 Stockton Street, NEAR MARKET ST. SAN FRANCISCO.
DENNIS REDMOND, MERCHANT TAILOR, No. 508 Hayes street.
PETER SHORT, DRAPER AND TAILOR, No. 1 Montgomery St. Masonic Temple
All the Latest Fashions in Suitings JUST ARRIVED.
Dress Suits to Order, $35
Business Suits to Order, 30

NEW FRANKLIN HOTEL.
Cor. Sansome and Pacific streets.
The Best Hotel in San Francisco
Hot and Cold Water Baths Free.
H. CERRAN, - - - - Proprietor.
THIS WELL KNOWN AND FAVORITE HOTEL IS SITUATED IN A MOST CENTRAL AND HEALTHY LOCATION and offers rare inducements to the business and the pleasure traveler, and at the Grand Hotel for the whole of the year round.
Board and Room per day, $1 00. Board and Room per week, $5 to $6. Single Meals, 50c. Bonnet Stand on premises.
Carriages free to and from the Hotel.

ITALY 1881.
ESPOSIZIONE MUSICALE IN MILANO
Sotto il Patrocinio di S. M. la Regina.
Palazzo Del R. Conservatorio
AT THE GREAT ITALIAN MUSICAL EXPOSITION
Recently closed at Milan, was probably the MOST EXTRAORDINARY COLLECTION OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS ever made, and it was the only one at which Pianos were the great prize awarded to the best manufacturers. After extensive comparative trials, the Jury awarded the Grand Gold Medal of Honor to the Pianos of Messrs. Steinway & Sons, of New York, and Hamburg, and Steinway & Sons alone received the Medal of Honor for Pianos.
THE GRAND SILVER MEDAL.
Being the highest award given to Pianos, was conferred upon the MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.
The manufacturers of the above extraordinary instruments are the more highly honored and distinguished by the Medal of Honor awarded them, as it was the only one given to any American Organs, the Medal of Honor being awarded to Messrs. Mason & Hamlin for Reed Organs, while the Grand Gold Medal was awarded to Messrs. Steinway & Sons for Pianos.
HIGHEST, MOST INDUSTRIAL EXPERIMENTS
Have shown the Mason & Hamlin Organ to be the most durable, and to retain the power and quality of tone longest, and to be the least injured by the severest climatic changes, and to be the most perfect and complete in all respects.
IMPROVEMENTS
ELEGANT STYLES
POPULAR STYLES.
EASY PAYMENTS.
A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, 144 pages, free, containing the latest information, and showing our new designs, and explaining why our instruments are the best, sent free to any one desiring it, and who will write for it, and mention this paper. Address, MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO CO.
Pianos for rent, 1881-2, $5 per month. 149 Boylston Street (Boston), 46 East 14th Street (New York), 149 Wabash Avenue (CHICAGO).

MEDICAL REMEDIES.

DIPHTHERIA.
REMEMBER THIS NO CARBOLIC PROTE
Kills germs. Wonderful Antiseptic Gargle. Sold by druggists. It is a positive specific, and only remedy that has ever been known to cure Diphtheria. Sold by druggists, or sent by express, prepaid, on receipt of price, $1 50 per bottle. Dr. Bye's Anti-Diphtheritic Gargle, Market and Third Streets, Oakland, corner Market and Broadway, San Francisco, and 10 and 12 Dey Street, New York.

WOOD AND COAL.

COAL. COAL. COAL.
2,240 LBS. TO THE TON.
Full Weight and Quality Guaranteed.
Cake and Kindling Wood Constantly on hand at very LOWEST Prices.
T. L. SMITH, Cor. Eleventh and Market Sts.

COAL! COAL!
At Very Lowest Prices.
All Kinds of Kindling Fuel. Try Me.
MARK HEYWOOD, 710 Folsom street
DANIEL GIOVANNINI, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in CHARCOAL, WOOD & COAL, 816 Pacific Street, San Francisco.
COAL. COAL.
Lowest Rates.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
THOMAS MORTON, 630 Geary Street, San Francisco
DUNDEE COAL CO., NO COMBINATION GREAT REDUCTIONS
FOREIGN & DOMESTIC COAL.
Office at Tom Hume's Saloon, Dupont street.
J. FLYNN, 1113 and 1115 Mission, treet.
J. M. JOHNSON, DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Wood, Coal & Charcoal
WHARF AT JENSEN'S GATE AVE. (Formerly Tyler Street.)
Office at 200 Sutter St., nr. Kearny, San Francisco.

EMPLOYMENT, ETC.

O'BRIEN & WARD'S EMPLOYMENT OFFICE
610 CLAY STREET.
Opposite Clay Street Dock, and a few door above Montgomery street.
HAS ALWAYS ON HAND FIRST class Hotel Help, Farm Hands, Shepherds, Gardeners, Coachmen, and marriage couples for job; also families and ranches, without any charge to employers. mp10-3m

MISCELLANEOUS.

FURLONG & MANSEAU,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Silver and Walnut SHOW CASES.
816 Market Street bet. 4th & 5th, up stairs
Sewing Machine Agency,
NO. 151 FOURTH ST.
See Monroe and Howard. San Francisco.
ALL KINDS OF SEWING MACHINES CHEAP. ON EASY TERMS. Machines Rented for $2 a month. Repairing done. Needles and Oil.
REMOVAL.
PALAIS DE L'UNION,
THE WELL-KNOWN FRENCH RESTAURANT, 105 Bush street, will now be found at 308 PITT STREET
A. J. DURDENAUT, Proprietor
Private rooms for families. Meals at all hours. Open all night.
SAVE MONEY.
CURE YOUR SPECTACLES. ADDRESS H. J. SMITH, 120 Post st. near Stockton, Opp. Grand Hotel, San Francisco, Cal., "Home Circle" Spectacles are the best. Sent by mail, anywhere in the United States, Postage Free, on receipt of price. Each concave and convex lens is ground and polished to a mathematical correct curve, and warranted to be the best and most accurate lens for the sight. Spectacles, Gold Frames and Lenses, $1 50. Steel Frames and Lenses, $1 00. Gold Spectacles, $2 00. Steel Spectacles, 50c. Gold Eye-Glasses, $2 00. Steel Eye-Glasses, 50c Great Catholic Triumph in Belgium.

NOBLE ATTITUDE OF THE BRAVE BISHOPS.

Triumph of Catholic Education Over Infidelity.

It is occasionally the necessary duty of Catholic journalists, says the London Universe, to speak, if not in a reproachful, in a regretful tone of the apathy sometimes displayed in public affairs by good Catholics. To-day, however, it is our pleasing task to record the satisfactory results obtained—as we shall see by the Report of the Catholic School Committee—by the Catholics of Belgium in their energetic resistance to the shameless attacks by the impious Liberals now in power on the rights of religion in the national schools.

The state of things in the beginning of the struggle was a difficult one for the Catholics of Belgium. The freethinkers and Freemasons, who hold power only by a small majority, are eager to make the most of their tenure of office by undermining the faith of the Catholic people. The most effectual method to carry out their design is to banish religion from the national schools. Accordingly, two years ago the Government passed, by a narrow majority, a law descristianizing education in the national schools. Religion, as elsewhere, there is a small and rapidly diminishing number of Catholics always ready to compromise Catholic principles for the sake of acting with Government, or of flattering public public opinion. This kind of gentry in Germany are called State-Catholics, in France Liberal Catholics, and in Ireland the creatures is named Catholic-"Whig."

These men—trimmers by nature as well as by self interest—are in Belgium respectable people, not without talent, and, though their stomachs turn against Papal Encyclicals and the Syllabus, practical Catholics. They are possessed with the idea that there is but thing needful for the welfare of Church and State—their own accession to power. Everything else is superfluous, if not hurtful. These half-hearted Catholics, afraid of altogether opposing the Government scheme of godless education lest it might damage their chance of obtaining power—the highest good, as they conceive it, of Church and State—offered a compromise which might have been fraught with the most damaging consequences to Catholic interests and to the future religious and social welfare of the country.

A SPECIMEN OF THE RESULTS

The United Episcopate of Belgium spoke out with an unflattering voice, and in a joint pastoral letter condemned the neutral State schools, and forbade Catholics to take part or let in them. This episcopal act cleared up all doubts and difficulties, and pointed out to Catholics the way they had to follow and the tasks they had to perform. It was no less than this: To abandon the godless State schools and to found schools of their own.

It was a critical moment. The Catholics of Belgium were called upon to make enormous sacrifices. Their fidelity to their faith was put to a severe test—a test specially severe in these hard times and in these luxurious days—a money test. The Catholics have come out of the trying ordeal triumphantly. To provide the millions of francs required to establish and keep up schools in the 2,500 parishes of the country was a very possible undertaking, only possible by the aid of a self-sacrificing spirit. The generosity of the Belgian Catholics, however, on this occasion was lavished by the Government, in order to bring up the State schools to such a pitch of perfection as, they hoped, would daft reality.

The priesthood, too, in this emergency, did great things. No sacrifice of time or money, no deprivation, no self-renunciation was too great for these men of God, not to be offered up willingly to promote the glorious work. It may be said with perfect truth that all ranks and conditions of men entered into a noble rivalry to make possible the impossible. But if, among all these noble champions of the good cause, the palm is to be given to any, let the poor, who have suffered and sacrificed so much in order to secure to their children the highest earthly good, must be the prize.

THE RESULTS OF THE GREAT WORK

Of Catholic zeal and public spirit are shown in the Report before us. Figures are more eloquent than words, and the following figures speak volumes:—

In December, 1878, the popular schools were frequented by 667,749 children; of them the number in the parish schools was 567,694, and in the voluntary schools 90,055. This result was given in the last official Report published before the introduction of the new law.

In the year 1880 749,536 attended the schools as follows: "In the State schools, 384,356; in the Catholic schools, 365,179. Thus it appears that in 1878 the State school educated 86 per cent. of the population; but two years later the proportion was reduced to only 39 per cent., while in the same period the voluntary Catholic schools rose from 13 per cent. to over 61 per cent.

This is a result great and small, especially when we remember the pressure brought to bear by the omnipotent State on all its officials down to the last railway guard and postman. It is a striking witness to the self-sacrificing spirit and to the zealous faith of the poor, who form the chief contingent of the popular schools.

The new school law was nicknamed "Misfortune's Law," but, intended for the destruction of religion, it has become a work of redemption, for now in the Catholic schools of Belgium the new generation will grow up under the unadulterated and unmixed training of the Catholic faith.

The Hatred to Religion in France.

The following letter, which first appeared in the Spectator, and which we take the liberty to transfer to our columns, has been received by Mr. W. R. Lilly, the writer of an article on "Free Thought, French and English," in the February number of the Contemporary Review, who asserted that Liberalism in France is for the most part rooted in hatred to all personal religion, while in England it is rooted in hatred of such a feeling. Mr. Lilly states that certain portions of the letter, indeed, which gives details of the abominable impurities practised by the boys, not only with the connivance, but with the direct encouragement of the Libres professors who constitute the Professors of these establishments, he is obliged to omit in his transcription.

"March 1, 1882.

"Sir,—Having read your article on 'Free Thought—French and English,' in the Contemporary Review for February, I take the liberty to write to you to tell you that, but as what one can gather from published works is, it gives but a faint idea of the practical demoralisation that is going on in France in Government schools. I have been for some time a 'maître d'étude,' or under-master, at the lycee of a large town not far from——. All the 'Professeurs' there were Libres professeurs, and tried hard to make the boys so, only with too much success. In the morning there was obliged to be a prayer said in the class at beginning work. But the 'Professeurs often reminded the boys that 'those moutons' (or, even to little boys) who objected to prayers were not to join. In few classes, more than one or two boys would rise. One of these would be told to say the prayer. The others, remaining seated, would make every kind of noise and interruption, and, of course, would never be reproved. Once a boy made a picture of a donkey on a cross, and held it up before the boy saying the prayer. The Professor told him it was very clever. Once a week a priest gave them religious instruction. I wonder that for a little money a priest could come to be so insulted. They not only did not listen to him, but refused to answer, or answered wrong on purpose; gave every kind of insult. I had to be there; but keeping order was a farce, I had no power to do more than to report them, and the Director never punished for disorder in Catechism. They all knew that to insult a priest was pleasing to the authorities, and they did so, for French boys are great prigs and snaks. Among the boarders there was only one boy, and he was an orphan, who tried to be a good Christian. He might as well have been in a school of heathens in ancient times. He had to hear the most awful blasphemies, and could never get any redress, nay, had to suffer every petty insult little minds could invent. The day he had copied one of his exercises. The professor of the class saw that one of the two had been copied, and though he knew that this boy was not a boy likely to copy, which the other boy who had written the other, a great, ignorant, lazy fellow, named M——, was, pretended to think that it was the 'saint' (as he was called). He taxed him with it, the boy denied it. 'Oh! you Catholics can tell any lie if you pay ten francs to the priest,' said the master. Of course, the other boy (M——) avowed his innocence; no boy like a young infidel for out-and-out meanness and deceit. Every boy knew that M——was really lying, but the 'saint' was punished, and every boy in the class was mean enough to curry favor by some insult to the poor 'saint.' . . . Of course, all the 'maîtres d'étude' had to suffer, especially I. Master M——was very ingenious in the petty insults he made me endure, on account of my poverty, &c. His family was a very rich one. As a foreigner and a Catholic, I was especially unpopular, and I soon found I must listen to all his filthy blasphemies, and hear him touch them to the young ones, and to take all his little insults, and even those of the youngest of his friends, for he had influence enough to get any 'maître d'étude' given to him' him. At last it came to that. Happily, I got another situation. Excuse the liberty I have taken, and please believe me to remain, Sir, your very humble servant.

"To W. S. Lilly, Esq."

Mr. J. G. Alexander has written to confirm, by Protestant testimony, the evidence afforded by this letter as to the way in which many of the scholastic authorities in France endeavor to suppress all reverence for religion. He states that "a Protestant pastor in the South told him last autumn of a young woman, a teacher in a Government school, who had been degraded and threatened with dismissal, solely because she had taught a class in a Sunday school; and this was but one evidence of the anti-religious intolerance displayed by the school inspector for the department in question."

SACRED HEART COLLEGE.

Second Collegiate—Joseph Flaherty, 97; John Mortmer, 91; Frank Moriarty, 91; John Sullivan, 89; F. Mulligan, 89; Jas. J. Cooney, 92; Thos. Gallagher—John J. Ryan, 96; Herbert Y. Dugan, 95; Thos. R. Slavin, 92; Charles F. Lundy, 92; John A. Mullen, 90; Alexander Wilcox, 90. Fourth Collegiate—John E. Behan, 95; M. J. Sawyer, 94; Walter B. Duffy, 91; Thos. M. Kavanagh, 90; Robert F. Kavanagh, 89; William E. Meteerville, 89. Fifth Collegiate, Patrick W. McCormick, 94; Jas. H. McQuaide, 91; Jas. W. Sullivan, 91; James F. Lynch, 90; Jas. F. Delaney, 87; John J. Moriarty, 87. Sanbitiate Department—John Ryan, 93, Richard Moore, 92; John Downey, 92; Jas. Geary, 92; Jos. Flaherty, 89; John Carberry, 88. First Commercial—First Section—William Curtin, 91; Wm. Derham, 91; Thomas McIlhoney, 90; Jas. Dwyer, 90. Second Section—Peter Kivey, 9; John Mahoney, 94. First Intermediate—Jas. Ryan, 97; Walter Talbot, 92; P. Troy, 92; George McAuliffe, 92; Frank Dwyer, 92. Second Intermediate, H. Kelly, 96; J. Hoade, 91; H. Lane, 91; A. Peel, 91; Jas. Kelly, 91; Francis McCabe. Third Intermediate—Jas. J. Dunne, 95; Jas. A. McAuliffe, 95; Jas. Ryan, 92; Edward J. Lynch, 92; John J. Cooney, 92; Michael O'Meara. Fourth Intermediate—Eugene Leary, 92; James Leary, 92; Thomas Wilde, 92; Thomas Lynch, 92; Wm. Bennett, 91; Scott, Carberry, 92. First Preparatory—Jas. H. Coleman, 95; Jas. Sullivan, 95; Jas. Aulifie, 94; H. Maybeck, 93; G. Dykes, 93; J. Murphy, 92; Jas. Gleason, 92; Jas. Ryan, 92; Jas. Kane, 92; Joseph Tobin, 92; James Sarmont, 90; Jas. Malone, 90; Frank Lynch, 90; Jas. Ryan, 90. Third Preparatory—P. Lacney, 96; J. Murphy, 94; J. Gleason, 93; L. Aiskew, 93; Jos. Richards, 90; J. King, 90; A. Agnew, 90; Joseph Carberry, 90; Jas. Lynch, 90; Jas. Ryan, 90; A. Mullen, 95; J. Donovan, 94; J. Dwyer, 92; F. Allredbands, 91; Lancaster, Lester, 90. Second—First Class—R. Mogan, 96; Wm. McKinnon, 95; F. Mulligan, 95. Second Class—R. Wilde, 96; Jas. Flaherty, 95; F. Moriarty, 95; F. Hart, 95; Thomas Wilde, 94; Thomas Lynch, 94; Joseph, 93; J. Carberry, 91; E. Moore, 90. Fourth Class—John Mooney, 96; J. Mulligan, 95; R. Warren, 95; Ed. Gallagher, 95; J. Lynch, 95; J. Phelan, 94. French—First Class, 96; J. Meaghan, 92; R. Warren, 90; Thos. Mooney, 90; J. Ryan, 90; J. Shea, 90; J. Leonard Class—T. Smith, 96; J. Gleason, 95; J. Dwyer, 95; F. Fogarty, 95. Third Class—E. Cooney, 96; A. Buckley, 96; J. Gleasons, 96; R. Moriarty, 96. German—First Class—Peter Kreis, 96; Jas. Fuhrer, 96; Jas. Schoen, 94. Second Class—E. Hannam, 96; James M. McGinnis, 95; Jas. McCluskey, 95; Thos. Cooney, 95; J. Mooney, 94; Spanish—Second Class—Jas. Ryan, 95; A. Rubio, 94; J. Gleason, 93; F. Meaghan, 92; D. Sweeny, 91; E. Lynch, 90; Frank—W. McKinnon, 96; F. Mulligan, 95; R. Mogan, 95; F. Moriarty, 93.

MONTHLY REPORT.

Parts II due 3 Aprilis 1882.

Sacra Congregatio embassadorum et rerum ordinandarum Sanctae Romanae Ecclesiae Cardinalibus a Mantuanus Inquisitoribus Universi Prava XIII Sanctissimo Sede Apostolica Indici librorum pravae doctrinae, ut vocant, in genere (illicit, expropriat), ac permissi in universa christiana Republica praesertim ad delegationem, habita in Palatio apostolico Vaticano, die 3 aprilis 1882, quae sunt damnat, ac expulsi proscriptique, ut illicita, ac pravae doctrinae proscripta in Indem librorum prohibitorum referri mandavit et mandari jussit quae sequuntur.

Chabbi, Pierre, Le Mariage Chrétien. Paris, Librairie du Dix-neuvième Siècle. Rome, imprimerie Salviucci, 1879.

Rosset Ernest, "Mary Aurelie et la fin du monde antique." Paris, Calmann Lévy editeur, 1881.

Id. 1. M. "Vitach Martin Luther." Rome, Libreria Alessandro Manzoni, 1882.

Thibaudet Marie, professeur di filosofia nella R. Università di Bologna. "Sul risorgimento del filosofia positiva in Italia. Volume unico. Firenze, 1871.

Id. "La Critica della filosofia scolastica del secolo." Dialoghi. Napoli, 1876.

Id. "Socialisme, Darwinisme e Sociologie moderne." Seconda edizione accresciuta d'un nuovo lavoro "Le questioni contemporanee." Bologna, 1879.

Id. "Pedagogumes e la Psychologie moderne." Traduit de l'Italien par A. Herzen. Paris, 1880.

"Teorie Sociali e socialismo." Conversazione epistolare. Bologna, Dessanti, 1882.

"Della Filosofia moderna in sorgiudizi studi filologici, storici e sociali." Terza edizione ampliata con ritratto dell' autore e prefazione di Aug. Conti. Bologna, 1882.

Chiesa Nicola. "Miti dei più originali e conclusi cantici popolari, serenate, stornelli, rispetti e rispetti," che sogliono alternare fra i canzonali delle campagne dalisse nelle aie, veglie, nelle ceri balli, svolti e portati alla comune intelligenza. Roma, tipografia Adolfo Bacinci, 1882. Jugo. S. ref. for. 17 a febraroi 1882. Lector Incidibitur ac submittat ut Operarius requirat.

Joannes Renaud de L'epeda 1882.

Fr. Thomas Mia Card. Martinelli, praefectus.

Fr. Hieronymus Pius Saccheri, Ord. Praed. Sac. Int. Congreg. a Secretis.

Loco ✠ Sigilli.

THE PONTIFICAL BRIEF.

Remonstrances have been received from the Governments of various countries, ecclesiastical affairs, relative to the title of archbishop attributed to the population of certain Christian cities, whereof indeed, but in ashes, the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda for Oriental Affairs, in the session of February 27th ult., examined the question and adopted the following determination, which were duly approved by His Holiness, February 28, 1882:

I. The formula, in pontifical rescriptions, is wholly abolished.

II. For said formula is henceforth substituted another, expressing the ancient name of the region whereof is attributed the See of the Bishop, e.g., N. N., Archiepiscopus Cirenaicae Ecclesiae. However, as the use of the ancient formula was voluntary, so all are free to adopt the new or to retain the ancient, whenever they may prefer the title of "Archiepiscopus Ecclesiae" or "Ecclesiae" simply.

III. Where it be remote or desirable to distinguish the more common episcopal Sees of the Sees, non-residential, from those Bishops or Sees which are residential, in lieu of the obtaining such or particular appellation, they may be styled, in general, as has been hitherto frequently the usage, Episcopi seu Ecclesiae Titulares.—Roman Corres. N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

NEVER GIVE UP THE SHIP.

"Twenty one years ago I was dying with the CONSUMPTION. Thank was my escaping that terrible death at least so all the doctors told me when I home advised me to send to Hell Sweet, Philadelphia, and get CANNABIS INDICA, which Sweet and Sally prepared for me.

G. S. FIELDS, Dallas, el Lawson Co., A.T.

"Send another gross of CANNABIS INDICA when required. Your office has done me a GOOD BY THIS. I am so sound and well as ever I was."

SALLIE D. BENTON.

January 23, 1882. Sayerville, Crawford Co., Mo.

N. B.—This is only specimen proof. A single box will satisfy the most skeptical. Sent anywhere in the world, postage paid, on receipt of price, which is in bottle (enough for most cases), $2.50 per Bottle, or Three Bottles for $6.00. Address

CHARLES A. SELL, 1032 Race St., Philadelphia.

Send stamp for book of testimonials of cures from prominent persons.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

NEW TREATMENT BY INHALATION. Its Action on Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Sleeplessness, Headache, Neuralgia, Nervous Diseases, Debility and Nervous Disorders. Purposely adapted to the Wants of Invalids. Dr. Pettigrove's Compound Oxygen is not a cure-all, but a rational, scientific, and THOROUGH TREATMENT, which, by its marvelous results, has GAINED THE ENTIRE CONFIDENCE OF THE PUBLIC. Drs. Pettigrove's Compound Oxygen. Sent Free on Application.

McCORMICK BROS.,

BOOK AND JOB

PRINTERS

622 Clay Street,

(Up-stairs Building at the Monitor Office.)

San Francisco - California.

We Possess every Facility for the Execution of JOB PRINTING

—IN THE—

Cheapest, Neatest & Quickest Manner.

GIVE US A TRIAL

And be Convinced that our Prices are Lower than any other office in San Francisco.

Orders from the Country Promptly Executed, and work sent by Mail or Express

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

M. C. O'NEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
605 Kearny street, cor. Pine.
Rooms 2 and 4..... San Francisco.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
507 Montgomery street, cor. Sacramento
San Francisco

J. D. SULLIVAN,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Rooms 5 and 6,
224 MONTGOMERY STREET..... San Francisco.

J. B. METCALFE,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
ROOMS 20, 21 and 22,
220 MONTGOMERY STREET, S. F.

MRS. MARION TODD,
Attorney-at-Law,
Montgomery Block,
SAN FRANCISCO

A. H. LOUGHBOROUGH,
Law Office,
N. W. Cor. Sacramento and Montgomery Streets.

JAMES T. NOON,
Attorney & Counsellor
AT LAW.,
Nos. 428 Kearny Street,
ROOMS 1 AND 2,
Int. Rooms and Beds. SAN FRANCISCO.
Will Practice in Civil and Criminal Courts.

MUSIC---LANGUAGES.

C. J. BONNINGTON,
TEACHER THEORY, PIANO, ORGAN, GUITAR, VOCAL MUSIC, Composition in the art of Music, Classic Rendering. 1722 Howard street (office 22 years). At home, address Fisher, Sacramento street. Piano taught by Miss Bonnington, terms moderate.

INDIANAPOLIS CHAIR MAN'FG COMPANY.

F. BAUMGARD, C. WALCOTT, J. SCHRADER
Large Stock of LATEST STYLES Just arrived from our factory, Indianapolis. Our agent keeps no other machine and has no other agent or salesman on the coast.

15 to 25 Per Cent.

Visit Site of CARPETS, newest style and labor preserver at the lowest prices.

The INDIANAPOLIS PATENT SOFA BED is another large and elegant assortment; quality, workmanship, fine finish, with or without upholstery, in the finest of Silks and Satins.

100 New Montgomery St., near Howard, S. F.

DEPOT OF CUIPURES DART.

MADAME DENOIT HAS THE PLEASURE OF INFORMING the ladies that she has received her Paris large and elegant assortment; corsets, petticoats, fine linen, with or without embroidery, handkerchiefs, purses, ladies' belts, bracelets, etc. Also, a large assortment of gents ties, gents suspenders, gents fancy goods. Prices cheaper than any other in Europe. Class call 27 Post street, Room 3, Second floor.

CORSETS MADE TO ORDER.

Corsets Repaired.

CHEAPEST PLACE

To Buy New and Second Hand Machines.

All kinds; rented 25 per month; needles for all machines, 15 cents per dozen.

SINGER OFFICE, 191 FOURTH STREET.

E. P. Tierney, M. D.
Office, 708 Montgomery st.,
SAN FRANCISCO
OFFICE HOURS: 10 to 12 A. M. 2 to 4 P. M. 7 to 8 P. M.
Residence—Eddy, cor. Montgomery and Broadway

R. SCHAEZLEIN,
MANUFACTURER OF SOCIETY BADGES,
Diplomas and Silver Plated.
13 Trinity St., nr Montgomery.
(Bet. Sutter and Bush Streets, San Francisco.)

CHRISTY & WISE
WOOL
Commission Merchants
HAVE REMOVED
To their New and Commodious
WAREHOUSE,
N. E. cor. Fifth Jones and Bonnard Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Where all Wool, Hides, Skins, Etc., will be stored and Weighed, under their personal supervision, and correctness thereby guaranteed.

CLARK STREET

Glycerine Dip, Carbolic Dip, Sulphur Dip, Wool Bags, Twines, Shears, Lime, SULPHUR TOBACCO.

CASH ADVANCED
On consignments at Low Rates of Interest, and prompt returns made.

WASHING.
Prices Reduced.
White's Laundry.
PRINCIPAL OFFICES
No. 648 MARKET STREET.
Branch Office, 1128 Market Street.
LAUNDRY
Thirteenth Street bet. Folsom and Howard.
Open from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M. Saturdays 11 P. M.

Market Report.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF WOOL, HIDES, AND PELTS, MADE BY MESSRS. JOHN H. WISE & CO., WOOL AND PRODUCE BROKERS, 302 AND 307 WARD STREET, S. F.

MONTHLY OFFICE,
622 Clay St., Tuesday Evening, May 16, 1882.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Business has been rather quiet during the past week, with a steady market for Grain. Rice all cleared, while Corn and Barley remain weaker. Shipping is dull and freights are very weak. Potatoes are plenty and weaker. Onions are good prices. No change in prices of anything mentioned last week.

DOMESTIC PRODUCE MARKET.

The quotations below represent current prices in large lots and are similar to those in retail transactions. Fractional prices will come up to the standard, or down to the next respect, as the quantity, condition and care taken in preparing Produce for market are very closely examined by buyers.

Flour—

Quotations are: City Extras, $5 50@5 62½; City Superfine, $4 75@5; interior brands, $4@4 50 per barrel for extra, and $4 50@4 75 for superfine.

Wheat—

Quotations are: Standard No. 1 Shipping, $1 36@1 40; No. 2, $1 32@1 35 per cental.

Potatoes—

Quotations: Early Rose, $2 12½@2 25; Garnet Chiles, $1 75@1 90; River Red, $2 12½@2 25; Peerless, $2 25@2 37½; Burbanks, $2 25@2 37½; Petaluma, $2 40@2 62½; Irish Blows, $ @2 40; Sweet, $3 00@3 50.

Onions—

Quotations are: White, New Crop, 65@70 ¢ ctl.; Red Crop, $1 50@1 75.

Cornmeal—

Quotations are: Feed, $1 40@1 50 ¢ ctl.; Table meal, $2 25@2 50 ¢ ctl.

Barley—

Quotations are: Feed, $1 30@1 35 ¢ ctl.

Butter—

Quotations are: Choice fresh roll Butter, 27@27½; Fancy, 25@26; Medium do, 20@22½; Common, 18@20; Pickled, 19@20; Eastern Butter, 16@22½ ¢ lb.

Cheese—

Quotations are: California Cheese, 12@13½; Eastern, 16@20; Gilroy Dalmation Factory, 17@18½ ¢ lb.

Poultry—

Quotations are: Live Turkeys, 15@17½; Gobblers, 15@17; Ducks, $7 00@8 00; Hens, $6 00@7 00; Young Roosters, $9 00@11 00; old, $5 50@6 50; Broilers, $4 50@5 50; Pigeons, $1 25@1 75 per dozen; Squabs, $3 25@3 50 ¢ doz.

Eggs—

Quotable at 20@22½ ¢ dozen; 19@22½ for Ranch; California, Large, 20@22½; Eastern, 18@20; Salt Lake, —@— ¢; Oregon, 19@20 ¢ doz.

Domestic Fruit—

Quotations are: California Oranges, $2 50@$3 50 ¢ box; California Lemons, $1 50@1 75; Malaga, $6 00@7 00 ¢ case; Messina Oranges, $4 50@5 00 ¢ box; Sicily Lemons, $6 00@7 00 ¢ box; Bermuda Onions, $10 00@12 00; California Limes, 30@40 $ ¢ small 100; Bermuda Potatoes, $6 00@7 00 ¢ box; Bermuda Apples, $2 50@3 00 ¢ bunch; Pine Apples, $7 50@8 00 ¢ doz; Cocoanuts, $7 50@8 75 ¢ hundred; Figs, $1 75 ¢ box; Pears, 25@40 00 ¢ box; Cranberries, $12@14 ¢ bbl.

Vegetables—

Quotations are: Cabbages, 60@75 ¢ ctl; Garlic, 12@15 ¢ lb; Marrowfat Squash, $10 00@$15 00 ¢ ton; California Lemons, $1 50@1 75; Peppers, dry, 20@25 ¢ lb; Dry Okra, 20 ¢ lb; Green Peas, 3@4 ¢ lb; Green Corn, 60@75 ¢ sack; Green Peas, 12@15 ¢ lb.

CATTLE MARKET.

BEEF—First quality, 7@8½; second do, 6@6½; third do, 5@5½ ¢ lb.

VEAL—Large, 6@7; small, 8 ¢ lb for large, and 9@10 for small.

MUTTON—Wethers, 5@6½; Ewes, 5@5½ ¢ lb.

LAMB—6@7½.

SPRING LAMB and Grass Fed, on the hoof, 7@7½ ¢ lb; dressed, 9@9½ ¢ lb; Spring, 12 dressed, do, 8@9½; Roasting Pigs, alive, 10@12½ ¢ lb.

Catarrh is unpleasant to one's self and disagreeable to others. Cure it at once by using Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. By druggists.

BOOTS & SHOES.

ROBT. FLENNIKEN,
724 AND 726
Montgomery Street,
HAVING JUST RECEIVED A LARGE INVOICE
MESSRS. JORY BROS.'
Ladies' Misses', Children and Infants
FINE KID SHOES, which I am now prepared to offer at
GREATLY REDUCED PRICES
I have also received
A Large Consignment of LADIES' MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S
Kid Sandalls and Slippers,
WHICH WILL BE OFFERED FOR 70 DAYS, PER PAIR
ROBERT FLENNIKEN,
724 and 726 Montgomery st.

A NEW THING!!
BUT A GOOD ONE.
HOUSEKEEPERS ATTENTION
PLEASE ASK YOUR GROCER
For the Celebrated CLOCK BAKING POWDER.
Quality Guaranteed.
Second to none in the United States.
A HANDSOME NICKEL CLOCK
GIVEN AWAY
WITH EVERY 8lb CAN.
Give it a Trial and Convince Yourselves.
CASTLE BROS. & LOUPE,
Manufacturers.
213, 215, 217 FRONT STREET, S.F.

P. RASMUSSEN,
MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN
Boots and Shoes,
(ONE DOOR EAST OF THE ALCAZAR)
219 East Side of Third St.,
SAN FRANCISCO
A large stock of ready made on hand. French Calf boots and shoes to order. Repairing promptly and neatly done.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

GEO. H. FULLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
Settees, School and Office Furniture,
CABINET WORK TO ORDER A SPECIALTY.
Salesroom, 19 New Montgomery Street, Manufactory, 124 Main St.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

R. W. THOBALD,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
COAL YARD
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COALS
35 and 37 CLAY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Connected with the Pacific Bell Telephone Exchange. Orders sent through this medium will receive prompt attention. P. O. Box 2161.

JOE POHEIM
The Tailor,
Makes the Best-Fitting SUITS IN THE CITY.
Business Suits made to Order from $20 00
do Pants do do 5 00
Fine Dress Pants from 8 00
Fine French Beaver Suits from 40 00
Overcoats from 20 00
PROMPT ATTENTION AND HONEST DEALING.
PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED
FOR NO SALE.
Samples and Rules for Self-measurement sent FREE to any address.
203 Montgomery St. 724 Market St.
SAN FRANCISCO.
CARPETS, OIL-CLOTHS, LINOLEUM,
COCOA MATTINGS, RUGS, LACE CURTAINS,
CORNICES, SHADES, ETC., ETC.
An assortment of 100 Patterns, comprising the latest and most elegant designs in Ingrain goods.
A Few NEW Patterns of Parlor, Hall, and Stair Carpets with Borders to match Just Received. Brussels Laid at Sixty and Seven.
ALEX. MACKAY,
713 MARKET STREET, San Francisco

R. HERRING,
MANUFACTURER OF FINE FURNITURE
MAYFIELD,
House, Bank, and Office Fittings,
In Pacific Coast Woods a Specialty.
Nos. 429 and 431 FOURTH STREET, Cor. of Silver.
DESIGNS FURNISHED.
"THE WINTHROP RANGE."
JACOB AHLBACH.
TINSMITH, PLUMBER, GAS FITTER,
Single Oven.
AND DEALER IN
Stoves and Tinware,
No. 231 Fourth street.
Free Grates for saving fuel. Agent for the Winthrop Range.
JOSEPH MAYER,
ORGAN BUILDER,
No. 127 Page Street, San Francisco.
MANUFACTURER AND REPAIRER OF ALL KINDS OF CHURCH AND PARLOR ORGANS
All Orders to the above Address will receive prompt attention.

THE MONITOR,
A CATHOLIC FAMILY JOURNAL.
PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY MORNINGS.
Published by The Monitor Publishing Co. Office 622 Clay street, San Francisco, California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Per Year	$2 00
Per Year, if not in advance	2 50
Six Months	1 00
Three Months	50
Single Copy	05
Subscribers will find the date of their subscription printed on their papers.
Remittances should be made by Post Office Money Order, Bank Check or Draft, or Express.
Advertising Rates on Application.
Additional communications, Publications, Books and special notices to Editor of The Monitor. Business Letters, Subscriptions, Advertisements, Remittances, Etc., to Publishers, 622 Clay Street, San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as Second Class Matter.

THE MONITOR

is now in the twenty fifth year of publication, and is well established reputation as a standard and reliable Religious Newspaper, has gained for it a wide circulation and an influence which makes The Monitor a valuable medium for advertisers.

Advertisements inserted at reasonable rates

TO CORRESPONDENTS

Communications to secure insertion should be handed in not later than Tuesday of each week.

No communications will be inserted unless accompanied by the author's real name. This is required as a private guarantee of good faith.

Communications will be gladly received from all interested in the cause advocated by this Journal. Correspondents should be sure and write on one side of the paper only. We cannot undertake to return the MSS. of rejected articles.

All communications and communications, whether on business or otherwise, are to be addressed to the Manager

The Monitor.

"Arise for Justice for thy Sake; and even unto Death fight for Justice, and God will overthrow thy enemies for Thee." (Ecclesiasticus Iv. 34.)

SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1882.

VOL. XXV. NO. 33.

MISCELLANEOUS.

California FRUIT SALT

A POSITIVE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA
TRY IT. DRUGGISTS SELL IT.
Made By
H. B. SLAVEN,
The Baldwin Building
PLATING.
NICKEL PLATING.
GOLD PLATING.
SILVER PLATING.
Elegant and Durable.

ALL KINDS OF WORK PLATED WITH SOLID METALS. Particular attention paid to plating Knives, Forks, Spoons, Ware, Jewelry, Carriage Trimmings, Bedsteads, Furniture, Gas Fixtures, Chandeliers, Door Trimmings, Stoves, Pianos, Organs, Machinery, Tools, Saws, Guns, Pistols, Models, Etc. Also, Manufacturer of Nickel Plating Solution, Nickel Anodes, Plating Materials, Etc. Also, Manufacturer of Celebrated Gold Lustre for Plating Jewelry

Poetry.

IRELAND'S PERSECUTED SONS.

[FOR THE MONITOR.]

Glorious his fate, and envied is his lot,
Who for his country fights, and for it dies;
Not all his doom who braves Nemesis red,
And dares by tyrants, from its shrine to flee.

Far from his fruitful fields, condemned to roam,
His aged parents share his exiled lot;
His weeping wife, the sharer of his home,
And wheelin'd in silent grief, his unhappy wife.

Him, shall the hate of all he seeks, attend,
Him, shall the power and wealth of nations oppose;
Him, shall no kindly sympathy befriend,
But death, unspeakable, lamp his joyless bones.

Involved in dull despair and despair worse,
Wilder'd, he hastens, half insane, from persecutor's storm,
No home's shield in his bosom glows—
He shames his noble race and manly form.

Then, like the recreant, shall we spare our lives?
No! for our country let us yield our breath!
Defend the sacred Shamrock, which it gives,
And meet with victory, or meet with death.

Yes! in the fight, with firmness then abide,
Nor fear from terror, free from fear assign;
Wake in your breasts the fire of martial pride,
Nor spare your lives within the battle's rage.

Curse on the man, who dead to honor's call,
Dissert his clan, whom youthful strength has failed,
Within the foremost ranks of death to fall,
By all their honourous progeny banished.

Curse on the man, for one! honoured with Protection on earth, the sacred Shamrock's
Burst from his breast, and
And closed in death the value bearing eye.

Then let the young, whom strength and view
There country's rights, their aged sires defend;
So, shall their fame the poet's strains inspire,
Beloved in life, and glorious in the end.

San Francisco, May, 1862. LARKIN.

Literary Miscellany.

The Four - Leaved Shamrock.

AN IRISH STORY BY WALT WARNER.

On the west coast of Ireland, on the broad green table-land that lifted proudly into the sky, and then, lurked and lashed by the waters of the grand Atlantic Ocean, lies the humble village of Kilboyle. Situated at the foot of a sloping hill that, barely seven miles away, again dropped to the shores of the river Shannon, Kilboyle was but a straggling collection of humble homes, with a few comfortable small farms lying back from it on the side of the hill, and facing the broad bosom of the mighty water that stretched three thousand miles away as the kissed the shores of the western world.

Between the village and the cliffs stood, in silent holiness, the chapel of Kilboyle—a law and ancient stone building, whose solid walls had defied the storms of the Atlantic for some three hundred years, and bid fair to outlive centuries yet of a far off future. The clumsy and heavy stone cross that surmounted the low gable was an ornaments of the religion it symbolized. Arrowhead, narrow, deep windows, and over the whole, hung the ancient bell, the

A low, strong wall of unhewn stone had once encircled the churchyard, but in long years of human mortality the surface of the burial place had risen above that of the surrounding level, and particularly where the grass grown mould of graves the time-worn stones of the wall. Nettles of eight and ragged blackthorn and sycamore trees had alone survived of the far past, and, with struggling and crooked branches, guarded the irregular mounds and gray headstones that lay thickly beneath. Many of the simple tablets were moss-covered and defaced, and many, fallen from the perpendicular, sloped toward the grass covered mounds, as if seeking to share the rest of those beneath. But a few indeed were the poor people of Kilboyle could afford to place among the surrounding graves, and mounds of their love for their buried dead. A few there were, however—plain stone monuments, with the simple name and age of the dead recorded upon them; and near the lowest looking of these, on the afternoon of a fair summer's day stood a small group of dependent mourners—two of them a woman of, perhaps, fifty, in plain but deep widow's weeds; another, a tall, stalwart youth of twenty-two or three; and the third a young girl not more than eighteen, with a sweet, fair face, her like gold, and eyes like heaven. She stood at the foot of a grave around which the grass sprung high, although the sods on the mound itself were barren "sod," and she was simply attired in the blue hooded cloth cloak of the peasantry, over a short-skirted dress of dark stuff—covering on the far head there was none, for the hood that had rested lightly on it had fallen back, leaving the sun-rays filtering through the branches of the old thorn above her, to fall upon the gleaming satin-smooth hair so plainly tucked behind the small rosy ears.

The widow sank on her knees by the grave, and, with bitter moans and sobs, prayed earnestly for the repose of the soul of the dead whose remains lay beneath. Her attitude was followed by the two young people but when they at length rose again to their feet, the elder woman threw her thin arms around the cold headstone, and, with her bitter tears dropping to the sod at its foot, cried aloud in the deep bitterness of her soul, "My God! my God! why had thou forsaken me!"

"Mother! mother!" pleaded the young man in a broken voice.

"I may say it!—oh! I may well say it! Widowed and orphaned from the joy holes on the earth Ay made heaven to me for thirty years! Oh! Tom, Tom, if there was any mercy in the heart of the Lord toward me this bitter day, your grave would open and let me in!"

With great rending sobs she lay on the cold grave, and bowed to the affectionate pleading of the young people beside her.

"Even to come here, Tom, mathree, an' talk to your cold grave, even that is denied me. I must go from the home that sheltered me from youth, to a foreign land that is cold to me and mine, and to the grave where the stranger will cover them from his happy sight! And this is the last day I will ever see even the sod that lies on my husband's cold heart!. Oh! Lord, be merciful and kill me!

"Dear mother, you are hard on Kathie and your boy," the young man cried as he again knelt beside her, and tried to take her hand.

"You have your son, mother—is that nothing to you?"

"May God forgive me Tom, darling"

the poor woman moaned as she lifted her head from the grass and laid it on her son's breast. "You are a good brave son to me; but my heart is broke—broke!"

"Come away from the dear mother, he whispered, soothingly. "If he was alive he would be the first to tell you that you ought not to give way so. For my sake, mother, let me take your home.

"Home! Oh, Tom, we have no home and do you begrudge me one hour—the very last—near my dead husband! Give me one hour, darling; take Kathie wid you, and leave me here to myself for one last hour! I will be safe to be near my husband!"

Pressing his lips to the pale, wrinkled forehead of her who bore him, Tom O'Brien gently released her, and got upon his feet. His foster-sister, Kathie, was weeping bitterly at the foot of the grave, with her face hidden in her cloak, and, putting his arm around her, the young man drew her toward the churchyard gate, and over the grassy land toward the nearest cliff.

In a glare of sunlight, the gleaming bosom of the Atlantic lay beneath them, and as far away as eye could reach, to the distinct horizon, white sails afar off caught the warm beams, and held the roving gaze of Tom O'Brien; and as the two young people paused on the verge of the grass that sloped to the cliff, he pointed to the swelling canvas of a graceful ship that lared her dipping bows in the cutting foam.

"See!" he cried, "see, Kathie dear—lay this time to-morrow our home behind us, leaves ship like that, and the poor mother will forget when she looks forward to the new country.

"Tain't so easy to forget, Tom, dear—the old country, easily, as she said, but on the grass, and gazed admiringly after her lover's pointed finger. "Tha hard for us, and what must it be for her!

"She was so fond of your father, Tom,"—"Ay, he deserved it. To-morrow will be St. Patrick's Day, Kathie," he added, as he seated himself beside her, facing the sea. "Last Patrick's Day he was a happy man, wearing his laverde of shamrock as proudly as any of us—to-day I gather these from his grave.

"The young fellow's voice grew husky as he laid a cluster of shamrocks he had held in his hand upon Kathie's knee, and he turned to hide his face as the girl's hot tears dropped upon the tender leaves.

"He was good and true; may God rest his soul this day and forever." the girl said as she gathered the shamrocks and laid them beneath her small lips for an instant.

"Thank God, too, that he died without knowing how soon the old home would be gone from his dear one. If old Sonatan hadn't died so sudden, Tom dear, he mayhap would have been safe; and now to think that five hundred pounds would clear all, and that the farm must go! Oh, Tom, no wonder aun't heart is broke."

"Don't call her aunt, Kathie darling—I don't like to hear you; you know she feels like a mother to you.

"Sha has been one—may God bless her—ever since the day she took me from my own mother's breast."

"But listen, Kathie; why won't your mother remember that there is a chance for us yet, and hope for the best? We have three months yet, and look how many have got a fortune of gold out in America the very first week of their landing!

"The Lord won't work a miracle for us, Tom," she returned, sharply; "it will take the broad bosom of the waters to reach them, and nothing but death can separate us. We have had our share of misfortune.

her, and she was arranging the delicate sprays of her nearly lost country's emblem, and gazing down on them with sad eyes—"Tom, did you ever find a four-leaved shamrock?"

"No, dear. Do you remember the day Con McMahon picked some out of the ditch, coming from the chapel.

"Yes, and he got three hunder pound left him; aun't weak he could Widow M'Grath, an' there was Mary Clancy one day we saw coming from school—what do you think, she fell on a four-leaved shamrock in Dennis's meadow, and the next day she should come back again from America but her poor father, with a pocket full of money, after that had given him up for dead. Oh, every one knows that whoever finds a four-leaved shamrock will meet with the height of luck soon after."

Tom smiled at the eager look in the pretty, excited face as he kissed again the sweet lips, whispering, "I wish you got one, my darlin."

"I'd rather, it was yourself found it, Tom," she said, with a bright blush, and the soft blue eyes turned to the shamrocks on her lap. "Perhaps, she was hunting among the little brown hand that toyed with the green leaves gathered for her." and the third a young girl not more than eighteen, with a sweet, fair face, her like gold, and eyes like heaven. She stood at the foot of a grave around which the grass sprung high, although the sods on the mound itself were barren "sod," and she was simply attired in the blue hooded cloth cloak of the peasantry, over a short-skirted dress of dark stuff—covering on the far head there was none, for the hood that had rested lightly on it had fallen back, leaving the sun-rays filtering through the branches of the old thorn above her, to fall upon the gleaming satin-smooth hair so plainly tucked behind the small rosy ears.

The widow sank on her knees by the grave, and, with bitter moans and sobs, prayed earnestly for the repose of the soul of the dead whose remains lay beneath. Her attitude was followed by the two young people but when they at length rose again to their feet, the elder woman threw her thin arms around the cold headstone, and, with her bitter tears dropping to the sod at its foot, cried aloud in the deep bitterness of her soul, "My God! my God! why had thou forsaken me!"

"Mother! mother!" pleaded the young man in a broken voice.

"I may say it!—oh! I may well say it! Widowed and orphaned from the joy holes on the earth Ay made heaven to me for thirty years! Oh! Tom, Tom, if there was any mercy in the heart of the Lord toward me this bitter day, your grave would open and let me in!"

With great rending sobs she lay on the cold grave, and bowed to the affectionate pleading of the young people beside her.

